form a receipt for what he had paid to the concern. On 19th January, Kapildeo brought or sent to the factory the counterfoil book with four pages filled in; the first page was for a total sum of Rs. 1,667-3-6, the second page was for Rs. 2,626-3-3, the third was for Rs. 386-6-3 and the fourth Rs. 18-2-9. Whether Kapildeo Narain brought any money with him on that occasion is uncertain. From the factory cash book it appears that Rs. 290 was paid in by him on 27th January, but from the same cash book it is shown that on 22nd December 1928, Rs. 1,900 had been received from Kapildeo and on 16th January Rs. 1100. The Manager Mr. J. W. Broucke signed a receipt on the first page that the total sum of Rs. 1,667-3-6 had been received; on second page, however, he gave a receipt for Rs. 2,276-12-6 only.

The explanation of this, according to the prosecution seems to be that out of the total of Rs. 4293-3-9, Rs. 3,290 was met by the payments of Rs. 1,900, 1,100 and Rs. 290 while the appellant's explanation that he had spent Rs. 654 out of the money withdrawn for the purpose of the conduct of the cases was accepted, and therefore credit was given for Rs. 3944 only out of the total of Rs. 4293 : so that the amount was Rs. 349 short, and therefore on second page a receipt for Rs. 2,276-12-6 only was given. These receipts on pp. 1 and 2 were signed on 28th January 1929. It has to be remembered that the Rs. 290 is accounted for in the cash book only on 27th January 1929. The right-hand half of the counterfoils of those two first pages was torn off and according to the prosecution, were handed to the appellant. It is obvious that the proper procedure would have been that the factory should have kept the right-hand half and handed back the counterfoil book to the appellant as a receipt. The moneys in respect of pp. 3 and 4 having been paid, no receipt was signed. On 28th the appellant filed two further lists, one for Rs. 227-12-0 and the other for Rs. 53-13-9. As there was no payment made in respect of these two sums no receipt was signed and the counterfoil book was retained by the Manager. According to Mr. J. W. Broucke, he asked the appellant to bring the money and furnish an account; as the appellant did not come back with any money he wrote to the Certificate Officer at Motihari, asking him to let him know how much money the appellant had withdrawn from the treasury within the year. The reply of the certificate officer was to the effect that between 7th November 1927 and 24th January 1929, the total withdrawal had been Rs. 13,759-1-11. Mr. Broucke continued to ask for accounts. It seems that the appellant stated that he had spent part of the money withdrawn from the treasury in meeting the charges for the conduct of the certificate cases. Mr. Broucke then asked a Mokhtear, Babu Balbhadar Prasad, to make inquiries as to the amount actually spent by the appellant on the conduct of cases. Babu Balbhadar Prasad replied on 27th March 1929 that he had found that Rs. 1,999-8-0 had been spent by the appellant but he had not completed the full inquiry and there were 72 cases still to be inquired into. Letters were passing between the Manager and the appellant with regard to accounts but the appellant, though asked to come to the factory to see the accounts books as he desired, refused to come and then Mr. Broucke laid a complaint on 11th April. In that complaint he accused the appellant of having misappropriated Rs. 12,222-11-11 between 3rd February 1928 and 24th January 1929. The Committing Magistrate drew up a charge with respect to the sum of Rs. 12,317-9-11, but the learned Sessions Judge amended it, reducing the sum to Rs. 7,476-2-11. According to the prosecution, between 3rd February 1928 and 24th January 1929, Rs. 13,109-7-5 were withdrawn from the treasury by the appellant and during the year from 3rd February 1928 the appellant paid in to the factory altogether Rs. 5,079-4-6. Adding to this the sum of Rs. 654 which the appellant was authorized to spend out of the money withdrawn on the conduct of cases, the total money received by him came to Rs. 5,733-4-6, and, therefore, the amount defalcated was Rs. 7,376-2-11. The charge as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge is wrong in mentioning the amount of Rs. 7,476-2-11.

The case of the appellant was to the effect that he could account for the money and that he had full freedom to pay the law charges out of the moneys withdrawn, there being no written instructions to prevent him doing so. It is his case that he had in fact paid to the factory the whole of Rs. 4,976-9-9 as shown in the list Ex. 5 and that the rest of the amount forming the subject of the charge was covered by the law charges.

The case has been a very difficult one to decide by reason of the fact that the evidence is not full and there are certain account books which were kept in the factory which have not been produced and which are necessary for ascertaining several points. It is not possible to determine whether the appellant came to the factory with his lists on 19th January, or whether he sent them. The receipts were given on 28th and we are not told definitely whether the appellant came to the factory that day. But Mr. Broucke says that he asked him to give an account. We have had to depend on explanations from learned counsel in order to understand the case, and I must say that, even with those explanations, it is somewhat difficult to determine whether the accused had in fact expended the money on law charges or any part of it, and to come to any definite decision as to the amount which he failed to pay the factory. It appears from the evidence that, during the year 1928, the appellant was submitting lists and was paying amounts into the factory. It is clear that he was not required to submit accounts at regular intervals. It is not quite clear to whom he paid the money; we are not told whether on 27th January the Rs. 290 was paid into the Manager's hand. From the evidence of Mr. Broucke it would appear that Rs. 3,290 out of the sums covered by the first two lists were paid by the accused that day but we know that that amount had been made up of sums paid on 22nd December 1928 and on 16th and 27th January 1929. The prosecution in reckoning the amount of advances made to the appellant for law charges includes Rs. 1,543 which was advanced in 1927 before the period covered by the case. There is no certainty when the alleged intention to misappropriate the money first arose. The charge relates to a period ending on 24th January 1929.

On 19th January the appellant had filed in the factory, lists, acknowledging that he had withdrawn sums from the Treasury and held them in his hands and on 27th January he actually paid in Rs. 290. In my opinion the case is one which should in the first place have been brought in the civil Court. The factory wanted accounts and there had been no adjustment between the parties. The proper procedure would have been to institute a suit for accounts in the civil Court.

The head-clerk of the factory kept a register of certificate cases, all the entries being filled in by him except Col. 2 in which the appellant was to enter the number of the case in red with his own hand; the tenant's name, the serial number of the entry, the amount demanded, and the result were entered in this register by the head-clerk. The cases covered by the lists are entered in that register and in the remarks column against each entry there is the initial of Mr. Broucke. Mr. Broucke says that he signed his initials when the cash had been received by the concern. On the face of it the presence of the initial of Mr. Broucke according to his evidence, would show that the appellant had in fact paid the money to the factory. It is explained that Mr. Broucke initialled the entries in order to show the patwaris that they should take no further steps against the tenant to whom the entry related but there is no evidence to this effect. I cannot see that it was necessary to have Mr. Broucke's initial in the remarks column to give this information to the patwaris and I doubt whether the patwaris would be able to read the entries in the register.

The appellant's case is that he had paid sums to the head-clerk or the cashier. The cashier admits that he keeps his private book of receipts and disbursements and the head-clerk deposes that the cashier keeps notes. The Cashier's note book has not been produced, and we have before us no account book which was kept up from day to day. The entries in the cash book would show that they were made from time to time and must have been based on some daily ledger.

On the materials before us, meagre as they are, I should hesitate to say that the appellant was proved to have had the intention of misappropriating the money.

The case is of a nature more suitable for its determination in a civil Court. It is really a case for a suit for accounts. The appellant produced his lists and admitted the withdrawal of the money. Mr. Broucke wanted accounts but the appellant delayed or refused to give them. A suit in a civil Court for accounts was far more appropriate than a criminal prosecution. It may well be that the appellant had been spending the money with drawn by him in meeting the charges. There is no doubt that he was recalcitrant and there is good ground for suspicion that he was not altogether honest. With regard to the charge under S. 477-A, it is alleged that in several instances he entered in Col. 2 of Register 12 the number of a certificate case in order to give the impression that he had filed it, though as a matter of fact he had not filed it, his object being either to hide his negligence or to draw more pay, as he was entitled to draw Re. 1/8 for each case. Admittedly it is uncertain whether the numbers he wrote in that column were the numbers of the case or the numbers given by the factory to the requisition. It is difficult to understand how he could profit by entering a case as filed which had not been filed, seeing that he would eventually have to show that he had withdrawn the money and must pay it to the factory. He has been found to have made entries in the papers to the effect that in certain certificate cases the decretal amount was still in Court whereas, as a matter of fact, the money had been withdrawn from the treasury by him. He explains these entries by saying that he may have made a mistake owing to lack of memory or the fact that he was away from Motihari when he made the entries.

As I have said the conduct of the appellant has not been about suspicion, but I do not think that we have sufficient material before us to come to a definite conclusion that he misappropriated the money or what the exact sum of money misappropriated was.

Under the circumstances I think that this appeal should be allowed and that the complainant in the case should be left to bring a suit in the civil Court for accounts. I would allow the appeal and set aside the convictions and sentence.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 68 of 1929, Decided on 3rd July 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Farrukhabad, D/- 19th January 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 145 (4)—Meaning.

The direction to receive evidence implies a duty on the Court to summon such witnesses as may be mentioned to the Court by either party: 32 Cal. 1033, Dist. [P 482 C 1]

Kedar Nath Sinha and Jai Narain Verma—for Applicant.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Ambika Prasad—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—I am of opinion that the trial Court was wrong in not giving an opportunity to Chakrapan to produce his evidence. Reference was made by the opposite party to a ruling in the case of Tarapana Biswas v. Nurul Haq (1), that it was not obligatory on a Magistrate to assist parties to a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., in producing their witnesses. That ruling however, was passed long prior to 1923, when Cl. (4), S. 145 was amended by Act 18 of 1923 and the Magistrate was directed to receive all such evidence as may be produced by the parties. The direction to receive evidence implies in my opinion, duty on the Court to summon such witnesses as may be mentioned to the Court by either party. It may be noticed that the information given to the parties under S. 145 (1) is not that they should bring their witnesses along with them. The parties filed written statements, so it may be said that the Court was not put to the necessity of hearing the parties themselves. There can be no doubt that the Magistrate did not give Chakrapan an opportunity of producing his evidence.

I therefore set aside the order of the Magistrate, dated 10th November 1928, and direct an enquiry as to possession over again, as laid down by the provisions of S. 145 (4), Criminal P. C.

Boys and Young, JJ.—This is an appeal by the Local Government from an order passed by a Magistrate acquitting Himanchal Singh upon a charge of an offence under S. 174, I. P. C. The Magistrate acquitted the accused following, as he was bound to do, the decision of two Judges of this Court in Emperor v. Bhirgu Singh (1). The Local Government being dissatisfied with the decision in that case that a citation to appear issued under S. 147, Land Revenue Act (U. P.), 3 of 1901, was not a summons, notice or order which the recipient was legally bound to obey have appealed from the decision of the Magistrate. Without waiting to see whether the Bench of two Judges of this Court before whom the appeal might come agreed with the decision of the two Judges of this Court above mentioned, the learned Government Advocate, presumably under instructions from the Local Government, secured an immediate reference by the Chief Justice of the appeal to a Full Bench. We think that the Chief Justice would not have referred the matter to a Full Bench at all if the point we have mentioned had been brought to his attention. If the Bench of two Judges before whom the appeal would have come in the ordinary course agreed with the two Judges who had already decided the question, there would have been an end of the matter. If, on the other hand, they had disagreed, it would have been open to them to ask the Chief Justice, in accordance with the ordinary procedure to refer the matter to a Full Bench.

The question now before us is whether a citation to appear issued under S. 147, U. P. Land Revenue Act, 3 of 1901, is a summons, notice or order which the recipient is legally bound to obey.

The facts are simple. Himanchal Singh was in arrears in the payment of Government revenue for a sum of Rs. 108-6-0. Whether or no a writ of demand had or had not already issued to him under S. 147 we are not informed ; nor is it in fact material. The document which was served upon him is a citation to appear, purporting to be drafted in accordance with form 2 of the forms drawn up by the Local Government by virtue of its power under S. 234 Revenue Act. This document was treated in the argument before us by both sides as if it was a document of a composite character embodying a writ of demand and a citation to appear in the one document. But this is not so as a reference to the forms will show. The English form does not contain an unconditional intimation to appear. It requires the recipient to appear on a certain date and at a certain hour "if the entire arrears plus the talbana for this citation are not sooner paid." The vernacular of the document which was actually served calls upon him to appear if the amount "is not paid with the greatest promptitude" (jaldtar adana kardiya jawe.) The translation is not accurate but the inaccuracy is im-material. The document further bears a foot-note intimating that failure to attend is punishable (in the criminal Courts) under S. 174 I. P. C. This foot-note manifestly legs the question and is immaterial, except so far as it may indicate a desire to give to the intimation a force which the Act itself certainly does not expressly give it. The Local Government has power to make rules and prepare forms under S. 234, but manifestly, as S. 234 itself declares, only rules "consistent with this Act."

It is common ground that the citation was served upon Himanchal Singh personally and that he did not attend, nor paid the arrears within the time specified in the citation. Himanchal Singh was put upon his trial under S. 174, I. P. C. He admitted that the citation was served upon him and that he did not attend or deposit the amount of the arrears. The Magistrate describes this as a plea of guilty. It clearly was not a plea of guilty of an offence under S. 174, I. P. C. But this ceased to be of importance again in view of the fact that the Magistrate acquitted him in obedience to the ruling to which we have referred. It has only been necessary to mention these immaterial matters because they did in fact form the subject of argument, and it is necessary to sweep them aside. Before giving briefly our reasons for holding that the citation to appear was not a summons, notice or order which the recipient was legally bound to obey by appearing within the meaning of S. 174, I. P. C. we will narrate as briefly as possible the history of the previous decisions on the point.

In 1909 the Sessions Judge of Benares, Mr. E. H. Ashworth, subsequently Ashworth, J., referred a conviction under S. 174 to this Court on the ground that in his view it was an illegal conviction in that the accused was not bound to appear. The matter came before Knox, J. and Tudball, J. and was registered as 'Sarju Singh Reference No. 320 of 1909.' On 3rd August 1909, they recorded the following brief judgment :

"In our opinion a citation issued by a Tahsildar is an order to appear before the Tahsildar which the person cited is bound to obey. The intentional disobedience of it is therefore an offence under S. 174."

No reasons for this view were given.

The next case, Emperor v. Sheopal Singh we are unable to give the date but the case is quoted in the next case to which we shall refer) came before Mr. Piggott, A. J. C., Oudh, subsequently Piggott, J., of this Court. The full judgment not being available to us we are only able to note that he held that the accused was not bound to obey the citation, basing his judgment on the report of the Select Committee during the passage of the bill.

In 1909 Mr. Chamier, Judicial Commissioner, and Mr. Evans, A. J. C., Oudh, held that the accused was bound to appear in obedience to the citation. They rejected the decision of Mr. Piggott because he had relied upon the report of the Select Committee. They quoted the form of the citation and then rejected the argument (the only one apparently urged) that a citation was merely an alternative to a writ of demand, because if a citation merely took the place of a writ of demand, the citation itself would be useless as it did not make any demand. No other consideration was apparently drawn to the attention of the learned Judges and they gave no further reason for holding that the recipient was bound to appear in accordance with the citation. This case is Rambali v. Emperor (2).

The next case is that to which we have already referred, Emperor v. Bhirgu Singh (1) decided by Dalal, J., and one of the members of the present Full Bench, Boys, J. It was held that the recipient was not legally bound to obey the citation. This appears to have been the first case in which the matter was at all fully argued and reasons are given at length for the decision to which reference may be made.

In the following year the matter came up before a single Judge of this Court, Sulaiman, J., in Emperor v. Banwari (3). The learned Judge said :

"If the matter were entirely res integra I would have been inclined to hold "that the citation was at any rate a notice, if not a summons or order, and that, therefore, its disobedience was covered by S. 174, I. P. C."

He held himself, however, bound by the last decision to which we have referred. It will be noticed that the learned Judge did not consider whether, even though the citation might be regarded as a notice, it was a notice that the recipient was legally bound to obey. He proceeded to set out in detail the reasoning in Emperor v. Bhirgu (1) and then added "the view taken by the Bench certainly prevents the abuse of the power to issue a citation to appear and then to arrest the defaulter, which may be an intolerable hardship It may be doubtful whether such a procedure was contemplated by the legislature when the Act was passed."

(2) [1910] 13 O. C. 55=5 I. C. 805.

(3) A. I. R. 1927 All. 49=43 All. 215.

Lastly, the question came up in 1927 before Stuart C. J., and Pullan, J., in the Chief Court at Lucknow in Chandrika Singh v. Emperor (4). The learned Judges delivered separate judgments to which reference may be made. It is only necessary to point out that Stuart, C. J., referred to the complete difference of opinion in regard to the effect of the citation between the decisions in Rambali v. Emperor (2) and Emperor v. Bhirgu (1), and further stated "why the word citation was used in this portion of Local Act, 3 of 1901, I am in no position to decide,"

though he added that the word "citation" was possibly used in Chap. 8 and the word "summons" in Chap. 9, because Chap. 8 is concerned with the purely fiscal act in collecting land revenue, while Chap. 9 is concerned with the procedure of revenue Courts and Revenue Officers exercising judicial or quasi judicial functions. It may be noted further that Pullan, J., relied to some extent at least on the threat in the foot-note to the citation form to which we have referred.

These are all the cases to which we have been referred. It would seem that a mere recital of these cases is sufficient to show this much at least, that there is room for doubt as to the force to be given to the term "citation to appear." That being so, there comes into force immediately the principle of interpretation of a statute that where there is reasonable ground for doubt as to the correct interpretation of an enactment, that interpretation should be adopted which is most in favour of the person to be penalised. This principle is of general application to fiscal and penal statutes. Here we have both a fiscal and a penal statute.

Next, there is the principle of interpretation that where the matter is in doubt, that interpretation should be given to the statute which will prevent or will not permit of an abuse of the process of the law. The learned Government Advocate, putting as best he could the case for the appellant Local Government, was unable to suggest to us why the Local Government should be so anxious to secure the strict interpretation, for which he pleaded, of the word "citation." If the defaulter fails to appear in response to the citation, and even without the issue of a citation, the Revenue Officer has power to issue a warrant of arrest. The only motive underlying the desire of the Local Government to put a strict interpretation on the word "citation" which anybody could suggest was that it would save the Revenue Officer the trouble of issuing a warrant of arrest and of bringing the defaulter before him under arrest. He could, if the defaulter was bound to appear in answer to a citation, issue the citation, and then having the defaulter before him say to him:

"Now come to terms such as I can accept, or I will forthwith arrest you."

Can anybody doubt but that this would be an abuse of the process of the law. No other motive is suggested to us. We should therefore give effect so far to the principle that where there is doubt, that interpretation should be put on the enactment which will prevent an abuse of the legal process.

Having stated these two principles we next turn to the question, what explanation is there of this special use of the word "citation" in S. 147 when it is used nowhere else in the whole Act. When the N. W. P. Land Revenue Act, 19 of 1873, and the Land Revenue Act of Oudh, 17 of 1876, were consolidated into the present U. P. Act 3 of 1901, the draftsman had to consider whether he should or should not use the word "a summons to appear" which appeared in the Oudh Act, and he substituted, and can only be held to have deliberately substituted, the word "citation." It is not the case that the word was used carelessly or with some vague idea that it did not really matter whether one used the word "summons," "citation," "notice," "call upon," etc. The draftsman had the word "summons" before his eyes. He had not the word "citation." He deliberately substituted "citation" for "summons." What was the reason for this? No one has been even able to suggest that there was any reason except possibly, and that is in favour of giving the less strict interpretation to the word, that in Chap. 9 where the word "summons" is used the legislature was dealing with the procedure of the Courts, and in Chap. 8 he was dealing only with the proceedings of officers for the collection of the amounts due to Government. There would be a natural inclination to substitute the milder word in the latter case for the stricter word used in the former. This is the only possible explanation that occurs to us or that has been offered by anybody of the deliberate substitution of the term.

Much argument has been directed to suggest that a citation is in fact equivalent to a summons carrying with it the consequence enacted in S. 174, I. P. C. It may be that it is so in some cases. It does not follow that it is so in all. But in fact even if it could be held to be merely a variant of the word "summons," and that the two words are interchangeable, even that will not help the appellant, for it is manifest that the word "summons" is sometimes used in cases where the recipient is not bound to obey the summons. It is in itself a striking fact that nobody has ever yet heard of a man being prosecuted under S. 174, I. P. C., for failing to obey a summons to attend a Court as a witness. The invariable procedure followed, if the attendance of the witness is essential, is to issue a warrant for his arrest; and indeed in the Civil Procedure Code express provision for this is made in S. 32, in which there is no reference to S. 174, I. P. C. But more than this, we find the word "summons" actually used in the very Act which we are considering in S. 201 where it is laid down in the proviso that no order shall be altered without previously summoning the party, in whose favour that order was passed, to appear. Manifestly here no liability under S. 174, I. P. C., can arise. Again, where it is intended that failure to appear even in answer to a summons should carry the consequences laid down in S. 174, I. P. C., we find it expressly stated, which declares that "all persons so summoned shall be bound to attend." As to citations, to refer to another Act, we find that where it is intended that failure to obey a citation should be penalised, that intention is made the subject of express enactment, e. g., Act 21 of 1866, Ss. 10 and 11, where it is declared that the respondent, in other words, the defendant in the suit, shall be served with a citation to appear, and that in default of his or her appearance, liability to punishment under S. 174, I. P. C., follows. Lastly, we may note that to give the less strict meaning to the term "citation," if indeed the more severe interpretation be permissible at all, is in accordance with a reasonable interpretation of the scheme of the Act. The Tahsildar has under S. 145 to certify a statement of account showing the existence of the arrear, of its amount and of the person who is the defaulter. It is declared that this statement of account shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated in it. It is manifest, however, that this cannot possibly be held to prevent the Tahsildar from amending the certified statement of account if he desires to do so. If he has issued a writ of demand in accordance with that statement of account, and either in consequence of information received from the alleged defaulter, or from any other source, he has reason to doubt the correctness of the statement or the desirability of proceeding to extreme measures without further light on the matter, it is reasonable to suppose that he should be empowered to give the alleged defaulter an opportunity of appearing before him and explaining either that he is not the person liable, or that he is not liable for the whole amount claimed, or of offering to make an arrangement which will not necessitate proceeding to extreme measures. It is not necessary to elaborate this. We have already noted above that no other proper motive can be suggested as underlying the use of the word "citation."

For the reasons we have given we hold that the citation was not a summons, notice or order which Himanchal Singh was legally bound to obey, and we dismiss the appeal.

Sen, J.—This is an appeal by the Local Government from an order, passed by a Magistrate, acquitting Himanchal Singh of an offence under S. 174, I. P. C.

Himanchal Singh was in arrear of Government revenue for a sum of Rs. 108-6-0 on account of Rabi 1332 Fasli.

A writ was issued to him under S. 147, United Provinces Land Revenue Act (Act 3 of 1901) on 11th July 1928. This document was of a composite character being a writ of demand and a citation for appearance, if the demand for revenue is not complied with. The document is in a printed form which is headed as "summons for attendance." The wording of this document is substantially in accord with the prescribed form to be found in the Land Revenue Manual for the United Provinces, which is a Government publication. The document is addressed to Himanchal Singh, who is directed to attend the Court of the Tahsildar of Tahsil Shahjahanpur, on 26th July 1928, at noon, if the amount of arrears together with the costs of the process fee is not paid with the greatest promptitude (Jaldtar ada na kar diya jave). The order was served upon Himanchal Singh personally, on 17th July 1928. The document bears the following endorsement by Himanchal Singh :

"I am informed of your order and received a copy of the summons through the peon."

This document contained a warning note :

"A failure to attend will be punishable in the criminal Courts under S. 174, I. P. C."

Himanchal Singh did not pay the amount of arrears together with the costs of the process fee nor did he attend the Court of the Tahsildar, on 26th July 1928, as he was directed to do. Proceedings were initiated against him under S. 174, I. P. C., and he was eventually put upon his trial before Khan Bahadur Maulvi Muhammad Mansub Hasan Khan, Special Magistrate of Second Class. The statement of the accused was recorded, on 5th October 1928, under S. 364, Criminal P. C., and the accused admitted that the summons was issued to him and that he neither deposited the revenue nor attended the Court. The Magistrate acquitted him, on 8th October 1928. The Magistrate held that, though the accused pleaded guilty, no offence was committed by him under S. 174, I. P. C., for non-attendance in the Court of the Tahsildar and reliance was placed upon a Division Bench ruling of this Court in re, Emperor v. Bhirgu Singh (1) in support of this view.

The Magistrate is not quite accurate in stating that the accused pleaded guilty before him. The accused was not asked whether he had committed an offence under S. 174, I. P. C., and he did not plead guilty in express terms. The Magistrate was, however, bound to follow the ruling of this Court, which undoubtedly supported his view.

The Local Government challenges the correctness of the decision in re, Emperor v. Bhirgu Singh (1). The point to be considered in this appeal is of far reaching effect as involving a question of principle, and is a matter of general importance, affecting the authority of the Revenue Officers acting under the Land Revenue Act, as also the liberty of the subjects of the Crown to whom citations are addressed under S. 147 of the Act.

In approaching the question before this Court, no importance can be attached to the fact that the citation is headed as "Notice of attendance" nor to the further fact that the foot-note contains a pointed warning. Nor can the fact of the citation being issued from "the Court of the Tahsildar" and Himanchal Singh being directed to appear "in the Court of Tahasildar" be permitted to be strained too far. The Tahasildar was acting in his administrative capacity as a Revenue Collector. He was not, strictly speaking, a "Court" and was exercising, at the most a quasi judicial function. In S. 189, a Tahsildar is authorized to hold his Court within his tahsil, but his powers under S. 147 are more administrative than judicial.

Section 174, I. P. C., provides :

"Whoever, being legally bound to attend in person at a certain place and time in obedience to a summons, notice, order or proclamation proceeding from any public servant legally competent, as such public servant to issue the same, intentionally omits to attend at that place or time shall be punished with imprisonment or with fine"

The ingredients of the offence under this section are, therefore, (1) that a summons for attendance must be issued by a public servant who was legally competent to issue the same, (2) that the person summoned must be legally bound to attend at a certain place and time in answer to the summons and (3) that the person summoned must intentionally have omitted to attend at that place and time. S. 147, Land Revenue Act provides that when an arrear of revenue becomes due, a writ of demand calling on the defaulter to pay the amount within the time therein stated or a citation to appear may issue.

Circular 3-III of the rules framed by the Board of Revenue contained, amongst others the following provisions relating to S. 147, Land Revenue Act :

"Processes under S. 147, shall be issued by the Tahashildar of the tahsil in which the arrear fell due, or by order of the Collector or Assistant Collector in charge of the Sub-Division." "Writs, warrants and proclamations shall be in the forms appended. They shall bear the date of issue and shall be signed by the issuing officer and sealed with his official seal."

"Process under S. 147 is not required by law to precede processes under S. 150 but ordinarily writ or citation to appear should issue before any other process is resorted to." "The fee charged for the issue of a writ or citation to appear shall be 12 aunas. The fee shall be included in the amounts specified in the writ or citation as that for the recovery of which the writ is issued."

"No more than one writ shall be issued in respect of the same arrear to any defaulter, except under the orders of the Collector. If the arrears be not paid within 15 days from the date of the service, severer measures should promptly be taken."

It is not controverted that the Tahsildar of Tahsil Shahjahanpur was a public servant, legally competent as such public servant to issue a citation to Himanchal Singh to appear before him under S. 147, Land Revenue Act, or that Himanchal Singh as a defaulter was duly served with the citation calling upon him to appear on 26th July 1928. But it has been argued that a citation to appear under S. 147, Land Revenue Act is not a 'summons' within the purview of S. 174, I. P. C., and that Himanchal Singh was not legally bound to appear.

Statutes of a fiscal or penal character must be strictly construed so as to prevent undue encroachment upon the liberty of the subject. Where the words of a statute are ambiguous, or of a doubtful import, the words should be construed generously. Where, however, the words of the statute are unequivocal and unambiguous, they must be construed in their plain, natural and grammatical senses.

The question which emerges for decision in this appeal is whether the words "a citation to appear" in S. 147, Land Revenue Act connote anything different from a summons to appear. The word "citation" has not been defined in the Land Revenue Act nor has the word "summons" been defined in the said Act. It is presumable that the words citation and summons have not been used in the Act in a special or technical sense. If recourse be had to standard books of reference, it would appear that citation and summons are interchangeable words. For instance, in Webster's New International Dictionary, "citation" means amongst other things, an official summons or notice given to a person to appear before a tribunal of justice; hence any summons. In Murray's Dictionary "citation" is a citing or summoning to a Court of justice. Bouvier gives the following note on "citation":

"A writ issued out of a Court of competent jurisdiction, commanding a person therein named to appear on a day named and do something therein mentioned, or show cause why he should not."

"The act of which a person is so summoned or cited."

"In the ecclesiastical law, the citation is the beginning and foundation of the whole cause, and is said to have six requisites, namely, the insertion of the name of the Judge, of the promover, of the impugnant of the cause of suits, of the place, and of the time of appearance; to which may be added the affixing the seal of the Court, and the name of the Registrar or his Deputy."

"Process issued in Courts of Probate and Admiralty Courts. It is usually the original process in any proceeding where used and is in that respect analogous to, the writ of capias or summons at law, and the subpoena in Chancery."

According to Wharton (Law Lexicon, Edn. 4, p. 187) "citation" is a summons to appear, applied particularly to a process in the spiritual probate and matrimonial Courts.

In its common significance, therefore, "citation to appear" is clearly "a summons to appear" and cannot be held to mean anything short of this. If this meaning is applied to the text of S. 147, it fits in with the context. It is not necessary either to strain the language or to have recourse to a process of reasoning to find out the meaning of the text. Indeed, if regard be paid to the context and the scheme of the Act, it is not possible to construe the word "citation" otherwise than as a summons.

Section 146, Land Revenue Act prescribes the processes by which an arrear of revenue may be recovered. These processes are eight in number, and have been enumerated *in Cls. (a) to (h). Each of these processes is and is intended to be coercive. Every process enumerated in the section is severer or more drastic than the one immediately preceding it. There may be variance in the degree of the effectiveness of the several processes as also in the degree of their coerciveness, but all of them share one common character in so far that all of them are coercive.

The Local Government may issue a warrant of arrest in the very first instance but the legislature provided for a less drastic remedy by the issue of a citation. It cannot be assumed that the object of the citation is simply to facilitate the execution of the warrant of arrest. The two processes are different. If the man appears in obedience to the citation, he may be allowed to go without any warrant being executed against him. That the process of citation to appear may be abused is no argument against the process itself being from its very inception an instrument of an imperative or compelling character.

A writ of demand or a citation to appear is one of the statutory processes for recovering an arrear of revenue. A citation to appear could not have been intended to be a mere invitation from the Tahsildar to appear in his Court to parley with him about the amount of the arrear or to negotiate with him the time as to its payment. It is not till the revenue has fallen into arrears that steps can be taken for its recovery. S. 145, Land Revenue Act enacts that a statement of account certified by the Tahsildar shall for purposes of Chap. 8 be conclusive evidence of the existence of the arrear, of its amount and of the person who is the defaulter. Ex hypothesi, the amount due has been determined and has been duly certified. The certificate being conclusive, the issue of a citation could not be treated as a mere occasion given to the co-sharer concerned to come and discuss with the Tahsildar because *of any dispute or uncertainty about the amount of revenue. The certificate having already settled the matter, the chapter regarding dispute or uncertainty is closed anon and for ever. It is extremely difficult to conceive that the legislature could have intended "citation to appear" to have been one of the modes or processes for recovering the arrear of revenue without looking forward to the obedience of that process by the person against whom it is directed.

It has been argued that the processes from (b) to (h) are coercive but "a writ of demand" or "a citation to appear" is not a coercive process. According to Wharton, a writ is :
"a judicial process by which any one is summoned as an offender and is also a legal instrument to enforce obedience to the orders and sentences of the Courts." "A writ of demand is a peremptory order to pay."

"A citation to appear" cannot be otherwise than a peremptory order to appear, if the arrear of revenue is not paid. It is coercive because he has to leave his business and has to undergo the worry, trouble and expense of a journey to the Tahsil. The appearance before the Tahsildar as a defaulter is humiliation enough. He is exposed to the risk of being arrested by the Tahsildar if the latter chooses to do so. Besides this, he has to pay the expenses of the process issued to him. It is the extent of the privation, wherein lies the compulsion.

The word "citation" does not appear to have been used in Ss. 146 and 147, Land Revenue Act in a technical sense. "Citation" may have a limited or a technical meaning in a particular statute relating to ecclesiastical law or to law relating to probate and administration. But it is not permissible to construe words in one Act by a reference to the use of the same words in another Act which is not in pari materia with the former. It was held in the case of Muddoo Soodan Dey v. Bama-Churan Mookerji (5) that the meaning of an Act is to be gathered solely by a reference to the Act itself. In Walji Karimji v. Jagannath Premji (6) it was held that :

"enactments in pari materia should be read together as if they were one law and interpreted as consistently and harmoniously as their language will fairly admit but an enquiry into the vicissitudes which a measure experienced in the course of its passage as a bill through the legislature is not a legitimate mode of ascertaining the intention of the legislature."

It is, therefore, submitted with respect that it is not legitimate to construe the words "citation to appear" in Ss. 146 and 147, Land Revenue Act by a reference to S. 69, Act 5 of 1881 or Ss. 199 and 250, Succession Act (Act 10 of 1865). S. 69, Act 5 of 1881 is a replica of S. 250, Succession Act of 1865 and provides that it shall be lawful for the District Judge . . . , to issue citations calling upon all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of probate or letters of administrations. The citation here is a general citation and is not addressed to a particular individual by name. The citation is not addressed to persons who do not put forward any claim in the estate of the deceased. It is not a process for enforcement of a pre-existing liability as in the case of a defaulting landholder. If a person having a claim to the estate of the deceased holds himself back, he exposes himself to the risk of an ex parte order against him or to his prejudice. But no liability has been incurred till this order has been passed. S. 199 is clear that no appearance on the part of the next-of-kin is contemplated and he has the option to accept or refuse the letters of administration.

It is worthy of note that a mode of publication of the citation was prescribed by the Probate and Administration Act and the Succession Act. In the Land Revenue Act, no mode for the service of the citation under S. 147 has been specifically provided for. But the mode of service of summons under the Act has been expressly provided. This could not be treated as a case of omission from inadvertence. It is rather suggestive of the fact that the framers of the Act considered the two terms to be synonymous.

In S. 151, N. W. P. Land Revenue Act (Act 19 of 1873) there was a provision for the "writ of demand" but there was no provision of the issue of a citation or summons to the defaulting zamindar. In S. 114, Land Revenue Act of Oudh (Act 17 of 1876), there was a provision for both, that is, there was a provision for "a writ of demand" and, alternatively, for "a summons to appear." Under Act 3 of 1901, the two aforesaid Acts were repealed and they were consolidated into one. In the new Act, a provision has been made for both, with this difference that the word "citation" has been substituted for "summons." This would suggest that the legislature considered the word "summons" and "citation" as convertible terms. As has already been observed, the context, where the words "citation" has been used, is also indicative of the same conclusion. The word "citation" has to be read with reference to the context and not divorced from it, and the interpretation as to the nature and character of the citation may be mild in one case and more severe in another if the mildness or severity is to be assigned to the legal effect of the process. But it would depend in each case upon the text of the statute with special reference to the character of the proceedings, it relates to. Having regard therefore (1) to the natural and grammatical meaning of the word "citation," (2) to the general scheme of the Land Revenue Act and (3) to the use of the word "citation" with reference to the context, it is clear that "citation to appear" cannot but have one meaning, namely, "summons to appear." There is no ambiguity in the word "citation to appear" and the words cannot be construed to mean citation to appear or not to appear at the option of the person served with the citation. There can be no warrant for introducing words into the text of S. 147 as an addition or an alternative. It will be trenching upon the province of the legislature to add an inconsistent alternative into the text.

There are certain sections of the Land Revenue Act, where the word "summons, has been used; for example, Ss. 123, 194, 195 and 201. In S. 193, "all persons" summoned "are bound to appear." If after due service they do not attend, they are, it is submitted liable to be prosecuted under S. 174, I. P. C. It was not necessary to add a provision to S. 147 like the one in S. 193, because the legislature has already declared its mind in S. 146 that citation to appear is a process for enforcing payment of arrears of revenue and it follows that it has to be obeyed.

It cannot be argued from this that the framers of the Act in using the word "citation" Ss. 146 and 147 deliberately intended to use a word of different connotation from "summons." A comparison of those sections with Ss. 146 and 147, Land Revenue Act, satisfies me that no distinction or differentiation was intended to be made. Ss. 146 and 147 are to be found in Chap. 8 which relates to collection of revenue. The matters dealt with therein are purely fiscal and administrative. Ss. 193, 194, 195 and 201 are to be found in Chap. 9, which relates to procedure of revenue Courts and Revenue Officers. It is not unlikely that "summons" and "citation" were used as mere variants of the same idea and two words were used to mark off the nature and character of the proceedings before the Revenue Officers concerned, but the nature and obligatory character of the "summons" or "citations" are different according to the nature of the proceedings.

The learned Government Advocate has invited the attention of this Court to the following decisions in support of his appeal. In the matter of Surju, decided by Knox, A. C. J., and Tudball, J. Ram Bali v. Emperor (2), decided by Messrs. Chamier and Evans, JJ., which overruled an unreported decision of Mr. Piggot founded upon the report of the Select Committee: Chandrika Singh v. Emperor (4), decided by Stuart, C. J. and Pullan, J. The last mentioned case expressly dissents from the Division Bench ruling of this Court in Emperor v. Bhirgu Singh (1). I am in general agreement with the reasonings of the learned Judges in this case. In Banwari Lal v. Emperor (3), Sulaiman, J., is reported to have observed as follows:

"The question is whether 'the citation to appear' does not come, within the expression 'summons, notice, order of proclamation.'"

If the matter were entirely res integra I would have been inclined to hold that the citation was, at any rate, a notice, if not, a summons or order, and that, therefore, its disobedience was covered by S. 174, I. P. C. I might have sought support from the case of Ram Bali v. Emperor (2), if the matter were not concluded by a recent pronouncement of a Division Bench in Emperor v. Bhirgu Singh (1), which is binding on me as a single Judge.

A point is sought to be made of the fact that no penalty for non-attendance has been provided for in the Land Revenue Act as appears to have been done in S. 2 of Act 21 of 1866. This cannot be treated as an example of a casus omis-sus nor can an inference be drawn from this omission. S. 174, I. P. C., was already on the statute book to meet the situation and it was not necessary to make a special provision for a case like this in the body of the Land Revenue Act.

There can be no charm in the word— "citation" or "summons." Citation or summons may be issued to a party or to a witness or to a party who is sought to be examined in the case as a witness. The object may be to give notice to a party of some suit, application or other proceeding. In such a case the party is not bound to appear in Court although his non-appearance may entail the consequence of an ex parte order against him (see for instance O. 9, Civil P. C.). Again the object may be to compel his appearance in Court to give evidence. In such a case, he is legally bound to appear in Court and he cannot be allowed to contumaciously withhold his appearance. A summons to a witness is a process of a mandatory character. In a civil suit, the Court has summary powers to proceed against him and pass orders under O. 16, R. 12, Civil P. C. The rule aforesaid, however, does not take away the powers of the Court to prosecute him under S. 174, I. P. C. Cases of deliberate disobedience of summons are rare. Even where they occur, the civil Courts may deal with the offender under O. 16, R. 12, and not file a complaint against him in the criminal Court under S. 174, I. P. C. I am by no means certain that witnesses are never prosecuted by the civil Court for disobedience of summons, although I must say that there are no reported cases where this has taken place. The powers of the civil Court in this respect are foreign to the enquiry in hand. Whether a party or a witness was bound to appear in a proceeding of a civil nature has to be determined by a reference to the nature of the proceeding and the provision of the particular statute under which he is served with the notice. Any answer for or against cannot be made in the abstract and the answer cannot be helpful in the solution of the question which is now before us, which has to be determined by a reference to the relevant portions of the Land Revenue Act and nothing beyond, Section 201, Land Revenue Act provides that no ex parte order or order by default shall be set aside without a notice of the application to the opposite party. This section is analogous to O. 9, R. 14, Civil P. C. Here the notice served to a party is not for personal appearance. It is a matter of his option to appear or not to appear but non-appearance exposes him to certain legal consequences. It may be conceded at once that the party served with notice in these cases is not legally bound to appear.

I hold, therefore, that where a citation has been issued to a person who is in arrear of Government revenue under S. 147, Land Revenue Act, the said citation is a summons within the meaning of S. 174, I. P. C., that the accused was legally bound to appear in the Court of the Tahsildar in obedience to it and that by his failure to attend, he was guilty under S. 174, I. P. C.

I would, therefore, allow the Government appeal and convict the accused.

By the Court.—The result is that the appeal by the Local Government fails and is hereby dismissed, and the acquittal of Himanchal Singh accused of an offence under S. 174, I. P. C. is hereby confirmed.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 512 of 1929, Decided on 3rd December 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Budaun, D/- 14th Judge, 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 112 — Ordinarily mentioning that clause of S. 110 applicable to case is sufficient but where clause refers to two or more offences, offence appropriate should be mentioned.

Ordinarily it is sufficient under S. 112 if that portion of the clause of S. 110 which is applicable to the particular case is specified in the notice that is given. But where the particular clause refers to two or more offences, the particular offence or offences which is appropriate to the particular case should also be mentioned in the notice. This applies more particularly to Cl. (d) : A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 306, Appr.

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 241 to 259—Before accused appears he is not entitled to information about detailed evidence of prosecution.

In the trial of an ordinary summons or warrant case before a Magistrate an accused person is not entitled, before he appears in Court, to any information as to what detailed evidence the prosecution is going to lead. [P 443 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., Ss. 256 and 110—S. 256 applies to cases under S. 110.

Section 256 is applicable to inquiry into cases under S. 110, so far as practicable : A. I. R. 1927 All. 660, Foll. [P 443 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 110—Mere fact of allegation of substantive offence does not preclude proceeding under S. 110 : A. I. R. 1929 All. 818 and A. I. R. 1925 All. 250, Overruled.

The mere fact that there is an allegation of a substantive offence is no obstacle to the using of the evidence such as it is in regard to the commission of that offence in proceedings under S. 110 : A. I. R. 1929 All. 813 and A. I. R. 1925 All. 250, Overruled ; A. I. R. 1925 All. 694, Ref. [P 443 C 2]

L. M. Roy—for Applicants.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Boys, J.—This is an application of three men on the revisional side of the Court asking that an order under S. 110, Criminal P. C., for filing security be set aside. There are no less than 11 grounds in the application for revision, of which some five have been argued before this Court.

It has already been held by the single Judge who referred this case to the present Bench that there is no force in ground 1 that the applicants had no notice under S. 112 before they were arrested. We agree that the terms of S. 113 were fully complied with and that no notice before arrest is necessary.

Next, it is urged that the applicants were not given the substance of the information against them in accordance with the terms of S. 112. We have no hesitation in agreeing with the decision in Emperor v. Ramghulam (1), in which it was held that ordinarily it is sufficient under S. 112 if that portion of the clause of S. 110 which is applicable to the particular case is specified in the notice that is given. To this we would further add that where the particular clause refers to two or more offences, the particular offence or offences which is appropriate to the particular case should also be mentioned in the notice. This applies more particularly to Cl. (d). It is unnecessary to repeat the arguments in the case to which we have referred. But we would note, if the principle which we have approved be not accepted, the utter impossibility of drawing the line at any place or of offering the Magistrates any guiding principle which would assist them in determining how much information is to be given. We may state a specific example. The evidence in this type of case generally consists of something like the evidence of 20 witnesses, who are expected to speak each of them possibly to a separate incident, sometimes one witness being supported by the evidence of another. Is the information to give the substance of the evidence that one witness is likely to give, or two witnesses or three witnesses, or where is the detailing of the information to stop? It is manifest that it would not be of any value for the purposes of giving notice of the evidence of witness 20 to give even in full the evidence that the earlier 19 witnesses were going to give. This practical difficulty only supports the view that it is sufficient if the particular clause of the charge, or where there are more than one offences named in charge, the particular offence or offences is given in the notice. In the trial of an ordinary summons or warrant case before a Magistrate an accused person is not entitled, before he appears in Court to any information as to what detailed evidence the prosecution is going to lead. What we have said on this point refers of course only to S. 110 and has not necessarily any bearing on Ss. 107 and 109.

The next point taken was that S. 256, Chap. 21, Criminal P. C. is applicable to inquiry into cases under S. 110. One of the members of this present Bench in Tirlok v. Emperor (2) has already held that the terms of S. 256 are applicable so far as practicable. This is in accordance with S. 117 (2), Criminal P. C., and we see no reason to hold otherwise. It is contended for the applicants that the accused were not asked to state whether they wished to cross-examine or not. Counsel was not prepared to suggest that there was the smallest possibility of there having been any prejudice to the accused from their not having been so asked, and this is manifest when counsel was asked whether they were represented or not, and he had to reply in the affirmative. There is no force in this contention and it need never have been raised.

Next, it is contended that proceedings under S. 110 cannot be instituted or at least are inappropriate where there is an allegation on behalf of the prosecution that the accused have committed a substantive offence under the Penal Code. This again is wholly untenable, and is based on an entire misappreciation of the principles properly applicable. There is not the slightest reason whatever why the police should not institute proceedings under S. 110 despite the fact that there may be some reason to suppose that the accused have committed some substantive offence under the Penal Code. It is only necessary again to give a concrete case. It may be that the accused is suspected in six cases of house-breaking. The police may have adequate grounds for believing that the accused is really guilty of those six cases of house-breaking, but in regard to any individual case it may be that the evidence would be almost certain to prove inadequate for a conviction. It does not follow, of course, that such evidence, that there is, is not trustworthy. There is manifestly here nothing whatever to prevent the police saying "if we institute a case of house-breaking it will only involve a useless expenditure of time and money. The evidence such as we have is trustworthy, but it would be inadequate for a conviction for the substantive offence."

There is no reason for holding that proceedings under S. 110 would be improper in such a case. It would be possible to multiply the reasons for holding that the mere fact that there is an allegation of a substantive offence is no obstacle to the using of the evidence such as it is in regard to the commission of that offence in proceedings under S. 110.

It is, however, desirable to consider the earlier decisions of this Court relevant to this ground. In 1924 the case of Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3) came before a single Judge of this Court. In that case the notice to the applicants was to the effect that they were "habitual dacoits and belonged to the dangerous gang of Dhani and Ram Kishan dacoits." The learned Judge of this Court said :

"On a reference to S. 110, Criminal P. C. it will be found that it does not provide for any person being called upon to furnish security on the ground that he was by habit a dacoit and belonged to the gang of a dacoit."

It is not for the Courts to find out the motive for the commission, but if it were necessary one could easily be found. Being a member of a gang of dacoits is a definite offence defined and punishable under the Penal Code and it was for that reason that under the preventive sections, action could not be taken for having committed a specific offence."

We are unable to agree with the learned Judge in the suggestion that he makes for the reason of the omission. In our view, being a member of a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity does come within the purview of S. 110, and is not excluded merely because there is an allegation of facts pointing to an offence under S. 400, I. P. C. Similarly, we are of opinion that where the facts alleged are that the person belongs to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery, and not being a gang of thugs or dacoits, those facts are susceptible to proceedings under S. 110. Let us suppose the case of a person A being accused of being by habit a thief. Similarly B, C, D and E are each accused of being by habit thieves. It is manifest that the accusation against each one of these persons could be the subject of a separate proceeding directed against him individually under S. 110, Cl. (a). Now, if we turn to S. 117, Cl. (5) it says :

"Where two or more persons have been associated together in the matter under inquiry they may be dealt with in the same or separate inquiries as the Magistrate shall think just."

From this it is clear that where two or three or four or five or more persons are accused of being associated together, or, in other words, forming a gang, for the purpose of habitually committing thefts, the legislature has contemplated that those facts may be the subject of a case under S. 110: otherwise there is no meaning in the two clauses read together. This is sufficient to show that the state of facts we have named does come both within S. 401, I. P. C. and S. 110, Criminal P. C. Nor is there any statutory provision forbidding the application of S. 110 to facts which happen to come also within S. 401, I. P. C.

Nor do we consider that as a matter of policy or convenience or justice it is even desirable to hold that where the facts come within either section, it should follow that only the section of the Penal Code should be applied, and that there must be a regular trial for the substantive offence. Let us consider the distinction between the two sections. Where a charge in the full sense of the term is laid under a section specifying a substantive offence such as section 401, I. P. C., the evidence and the only evidence which can be led is that of persons who saw acts or heard words, etc. with their own eyes and ears. On the other hand, evidence which is admissible under S. 110, Criminal P. C. includes evidence of "general repute." Manifestly, therefore, evidence which might be insufficient for a conviction under S. 401, I. P. C. punishable directly with imprisonment, may, though the facts to be proved are identically the same with the facts to be proved upon a case under S. 110, Criminal P. C. be sufficient for a conviction under S. 110, Criminal P. C. involving merely in the first place furnishing of security, for further evidence to support the prosecution, e. g., that of "general repute" is admissible, where the lesser consequence follows, of a nature which is not admissible where the graver consequence follows. We are, therefore, of opinion that it is not illegal to institute proceedings under S. 110 merely because the facts alleged would, if proved, establish an offence under S. 401, I. P. C. Nor is it necessarily improper to institute such proceedings. A case under S. 401, I. P. C. which might necessarily fail for want of the essential evidence might well and properly result in a conviction under S. 110, Criminal P. C. The same reasoning will mutatis mutandis apply to S. 400, I. P. C., and S. 110, Criminal P. C. We do not think it necessary to enter into speculation as to the reason for mentioning theft and robbery in S. 110 and not mentioning dacoity. We have stated why we do not agree with the reason given by the learned Judge in the case to which we have referred.

We have also been referred to the decision of one of us sitting with another Judge reported in Budhan v. Emperor (4). That case was referred to a Bench of two Judges by a single Judge who did not, as we have said we do not, agree with the proposition laid down in the case of Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3), which we have just discussed. In Budhan v. Emperor (4), however, the Bench held that the case of Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3) was distinguishable, and therefore cannot be interpreted as having overruled Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3) on the point which we are now considering. Finally there is the case of Ramrup Bhar v. Emperor (5). That case naturally followed the decision in Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3) which was correctly noted as not having been overruled in Budhan v. Emperor (4). As our present decision overrules Ram Prasad v. Emperor (3), it follows that it also overrules Ramrup Bhar v. Emperor (5).

The application is dismissed.

v.

Bindeshwari Singh—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 561 of 1929, Decided on 9th September 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Azamgarh, D/- 18th April 1929.

Criminal Trial—False plea of enmity put forth by accused aggravates offence and affects question of sentence.

In a great majority of cases, the plea used in defence is the stereotyped plea of enmity. The plea is characterised by a wanton disregard of truth and in spite of liborious attempts, no malice is established between the accused and the Crown witnesses including the complainant. It ought to be generally known that a false defence of this character has a tendency to aggravate the offence and is a factor which may affect the question of sentence. [P 416 C 2]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Nehal Chand—for Respondent.

Young, J.—Bindeshwari Singh was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class under S. 381, I. P. C. for having extorted Rs. 10 from one Balle Halwai by holding out threats to him of physical injury and of the institution of legal proceedings charging him with the commission of a criminal offence. The learned Magistrate gave him the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100.

The learned Sessions Judges reversed the decision of this trial Court and directed the acquittal of Bindeshwari Singh.

The Local Government has filed an appeal to this Court.

The complaint which gave rise to these proceedings was instituted by one Balle Halwai of Deogaon on 29th August 1928. The story of the Crown is shortly this:—Bindeshwari Singh purchased puris and sweets from the shop of Balle Halwai and owed him Rs. 10. A demand was made for the money. Bindeshwari Singh took offence at this and told Balle

"I shall set you right. I shall get a false case brought against you and shall cause you to be sent to jail."

On 30th March 1926, one Jamna Prasad filed a complaint against Balle, his wife Mt. Kishen Dei and Ganga Barnwar under S. 498, I. P. C. in the Court of a Special Magistrate of Deokali, in the District of Ghazipur. The allegation was that Mt. Kishen Dei was the wife of Jamna Prasad and that Balle and Ganga Barnwar had taken or enticed away the wife with intent that she may have illicit intercourse with them. Summonses were issued but could not be served. Warrants were applied for and were duly executed and 15th May 1926 was the date fixed for the hearing of the complaint. On that date the complainant did not appear in Court and the complaint was dismissed.

In the meantime, on some date between 8th May and 15th May 1926, Bindeshwari Singh came to the shop of Balle Halwai and told him that it was now time for him to realize the insecurity of his position, as a complaint under S. 498 had already been launched against him and the only thing which remained to be done was to press the complaint and send Balle Halwai to jail. Bindeshwari Singh told Balle that if he was anxious to enjoy his liberty, he ought to pay him Rs. 50. A settlement was arrived at for a sum of Rs. 10 and Balle paid Rs. 10 to Bindeshwari Singh. The above is proved from the evidence of Balle and is supported by the depositions of Miri Halwai, Bishnath Kalwar, Jattan and Kundar Kandau.

There is also very strong corroboration of this evidence in the fact that the complaint of Jamna Prasad came to nothing as the complainant allowed the complaint to go by default.

Balle Halwai is the complainant in this case and his statement ought to be carefully scrutinised. The complaint had been instituted after a very long time. Balle may be presumed to have a natural partiality in favour of his own complaint. The unusual delay in the institution of the complaint had got to be explained.

Balle had been subjected to a lengthy cross-examination and has not broken down in the least. His statement is clear and consistent. The delay in the institution of the complaint, has been accounted for. Bindeshwari Singh is a bully and evidently the complainant was afraid of him. It was not till proceedings were initiated against Bindeshwari Singh under S. 110, Criminal P. C. that Balle could venture to come forward against such a formidable opponent.

The statement of Misri Halwai has been rejected by the Court below upon the ground that he was the brother of Mahabir, who filed the complaint in the connected case. That is not a sound reason for discrediting the statement, but it ought to have been a good ground for scrutiny. It does not appear that any portion of the statement of Misri is intrinsically improbable, nor does his statement conflict with the statement of Balle or those of other witnesses for the prosecution. We are of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge has discredited the statement of Misri upon grounds flimsy and insufficient.

No reason whatsoever has been assigned for not accepting the statements of Bishnath, Jattan and Kunder who appear to be thoroughly independent witnesses. We are not surprised bearing in mind the character of Bindeshwari Singh that the demand was made at a public place in broad day light and in the presence of many witnesses. Bindeshwari Singh believed that he was the master of the situation and was running no risks.

We consider that on the evidence for the prosecution the case against Bindeshwari Singh has been clearly established. The defence in this case is exactly the same as was put up in the connected case of Mahabir. There is no evidence to support this defence. It has not been made out that Rai Sahib Dindayal Sahu had engineered this case to satisfy his malice against Bindeshwari Singh. The case set by the defence is that there was a widespread conspiracy and that the police and the district authorities had made common cause with Rai Sahib Dindayal. This defence was absolutely false and baseless.

In a great majority of cases, the plea urged in defence is the stereotyped plea of enmity. The plea is characterised by a wanton disregard of truth and in spite of laborious attempts, no malice is established between the accused and the Crown witnesses including the complainant. It ought to be generally known that a false defence of this character has a tendency to aggravate the offence and is factor which may effect the question of sentence.

Three witnesses were examined for the defence; of those Munshi Ramanad Lal and Babi Swami Nath Singh had appeared as witnesses for Bindeshwari Singh in the connected case. They say no more than this that there was a contest between Raghuraj Bali Sahu, nephew of Sahu Dindayal and certain other persons for a seat in the District Board of Azamgarh. They do not state that there is an enmity between Bindeshwari Singh and Sahu Dindayal. The third witness Babu Sham Narain Singh is a mukhtar and member of District Board. He states that four five months ago when he was sitting in Bar Library at about 11 a. m. he was called by Bindeshwari Singh who told him that the police daroga was getting a complaint written against him by Balle Halwai. He did not go near them but he saw Balle and daroga together when the complaint was being written. We do not believe a word of this and we are of opinion that this witness is not only false but radiates falsehoods.

The judgment under appeal appears to us to be extremely unsatisfactory. We are sorry to note that the findings of the learned Judge in this and the connected case, Criminal Appeal No. 560 of 1929, are against the weight of evidence and no serious attempt has been made to meet the excellent reasons given by the primary Court.

In the result, we allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Sessions Judge dated 18th April 1929, and convict Bindeshwari Singh under S. 384, I.P. C. We maintain the sentence of fine passed by the trial Court and sentence him to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The sentences in the two cases are to run consecutively. Bindeshwari Singh must surrender to his bail. The complainant ought to be paid Rs. 50 out of the fine if realized. If the fine is not recovered from Bindeshwari Singh, he must undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment in addition.

v.

Maiku—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 429 of 1929, Decided on 4th September 1929, made by Dist. Magistrate, Agra, on 4th June 1929.

Criminal Trial—Sentence—Sentence should be proportionate to nature and gravity of crime in each case—Giving certain sentence given in hundred other cases does not make it obligatory upon the Court to award the same sentence.

It is an elementary proposition in criminal jurisprudence that sentence in each case should be proportionate to the nature and gravity of the crime, and a Magistrate cannot claim a right to inflict a particular sentence in a particular case because he had done so in hundred other cases—some of which were more serious—without any regard to nature of facts, upon which each and every case has to be decided.

Mr. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Young, J.—Maiku Khar has been convicted by Mr. S. M. Ahmed, Excise Magistrate of Agra under S. 60, Excise Act and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50. The District Magistrate of Agra has through the Sessions Judge referred the case to this Court "for examination and enhancement of sentence if thought proper."

Mr. Sheodan Lal, an Excise Inspector, raided the house of Maiku Khar which is situated in Sadar Bazaar of the city of Agra. Maiku was caught in the act of distilling liquor. A large quantity of illicit liquor and a complete paraphernalia of instruments for manufacture of illicit liquor was discovered in his house. Maiku was put on his trial and he made no pretence of innocence. He pleaded guilty. The Excise Magistrate considered that he had properly discharged his function as a Magistrate by sentencing Maiku to a fine of Rs. 50.

Excise cases are not easy to detect and are difficult to prove. The distiller, not unoften, prepares liquor for purposes of traffic. The game is a profitable one.

Illicit distillation of liquor does not only mean a loss of revenue to the Government but is a serious menace to the health and the moral well being of the community. The Local Government, by its letter No. 579-13-55 dated 21st December 1928, had accentuated the fact that the crime was widely prevalent and that the actual distiller or trafficker should be sentenced to a substantial term of imprisonment. Under the Act, the maximum punishment, in the case of first offenders, is one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1000.

The explanation given by the Excise Magistrate is ridiculous. He says:

"I had been Excise Magistrate of Allahabad for over a year and I had to do no other work than excise, as the work is so heavy there. The present Excise Commissioner had been Excise Inspector under me there and he knows well that in all such cases Rs. 50 was considered proper punishment. I decided at least some hundred such and more serious cases with fine but the excise department there never considered the punishment inadequate."

It is difficult to understand the above statement together with its implications. Are we to take it that this Magistrate has ignored and pigeon-holed the Government notification which we have alluded to above? Does the Magistrate claim a right to inflict a sentence of fine in all cases because he has done so in hundred other cases—some of which were more serious—without any regard to the nature of facts, upon which each and every case had to be decided? The Magistrate would have been well advised not to bring in the aid of prescription in his favour. It is an elementary proposition in criminal jurisprudence that sentence in each case should be proportionate to the nature and gravity of the crime.

The learned Magistrate submits that a fine of Rs. 50 for a man of no means and status is "quite adequate punishment." It is worthy of note that there was not a scrap of evidence before the trial Court concerning the means of Maiku. Granting that the financial position of Maiku was not sound why was not the sentence of imprisonment passed?

There is an insinuation that the Excise Inspector was shielding the principle culprit and that Maiku was playing the second fiddle. A Magistrate with any sense of responsibility ought to have hesitated and paused before making any insinuation against the Excise Inspector which was not justified by the evidence on the record. In the present case the attack upon the Excise Inspector was wholly unwarranted.

The Magistrate's grievance is that the Excise Inspector has moved in this matter and submitted his report for enhancement with a view to "minimise the blame brought against the Excise Inspector in the Peoples' Herald." Any publication in the Peoples' Herald is outside the judicial record. Here we have another insinuation and nothing to support it. We hold that the Excise Inspector in bringing the sentence to the notice of the District authorities had done the right and proper thing. The sentence is ridiculous. We sentence Maiku to six months' rigorous imprisonment and maintain the fine of Rs. 50.

PULLAN, J.

Balkishen—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 357 of 1929, Decided on 29th May 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Aligarh, D/- 27th April 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 250—Case prima facie triable by Magistrate but if facts were proved constituting offence exclusively triable by Sessions Court—Award of compensation by Magistrate is not illegal.

Where a Magistrate tries an accused for an offence prima facie triable by him, when really if the facts had been proved the offences would have been one triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, an award of compensation made by the Magistrate under S. 250 is not illegal: A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 223, Ref. A. I. R. 1926 All. 159, Dist. [P 448 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Court's duty—Magistrate is not bound to find whether case exclusively triable by Sessions would arise if facts before him were proved.

It is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to go out of his way to find that a case exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions might arise from facts before him, if they were proved. [P 448 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Aligarh requesting this Court to set aside an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 250, Criminal P. C., directing a certain complainant to pay compensation to the accused. It is not suggested that the order was otherwise improper, but merely that it was without jurisdiction. The case before the Magistrate was under Ss. 463 and 323, I. P. C. both being within the Magistrate's jurisdiction and prima facie he was entitled to pass the order in question. The learned Sessions Judge bases his reference on the assumption that if there was any offence it was one under S. 467, I. P. C. and exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions. But it has been found by both Courts that there was no offence, and the Judgment appears to me to have gone too far when he assumes that if the offence had been committed it would have been one under S. 467, I. P. C. We have to consider whether the Magistrate was trying the case or merely holding an enquiry with a view to commitment. He says that he was trying the case, and I have no doubt that he is correct in so saying. The case must be distinguished from that reported in Harihar Datt v. Maksud Ali (1) which refers to a case where one at least of the offences charged is exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions. The case which is parallel to the present is noted in the judgment in Harihar Datt v. Maksud Ali (1). It is M. Venkatrayar v. K. Venkatrayar (2). It was not in my opinion incumbent on the Magistrate to go out of his way to find that a case exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions might arise from the facts before him, if they were proved. He was trying a case apparently within his jurisdiction. He found that there was no case and that it had been brought frivolously and vexatiously. He was therefore entitled to act under S. 250, Criminal P. C.

I decline to interfere. The reference will be returned.

INDIAN LEGISLATION 1930

ACT 13 of 1930

*(Received G. G.'s assent on 24th
March 1930)*

Amends the Inland Steam Vessels Act, 1917.

New Ss. 54-A and 54-B have been inserted giving G. G.-in-Council power to fix maximum and minimum rates for passenger fares and freight for goods and Local Government power to make rules for appointing Advisory Committee.

ACT 14 of 1930

*(Received G. G.'s assent on 26th
March 1930)*

Amends the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

A new Chap. 6-A has been inserted consisting of 8 sections viz., 71-A to 71-H. The amendments are mainly for the purpose of limiting the hours of work and of granting periodical rest to railway servants.

ACT 18 of 1930

(Received G. G.'s assent on 4th April 1930)

Provides for the imposition and collection of an excise duty on silver.

This Act has been introduced to impose duty on silver extracted from ores in British India. S. 2 gives definition of "silver works." S. 3 (i) imposes duty of four annas on each ounce of silver issued from the 'silver work.' Cls. (2) and (3) give the mode in which the duty is to be imposed. S. 4 imposes a fine to the extent of Rs. 1,000 or double the amount of the duty avoided on persons contravening the rules under S. 6. S. 5 relates to the application of Sea Customs Act while S. 6 is for giving rule-making power to Governor General in Council.

"Browbeating the witnesses."

Courts and juries appreciate delicacy of feeling upon the part of advocates, and where in cross-examination it becomes important to inquire into the past history of a witness, or to speak about the death of a near relative or dear friend, or to touch some chord of sorrow, it is wise to use introductory expressions deploring the necessity of asking such questions, and representing it as one of the unpleasant but imperative duties of counsel. Jurors are apt to sympathise with a witness who is unjustly attacked by counsel upon cross-examination, and in making up their verdict are often unconsciously influenced by such improper conduct upon the part of the advocate. It is in vain that we deplore the fact that jurors are often influenced by passion or prejudice, and that they do not always follow the strict letter of the law, but, generally speaking, they mean to do what is right, and if they sometimes lean a little too far to the side of mercy, who can blame them? In this respect the observations of Archbishop Whately, on the unfair treatment of witnesses by counsel, are worthy of consideration. He says:

"I think that the kind of skill by which the cross-examiner succeeds in alarming, misleading or bewildering an honest witness may be characterized as the most, or one of the most, base and depraved of all possible employments of intellectual power. I have seen the experiment tried of subjecting a witness to such a kind of cross-examination by a practical lawyer as would have been, I am convinced, the most likely to alarm and perplex many an honest witness, without any effect in shaking the testimony and afterwards by a totally opposite mode of examination, such as would not at all have perplexed one who was honestly telling the truth, that same witness was drawn on, step by step, to acknowledge the utter falsity of the whole. Generally speaking a quiet, gentle, and straightforward, though full and careful, examination will be the most adapted to elicit truth; the manoeuvres and the browbeating which are the best adapted to confuse an honest simple minded witness are just what the dishonest one is the best prepared for. The more the storm blusters, the more carefully he wraps round him the cloak which a warm sunshine will induce him to throw off."

THE PLEA OF INSANITY IN CRIMINAL CASES

By

AMOLAK RAM KAPUR., B.A. (HONS.), LL.B. Vakil, High Court, Lahore

* The plea of insanity is sometimes urged to a charge for a criminal offence more often in indictments for murder, treason and such other offences of a more or less serious character. Our knowledge of the working of the human mind is so inadequate that the decision of the question whether a person accused of an offence has succeeded in proving that he comes within the exception or not offers the greatest difficulty to the Judge and the jury. Lawyers and medical men have striven hard for many years to come to a definite conclusion, but constantly differing amongst themselves have not yet been able to lay down any satisfactory test for judging the difficult question of the sufficiency or insufficiency of a plea of insanity in criminal trials.

Sir Fitz James Stephen, in his treatment of the subject was constrained to remark as follows: "I have read a variety of medical works on madness, but I have found the greatest difficulty in discovering in any of them the information of which I stood in need; namely a definite account of the course and of the symptoms collectively constituting the disease. Most of the authors whose works I have read insist at a length which in the present day I should have supposed was unnecessary, on the proposition that insanity is a disease, but hardly any of them describe it as a disease is described. They all, or almost all, describe a number of states of mind which do not appear to have any necessary or obvious connexion with each other."

"These they classify in ways which are admitted to be more or less unsatisfactory. Total insanity, partial insanity, impulsive insanity, moral insanity, pyromania, kleptomania and many other such expressions occur; but in the absence of any general account of the whole subject showing what is the common cause of which all the symptoms are effects, and how they respectively proceed from it, these expressions are like adjectives with an unintelligible substantive. To say that a strong and ceaseless desire to set a house on fire is pyromania, and that a state of continuous passionate excitement, in which all the ordinary connexion of ideas is broken up, and a man behaves as if he were drunk or transported with intense anger is mania as opposed to melancholia, is to substitute words for thoughts. It is like telling a man that a whale and a monkey are both mammals when you do not explain what mammal means." (1) The passage quoted above sets forth clearly the nature of the information that lawyers, in dealing with the subject, require at the hands of alienists, and the difficulty experienced in procuring the information. The knowledge of insanity is not even yet advanced to such a stage as to fulfil our requirements.

It is an old old story that precise definition of insanity is difficult and that professional opinions differ both as to the tests and the inferences from them in different cases. It was said by a distinguished man, the late Sir George Savage, that there is no standard of sanity fixed by Nature; but that "sanity" and "insanity," as recognized by the doctor, and in fact, by the general public, must be but terms of convenience. Sir Clifford Allbutt described health whether of body or mind as "an oscillation about an ideal axis" in which stability is marvellously maintained, and there is no difficulty in perceiving when this stability is upset.

MEDICAL AND LEGAL TESTS

Coming to the field of criminal jurisprudence, we find the lawyer and the doctor notoriously at variance, the former strongly upholding the view that the mere doctrine that insanity per se connotes irresponsibility is dangerous and that it would be not safe to incorporate the notion of uncontrollable impulse in the legal definition of insanity for criminal purposes. In this connexion His Honour Parry, J. observes as follows :

(1) See Mercier — Criminal Responsibility, pp. 76—77.

To allow a human being to escape punishment for crime by pleading loss of self-control opens the gates of the dock from a lawyer's point of view far too widely and allows many real criminals to escape from justice (1). As a great scientist wrote : "There is a border land between crime and insanity, near one boundary of which we meet with something of madness but more of sin, and near the other boundary of which something of sin but more of madness." (2)

Thus it will be noted that the medical and legal standards of sanity are not identical, and the test of insanity, as viewed from a legal point, does not coincide with the medical idea. From the medical point of view every man at the time when he commits a murder, is insane, that is, he is not in sound, healthy and normal condition ; but from the legal point of view a man must be held to be sane so long as he is able to distinguish between right and wrong, so long as he knows that the offence he is committing is a wrong thing to do, so long as he has a guilty mind. A person who is in a highly excited and unbalanced condition, but is nevertheless conscious that what he is doing is wrong and a crime cannot be said to be of unsound mind within the meaning of S. 84 (3), I. P. C.,

The principle underlying the doctrine exempting a man of unsound mind from criminal responsibility has been well elucidated by penologists. It has been rightly said that a mad man does not possess mere rea or free will, cannot distinguish right from wrong, is deprived of memory and understanding is a victim of his impulses and all his acts are involuntary and unintelligent; he is punished by his own madness; and society can neither correct him nor make an example of him by inflicting punishment on him. Legally speaking such a man does harm to society and individuals by his violent acts; but he does no wrong (4); and Society, in order, to protect itself, provides for his detention in an asylum.

THE McNAGHTEN CASE.

The rules concerning the defence of insanity in criminal trials were laid down in the answers of the Judges to questions put to them by the House of Lords in 1843 in the McNaghten case. The circumstances of the case were recently given by Lord Birkenhead in the Times, London (24th May 1924). In 1843 one McNaghten shot at and mortally wounded Mr. Drummond. He did so in the belief that the person at whom he shot was Sir Robert Peel, and under the insane delusion that he was the object of prosecution by Sir Robert Peel. The defence was that the prisoner was insane, and that under the influence of the delusion he was not capable of exercising any control over acts which had connexion with his delusion. The jury found the prisoner not guilty on the ground of insanity.

The case caused much discussion and gave rise to a debate in the House of Lords, and it appeared to those in authority desirable to obtain some authoritative pronouncement as to the law applicable to such cases. It was therefore determined to ask the opinion of the Judges.

The House put to the Judges five questions, all of them necessarily hypothetical. Maule, J., delivered his opinion separately and Sir Nicholas Tindal, L. C. J. of Common Pleas, then, on behalf of all the other Judges there attending, delivered their answers. These answers constitute what are known as the rules in McNaghten's case. For questions and answers in detail see (5). In his reference to these questions and answers, Lord Birkenhead says : "They have no legal authority, but, having been delivered upon so important an occasion, and as representing the considered opinion of almost the whole of the Judges of the Common Law Courts they were regarded as having, and have ever since had, great weight—indeed such great weight that they are described by Lord Atkin, J.'s Committee as formulating the present rules of law determining criminal responsibility (in relation, that is, to insanity)" (6). Sir James Stephen, writing on the subject in 1862 said that it had been the general practice ever since, for Judges charging juries in cases in which the question of sanity arose to use the words of the answers given by the Judges on that occasion. But Sir Henry Theobald in a recent book (7) on the lunacy laws says that more recent examination of charges given by the Judges in trials for murder shows that though the rules in McNaghten's case are still relied on, yet, being abstract and general in their terms, the Judges are careful to adopt and apply them to the circumstances of each case.

THE RULES SUMMARISED

Sir James Stephen summarised the rules as follows: No act is a crime if the person who does it is at the time when it is done prevented by any disease affecting his mind:

(a) from knowing the nature and quality of his act; or

(b) from knowing that the act is wrong.

And he added as a doubtful proposition (c) from controlling his own conduct unless the absence of the power of control has been produced by his own default.

He further added as being certain law the following:

But the act may be a crime although the mind of the person who does it is affected by a disease, if such a disease does not in fact produce upon his mind one or other of the effects above-mentioned in reference to that act.

The rules laid down in the McNaghten's case (8) have been followed in every subsequent case in England as well as this country, as the most authoritative expression of the law on the subject. S. 81, I. P. C., lays down the law similar to the rules in the McNaghten case, and there is no reason to believe that the framers of the Code intended to introduce any rule involving a departure from the English Law on the subject (9).

Section 84, I. P. C., runs as follows:

"Nothing is an offence which is done by a person who at the time of doing it, by reason of unsoundness of mind, is incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law.

THE OBJECT OF THE CRIMINAL LAW.

The object of the criminal law is to make people control their insane as well as their sane impulses, (10), and to guard against mischievous propensities and homicidal impulses (11). It is not therefore every mental disease which exempts the sufferer from criminal responsibility.

Lord Birkenhead says (12) that sane persons from time to time suffer from impulses to do wrong. They as a rule resist their impulses. If they do not and if the wrong which they are thus led to do is one forbidden by the criminal law and they are detected in its commission they are rightly indicted and rightly convicted.

It is precisely the same with the insane. They, like sane persons, perhaps to a greater degree are the subjects of impulses to do wrong. Sometimes they resist these impulses. Sometimes they give way to them under the influence of delusion, or not knowing right from wrong, or not understanding the nature of the act which they are committing. They are amply protected under the express words of the McNaghten rules.

THE PRESUMPTION OF LAW.

It is the basic principle of criminal jurisprudence that the law presumes every person at the age of discretion to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes unless the contrary is proved; and even if a lunatic has lucid intervals the law presumes the offence of such a person to have been committed in a lucid interval,

Second Appeal No. 80 of 1927, Decided on 9th January 1930, against decree of Sub-Judge, Ghazipur, D/- 10th July 1926.

The word 'prosecution' has a very wide significance and does not merely mean an actual trial or an enquiry which may result in a conviction and the imposition of imprisonment or fine. Therefore, an application in revision under S. 436, Criminal P. C., for ordering an enquiry or a retrial is a prosecution: 17 C. W. N. 554; 19 C. W. N. 935; 41 All. 503; A. I. * (b) Limitation Act, Art. 23—Prosecution terminates by order of discharge by Magistrate—But if matter is taken up in revision by higher authority, prosecution terminates when proceedings in revision come to end.

As soon as the order of discharge is passed the prosecution in a Magistrate's Court terminates. If no further proceedings are taken the prosecution must be deemed to have terminated on that date. But if, as a matter of fact, the matter is taken up in revision to a higher authority which has power of interference and proceedings sanctioned by the Criminal Procedure Code are being pursued, e. g., under S. 436, Criminal P. C., the prosecution can no longer be said to have finally terminated. Its final termination would be only when the proceedings in revision have come to an end in favour of the discharged person. In such a case the prosecution for the purpose of Art. 23, Limitation Act, terminates only when the application for revision is dismissed. 23 Mad. 24, Dist.; A. I. A. P. Pandey—for Appellant.Janaki Prasad—for Respondent.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Both the Courts below have dismissed it on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The only question that arises for consideration in this appeal is one of limitation.

A complaint under S. 500, I. P. C., was filed by the defendant against the plaintiff in the Court of a Magistrate on 26th May 1924. By an order dated 8th August 1924, the accused was discharged. The defendant filed an application before the Sessions Judge for ordering further enquiry under S. 436, Criminal P. C. Notice was issued to the accused to appear and show cause why a retrial should not be ordered. On cause being shown the application was ultimately dismissed on 25th October 1924. The present suit was instituted on 24th October 1925, i. e., more than one year after the order of discharge but within one year of the dismissal of the application by the Sessions Judge.

Article 23, Lim. Act, admittedly applies to this case, and under it one year is to be calculated from the date "when the plaintiff is acquitted or the prosecution is otherwise terminated." This was not a case of acquittal at all. We have to see when the prosecution terminated. Obviously the article implies the final termination.

The word 'prosecution' has not been defined in any statutory enactment. It is undoubtedly a word of much wider scope than a trial or even an enquiry by a Magistrate. Murray's New English Dictionary explains the word 'prosecution' as meaning in strict technical language a proceeding either by way of indictment or information in the criminal Court in order to put an offender on his trial, the exhibition of a criminal charge against a person before a Court of justice, and in general language the institution and carrying on of legal proceedings against a person.

The question before us is whether an application for further enquiry and for ordering a retrial under S. 436, in the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge can be deemed to be either a continuation of the prosecution or a fresh prosecution in itself. There are two cases in favour of the view taken by the Courts below and there is no direct authority against that view. In Narayana v. Seshayya (1), it was held that a suit brought within one year from the dismissal of a revision petition filed against an order of acquittal but more than one year after the acquittal was barred by limitation. The judgment is very brief and no detailed reasons are given. The case may also perhaps be distinguished on the ground that the District Magistrate to whom the application in revision had been made from the order of acquittal had himself no jurisdiction to order any further enquiry or retrial or set aside the acquittal; at best he could report the case to the High Court. Moreover in a case where the prosecution ended in acquittal the language of Art. 23 leaves no room for argument, as it provides specifically that limitation is to run from the date of 'acquittal'. It is not, therefore, necessary to consider when the prosecution 'terminated.' It is only in cases which ended otherwise than in acquittal that it falls to be considered as to when the prosecution terminated. Purushottam Vithal Das v. Raoji Hari (2) is a direct authority in support of the view that limitation begins to run from the order of the discharge and the subsequent revision proceedings do not in any way affect the matter.

Now there is plenty of authority that the word 'prosecution' has a very wide significance and does not merely mean an actual trial or an enquiry which may result in a conviction and the imposition of imprisonment or fine. In the case of C. H. Crowdy v. L. O. Reilly (3) it was laid down that an action for damages would lie in the case of an application under S. 107 of the Code and that it was not essential that the original proceeding should have been of such a nature as to render the person against whom it was taken liable to be arrested, fined or imprisoned. The same view was followed by the Calcutta High Court in Bishun Pershad Narain Singh v. Phulman Singh (4). It was there remarked that the term 'prosecution' should not be interpreted in the restricted sense in which it is used in the Criminal Procedure Code and that if a person maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause sets the machinery of the criminal law in motion, he is responsible for the consequences. This view was accepted by our High Court in Mohammad Nizullah Khan v. Jai Ram (5) where an action was held to lie on account of an application for binding down to keep the peace under S. 107, Criminal P. C.

Indeed, there is one case which has gone still further. Narendra Nath De v. Jyotish Chandra Lal (6), was a case where the defendant had applied to the Court of the Munsif under S. 195, the old Criminal P. C., for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff. Although the application for sanction was a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution and was actually filed in a civil Court, the learned Judges held that the claim for damages for malicious prosecution was maintainable. They held that as the proceedings for sanction had been instituted maliciously and without just reasonable or probable cause they gave rise to a sufficient cause of action. It seems to us that an application in revision for ordering an enquiry or a retrial is on a much stronger footing than a mere application for sanction to file a complaint. If the latter is deemed to be a prosecution, much more should be the former.

In the case of Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (7), persons whose names did not appear on the face of the proceedings as complainants but who were directly responsible for the charge and for the production of evidence and for the conduct of the case before the police and in the Court were held to be liable, for damages in action for malicious prosecution. Similarly their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balbhaddar Singh v. Badri Sah (8), held that a man who had given information to the authorities which naturally led to the prosecution, even though he himself was not, in the most literal sense of the word, the prosecutor was liable in an action for malicious prosecution for damages on account of the information supplied by him which caused trouble.

When the application under S. 436 is preferred before a Sessions Judge and notice to show cause has been issued, the Judge has himself power to make further enquiry into the case of the accused person who has been discharged or direct any subordinate Magistrate to make such enquiry. While such a proceeding is pending before a Sessions Judge, the accused, in our opinion, is being prosecuted and in order to save himself from a retrial he must satisfy the Judge that there is no case against him. Taking the word "prosecution" in its wider sense we fail to see why it should not include a criminal proceeding of this nature before a Sessions Judge or a High Court. If this view were not to be accepted the result would be that the discharged person would be compelled to institute his suit for damages even though the matter is still sub judice and is being considered by the Sessions Judge or by the High Court. It seems extraordinary that a plaintiff should be compelled to sue while it is yet a question whether his retrial is not going to be ordered. Of course as soon as the order of discharge was passed the prosecution in the Magistrate's Court terminated. If no further proceedings are taken the prosecution must be deemed to have terminated on that date. But if, as a matter of fact, the matter is taken up in reversion to a higher authority which has power of interference and proceedings sanctioned by the Criminal Procedure Code are being pursued, the prosecution can no longer be said to have finally terminated. Its final termination would be only when the proceedings in revision have come to an end in favour of the discharged person.

One may take the case of a Government appeal from an acquittal as an illustration. The order of acquittal terminates the prosecution for the time being. The filing of an appeal does not ipso facto vacate that order; and yet while the appeal is pending it can hardly be said that the prosecution has terminated. We think that in the same way while a revisional application is pending the prosecution must be deemed to be still continuing and not finally terminated.

It has been suggested that inasmuch as a further enquiry cannot be claimed in revision as of right and as there is no statutory period of limitation fixed for an application for revision, time should not be extended after the order of discharge. As a matter of practice revisions are not admitted when the application is very stale and irrespective of the question whether the Sessions Judge exercises his discretion ultimately or not, the complainant has no grievance if while his application for further enquiry is pending it is considered that his prosecution of the accused is still continuing. It is only after the dismissal of such an application that the accused is freed from the worry of the criminal proceedings, and is in a position to think of a civil suit for damages.

As a matter of fact it is conceivable that the original complaint might have been filed on the basis of information received from certain witnesses or documents believed to be genuine and, therefore, might not be without reasonable and probable cause, in which case no suit for damages would lie on account of that. But in the course of the trial it may be disclosed that the oral evidence was false and perjured or that the documentary evidence was forged, resulting in the discharge of the accused. If the complainant persists in taking the matter up to the revisional Court without any reasonable and probable cause there seems no reason why he should not be liable for damages on account of the latter proceedings, though there was no such liability on account of the earlier one.

Differing from the views expressed by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court we would hold that the prosecution finally terminated when the application in revision was dismissed and that the present plaintiff, if he can make out a case of malicious prosecution which was false and without reasonable and probable cause, is entitled to damages not only on account of the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court but also the revisional proceedings before the Sessions Judge. The latter has given him just as good a cause of action as the former. The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the suit is remanded under O. 41, R. 23 to that Court for disposal. The costs will abide the event and will be on the higher scale.

Tirath Ram—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1827 of 1929, Decided on 24th January 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 25th November 1929.

Criminal Trial—Sentence—Courts should avoid passing short sentences of imprisonment in case of first offenders of immature age.

To send a youth aged 17 years, who is a first offender and commits the offence of criminal breach of trust being prompted by another person, to jail is to put him in the way of becoming a hardened criminal in association in jail with other criminals. The subordinate Courts should, therefore, ordinarily avoid passing sentences of imprisonment for short terms specially on first offenders of immature age. [P 452 C 1]

Judgment.—The petitioner Tirath Ram, aged 17 years, was sent up for trial for having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 4-12-0 while he was employed as an octroi clerk at Kartarpur. He pleaded guilty at the trial and was convicted and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 under S. 408, I. P. C. He appealed to the Sessions Judge on the question of sentence which was reduced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge has found that "the accused is a first offender and a raw inexperienced youth. He was a tool in the hands of Sri Gopal senior muharrir who appears to have prompted him to embezzle this small amount. The case does not therefore call for a deterrent punishment."

An application for revision has been presented in this Court and the only question on which it has been admitted is the question of sentence. It seems to me that to send a youth of the age of the petitioner to jail for an offence committed under the circumstances mentioned by the Sessions Judge is to put him in the way of becoming a hardened criminal by association in the jail with other criminals. It has often been pointed out by this Court that the Subordinate Courts should ordinarily avoid passing sentences of imprisonment for short terms, especially on first offenders of immature age.

I accept this petition and reduce the sentence of the petitioner to the term of imprisonment already undergone by him. He will be discharged from his bail bond and the fine, if paid, shall be refunded to him.

Criminal Appeal No. 903 of 1929, Decided on 11th December 1929, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Mainpuri, D/- 21st August 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 124-A—Speech bringing Government into hatred is not innocuous because contempt already existing has not been increased.

It cannot be said that the speech even if it brought the Government into hatred and contempt can be considered to be innocuous because such hatred and contempt cannot be increased from the standard that already exists in the minds of the people. [P 453 C 1, 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 124-A—Intention is correlated with natural consequences—Person in his speech saying he is follower of non-violence but at the same time saying that he is nobody to blame people who in their anger at oppression of present Government use more violent methods—He further insinuating various disabilities of village life to be due to present Government—There is an intention to bring present Government into hatred and offence under S. 124 is committed.

It is true that the gist of the offence under S. 124-A lies in the intention of the speaker or writer. But intention is connected with consequences. To intend a thing is to act in such a way as to expect that certain consequences would follow. Intention, therefore, is correlated with the natural consequences which would follow from a particular act. Where a person says in his speech that he himself is the follower of the precept of non-violence but at the same time says that he is nobody to find fault with people who in their anger at oppression as is witnessed under the present Government use more violent methods and shoot at members of the Assembly and where throughout his speech he insinuates various disabilities of village life to be due to the present Government, there is an intention on his part to bring the Government into hatred and he commits the offence under S. 124-A. [P 453 C 1, 2]

K. D. Malaviya and Vishwa Mitra—for Appellant.

Sankar Saran—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Mr. Dandekar has been convicted of an offence under S. 124-A, I.P.C., in so far as that he made a speech bringing or attempting to bring into hatred or contempt, or excite or attempting to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. From such a conviction an appeal is permitted direct to this Court. After reading the statement of the appellant in the Court of the District Magistrate I felt doubt as to his desire to appeal. He seems to glory in his condition and feel very happy in the position which he has created for himself. His learned counsel Mr. Malaviya assured me that though he had received instructions from the friends of the appellants, those friends had consulted the appellant who desired an appeal. That was the reason why I did not think it necessary to make direct enquiry from the appellant himself. Mr. Malaviya has read the entire speech to me. Such a speech should be considered to be seditious or otherwise, according to the impression which it would create on the mind of the audience. When I put this conclusion before Mr. Malaviya he quoted a ruling of the Calcutta High Court that the gist of the offence lies in the intention of the writer. Intention however, is connected with consequences.

To intend a thing is to act in such a way as to expect that certain consequences would follow. Intention therefore is correlated with the natural consequences which must follow from a particular act. His further argument was that there has been so much talk at present of independence of the country, that this talk must have reached the small town of Bewar in the backward district of Mainpuri, that Ahirs and Chamars—that is not what he said but that was the interpretation that I put on what he said—would be full of ideas of independence of the country, that therefore Mr. Dandekar's speech would have little effect in increasing the height to which such ideas had reached in the minds of the cultivators of Bewar. I do not think that Mr. Dandekar himself would relish that his efforts were treated with such little consideration. It is quite true that being in the judiciary I have had no opportunity of going round the country and discovering whether the tenantry in remote places like Mainpuri and Bewar had imbibed the ideas of independence. However, that may be, it cannot be said that the speech even if it brought the Government into hatred and contempt could be considered to be innocuous because such hatred and contempt cannot be increased from the standard that now exists in the mind of the tenantry. I do not desire to quote from the speech and to give it a publicity which was not open to Mr. Dandekar himself. The principle that I adopt is to read the speech myself and to discover what my feeling would be if I accepted all the statements made therein to be true. Mr. Malaviya was quite correct in saying that I cannot place myself in the position of the tenantry who listened to the speech because of the difference in education and the want of capacity in the tenants to test the truth of what Mr. Dandekar stated. To that extent, a speech made to an audience such as was available in Bewar would be more harmful than a speech made to partially educated man like myself. There would be in an audience composed of men like me some desire to test the allegations made by a speaker. There would be absolutely none in the town of Bewar. The speech is a very clever one. It is very easy to see how, with every desire to incite, the speaker, believes that he is keeping within the law by attributing to himself personally peaceful motives and conduct. He is willing to harm and yet afraid to strike. What he has said in effect is that he himself is a follower of the Mahatma whose precept is that of non-violence, but at the same time who is he to find fault with people who in their anger at oppression such as is witnessed at present under the present Government use more violent methods and shoot at members of the Assembly. He exhorts his audience to reserve their judgment as regards such acts because such acts have led to the independence of other countries. The impression on my mind is that the speaker desired to tell the audience: "I am not violent but do not follow my example. I would not blame you if you are violent."

All through the speech he insinuates various disabilities of village life to be due to the present Government. Clearly then there is an intention on his part to bring the present Government into hatred. I am of opinion that Mr. Dandekar has been rightly convicted and dismiss his appeal.

Criminal Ref. No. 508 of 1929, Decided on 7th September 1929, made by Addl. Sess. Judge, Moradabad, D/- 2nd July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 424—Removal of property under attachment by third person claiming title to it—Question of title has to be determined before conviction.

The crucial question for determination under S. 424 is whether the alleged removal of property is dishonest or fraudulent and therefore if persons claiming title to a property under attachment in execution of a decree on another remove the same, the matter whether such property belonged to the accused or no has to be determined by criminal Court before deciding upon conviction : 22 Mad. 151, Dist.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by Mr. P. C. Agarwal, the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Moradabad, recommending that the conviction and sentence passed upon Ghasi, Dari and Gokul under S. 424, I. P. C., be set aside.

One Umar Daraz had a decree against Ganpat, Gangu and Dilsukh. In execution of the said decree, certain crops were attached and one Saadat was appointed shehna or bailiff to guard the crops. Ghasi, Dari and Gokul, in spite of resistance on the part of the shehna, cut and took away half the crops. The shehna lodged a complaint and the result was that Ghasi, Dari and Gokul were convicted under S. 424, I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 20 each. The plea put forward by the accused persons was that they had cultivated the crop and that there was nothing wrong, if they cut the crop and took the same away. The trial Court did not enter into the question whether the plea put forward by the accused was correct.

The learned Magistrate in answer to the referring order observes as follows :

"It is a general principle that a criminal Court cannot determine the title of a person to any property. Moreover the complainant had no opportunity to adduce any rebutting evidence as to the title, because he came to know of the defence only after he had completed his prosecution. In the prosecution, what he had to prove was only this that there was an attachment subsisting on the crops in question and that the accused removed it during the attachment."

Any determination of title by a criminal Court cannot have the force of a decree of a competent Court of civil jurisdiction. It may be necessary in certain cases to adjudicate upon an issue of title with a view to determine whether the offence charged had been brought home to the accused. S. 424, I. P. C., provides that whoever dishonestly or fraudulently. removes any property of himself or any other person. . . shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years or with fine or with both. Ex hypothesi, the decree of Umar Daraz was not against Ghasi, Dari and Gokul. The latter admittedly removed some property alleging that the said property belonged to them. The crucial question for determination therefore was whether the removal of the crops by these three persons was dishonest or fraudulent. If they were the owners of the crop and removed the same, their conduct was neither dishonest nor fraudulent. The matter ought to have been determined by the criminal Court whether the property belonged to the accused, but this matter was not enquired into by the criminal Court.

The learned Sessions Judge upon an examination of the record came to the conclusion that the prosecution had utterly failed to establish that the crops belonged to the judgment-debtors of Umar Daraz. He further found upon the evidence that Ghasi was the owner of the crop. The conviction of Ghasi, Dari and Gokul under S. 424, I. P. C., could not therefore be maintained.

My attention has been drawn to a decision of the Madras High Court in Queen Empress v. Obayya (1). The facts of this case are toto coele different from the case now before me and the decision is not helpful to the prosecution.

I accept the reference and set aside the conviction and the sentence. The fine if paid must be refunded.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 19 of 1929, Decided on 6th May 1929, from order of Offg. Addl. Sess. Judge, Manbhum-Sambalpur, D/- 30th January 1929.

 (a), Criminal P. C., S. 118—Inquiry under Chap. 8 is not trial and person called upon to furnish security is not deemed to be convicted within Criminal P. C., S. 426.

A proceeding under Chap. 8, is an "inquiry" which under the definition of the term excludes a trial. No doubt S. 117 applies to such inquiry the procedure prescribed for conducting trials, and the terms and expressions which occur in a trial come to be loosely applied in an inquiry also for the sake of convenience. But actually the person in respect of whom the inquiry is held is not an accused but a quasi-accused, and he is not "deemed" to be an accused, nor when an order under S. 118 is passed against him "deemed" to be convicted within the meaning of S. 426: A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 392; A. I. R. 1926 All. 403, Foll. [P 456 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 426 (1)—Appeal by "convicted person" is condition precedent to granting bail.

Under S. 426 (1) the existence of an appeal by a convicted person is a condition precedent to jurisdiction to grant bail: A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 723, Expl. and Dist. [P 456 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 118—Imprisonment for default of security is different from imprisonment on conviction.

Imprisonment for default of security under S. 118 stands on quite a different footing from a sentence of imprisonment passed on a conviction in respect of an offence: 1 Pat. L. J. 212, Rel. on [P 458 C 1]

S. K. Mitler—for Petitioner.

W. H. Akbari—for the Crown.

Macpherson, J.—This application in revision, is directed against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur cancelling the order of bail in favour of the petitioners passed by the Deputy Commissioner, who is the District Magistrate of Manbhum.

On 5th July 1928, a First Class Magistrate directed the petitioners under S. 118, Criminal P. C. to furnish personal bonds in Rs. 200 and two sureties in Rs. 100 each to be of good behaviour for a period of one year and in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for that period. Security was not furnished and the petitioners were committed to prison. Against the order they preferred an appeal under S. 406 of the Code to the District Magistrate of Manbhum who under the first proviso to that section is the proper Court of appeal, and on 7th July the District Magistrate admitted the appeal and directed the release of the appellants on bail of Rs. 300 with two sureties each pending the hearing of the appeal. Bail was furnished and the appellants were released on 9th July. Eventually this Court on 6th November transferred the appeal to the file of the Sessions Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur who on 15th January 1929, transferred it to the Additional Sessions Judge. The Crown moved the learned Additional Sessions Judge to cancel the bail bonds executed by the appellants and on 30th January the Additional Sessions Judge cancelled them holding that the order granting bail was illegal and without jurisdiction and that as the order could have been cancelled by the District Magistrate, he standing in the place of the District Magistrate, had jurisdiction to cancel it. The petitioners surrendered to their bail and on 5th March moved a Judge of this Court. The application in revision was admitted by a Division Bench before whom the learned Judge of this Court directed it to be placed because of its importance. The appeal has not yet been heard as the petitioners obtained an order of stay being for some reason more concerned to secure a decision on the question of the powers of the District Magistrate to grant bail than to secure prompt disposal of their appeal.

In support of the application it has been urged, first, that the District Magistrate had ample jurisdiction to release the petitioners on bail; and, secondly, that even if he had not, the Additional Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to cancel his order.

Now the provision relating to appeals are found in Chap. 31, Criminal P. C. It opens with S. 404, which is a general section restricting appeals. There follow three Ss. 405, 406 and 406-A which relate to appeals from orders. Next come provisions in Ss. 407, 408, 410, and 411 relating to "an appeal by a person convicted on a trial" while Ss. 413 and 414 begin:

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person" in certain cases where the sentence is small and in cases tried summarily, where the sentence does not exceed a fine of Rs. 200. Admittedly the only provision as to bail which could be applicable to the present case is S. 426 (1).

It enacts:

"Pending any appeal by a convicted person the appellate Court may order that he be released on bail or on his own bond."

In support of the first contention Mr. S. K. Mitra has argued that a person ordered to execute a bond with or without sureties under S. 118 must be "deemed" to be a "convicted person" within the meaning of S. 426. The plea is not sound. Part 4 of the Code which contains Chap. 8 deals with Prevention of Offences, and Chap. 8 deals with security for keeping the peace and for good behaviour. A proceeding under that chapter is an inquiry which under the definition of the term excludes a trial. Nodoubt S. 117 applies to such inquiry the procedure prescribed for conducting trials and the terms and expressions which occur in a trial come to be loosely applied in an inquiry also for the sake of convenience. But actually the person in respect of whom the inquiry is held is not an accused but a quasi-accused and he is not, as Mr. Mitra urges, "deemed" to be an accused, nor when an order is passed against him "deemed" to be convicted. Indeed the provision so far from rendering the inquiry a trial serves to bring into prominence the fact that it is not a trial. An inquiry is a criminal case but it results in an order, unlike a trial for an offence which results in a conviction or an acquittal. In Binde Behari Nath v. Emperor (1), it was held that a person who was called upon to give security under Chap. 8 is (1) not an accused and (2) not guilty of any offence as defined in S. 4 (o), I. P. C. In Emperor v. Bhagwat Singh (2) the Allahabad High Court has held that a person bound down under S. 107 is not a person convicted of an offence. Even if for certain purposes of procedure a person in respect of whom an inquiry is proceeding, is an accused, he cannot be convicted as he is not accused of an offence. A conviction is the judgment of a legal tribunal adjudging a person guilty of a criminal offence. Under S. 426 (1) the existence of an appeal by a convicted person is a condition precedent to jurisdiction to grant bail. The Code clearly contemplates that there cannot be a conviction unless there had been a trial for an offence and the expression "appeal by a convicted person" in S. 426 (1) means an appeal by a person convicted at such a trial. Whereas in the case of a person against whom an order is made under S. 118, there is no offence and no trial, he is not "a person convicted on a trial" nor is he "a convicted person." In short S. 426 under which the District Magistrate appears to have granted bail to the petitioners has no application to the circumstances. It is not contended that any other provision of the Code authorized him to do so nor that he had inherent jurisdiction to liberate any person on bail. In my opinion his order was without jurisdiction.

Some reference has been made to S. 498 of the Code and to the decision in Ahmad Ali Sardar v. Emperor (3) which is relied upon. It may indeed be that under that provision a Court of Sessions is empowered to admit to bail pending the hearing of the reference a person directed under S. 118 to give security for two years, whose case has been referred to it under S. 123 (2) of the Code. But the basis of the order would be that in a case under S. 123 (2) the final order is that of the Sessions Judge; and in the decision cited the learned Judges apparently contemplated that the Sessions Judge was authorized to revise an order passed by the Magistrate under S. 118 as affected by S. 120 (2) in respect of the dates between which the order for security and the imprisonment in default would operate. Whether that view is correct or not, [and it is perhaps open to question whether an order committing to prison a person who has failed to give security required under S. 118 is a sentence of imprisonment or the person so committed is sentenced to imprisonment within the meaning of S. 426 (3)] the present case is clearly distinguishable. Here the bond and security required are for one year and the order requires no confirmation of any superior Court or authority but subject to any appeal preferred under S. 406 is final. Now S. 120 provides that when a person has been ordered under S. 118 to furnish security, the period for which security is required shall commence on the date of such order unless the Magistrate for sufficient reason fixes a later date. The Magistrate did not fix a later date in respect of the petitioners. S. 123 (1) enacts that if a person does not furnish such security on or before the date on which the period for which security is to be given commences, he shall be committed to prison until such period expires or until he gives security. The obvious inference is that the legislature did not contemplate that bail should be allowed in such a case or that the appellate Court should alter the dates, so that a person who has been released on bail for a portion of the "period" should be detained in jail beyond the expiry of the "period" for the number of days on which he was on bail. That is to say, the statute does not provide for suspension or abeyance of the period of detention in prison. And that is altogether reasonable: the detention is preventive merely, and on bail the detenu is not prevented from committing offences. In the present instance we have the curious result that bail with two sureties for Rs. 300 is readily secured whereas two sureties on Rs. 100 for good behaviour are not available. Again the effect of the order granting bail has been to set the petitioners at liberty without security for more than seven months of the period specified in S. 118, which, under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be excluded in computing the period for which they are to be detained in prison for default in furnishing security. Such a state of affairs could not have been contemplated by the legislature. The first contention cannot prevail.

As to whether the Additional Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to cancel the bail order, there appears to be much to be said for his view that on the transfer of the appeal to him he was in the peculiar circumstances in the same position as the District Magistrate in respect of jurisdiction to cancel the bail bond on which the appellants had been released and that as the District Magistrate certainly could have cancelled the order for bail on, among other grounds, want of jurisdiction to make it, it was open to the Additional Sessions Judge to do the same. It is, however, not necessary to decide the point in view of the order which we propose to make.

The learned Sessions Judge has moved this Court to retransfer the appeal to the District Magistrate as the file of the Sessions Judge is in heavy arrears, there is no Additional Sessions Judge and no prospect of one for some months; there is a new Deputy Commissioner who had no previous concern with the proceedings against the petitioners, and the appeal should be heard without further delay. We accept the reference and transfer, in accordance with the wishes of all concerned, the appeal to the file of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum. In the circumstances the question of the legality of the transfer of an appeal governed by the proviso to S. 406 of the Sessions Court need not be considered.

In the circumstances the order of the Deputy Commissioner granting bail being illegal, we see no ground for interfering in revision with the order cancelling it. The rule is accordingly discharged. The appeal should be heard without further delay.

Dhavlè, J.—I agree. The Code of Criminal Procedure makes a definite distinction at point after point between persons called on to give security under Ss. 107 to 110 and persons accused of offences. As was pointed out in Binode Behari Nath v. Emperor (1) the former are (unlike the latter) nowhere referred to as "accused" persons, and the amendments of 1923 in such sections as S. 340 and S. 436 only emphasize the distinction. An accused person is "tried," and if he is found "guilty," "sentence" is passed upon him under S. 245 (2), S. 258 (2) or S. 306 (2) as the case may be (unless resort is had to the exceptional provisions of Ss. 349 and 562). It appears from Ss. 263 (h) and 306 (2), among other sections, that there is no distinction between "convicting" an accused person and finding him guilty. Against the sentence passed, a "person convicted on a trial" may appeal under Ss. 407, 408, 410, or 411. It will thus be seen how a person who begins as an accused person may come within S. 426 in respect of an "appeal by a convicted person." A person against whom security proceedings are taken (unless discharged under S. 119, only becomes, in S. 120, a "person in respect of whom an order requiring security under S. 118 is made,"

and in S. 123, "a person ordered to give security under S. 118." He cannot be said to have been "tried" or found "guilty" nor is any "sentence" passed upon him. It is true that in default of security he is to be "committed to prison," but such imprisonment stands on quite a different footing from a sentence of imprisonment passed on a conviction in respect of an offence: see Markandar Genda v. Emperor (4). The Code does not anywhere refer to persons dealt with under S. 118 as convicted persons; and S. 406 which provides an appeal against an order under S. 118 speaks of "any person who has been ordered under S. 118 to give security" This is in sharp contrast to Ss. 407, 408, 410 and 411 which give an appeal—an appeal from a sentence—to "any person convicted on a trial." S. 426 which is invoked on behalf of the petitioners provides for orders "pending any appeal by a convicted person." Having regard in particular to the fact that this section occurs in the same chapter as Ss. 406 to 411 with the distinction that they make between persons dealt with under S. 118 and persons convicted on trials, I cannot see on what principle it can be held that the legislature gave up the distinction between the two classes of persons for the purposes of S. 426. It is true that the section speaks of a "convicted person" instead of a "person convicted on a trial"; but there does not seem to be any real difference between these expressions, and I can see no reason to regard persons dealt with under S. 118 as included in the category of "convicted" persons.

M. S. Das and A. S. Khan—for Petitioner.

Govt. Pleader—for the Crown.

ROSS, J.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 471, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhadrak. The subject of the charge was the signing of a plaint in a suit for rent presented in the Collector's Court. The petitioner is the husband of the plaintiff in that suit and he signed the plaint in these terms :

"This signature by Kankan mark and left thumb impression are of Srimaty Kshetramani Dei by the pen of Aparti Chandra Ray."

There was a thumb impression which has been proved to the thumb impression of some one other than Kshetramani Dei. It may be mentioned that the Deputy Collector before whom the plaint was filed refused to prosecute, the complaint being made by the appellate Court.

The learned Sessions Judge in dealing with this case was influenced largely, if not mainly, by the consideration that the plaint was filed on the last date after which it would be barred, as to the claim for one year's rent, by limitation. Now O. 6, R. 14, Civil P. C., requires that "every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader," but it is well settled that if a plaint is not signed, it may be amended at any stage and the fact that it is not signed does not any less make it the plaint of the plaintiff: see Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddhan Saha Das (1) a decision of the Judicial Committee, and Basdeo v. John Smidt (2). Consequently if the plaint had been left unsigned, this was only a defect in procedure which was curable. There was a similar case dealt with in this Court, Ramsarup v. Emperor (3). There the signature of the plaintiff purported to be in the plaintiff's hand but in fact was put there by his gomastha; it was held that as there was no intention to defraud there was no forgery. The learned Sessions Judge has distinguished this case on the ground that if the plaint had not been filed on the day on which it was filed then the defendant would have had the advantage of the law of limitation; but that will not make the act of the petitioner fraudulent. In Ileg v. Bhavani-shankar (4) this very question arose where a plaint was signed by the agent in the name of the plaintiff in order that it might be filed before the mamlatdar, whereas if it had not been filed on that day it would have had to be filed in the civil Court, and thus court-fee was saved. It was suggested that there was an intention to deceive the Government just as it was argued by the learned Government Pleader that there was in this case an intention to defraud the Court, but that contention was overruled. The learned Judges referred to a decision of Cresswell, J., where it was observed that "in order to constitute in point of law an intent to defraud, there must be a possibility of some person being defrauded by the forgery, or there must be a possibility of some person being not only deceived but injured by the forgery."

Now, here I cannot say that there was any possibility of anyone being injured. The defendant was liable for the rent and no damage was caused to him. Even if the plaint had been unsigned he would still have been liable; and the fact that the signature was added in this incorrect form does not establish any dishonest or fraudulent intent. There was no fraud on the plaintiff because the plaint was filed in her interest and as she says in her evidence under her authority. She is quite clear on this point that she had given a general permission to her husband to file papers in Court on her behalf and had given him authority to sign on her behalf and file papers in Court. I am therefore unable to find any fraud in this matter. Undoubtedly the act of the petitioner was stupid and improper but the necessary criminal intention to constitute the crime of forgery is, on the facts of the case, wanting.

I would therefore allow this application and set aside the conviction and direct that the petitioner be acquitted and released from bail.

Order.—Immediately the prosecution side expressed a desire to examine Shahzadi, a girl of about five years of age, Mr. Mirza for the defence objected to her examination contending that a person of such tender years could not under law be examined, not being able to understand the nature and obligation of an affirmation which is obligatory under S. 5, Oaths Act, 10 of 1873, read with S. 6 of the same Act. For this view, Mr. Mirza has relied upon a ruling reported as Queen-Empress v. Maru (1). All that this ruling lays down is that under S. 6, Oaths Act, it is imperative that no person shall testify as a witness except on affirmation or oath and that notwithstanding S. 13, the evidence of a child of eight or nine years of age is inadmissible if it has been inadvisedly recorded without any such affirmation or oath. It by no means goes so far as Mr. Mirza contends that the testimony of a child of tenders years by reason of age merely is inadmissible or that the Court is debarred from recording such testimony on the ground solely of tender age. If Mr. Mirza's contentions were accepted, it would be tantamount to shutting out in some cases the most important piece of evidence that could be placed before the trying Court. Any way I am not in accord with this view pressed. This ruling has besides been dissented from by the same High Court in a case reported as Dhani Ram v. Emperor (2). It has been held there that a child of tender years should only be examined after the Court has satisfied itself that he or she is intellectually sufficiently developed to enable it to understand sufficiently what it has seen and to afterwards inform the Court thereof. If the Court is satisfied that the child has such intelligence, it should comply with provisions of S. 6, Oaths Act.

Section 118, Evidence Act, deals with persons competent to testify and Ss. 5 and 6, Oaths Act, make it compulsory that such competent persons should be affirmed. S. 118 above referred to says that all persons shall be competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them or from giving rational answers to these questions by tender years etc. etc. Understanding is thus under this section of Evidence Act the sole test of competency. A person though of tender years if he can satisfy this test, is competent as a witness. In a case practically of a recent date reported as Nafar Sheikh v. Emperor (3), it was held that the intellectual capacity was the real test and that question, if a witness understands the nature and obligation of an affirmation, is really foreign to the question of competency under S. 118, Evidence Act. It was in this very case further observed, I think very rightly, that the Court is not bound before taking the deposition of a child witness to ascertain as ruled by the Allahabad High Court, by so to say a preliminary inquiry whether the child has capacity to understand the questions put to it and give rational answers to them but the competency of such witness may be tested in the Court of examination. As observed in the standard book of Amirali's Law of Evidence in commentaries to S. 113, Evidence Act, the modern practice is to interrogate the witness either before affirming him, or to elicit the facts upon the examination.

in-chief, when, if his incompetency appears, he will be rejected: Taylor's Law of Evidence, paras. 1392 and 1393.

I have, however, to be on the safe side, in the face of the divergence of opinion above referred to though the preponderance of authority is in support of the view I have accepted, satisfied myself by putting a few simple questions to her, and find that the girl tendered for examination is able to understand the substance of what she is asked and give answers not very satisfactorily to the same. Should it, however, become apparent and clear hereafter in the course of her examination that she is not sufficiently developed intellectually to answer questions intelligently, I would reconsider, if I should not expunge her evidence from the record or if I should place it before the jury.

First Appeal No. 1429 of 1924, Decided on 4th April 1929, from a decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Gujranwalla, D/- 8th March 1924.

 (a) Legal Practitioner—Advice should not be taken from Court about evidence to be produced—Legal practitioner must exercise his own independent judgment in conduct of his case.

It is not right for a counsel to take advice from the Court as to the kind or amount of evidence which has to be produced in support of his client's case, and even if a Court goes out of the way and gratuitously gives such advice, which itself would be an extremely improper act on its part, counsel ought not to be guided by such advice, but must exercise his own independent judgment in deciding as to how to proceed in the conduct of his case. Zafrulla Khan and Bashir Ahmad—for Appellant.

Ghulam Mohyuddin, Md. Akbar Khan and Partap Singh—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiff Nizam Din, who alleged himself to be a collateral of Taj Din deceased in the fourth degree instituted this suit against Mt. Bhagan, widow of Taj Din, and certain transferees from her, for possession of three-fourths of the land left by him, to which he claimed he was entitled under the Mahomedan Law which governed the rule of succession among the parties. The defendant denied the plaintiff's alleged relationship with Taj Din and pleaded that the family was governed by custom and not by Mahomedan Law. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove his alleged relationship with Taj Din deceased. The plaintiff appeals.

It is admitted that Balmokand respondent 3 died some time in 1926, but the application to bring his representatives on the record was not made till 15th October 1928. The appeal had, therefore, abated against Balmokand and no valid ground has been urged in the application or in the affidavit for not making the application for more than two and a half years, or for setting aside the abatement. This being so, the appeal must be held to have abated against Balmokand and be dismissed against him. Balmokand deceased was, however, interested in one-half of 4 kanals of land only which had been sold by Mt. Bhagan to him and Vishno Nath respondent 4. The appeal, therefore, abates with regard to Balmokand's own share in this land. It must, however, be heard and decided with regard to the rest of the land in dispute as against the surviving respondents.

The first point urged by the learned counsel for the appellant is that the plaintiff was not able to produce the whole of his oral evidence on the question of relationship, in view of the circumstances mentioned in the affidavit filed by Maulvi Abdul Haq, pleader, who had conducted the case on his behalf in the Court below. This affidavit was sworn to on 27th May 1924, and is printed at p. 20 of the paper-book. It states that "on the day on which evidence relating to relationship was being recorded, after the evidence of some witnesses had been recorded, the Court intimated to me as a matter of advice that the evidence already recorded was sufficient on the question of relationship and that no further evidence was necessary. Thereupon I gave up the remaining witnesses of the plaintiff who were present."

"I solemnly affirm that in addition to witnesses whose statements were recorded two or three other witnesses of the plaintiff were present."

The affidavit was laid before the learned Judges before whom the appeal came up for preliminary hearing on 26th November 1924, and they while admitting the appeal directed that a copy of the affidavit should be sent to the Judge who decided the case (Sheikh Ali Muhammad, Senior Subordinate Judge) for any remarks that he might like to make. In reply to the affidavit the learned Senior Subordinate Judge furnished an explanation on 19th January 1925, which is printed at p. 23 of the paper-book and is to the following effect:

"I have seen the file and find that the appellant closed his evidence on 1st June 1923, and offered to produce copies of certain documents later on. I do not remember having given any advice to his counsel for closing his evidence, nor was it my duty to do so. I am not prepared to support the affidavit of Maulvi Abdul Haq, vakil, to the effect that he withheld certain evidence on my suggestion. It is the look out of the parties and their counsel to produce any amount of evidence they wish in Court and they need no advice in this respect from the Court."

It has been pointed out by Mr. Zafrullah Khan for the appellant that in his explanation the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has not definitely denied the allegation made in the pleader's affidavit and that in these circumstances the recital in the affidavit stands uncontradicted and must be accepted as correct. On the other hand, Maulvi Ghulam Mohyuddin for the respondents urges that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was as definite in his denial as it was possible for any person to be about an incident which had taken place more than 18 months before, and that on this explanation the pleader's affidavit must be held to be false. He also points out that on 1st June 1923, both the plaintiff and his pleader, Mr. Abdul Haq, made statements, closing their evidence.

After giving the matter my best consideration I am of opinion that it is not possible to come to a definite finding on the point on the materials on the record. It is a matter for regret that the explanation of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was not placed before a Bench of this Court as soon as it was received. If further enquiry had been ordered immediately, it might have been possible to arrive at the truth. But the situation has now changed entirely. The plaintiff has since died and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has proceeded on leave preparatory to retirement. The matter is now nearly six years old and the persons concerned cannot be expected to be in a position to say anything definite about it. Moreover, the affidavit is defective in so far as it does not give the names of the witnesses who are alleged to have been present in Court on the date on which the evidence was closed and who, but for the advice alleged to have been given by the Subordinate Judge, would have been examined. The deponent is not even definite about their number. He described it as "two or three." We asked Mr. Zafrulla Khan if he was in a position to give the names and particulars of these witnesses even now, but he expressed his inability to do so. From the record it appears that only four witnesses had been summoned for that date out of whom three were examined by Court and the fourth who had been served and was not examined, is one Bagh Din. It is not known whether he was actually present in Court on 1st June 1923, nor can counsel state if he is alive or dead. Mr. Zafrulla Khan has frankly conceded that his client's case will not be very much advanced by the examination of this witness even if he were alive and were examined at this stage. In these circumstances I am of opinion that no useful purpose will be served in pursuing the matter further and ordering further enquiry.

I wish, however, to remark that even if the statements contained in the affidavit of Maulvi Abdul Haq are correct, he cannot be said to have acted properly in following the course adopted by him. It is not right for a counsel to take advice from the Court as to the kind or amount of evidence which has to be produced in support of his client's case, and even if a Court goes out of way and gratuitously gives such advice, which itself would be an extremely improper act on its part, counsel ought not to be guided by such advice but must exercise his own independent judgment in deciding as to how to proceed in the conduct of the case.

On the merits the plaintiff has no case on the record as it stands. The evidence consists of the testimony of three witnesses and a pedigree-table produced by P. W. 2, Ghulam Ali Shah, who claimed to belong to the family of Pirs of the parties. The evidence has been carefully analyzed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge in his judgment and after examining it in detail and hearing Mr. Zafrulla Khan at length, I am of opinion that it falls short of proving the allegations of the plaintiff. Imam Din is no doubt the maternal uncle of Taj Din deceased, but the reasons given by him for an intimate knowledge of the relationship of the plaintiff with the deceased are not very convincing, and in the absence of corroborative testimony of an unimpeachable character, I do not find myself able to accept his statement as correct. Karim Bakhsh is the nephew of the plaintiff and is unable to furnish sufficient details to prove the alleged relationship. Counsel relies principally upon the pedigree-table produced by Ghulam Ali Shah. We have had the advantage of carefully examining this document and find that it appears to have been written up at one time. The person who produced it has no personal knowledge as to when it was prepared and all that he is able to say is that he got it from his father who died four years ago. It appears, however, from the statement of Karim Bakhsh (P. W. 3), that the Pir of this family was one Bagh Ali Shah who died during the pendency of the suit. It is significant that the plaintiff himself has not gone in the witness-box to prove the alleged relationship nor has any near relation been produced, though it is admitted that several are still alive.

After a careful examination of the record, I am of opinion that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge came to a correct conclusion in holding that the plaintiff had failed to establish his alleged relationship with Taj Din deceased. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Agha Haider, J.—I agree. On behalf of the appellant, Mr. Zafrulla Khan has stated at the Bar that Nizam Din's son who is now his legal representative is about 40 years old. This shows that Nizam Din must have been an older man than any of the witnesses who have been produced on behalf of the plaintiff. The fact that Nizam Din did not appear in the witness-box is in my humble judgment a circumstance going very strongly against him, and it is time now, in view of the pronouncements of the highest authority that parties should realize the risk they run if they do not enter into witness-box and give evidence in their cases upon facts which are directly within their knowledge and which relate to the matters in controversy.

Mohammad Khan—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 119 of 1921, Decided on 12th February 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 417—Appeal from acquittal by lower appellate Court—High Court can interfere to set it aside.

Whatever may be the value of the judgment of a trial Court, which has had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses and observing their demeanour, no such reason can apply where the trial Court convicts the accused and it is the appellate Court which acquits. In such case the High Court is in a better position to weigh the evidence as the lower appellate Court and can interfere to set aside the lower Court's order of acquittal; 11 P. R. 1903, Cr., Diss. from; A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 178; 7 P. R. 1904 and A. I. R. 1929 Pat 491, Ref. [P 465 O 2]

Abdur Rashid—for the Crown.

Farukh Hussain—for Respondent.

Dalip Singh, J.—The accused in this case was convicted by the learned District Magistrate under S. 376, I. P. C., and sentenced to four year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 20, in default, to further rigorous imprisonment for two months. On appeal he was acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge on 30th November 1920. The Crown put in an appeal against the acquittal on 14th February 1921. The accused evidently absconded and it was not till he had been arrested that this appeal came up for hearing.

The story for the prosecution is that the accused Muhammad Khan was a railway constable and was travelling on duty in the train going from Rawalpindi to Kohat. One Mrs. Plair was a passenger on this train and it is alleged that the accused entered her compartment between Fateh Jang and Gaggan railway stations and raped her. The accused left her shortly before the arrival of the train at Gaggan railway station and the lady called for assistance and one of the guards of the train came up and released her from the tape with which her feet and hands had been tied. The driver of the train had noticed the accused on the outside of the train at Fateh Jang station and when the train started he had noticed him on the foot-board of a carriage near the carriage in which Mrs. Plair was travelling. Mrs. Plair gave a description of her assailant and the driver suspected the accused from this description and from the fact of having noticed him on the outside of the train. The train proceeded and either at Basal station or Jand railway station the accused appears to have been shown to Mrs. Plair, but Mrs. Plair was, at that time, unable to identify him, though it is stated that she said that he strongly resembled the man who had raped her.

Three days afterwards an identification parade was held at Kohat in which Mrs. Plair alleged that she first pointed out one Khair Mohammad as resembling her assailant and thereafter picked out Muhammad Khan as also resembling her assailant. She then made both of them speak the words with which the accused had addressed her when he entered her compartment and thereupon she decided that it was Muhammad Khan accused who was her assailant. The Magistrate who conducted the identification parade deposes that at the time she stated that though Muhammad Khan resembled her assailant, she was not prepared to swear on oath that he was the man. In her own deposition Mrs. Plair, however, does not admit that she was unable to identify her assailant at the time of the identification parade. She admits that he was shown to her at some station before the train reached Kohat but that she was in such a disturbed condition that she was unable to identify him at the time. Khair Muhammad constable who was one of the men picked out by Mrs. Plair, has also appeared as a prosecution witness and according to his story she did identify Muhammad Khan as her assailant. The Sub-Inspector Ijaz Hussain who was present at the identification parade and who has appeared also as a prosecution witness, also deposes that she did identify Muhammad Khan as her assailant after making both Khair Muhammad and Muhammad Khan speak. There is, therefore, a contradiction between the statements of Mrs. Plair, Khair Muhammad and Ijaz Hussain (P. Ws. Nos. 1, 5 and 6) and the statement of Agha Sardar Ali (P. W. 2), the Magistrate conducting the identification parade. The whole case was extremely badly tried so much so that Mrs. Plair seems never to have been asked the direct question in the trial as to whether the accused in the dock was the man who had raped her or not. However, her statement clearly implies that the accused was her assailant and she strenuously denied that she had ever said that she was unable to identify him. In the circumstances, after giving full weight to the evidence of the Magistrate in favour of the accused, I consider that the evidence certainly raised a very strong suspicion against the present accused. If this were all, however, I would be inclined to give him the benefit of the doubt, but this is not all. There is evidence which goes strongly to corroborate the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1, 5 and 6 already referred to. P. W. 4, the engine driver Mr. Harradine, says that he noticed the accused on the off side of the train at Fateh Jang station and that he saw him again on the foot-board of a compartment which was either two or three carriages from the engine. Now it is in evidence that Mrs. Plair's carriage was No. 3 from the tender near the engine and therefore the accused was certainly seen by Mr. Harradine standing somewhere near the carriage in which Mrs. Plair was travelling.

The learned Sessions Judge has remarked that the accused may have been standing on the outside of the train in discharge of his duties, but the accused himself gives no such explanation and on the contrary states that he was travelling in a compartment in the rear of the train between Fateh Jang and Gaggan railway stations. Imam Ali Shah (P. W. 9) who was the other constable on duty on the train deposes that the accused travelled with him up to Fateh Jang. At Fateh Jang he left the compartment and at Gaggan the accused re-entered the compartment from the offside of the train. He passed quickly into an adjoining compartment and thence got on to the platform. He states that the demeanour of the accused at the time was such that Imam Ali Shah's suspicions were aroused. The guard deposes that he saw the accused at Gaggan railway station proceeding towards the rear of the train and the guard asked him what he was doing while this 'wardat' had taken place. Thereupon the accused followed the guard without enquiring what 'wardat' had taken place. All this evidence, it seems to me, so strongly corroborates the evidence of Mrs. Plair that in my opinion it leaves no reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused.

The learned Sessions Judge has observed that Mrs. Plair failed to identify the accused as Basal. He has said that the woman should have been able to recognize her assailant. It seems to me however, that the learned Judge has not given adequate weight to the explanation given by Mrs. Plair that she was in a very disturbed condition and was not capable of identifying people at that time. The evidence is to the effect that while Mrs. Plair was seated in the intermediate compartment to which she had been removed the accused was brought near the door and was shown to her. It is quite possible that in her nervous condition she was unable to identify him at the time, but even so, the evidence is unanimous that she said he was very like the man who had assaulted her. The learned Sessions Judge has then relied on the zinnis which have not been proved in the case at all for the fact that the accused was not suspected at the time at all. This is quite contrary to the evidence of Mrs. Plair and of the two guards who are disinterested witnesses and who unanimously say that the accused was shown to her. In my opinion there can be no doubt that the accused was suspected at the time and if no mention of this fact is made in the zinnis, it can only throw doubt on the bona fides of the zinnis and not on the evidence.

The learned Sessions Judge has then proceeded to remark that at no time has the lady identified the man. As already stated, the evidence in Court is perfectly clear and the evidence as to the failure to identify at the identification parade is contradictory and discrepant. I would not, therefore, attach the weight which the learned Sessions Judge has attached to this alleged failure.

The learned Sessions Judge then remarked that the accused has proved that between Fateh Jang and Gaggan he was travelling in the rear compartment. He relies on the statement of one Abdulla who was examined as a defence witness. He says that the zinnis corroborate the statement of Abdulla, but as previously remarked, the zinnis are not evidence in the case at all. It is not clear, as remarked by the trial Court, how the accused who according to his own deposition was only in that compartment for the 21 minutes that it took the train to go from Fateh Jang to Gaggan, came to know the names of these men, nor why these men who had never known the police constable before should have remembered that he travelled with them from Fateh Jang to Gaggan. Towards the end of his judgment the learned Sessions Judge seems to find that the driver did suspect the accused from the very beginning. This is at variance with his first finding based on the zinnis that the accused was never suspected at all at first.

Lastly, the learned counsel for the respondent has relied on Queen Empress v. Manget (1) and on A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 178, A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 491 for the legal proposition that before a judgment of acquittal is set aside, it must be shown that the judgment is perverse or not based on the evidence given in the case. Queen-Empress v. Manget (1) was dissented from in King Emperor v. Chhatar Singh (2) and whatever may be the value of the judgment of a trial Court which has had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and observing their demeanour, no such reason can apply when the trial Court has convicted the accused and it is the appellate Court which acquits him. I do not see how the Sessions Judge was in any better position to weigh the evidence than this Court, and in my opinion the offence has been clearly proved against the accused.

As regards the sentence, the learned Government Advocate has only asked that the sentence of the trial Court should be restored. In my opinion, that sentence is inadequate, considering the circumstances and the fact that this constable was supposed to guard the passengers of the train. However, I do not think it now necessary to go further into that matter and I would, therefore, restore the sentence passed by the trial Court. The appeal would accordingly be accepted and the accused convicted under S. 376, I. P. C., and sentenced as above.

Fakir Chand—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Decided on 31st January 1930.

Legal Practitioners Act, S. 3, 36 (1), 36 (2-A) — Order declaring person to be tout when it is not proved that he is so illegal.

J gave a petition to the District Magistrate that she had come to arrange a transfer of a case from one Court to another and F took money from her promising that he would engage a pleader and that instead of doing that F ran away with the money. The District Magistrate endorsed the petition to a Subordinate Magistrate for enquiry and report. The Subordinate Magistrate asked the Secretary of the Bar Association about the antecedents of F. The Secretary informed that the Executive Committee of the Bar Association had passed a resolution and that F was an undesirable man and did not possess good antecedents. The Subordinate Magistrate held that it was not proved that F was a tout though it might be that he committed an act of cheating. F was present at the inquiry. The District Magistrate stating that he did not agree with this finding declared F to be a tout.

Held : that the proceedings against F were illegal throughout. There had been no allegation that F was a tout. The Subordinate Magistrate did not report name of F as having been proved as a tout and District Magistrate could not declare him a tout. The resolution of the Bar Association was not that F was a tout but only that he had bad antecedents and the resolution was not passed at a specially convened meeting so as to be evidence under Expl. to S. 36 (1) of the general repute of F. The District Magistrate should have heard F which he did not do. Lastly there was no evidence that F was a tout as defined in S. 3.

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The District Magistrate of Attock has included the name of one Fakir Chand in the list of touts framed and published by him, and Fakir Chand has moved this Court to revise the order on the ground that the action of the authority was illegal.

One Mt. Sahib Jee gave a petition to the District Magistrate to the effect that she had come to arrange the transfer of a case from one Court to another and that Fakir Chand took Rs. 84 from her, saying that he would engage a pleader. Instead of doing so he ran away with the money. The District Magistrate endorsed this petition to a Magistrate First Class, for enquiry and report. The Magistrate, First Class after holding an enquiry reported that it was not proved that Fakir Chand was a tout, though it might be the case that he had committed an act of cheating. The Magistrate, First Class, had asked the Secretary, Bar Association, to let him know about Fakir Chand's character and antecedents and the Secretary wrote that the Executive Committee of the Bar Association had passed a resolution by a majority that Fakir Chand was an undesirable man and did not possess good antecedents. It may be noted that Fakir Chand was present at the enquiry before the Magistrate First, Class.

The District Magistrate when he received the Subordinate Magistrate's report wrote the order in question declaring Fakir Chand to be a tout and stating that he did not agree with the finding of the Magistrate.

The proceedings which have been had against Fakir Chand have been illegal throughout. In the first place, under S. 36 (2-A), Legal Practitioners Act, the District Magistrate could send to a Subordinate Magistrate the name of any person, alleged or suspected to be a tout, and could order the Subordinate Magistrate to hold an enquiry in regard to such person. There was, however, no allegation that the petitioner was a tout. The only allegation was that made by Mt. Sahib Jee to the effect that he had cheated her. Nor did the District Magistrate in endorsing this petition direct the Subordinate Magistrate to enquire into the question whether Fakir Chand was a tout, but only to enquire into the truth of the petition which was to the effect that he had committed the offence of cheating.

In the second place, the Subordinate Magistrate who held the enquiry did not report the name of Fakir Chand as having been proved to his satisfaction to be a tout. As he did not do so, it seems to follow from S. 36 (2-A) that the District Magistrate could not declare him to be a tout. All that the District Magistrate could do was to include or not to include in the list of touts framed the name of any person who had been proved to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Magistrate to be a tout. Of course if the District Magistrate had himself conducted the investigation he could have come to his own conclusion and acted accordingly.

In the third place, the District Magistrate has relied upon a resolution of the Executive Committee of the Bar Association passed by a majority to the effect that Fakir Chand had bad antecedents and was of undesirable character. Here again there was a clear illegality. If there was a specially convened meeting of the Bar Association and not of the Executive Committee thereof, and the members present passed a resolution by a majority that Fakir Chand was a tout, that would be evidence under the explanation to S. 36 (1) of the general repute of the person in question. In the present case the resolution was not that he was a tout but only that he had bad antecedents and was an undesirable character. In the second place it was not passed at a specially convened meeting of the members of the Bar Association but at a meeting of the Executive Committee of that body.

In the fourth place, the District Magistrate under the proviso to S. 36 (2-A) should have heard Fakir Chand before placing him on the list, but he did not do so.

In the fifth place, there was no evidence that the petitioner was a tout as defined in S. 3 of the Act.

For the reasons given I accept this petition and set aside the order in question.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 39 of 1930. Decided on 21st February 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 18th December 1929.

Penal Code, S. 420—Offence under S. 415 is committed when certain documents are taken away by making false representation—It is mere surplusage to state in charge that any person suffered loss thereby and such defect is cured by Criminal P. C. S. 537.

F borrowed money from M on security of N, on basis of two mortgage bonds and having arranged to sell the mortgaged property induced M to accompany him to a petition writer to get a sale deed drafted. The bonds were left with the petition writer and M went away to get a document registered. N and F making a false representation to petition writer that M wanted to see to the bonds, took them away. F and N were followed, but the bonds could not be recovered. In the charge it was recited that F and N obtained the bonds after making false representation to the petition writer and that as a result of the misrepresentation M suffered loss. It was contended that the charge was defective.

Held: that it was not necessary to state in the charge that a result of false representation made by F and N, M suffered any loss. The mere fact that the petition writer as a result of the deception of N handed the bond to him was sufficient to bring his conduct within the definition of cheating. The addition in the charge that M suffered loss as a result of the misrepresentation was a mere surplusage and the defect was cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. [P 468 C 1]

M. L. Puri—for Petitioners.

G. R. Khanna—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellants Fateh Haidar and Nawab have been convicted under S. 420, I. P. C., and have been sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

It has been found that Fateh Haidar had borrowed money from one Mukha Shah, on the security of Nawab, on the basis of two mortgage bonds, and, having arranged to sell the property, he induced the creditor to accompany him to a petition-writer with a view to let the petition-writer draft a sale deed after calculating the amount due on the mortgage bonds. The bonds were left with the petition-writer and the creditor went to the Sub-Registrar's office to register another document. In the meantime Nawab went to the creditor to ask him how long he would be detained, and after receiving the reply he went back to the petition-writer Amir Singh and both Fateh Haidar and Nawab asked him to hand over the two mortgage deeds to them, representing that the creditor Mukha Shah had wanted them to see. As a matter of fact Mukha Shah had given them no such authority and the representation to Amir Singh petition-writer has been found to be absolutely false.

After receiving the bonds the two culprits ran away, and Mukha Shah was told, on return, by the petition-writer Amir Singh of what had happened. The accused were followed but the bonds could not be recovered from them.

At the trial the accused denied the existence of any such bonds, but the Courts below are agreed that two such bonds had been executed and had been received by the petitioners after a false representation of authority from Mukha Shah.

These facts are, in fact, not contested before me by the learned counsel for the petitioners. He merely contends that the charge in this case was defective and, therefore, his clients have been prejudiced by the trial. It appears that in the charge it is recited that the petitioners obtained the bonds after making a false representation to the petition-writer and that as a result of such misrepresentation Mukha Shah, the creditor, suffered loss.

Now, S. 415, I. P. C., which defines the offence of cheating, clearly, provides that a person who by deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person, is guilty of the offence of cheating. The second part of this section which provides for the case of an accused who by deceiving any person intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or to omit to do anything which he would not do or to omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property is independent of the first part; so that in the present case it was not necessary to state in the charge that as a result of the false representation made by the accused, Mukha Shah suffered any loss. The mere fact that the petition writer as a result of the deception of the accused handed over the mortgage bonds to the former was sufficient to bring his conduct within the definition of cheating. The addition in the charge that Mukha Shah suffered loss as a result of misrepresentation of the accused therefore is a mere surplusage and the defect, in my opinion, is cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C.

TEK CHAND, J.

Labhu—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 29 of 1930, Decided on 21st February 1930, from order of Sess. Judge Amritsar, D/- 7th November 1929.

Penal Code, Ss. 403, 405 and 406—Municipal Committee selling receipt books relating to sale transaction of cattle in fair—Licensee making entry in receipts contrary to rules fixed—His act held not to be within purview of S. 403 or 405.

The Municipal Committee of Amritsar issued licenses to a number of persons to write receipts relating to sale transactions of cattle in a certain fair. A receipt book was issued to each licensee who was to pay the price of each receipt book at the rate of eight annas per receipt in advance and when he wrote the receipt in the fair he was to charge eight annas per head of cattle from the seller plus his own writing charges. If an animal sold had a calf with it, two separate and consecutive receipts were to be issued for both respectively. P purchased two receipt books paying full price therefor during the fair, he wrote receipts relating to two transactions of sale of buffaloes, each one of whom had a katti, with it, but instead of issuing four receipts as required by the rules he issued only two and charged one rupee from each purchaser. P was prosecuted under S. 409 and S. 420 but was convicted under S. 406.

Held, that the case could not possibly fall under Ss. 403 and 405. P was not entrusted with any property or with any dominion over any property and there was no criminal breach of trust by him. The mere making of wrong entries in the receipt books might have rendered P liable to the forfeiture of his license but could not possibly bring his action within the purview of S. 403 and S. 405.

Nand Lal—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 406, I. P. C. and sentenced to pay a fine of 25/-. The case against him alleged by the prosecution is that on the occasion of the last Bisakhi fair at Amritsar, the Municipal Committee issued licenses to a number of persons to write receipts relating to sale transactions of cattle within the fair and show enclosure. The practice which was followed in this matter was to issue certain printed receipt books, each containing one hundred or fifty receipts. The licensee was to pay the price of each receipt book at the rate of eight annas per receipt in advance to the Municipal Committee and when he wrote the receipt in the fair, he was to charge eight annas per head of cattle from the seller plus his own writing charges. Should he be unable to use all the one hundred or fifty receipts in the receipt book, which he had bought, he was to return the unused ones with the counterfoil, and get a refund from the Committee at the rate of eight annas per unused receipt. It was also provided that if the animal sold had a calf with it, two separate and consecutive receipts were to be issued for the animal and the calf respectively. The petitioner was one of the licensees, who agreed to work on the conditions laid down by the Committee and purchased two receipt books, Exs. P. A-1 and P. D-1 from the Municipal Committee and paid to it the full price for all the receipts comprised therein. On the 12th of 1929 he wrote receipts relating to two transactions of sale of she-buffaloes each one of whom had katti with it, but instead of issuing four receipts as he should have done under the rules, he issued only two and charged one rupee from each purchaser. The matter was ultimately brought to the notice of the fair authorities, and he was prosecuted under Ss. 409 and 420, I. P. C. The trial Magistrate held that no offence under S. 420, I. P. C. was committed as the petitioner did not deceive anybody. He also held that S. 409 was inapplicable as the petitioner was not the servant or agent of the committee. He was, however, of opinion that the offence fell under S. 406, I. P. C. and has convicted and sentenced him as stated above.

After examining the judgment of the learned trial Magistrate and the relevant portions of the evidence I am of opinion that the case cannot possibly fall under S. 406, I. P. C. The petitioner was not in any manner entrusted with any property or with any dominion over property which he misappropriated or converted to his own use, or dishonestly used or disposed of it in violation of any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust was to be discharged or of any legal contract, express or implied which he had made touching the discharge of such trust. As stated already, the petitioner had paid to the committee in advance at the rate of eight annas for each receipt comprised in the two receipt books. If he made any entry on any receipt in contravention of the directions issued by the committee, that circumstance would not make him guilty of the offence of criminal breach of trust. If the erroneous entry had been made dishonestly and the petitioner at the conclusion of the fair claimed a refund from the Municipal Committee illegally and unlawfully, the position might have been different and he might or might not have been guilty of an attempt to commit an offence under the Penal Code, but in the present case it is not alleged that any such attempt was made by him. The mere making of wrong entries in the receipt book might have rendered the petitioner liable to the forfeiture of his license or other disciplinary action but could not possibly bring his act within the purview of S. 403 or 405, I. P. C.

In my opinion, on the facts found, the conviction is erroneous and must be set aside. Dr. Nand Lal has argued that the prosecution case is false and the evidence has not been properly weighed. I have not thought it necessary to go into the merits as on the findings of the learned Magistrate himself the conviction cannot stand. I accept the petition, set aside the conviction and acquit the petitioner. The fine, if paid will be refunded.

Criminal Appeal No. 785 of 1929, Decided on 27th February 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Attock, D/- 10th August 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, Ss. 32, 33 and 158—Where a statement of witness previously made is used under Ss. 32 and 33, then any other statement by him can be used under S. 158 to contradict him.

When the statement of a witness previously made is used as evidence under the provisions of Ss. 32 and 33, then any other statement made by that witness can be used by virtue of S. 158 for the purpose of contradicting that witness as if such witness had appeared in Court and was cross-examined on such previous statement and on question being asked had denied the facts mentioned in the same: A.I.R. 1926 L.A. 122, Foll. [P 473 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, Ss. 32 and 33—Previous statement not made in Court can be used for limited purpose of corroborating or contradicting witness only and not as substantive evidence.

A previous statement which is not made in Court and at the trial can be used only for the limited purpose of corroborating or contradicting a witness and does not become substantive evidence in the case: 26 Mad. 191 and 25 A.L.J. 994, Foll. [P 473 C 2]

(c) Criminal Trial—Duty of Court—Appeal from acquittal—Capital sentence though not usually passed on conviction on appeal from acquittal, may be passed where conduct of accused has been high handed and cruel and opposite party is not proved to have given any provocation.

Ordinarily the Courts refrain from passing a capital sentence on a person who is convicted on an appeal against his acquittal, but where the accused was a party to an attack of a particularly ferocious nature and acted in a high handed manner and with unusual cruelty in assaulting the opposite party consisting of the deceased and the latter have not been proved to have given any provocation, he may be sentenced to death. [P 474 C 2]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Jai Lal, J.—Fifteen Pathans of Kot Kai in the District of Attock were tried by the Sessions Judge of Attock for an offence punishable under S. 302 read with S. 149, I. P. C., for having caused injuries to Hayat Mir, Ahmad Mir, Waris Mir, Said Mir and Shah Zarin, Kashmiris of Dhok Injarsar of the same district, on 26th September 1928, as a result whereof, it was alleged by the prosecution, these injured persons died. Nine of the accused were acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge, and the remaining six, viz., Niamat Khan and Fazal, sons of Behram Khan, Abdul Rahim, son of Fazal Khan, Said Ghulam, and Lal, sons of Bostan Khan, and Ghafur, son of Fazal Khan, were convicted, the first convicts having been sentenced to death and the last, i. e., Ghafur, having been sentenced to transportation for life owing to his youth.

These convicts have appealed against their convictions, and the cases of those who have been sentenced to death are also before us for confirmation of their sentences.

On behalf of the Crown the Local Government has preferred an appeal against the acquittal of the following six accused: Akbar Khan, Sher Khan and Ghulam Rasul, sons of Behram Khan, Abdul Rehman, son of Akbar Khan, Fazal Khan, son of Said Khan, and Ahmad Gul, son of Niamat Khan. Of these all except Abdul Rehman have been arrested in pursuance of a warrant issued under the directions of this Court.

There is no appeal against three accused who were tried, i. e., Nadir, son of Hayat, Waris, son of Ajab Khan, and Muzaffar, son of Muhammad Khan. Their cases, therefore, need not be considered any longer.

With regard to the six accused against whose acquittal an appeal has been preferred by the Local Government, we have heard the learned Additional Government Advocate and also the counsel engaged on behalf of those who have been arrested. Abdul Rehman was not represented before us as it was doubtful whether he had been served with notice of the appeal against him.

The prosecution case is as follows:

The Kashmiris of Dhok Injarsar as well as the Pathans of Kot Kai are the tenants of the Pathans of the village Malak Mala. All these villages are adjacent to each other and it appears that there have been several incidents previous to the date of the occurrence between the Kashmiris and the Pathans of Kot Kai which have resulted in producing strained relations between the two.

The Pathans of Kot Kai claimed a right to graze their cattle in the grazing area, known as Utli Rakh, which belongs to the Pathans of the Malak Mala, but it is not necessary here to state or to decide the respective claims of the parties with regard to this right as this is not relevant to this case. It appears, however, that, on 19th August 1928, the Pathans of Malak Mala granted a lease of the Rakh to the residents of Jhamra village which also is at a short distance from Malak Mala. Whether as a result of this lease the Jhamra people entered into peaceful possession of the Rakh is not clear from the record. It is, however, apparent that the Pathans of Kot Kai were not prepared to allow them to have peaceful possession of the Rakh and thus to interfere with their alleged rights therein. The Kashmiris of Dhok Injarsar were on friendly relations with the residents of the village Jhamra and, being tenants of the Pathans of Malak Mala, apparently sided with them in the dispute about the Rakh.

It seems that on 26th September 1928, the Pathans of Kot Kai went armed to the Rakh in order either to enforce their alleged rights or to defend them against any aggression by the people of the village Jhamra.

There was, however, no actual fight. This may have been due to the fact that Abdul Ghafur Khan, the Sarbarah Zaildar of Malak Mala, and Pathan of that village, had warned the Jhamra people not to fight the other party as deposed to by some witnesses, or it may be that both parties being fully armed and equally balanced in numbers, the Pathans of Kot Kai thought better of it and allowed themselves to be persuaded back to their village as deposed to by P. W. 17, Faqir. On their way back the Pathans had to pass by the Dhok Injarsar where the Kashmiris resided. They decided to punish the Kashmiris for their past conduct and for taking the side of the Jhamra people and consequently, it is alleged that, seventeen Pathans of Kot Kai, including the fifteen persons who were tried and two others, Yusuf and Hasham Khan, who are alleged to be fugitives from justice in this case, on seeing the Kashmiris, challenged them as they neared their village. The Kashmiris, however, fearing an attack ran away, but were pursued by the culprits, were overtaken near a place which is called the Gol Dheri, and were attacked with spears, lathis and stones. The Kashmiris, it is admitted, in order to defend themselves threw stones at the accused causing injuries to some of them. The actual assault is described as follows by P. W. 4 Sultan Mir :

" Ghafur caught hold of Hayat Mir, and Fazal son of Behram, stabbed him with a spear. As Hayat Mir fell down Ghafur belaboured him with sticks, Yusuf, absconder, caught hold of Waris Mir and Abdul Rahim stabbed him with a spear. As he fell down Yusuf belaboured him with sticks. Ghulam Rasul accused brought down Shah Zarin with a spear thrust. Abdul Rehman accused caught hold of Ahmed Mir and Sher Khan struck him with a kulhari. Abdul Rehman accused and Hasham Khan absconder then struck Ahmed Mir with lathis. Said Mir was beaten by Niamat Khan, Ahmad Gul and Yusuf, who had sticks in their hands. As he fell down, his three assailants jumped on his chest. Said Ghulam and Lal Khan accused beat me with sticks. Salamat Mir (P. W. 5), Qalandar (P. W. 6), Haidar Mir (P. W. 8) and Hazrat Mir (P. W. 9) were also beaten by the accused We flung stones at our assailants and wounded Said Ghulam and Lal Khan. Abdul Rahim, Nadar, Waris and Muzaffar accused were also injured with the stones flung by our party. Our cries for help brought Nawab (P. W. 10), Muhammad Din (P. W. 11) and Ahmad, brother of Faqira (P. W. 12) to the spot, but none of them had the courage of rescuing us and the assailants went away of their own accord."

As a result of the injuries Hayat Mir and Waris Mir died on the spot, while Ahmad Mir and Said Mir died the next day and Shah Zarin died on 2nd May 1929, i. e. about eight months later. It is not, however, necessary to consider the question whether the accused are directly responsible for the death of Shah Zarin so as to be guilty of his murder, in view of the fact that four other injured persons certainly died as a result of the injuries received by them during this assault and all the members of the party who assaulted them are undoubtedly guilty of murder if the prosecution version is true. The accused, on the other hand, with the exception of two, plead an alibi. Said Ghulam and Lal admit a fight with the Kashmiris. They both say that they went with their cattle to Utli Rakh for the purpose of grazing and that other men of their village were also grazing their cattle in that Rakh and so were some men of Jhamra. The men of the accused's village rounded up the cattle of the Jhamra people with a view to take them to the cattle pound on the ground that they had tropped on the Rakh, as the residents of Kot Kai alone were entitled to graze their cattle in the Rakh. One of the Jhamra people thereupon ran back to the village and brought about 400 or 500 men armed with spears, sticks and hatchets. On seeing these men the accused left the cattle and ran away but were followed and overtaken by the other party and beaten. It is alleged that the Kashmiris of Dhok Injarsar were also present on this occasion, and there was a promiscuous fight in which the Kashmiris were also injured. This is all the information that these two accused are able to give on the subject.

It is to be observed that, according to these two accused, the assault or the fight took place at the Utli Rakh, whereas, according to the prosecution witnesses it took place near the Dhok Injarsar at the Ghol Dheri. The testimony of Sayed Ahmad Shah, Sub-Inspector of Police, who investigated the case and who reached the village soon after the incident, shows that he found blood on the earth in various places in the Ghol Dheri. This fact clearly corroborates the prosecution version as to the place of assault, and falsified the defence version.

The prosecution case, as deposed to by P. W. 4, Sultan Mir, is corroborated by P. W. 5, Salamat Mir, P. W. 6 Qalandar, P. W. 7 Shah Zarin, P. W. 8. Haidar Mir and P. W. 9 Hazrat Mir, who all had received injuries on this occasion; and also by P. W. 10 Nawab and P. W. 11 Muhammad Din. Their description of the affair, however, is styled by the learned Sessions Judge as too consistent, and it is really so, as they have given evidence almost in exactly the same words. Still the learned Sessions Judge has accepted in main the prosecution version of the affair, and, in my opinion, he came to the right conclusion. The place of the occurrence, in my opinion, is the main factor which determines the correctness or otherwise of the two versions placed before the Court. The prosecution case further receives support from the testimony of P. W. 17 Faqir who does not appear to have any concern with either party. On the other hand, from the answers given by him to the questions asked from him in cross-examination, it appears that this witness is entirely disinterested. He says that, on the afternoon of the day of occurrence, sixteen or seventeen persons, including the accused went towards the Rakh and, when they reached the bank of the ravine, they found the Jhamra people assembled on the opposite bank. He adds that a fight was imminent but he stopped it and advised the men who had collected to fight to go to the landlord and to settle their differences. He also says that Hayat Mir, Ahmad Mir and Said Mir were with the Jhamra people at that time and that of the Kot Kai party he saw Sher Khan, Niamat Khan, Ghulam Rasul and Fazal whom he knew by name and identified the other accused though he did not know them by name. The testimony of this witness is also supported by P. W. 15 Muhammad. He, however, is a resident of Jhamra and much reliance cannot be placed on his statement alone. I consider that the testimony of Faqir and the Sub-Inspector read together establishes the fact that Kot Kai Pathans went to the Utli Rakh with a view to fight the Jhamra people whose partisans the Kashmiris were but were prevented from fighting by the intercession of Faqir, and probably also by the fact that they found the other party in strong numbers.

It appears that there are two routes by which one can return to Kot Kai from the Rakh, both of which converge at the Diok Injarsar and that is the reason why Hayat Mir, Ahmad Mir and Said Mir reached their village before the Pathans who came by the longer route. The Pathans seeing the Kashmiris in their village and being annoyed at their conduct and especially seeing Hayat Mir, Ahmad Mir and Said Mir among them, decided to punish them and assaulted them in the manner already described.

The fact that the Pathans were the aggressors in the affair is, in my opinion, established by the number and nature of injuries caused by them and the weapons carried by them. The prosecution witnesses are unanimous in saying that some of them carried barchhis and other sharp-edged weapons, and this is fully supported by the medical evidence from which it appears that Hayat Mir deceased had one incised wound caused by some sharp-edged instrument like a barchhi (a spear): that Waris Mir died from shock and haemorrhage due to an incised punctured wound in the abdomen from which large intestines had come out, this injury also having been caused probably by a barchhi, and also that Said Mir had two small punctured wounds on the left side of the neck. Shah Zarin had one incised wound on the front side of right chest just above the nipple.

I have not thought it necessary to describe the other injuries received by the Kashmiris. They were fairly large in number and of a serious nature; some of them were caused by lathis but a large number of them were caused by stones.

Some of the accused also received injuries and it appears that the number of injuries received by them was larger than these received by the Kashmiris, but they were mostly caused by stones, though a few were caused by lathis. This, in my opinion, is a clear indication of the fact that the Kashmiris were not prepared for a fight and were set upon by the Pathans in the manner described above, and that they were driven to defend themselves by throwing stones at their assailants. The existence of some lathi marks on the persons of some of the accused can easily be understood under the circumstance. Many persons ordinarily carry lathis with them and it is not surprising that those of the Kashmiris who carried lathis used them when brought to bay.

I have, therefore, no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge that those of the accused who are proved to have taken part in this affair are guilty of murder and are punishable under S. 302 I. P. C., read with S. 149.

At this stage it will be convenient to deal with a contention raised on behalf of the convicts by their learned counsel. Shah Zarin, I have already stated, died on 2nd May 1929. This was before the trial was held.* He was, however, examined by the committing Magistrate and his statement was also recorded under S. 156, Criminal P. C., by a Magistrate of the First Class on 28th September 1928, that is to say, two days after the incident. The statement made by him before the committing Magistrate is exactly what has been stated by the other prosecution witnesses, but the statement made on 28th September 1928 is somewhat different. That statement is marked Ex. D-A. At the trial the statement made by Shah Zarin before the committing Magistrate was transferred to the Sessions Judge's record under S. 33, Indian Evidence Act, and was read as evidence in the case. Ex. D-A was read over to Shah Zarin before the committing Magistrate in the course of the cross-examination of this witness by the accused, and was admitted by him, with the addition that he did not remember what statement he made as he was not then in his senses. The accused did not draw the attention of the witness to those portions of Ex. D-A, which according to them, contradicted the statement made by him before the committing Magistrate, but apparently, in the course of the arguments, the counsel who appeared on behalf of the accused wanted to use the whole of the statement recorded in Ex. D-A, for the purpose of contradicting the statement made by Shah Zarin before the committing Magistrate; the learned Sessions Judge, however, declined to allow the use of this statement for the purpose, except those portions thereof on which Shah Zarin was cross-examined.

The learned counsel for the appellants in this Court criticised this procedure of the Sessions Judge and relied upon a judgment of this Court in Hari Ram v. Emperor (1). In that case it was held that when the statement of a witness previously made is used as evidence under the provisions of Ss. 32 and 33, Evidence Act, then any other statement made by that witness can be used by virtue of S. 158, Evidence Act, for the purpose of contradicting that witness as if such witness had appeared in Court and was cross-examined on such previous statement and on question being asked had denied the facts mentioned in the same. In my opinion, therefore, the accused were entitled to use the whole of Ex. D-A, for the purpose of contradicting Shah Zarin and this was conceded by the learned Government Advocate.

The learned counsel, however, wanted to treat the statement of Shah Zarin contained in Ex. D-A as substantive evidence in the case. This in my opinion, he was not entitled to do. A previous statement which is not made in Court and at the trial can be used only for the limited purpose of corroborating or contradicting a witness and does not become substantive evidence in the case. This was held in Emperor v. Cherath Choyi Kutti (2) and in Bishan Datt v. Emperor (3), and with the view taken in these cases I entirely agree. Even, however, if the statement of Shah Zarin is used as substantive evidence, it does not materially affect the prosecution case against the accused as from that statement also it is clear that the accused were the aggressors in the matter and they assaulted the Kashmiris who had merely asked them not to go to the Utli Rakh and the assault, according to that statement also, took place at the Ghol Dheri.

This leaves the question of determining which of the appellants are proved to have taken part in the assault. All the appellants, of course, are mentioned by the prosecution witnesses Nos. 4 to 11. The learned Sessions Judge, however, has chosen not to base his conclusions on the testimony of these witnesses alone on the question of the presence of each accused, on the ground that there is generally a tendency on the part of the injured persons to take vengeance on the opposite party by naming a large number of members of their family as accused in the case than have actually participated in the crime. The learned Sessions Judge has, therefore, looked for other corroborative circumstances before convicting the ac-caused on such evidence and in my opinion in the peculiar circumstances of this case, he adopted a prudent course.

Now with regard to Said Ghulam and Lal, both these appellants admit their presence in a fight with the Kashmiris on the date of the occurrence and there were injuries on their persons. There can, therefore, be no manner of doubt as to their guilt.

Similarly, Abdul Rahim had injuries on his person which he has not explained.

In the case of Niamat Khan, human blood was found on his clothes. So far as Fazal is concerned some blood was found on his clothes, but it is not proved that it was human blood, but he was one of the persons who carried a spear and actually caused injuries to Salamat Mir. The testimony of P. W. 17 Faqir further corroborates the evidence of eye witnesses as against this convict.

In my opinion the case against all these convicts has been established by the prosecution evidence. I would, therefore, dismiss their appeal, and confirm the sentence of death passed upon them, as in my opinion, in view of the nature of the assault and of the injuries caused that is the only appropriate sentence in their case.

With regard to Ghafur appellant, he is a young man, who according to his own statement, is fourteen years of age, but according to the Sessions Judge probably about seventeen years of age. It appears that he was arrested on 8th October 1928, i. e., about ten days after the incident and the presence of human blood on his clothes under the circumstances cannot be considered as a positive incriminating circumstance against him. Beyond the testimony of the Kashmiri witnesses, therefore, there is no other evidence against him. I would accept his appeal and acquitting him direct that he be released forthwith.

This leaves the appeal by the Local Government. Having already expressed the opinion that the learned Sessions Judge was right in refusing to convict those of the accused against whom the only evidence was of the Kashmiri witnesses, I consider that there is no ground to interfere with the acquittals of Akbar Khan, Sher Khan, Abdur Rehman, Fazal Khan and Ahmad Gul.

The appeal against them will, therefore, be dismissed.

With regard to Ghulam Rasul, son of Behram Khan, the case stands on a different footing. Shah Zarin has consistently stated that it was this accused who had caused him an injury with a spear, and P. W. 17 Faqir also says that this accused was armed with a spear and was in the crowd of the Kot Kai Pathans who had assembled at the Utli Rakh to fight the Jhamra people. This crowd, I have already stated, on their way back, assaulted the Kashmiris, so that there is corroboration of the testimony of the Kashmiri witnesses with regard to Ghulam Rasul in the evidence of Faqir. I am also of opinion that, as against Ghulam Rasul the testimony of Shah Zarin ought to be treated as of special value because he definitely implicates this accused as the person who caused him an injury with a spear. I would, therefore, accept the appeal against the acquittal of Ghulam Rasul and convict him of murder and sentence him under S. 302, I. P. C., read with S. 149. Ordinarily the Courts refrain from passing the capital sentence on a person who is convicted on an appeal against his acquittal, but in the present case the attack by the Pathans was of a particularly ferocious nature and the accused acted in a high handed manner and with unusual cruelty in assaulting the Kashmiris who have not been proved to have given them any provocation. I would, therefore, sentence Ghulam Rasul to death.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1197 of 1929, Decided on 14th December 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 25th June 1929.

Penal Code, S. 451 — Court yard surrounded by walls and indivisible from the house when "building used as human dwelling"—Determining factor explained.

Where the question is whether a court yard forming an intergal and indivisible part of a house and surrounded by walls on all sides is a "building used as a human dwelling" within the meaning of S. 451, 'the determining factor is not the existence of the shutters, or the fact that the doors was shut or open, at the time of entry by the accused, but the nature of the structure as a whole, and the purpose for which it was intended to be and was being used: 11 P. W. R. 1919 Cr.; A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 623; A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 279, Dist.

Jagan Nath Bhandari—for Petitioner.

Hem Raj Mahajan for the Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner Bhag Jat, has been convicted under S. 451, I. P. C., for having trespassed into the sahn of the house of his neighbour Mathura Das, Brahmin, on the night of 5th May 1929, with the intention of committing adultery with his wife, Mt. Persinni, and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

The finding that the petitioner trespassed into the sahn, with the intention mentioned above, is not now disputed and is amply borne out by the evidence on the record. The only question argued is that the conviction should have been under S. 447 and not under S. 451, as the trespass was not committed by entering into a "building used as a human dwelling," within the meaning of S. 442, but into an open courtyard.

After examining the record and hearing counsel, I am unable to accept this contention. The plan and the evidence show that the sahn is an integral and indivisible part of the building which constitutes the house of Mathura Das. It is enclosed by walls on all sides and has a number of kothas opening into it. Access to it from outside is had by means of three doors, which apparently have "door frames" affixed to them. About the time of the occurrence, however, only one of these doors had shutters on it, while the other two were without shutters. It is conceded that if these two doors also had been provided with shutters, S. 442 would have applied, as held in Shera v. Empress (1) and Ismail v. Emperor (2) and Wali Mahomed v. Emperor (3). But it is contended that the absence of the shutters at the time takes the case out of the rule laid down therein. In my opinion this contention is without force. The determining factor is not the existence of the shutters, or the fact that the door was shut or open, at the time of entry by the accused, but the nature of the structure as a whole, and the purpose for which it was intended to be and was being used. Mr. Jagan Nath Bhandari has strongly relied upon Sunder v. Emperor (4), Buta v. Emperor (5) and Mulchand v. Emperor (6) but they are all distinguishable. In the first of these cases the courtyard was not enclosed on all sides but had a mud wall on a portion of the front side with no door or gateway leading into the street. In Buta v. Emperor (5) the courtyard was not provided with a door at all, and in Mulchand v. Emperor (6) it was enclosed by low walls on three sides only.

In my opinion the petitioner has been rightly convicted. Having regard to the circumstances in which the trespass was committed, I do not think the sentence is severe. I dismiss the petition for revision. The petitioner must surrender to his bail bond and serve the remaining period of imprisonment.

Criminal Appeal No. 1126 of 1929, Decided on 17th December 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Attock, D/- 29th October 1929.

Penal Code, S. 302—Improper overtures by stepmother to her stepson do not amount to grave and sudden provocation—Maximum sentence, however, should not be levied.

When the deceased makes improper overtures to the accused who is her stepson and the latter in a fit of resentment stabs her with a knife to death, the act of the deceased does not amount to grave and sudden provocation and the accused is guilty of murder. But the act, however, may be taken into consideration and is a sufficient ground for not imposing the maximum penalty of death. [P 476 C 2]

(3) A. I. R. 1929 Sind 17=22 S. L. R. 466.

Johnstone, J.—The appellant Allah Din, a Musalli aged 25, residing in Khagwani village, Attock District, has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to death for the murder of his stepmother, Mt. Hayat Nur, a woman of between 40 and 45 years of age, on the morning of 7th July 1929.

About eleven months before the occurrence Sharaf Din (P.W. No. 3) father of the appellant, married Mt. Hayat Nur, after being a widower for some five years. The appellant himself had been married about two years before, but was not living with his wife. On the night of 6th July, Sharaf Din, Mt. Hayat Nur and daughter of Sharaf Din by his first wife slept on the roof of the adjoining pasar. In the early morning when Mt. Sarwar went down below, she heard the sounds of a struggle going on inside the kotha between the appellant and the deceased. She at once ran up to the roof and told her father, who descended and told the appellant to open the door, which was chained from within. The appellant not obeying Sharaf Din went and fetched his neighbour and friend, Ahmad Khan (P. W. No. 5), and three other villagers also appeared on the scene, Shahinchi, Amir Khan and Zardar (P. Ws. Nos. 6, 7 and 8). Shahinchi forced the door of the kotha open and inside the party found Mt. Hayat Nur lying dead and the appellant with a bloody knife in his possession. The matter was reported without delay at the Hazro Police Station. It has been proved that some of the appellant's clothes and the knife recovered from his possession were stained with human blood.

The appellant admitted at the trial that he had killed Mt. Hayat Nur and set up the plea of grave and sudden provocation. She was, he said, a woman of bad character, with whom he had formerly himself had an intrigue. When his father married Mt. Hayat Nur he stopped his former relations with her but she still pestered him with her attentions. On the morning in question he stated, he went into the kotha whether the deceased followed him and urged him to have sexual intercourse with her. In a fury of resentment at the proposal he grabbed a knife and stabbed her to death.

The prosecution tried to show that the appellant was actuated by anger arising out of domestic bickerings, but the two incidents to which witnesses depose hardly establish a strong motive. On one occasion, one and a half months before the occurrence, he had taken the deceased's shoes and only a few days before 7th July he had taken away and pawned a quilt. On the other hand, it is in the evidence of Shahinchi that the deceased was a loose woman and had actually had an intrigue with the appellant before her marriage with Sharaf Din. Moreover, not only Shahinchi, but Ahmad Khan, Amir Khan and Zardar all definitely state that as soon as the appellant was caught he explained that he had killed Mt. Hayat Nur because she had entreated him to have sexual intercourse with her.

In the absence of any other motive and in view of the fact that there is unanimous evidence as to the appellant's explanation of his crime from the very beginning, I am of opinion that the version put forward by him is much more probable than that which the prosecution has endeavoured to establish, and that his version must be accepted. At the same time it cannot be held that the improper overture of the deceased to the appellant amounted to grave and sudden provocation and I would maintain the conviction under S. 302, I. P. C. In awarding sentence, however, I think that consideration must be given to the circumstance and that the ends of justice can be met without imposing the maximum penalty. I would accept the appeal so far that I would reduce the sentence from capital punishment to a sentence of transportation for life.

Sikh found in possession of kirpans of the length varying from nine to ten inches is not guilty of the offence under S. 19 (a) and (d) as such kirpans are not swords. A.I.R. 1924, Lch. 600, Dist. [P 478 C 1]

V. B. Karnik and P. B. Gajendra-gadkar—For Applicant.

P. B. Shingne for the Crown.

Patkar, J.—In this case the accused was tried on a charge under S. 19 (a) and (d), Arms Act 11 of 1878, before the Honorary First Class Magistrate at Bhusawal, and convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 250. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge confirmed the conviction and reduced the fine to Rs. 50.

The accused, who is a Sikh resident of Delhi, was found in possession of thirty-five kirpans or jambias at Bhusawal. The accused admitted that he had brought them from Delhi and desired to take them in the Nizam's territory for sale and also admitted that he had already sold two kirpans at Bhusawal. Out of the thirty-five kirpans nine kirpans were below nine inches, twenty-three were between nine and nine and a half inches, and there were ten inches in length.

Under S. 27, Arms Act, 1878, the Governor General in Council may, from time to time, by notification publish in the Gazette of India :

(a) exempt any person by name or in virtue of his office, or any class of persons, or exclude any description of arms or ammunition, or withdraw any part of British India, from the operation of any prohibition or direction contained in the Act; and

(b) cancel any such notification, and again subject the persons or things of the part of British India comprised therein to the operation of such prohibition or direction.

Section 5, Arms Act, prohibits unlicensed manufacture, conversion and sale of any arms, ammunition or military stores. S. 6 prohibits unlicensed importation and exportation. S. 13 prohibits going armed without a license. S. 14 prohibits unlicensed possession of any cannon or firearms or any ammunition or military stores.

Government of India Notification No. F. 829, dated 3rd November 1923, was made under Ss. 4, 10, 17 and 27, Arms Act. Under R. 3 (1) of the notification, the persons and classes of persons, the arms and ammunition, and the parts of British India specified or described in Schs. 1 to 4 are, respectively, exempted, excluded and withdrawn to the extent and subject to the conditions therein specified from the operation or prohibitions and directions contained in the Act. In Sch. 2, in British India except the Punjab, Burma and the Delhi Province all arms except cannons and other firearms mentioned in the second column are excluded from the operation of all the prohibitions and directions contained in the Act provided, as laid down in Col. 3, that the Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette, retain all or any of the prohibitions and directions contained in the Act in respect of any arms, in the case of any class of persons or of any specified area.

In Government Notification No. 7228 dated 2nd August 1920, the item relating to "kirpans not exceeding nine inches in length carried by Sikhs" appears in Cl. (g) under entry No. 3 relating to all swords. According to that notification kirpans exceeding nine inches in length or kirpans not carried by Sikhs would come under entry No. 3 relating to all swords and will be subject to all the prohibitions mentioned in Col. 5 and the sale and transport of such kirpans would be prohibited under Ss. 5 and 6, Arms Act, and will be punishable under Cls. (a) and (d), S. 19, Arms Act. It appears, however, that by a subsequent notification No. 1234, dated 3rd August 1925, printed at p. 2093 of the Bombay Government Gazette, Part 1 for the year 1925, Cl. (g) relating to "kirpans not exceeding nine inches in length carried by Sikhs" has been transferred from entry No. 3 relating to all swords and put as Cl. (g) under entry No. 2 relating to all arms.

The effect of the change in the notification would be that kirpans exceeding nine inches in length and not carried by Sikhs would be subject to the prohibition and direction contained in S. 13 as mentioned in Col. 5 and would, therefore, not be subject to the prohibitions contained in Ss. 5 and 6, Arms Act. In the Notification of 1920 the kirpans not exceeding nine inches in length carried by Sikhs were included in the exemptions of certain kinds of swords, and this inclusion would indicate that kirpans were swords. In the Notification of 1925, the same item was removed from the exemptions relating to swords and included in the exemptions relating to arms. This change is indicative of the intention of removing kirpans from the category of swords.

It is urged on behalf of the Crown that the word "kirpan" can only be understood and read as meaning a sword, and comes within the definition of sword and reliance is placed on the decision in Hari Singh v. Emperor (1). The weapons in that case were thirty-six inches in length with curved blades measuring twenty-eight inches. The word "kirpan" would mean a weapon for cutting from its etymological meaning and in Monier Williams' Sanskrit dictionary the word is defined as meaning a sword or a sacrificial knife. In the present case, out of the thirty-five kirpans in the possession of the accused, in the case of twenty-three the blade is nine and a half inches, in the case of three it is ten inches, and in the case of nine weapons it is below nine inches. With regard to the kirpans below nine inches no offence would be committed by the accused as they are exempted from all the prohibitions under the entry No. 2 in the notification. With regard to twenty-six kirpans, which are above nine inches, they will be subject to the prohibition contained in S. 13, Arms Act, as mentioned in Col. 5 of the notification. Kirpans with blades of nine to ten inches cannot, in my opinion, be considered as swords. They may be miniature or model swords, but if it was intended that they should be considered as swords, the entry with regard to kirpans ought to have been allowed to remain in entry No. 3 as in the notification of 1920, and ought not to have been transferred from entry No. 3 relating to all swords to the entry relating to all arms. The effect of the removal of Cl. (g) from entry No. 3 relating to swords and inclusion of Cl. (g) relating to kirpans under the heading "all arms" in entry No. 2 would make kirpans above nine inches in length liable to the prohibition contained only in S. 13. If the kirpans in the present case had been thirty-six inches in length with curved blades measuring twenty-eight inches, as in the Lahore case, it would have been possible to hold that the kirpans with such long blades might be considered as swords, and would come under entry No. 3 and would be subject to all the prohibitions. The notifications relating to the Indian Arms Act imposing a penalty upon the subject must be construed very strictly. If it is intended to impose all the prohibitions contained in the Act on kirpans with blades above nine inches whether carried or not by the Sikhs, the notification must be clear on the point.

I think, therefore, that the accused is not guilty of the offence under S. 19 (a) and (d), Arms Act. I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence of the accused and order the fine, if paid, to be refunded. The order of confiscation is set aside.

Wild, J.—The petitioner in this case was convicted under S. 19 (a) and (d), Arms Act 11 of 1878, in respect of certain kirpans between nine and ten inches in length and the question is whether such kirpans are swords, the selling and transporting of which are prohibited in serial No. 3 of Government Notification of the Bombay Government, Political Department No. 1234 of 3rd August 1925. It may be noted that serial No. 3 relates to swords and certain kinds of swords are exempted. Kirpans not exceeding nine inches in length when carried by Sikhs are excepted in serial No. 2 from the prohibition contained in S. 13 of the Act which relates to going armed without a license and the fact that the last exemption does not appear in serial No. 3 would seem to show that, in the view of the department which issued the notification, kirpans not exceeding nine inches in length are not swords. In the previous notification No. 7228 of 2nd August 1920, as subsequently amended, the exception as to kirpans not exceeding nine inches in length was to be found in serial No. 3 as an exception to swords and it would seem that in 1920 the view of the department was that kirpans exceeding nine inches in length were swords.

The word "sword" is defined in the Concise Oxford Dictionary as an offensive weapon consisting of a long, variously shaped blade for cutting or thrusting, or both, and a hilt with hand-guard. It is evident from the case of Hari Singh v. The Crown (1) that a kirpan may be an ordinary sword of full size but that the word "kirpan" also means a small model or miniature sword worn by Sikhs in their turbans. The kirpans in this case were obviously mere model or miniature swords. I do not consider that a miniature sword between nine and ten inches in length including its hilt is an offensive weapon with a long blade as the definition of the sword requires. I am, therefore, of opinion that such a kirpan is not a sword to which all the provisions of the Indian Arms Act apply in accordance with serial No. 3 of the Government Notification of 1925. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the conviction in this case should be set aside. I would add that if it is desired that kirpans exceeding nine inches in length should be subject like swords to all the prohibitions of the Arms Act the Notification of 1925 should be amended to make this clear.

Sana Mathur — Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 280 of 1927, Decided on 4th October 1929, from order of acquittal of Sess. Judge, Kaira, in Criminal Appeal No. 46 of 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 179 to 184 and 188 — Ss. 179 to 184 are controlled by S. 188.

Sections 179 to 184 are controlled by the provisions of S. 188 and the alternative jurisdiction conferred by those sections can be exercised on the production of the certificate of the Political Agent according to the special provisions of S. 188 : 41 All. 452, Rel. on.; 21 M. L. J. 441 and 5 S. L. R. 266, Ref. 88 Mad. 779, held no longer good law.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 188 — Alternative charge under Penal Code Ss. 379 and 411 — Offence under S. 411 committed in Native State — Jurisdiction cannot be exercised unless Magistrate gets certificate under S. 188.

The framing of an alternative charge under Ss. 379 and 411, I. P. C., does not confer jurisdiction on a Magistrate when the offence under S. 411 is committed beyond the limits of British India, for, under the express terms of S. 188, he cannot exercise it without a certificate from the Political Agent. [P 481 C 1]

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

H. V. Divatia—for Respondent.

Patkar, J.—In this case two accused were tried on charges under Ss. 379, 411 and 414, I. P. C., before the First Class Magistrate, Kaira. The learned Magistrate held that there was no direct evidence as to the commission of the offence of theft, but relying on S. 114, ill. (a), Evidence Act, convicted the accused under S. 379 and in the alternative under S. 411, I. P. C. The offence under S. 414, I. P. C., did not, in the opinion of the learned Magistrate, fall within his jurisdiction as the certificate from the Political Agent was not obtained.

Accused 2 appealed to the Sessions Court but accused 1 did not file an appeal. On the appeal of accused 2 the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the offence under S. 379, I. P. C., was not made out as there was no direct evidence as to the commission of the offence. With regard to the offence under S. 411, I. P. C., he came to the conclusion that a certificate of the Political Agent was necessary under S. 188, Criminal P. C. He, therefore, acquitted accused 2 and made a reference to this Court to acquit accused 1 on the same ground. The Government of Bombay have appealed against the order of acquittal of accused 2.

It is urged on behalf of the Crown that the lower Court erred in acquitting the accused under S. 379, I. P. C., and that under S. 114, ill. (a), a presumption ought to have been drawn that both the accused were either the thieves or the receivers of stolen property. There appears to be no evidence on the record that the accused committed the theft in question, and there is considerable lapse of time from the date of the offence to the date of the alleged receipt of the stolen property and its disposal by the accused in a village in the Idar State. We think, therefore, that the acquittal of the accused under S. 379, I. P. C., is correct.

The next question is, whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try the accused with regard to the offence under S. 411, I. P. C., without a certificate from the Political Agent of Mahikantha Agency under S. 188, Criminal P. C. It is conceded that the offence under S. 411 was committed beyond British India, Under S. 181, Cl. (3), Criminal P. C. :

"the offence of theft, or any offence which includes theft or the possession of stolen property, may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such offence was committed or the property stolen was possessed by the thief or by any person who received or retained the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen."

Illustration (b) to S. 180 is to this effect:

"A charge of receiving stolen goods may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the goods were stolen, or by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any of them were at any time dishonestly received or retained."

Under S. 177, Criminal P. C. :

"Every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed."

That section embodies the general rule of jurisdiction. The following Ss. 179 to 184 lay down the alternative jurisdiction conferred on other Courts in certain cases. S. 188, Criminal P. C., says that:

"When a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty commits an offence at any place without and beyond the limits of British India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within British India at which he may be found :

Provided that notwithstanding anything in any of the preceding sections of this chapter no charge as to any such offence shall be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent, if there is one for the territory in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, certifies that, in his opinion, the charge ought to be inquired into in British India."

In the case of Sessions Judge, Tanjore v. Sundara Singh (1), where a dacoity was committed in British territory and a Native Indian British subject was found in possession of the stolen property in a Native State and a charge under S. 412, I. P. C., was preferred against him, it was held that, though under S. 180, Criminal P. C., the offence could be tried at the place where the property was retained or where the theft or dacoity took place, yet under S. 188 of the Code a certificate of the Political Agent was necessary if the charge was to be tried in British India. In Emperor v. Tribhuan (2), where a charge had been framed against the accused of an offence of criminal breach of trust under S. 406, I. P. C., and a complaint had been filed in British India on the assumption that the Court had jurisdiction under S. 181, Cl. (2), Criminal P. C., it was held that S. 181, Cl. (2), only applied as between Courts of different local areas whose jurisdictions have been limited under S. 12, Criminal P. C., and to which the Code of Criminal Procedure applied, and had no application to an offence committed in a Native State, and that the Magistrate could not take cognizance of such an offence without a certificate from the Political Agent.

In the case of Assistant Sessions Judge, North Arcot v. Ramaswami Asari (3), where the accused, who was entrusted with certain jewels, pledged some of them in Bangalore contrary to the arrangement that he should return the jewels or their price at Vellore, it was held that the Vellore Court had jurisdiction to try the accused for criminal breach of trust or misappropriation without a certificate under S. 188. The judgment proceeded on the ground that the fact that loss of the jewels which was the consequence occurred to the complainant at Vellore in British India, was sufficient under S. 179 to give jurisdiction to the British Indian Court to try the offence, and that S. 188, Criminal P. C., did not control the operation of the previous Ss. 179 to 184. After the decision in Ramaswami Asari's case (3), the Code has been amended and S. 188, proviso, says that notwithstanding anything in any of the preceding sections of this chapter no charge with regard to an offence committed outside British India shall be inquired into in British India without a certificate of the Political Agent. The amendment makes it clear that the Madras decision is no longer good law, and that Ss. 179 to 184 can have no application where the offence is committed outside British India unless a certificate of the Political Agent is obtained under S. 188, Criminal P. C. The same view appears to have been taken in Emperor v. Narain (4). It would, therefore, follow that Ss. 179 to 184, Criminal P. C., are controlled by the provisions of S. 188, Criminal P. C., and the alternative jurisdiction conferred by those sections can be exercised on the production of the certificate of the Political Agent according to the special provisions of S. 188, Criminal P. C.

It is urged on behalf of the Crown that in the present case there is an alternative charge under Ss. 379 and 411, I. P. C. S. 188 refers to an offence committed without and beyond the limits of British India. It is conceded that the offence under S. 411 was committed beyond the limits of British India. The framing of an alternative charge in the present case does not confer jurisdiction on the Magistrate and under the express terms of S. 188, he cannot exercise it without a certificate from the Political Agent. We think, therefore, that the order of acquittal by the lower Court is correct.

We would, therefore, dismiss the appeal against the order of acquittal, and in the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge we would direct accused 1 to be acquitted and discharged. The bail bond of accused 1 is cancelled.

Wahiduddin Hamiduddin No. 1—Opposite Party.

Case No. 2, Criminal Sessions No. 4 of 1929, Decided on 26th November 1929.

(a) Evidence Act Ss. 9 and 11—Several persons charged of conspiracy—Evidence to show previous association for criminal purposes with approver is admissible to corroborate approver under S. 9 and/or S. 11 as regards his statement regarding conspiracy.

Where several persons are charged with committing or conspiring to commit a particular dacoity and evidence is tendered to show that prior to the dacoity the accused were closely and intimately associating with the approver and the object of the association was commission of theft and other discreditable acts:

Held: that as far as the evidence of close association with the approver is concerned corroborating the approver's statement that a conspiracy existed, it is admissible under S. 9 and/or S. 11 of the Act. [P 482 C 1]

* (b) Evidence Act, S. 54—Evidence to show character of persons associating with accused and nature of association is also inadmissible.

There is no substantial difference between evidence tending to show the character of the accused and evidence tending to show the character of the persons with whom he is alleged to have associated and the nature of the association. Such evidence is therefore inadmissible. [P 482 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 14—Evidence of committing theft—Not relevant to show state of mind in committing dacoity.

Evidence of commission of other offences such as thefts does not show an intention to commit a different kind of offence, such as dacoity and is therefore not relevant as showing the existence of any relevant state of mind etc. [P 482 C 1]

Velinker—for the Crown.

Azad—for Opposite Party.

Judgment. In the course of the evidence for the Crown, a question has arisen as to whether the prosecution is entitled to prove not only that accused 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9 were closely and intimately associated with the approver Haji Sirajuddin but that the object of that association during a period of several months prior to the dacoity in question had been the commission of thefts and other discreditable acts. The mere fact that the evidence adduced would tend to show the commission of crimes other than that charged does not of course render it inadmissible, if it is in fact otherwise relevant to any issue properly before the Court. But having regard to the prejudice which must inevitably be introduced by such evidence, especially in a jury trial, I think the Court should be careful to see that its relevancy is clearly made out. The accused above referred to are not in this case charged with belonging to any gang but are charged with committing, or conspiring to commit, a particular dacoity a transaction entirely unconnected with any of the aforesaid thefts.

It is, I think, clear, in the first place, that, in so far as such evidence may be tendered with a view of showing the character of the accused concerned, it would be irrelevant under S. 54, Evidence Act, their bad character not being in itself a fact in issue. Nor would it, to my mind, be relevant in this case under S. 14 as showing the existence of any relevant state of mind, etc., inasmuch as the tendency to commit thefts generally could not fairly be deemed to throw any light on the existence of an intention to commit, or to engage in a conspiracy to commit, this particular dacoity.

Mr. Velinker has in fact given up this contention, but has argued that a conspiracy can in the nature of things ordinarily only be proved by inference, and that the evidence he tenders would show the closeness of the association alleged to have existed, and would therefore be relevant under S. 9, Evidence Act, as supporting the inference suggested and or under S. 11 as making the existence of the conspiracy highly probable. As far as the evidence of close association with the approver is concerned, there could, I think, be no objection to the admission of such evidence, for what it is worth, in support of the approver's statement that a conspiracy in fact existed. But as far as regards the nature and character of the association, I am unable to see that there is any substantial difference in the distinction thus attempted to be drawn between evidence tending to show the character of the accused himself, and evidence tending to show the character of the persons with whom he is alleged to have associated, and the nature of the association. It seems to me that in each case the inference is one against which the law sets its face. To take what is perhaps an extreme case, it would, I think, be highly unreasonable to argue that proof of association with the express object of committing petty thefts renders highly probable the existence of a conspiracy to commit murder; and yet it seems to me to be a conclusion that would follow from the acceptance of the contention here put forward. I, therefore, disallow the evidence tendered on this point.

Wahiduddin Hamiduddin No. 2—Opposite Party.

Case No. 2, Criminal Sessions No. 4 of 1929, Decided on 26th November 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1923), S. 162 — Statement made before Bombay police officer may be proved as applicability of S. 162 is excluded by Criminal P. C., S. 1 (2).

Section 1, sub-S. (2) of the Code lays down that nothing contained in the Act shall apply to the Bombay Police. Therefore S. 162 does not exclude a statement before a Bombay police officer from being proved except in so far as it is inadmissible under the Bombay City Police Act, 1902. [P 483 C 1]

(b) Bombay City Police Act (1902), S. 63 — Terms of S. 63 identical with old Criminal P. C., S. 162 — Objection to evidence must therefore fall under S. 63, Bombay City Police Act.

The terms of S. 63 have remained unaffected by amendment of S. 162, Criminal P. C., by the amending Act of 1923 and remain identical with the corresponding section of the old Code. Therefore any objection to the evidence being admissible must fall within the terms of S. 63, Bombay City Police Act, 1902. [P 483 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 157 — Written record inadmissible — Still oral evidence of statement before competent police officer may be proved.

For corroborating a witness, his statement before competent police officer at the identification parade held by the police in the course of the investigation may be proved by oral evidence though the written record of the statement is not admissible. [P 483 C 1]

Velinker—for the Crown.

Azad—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—Mr. Velinker tenders, in corroboration of the evidence of a certain witness for the prosecution, oral evidence of what that witness had said on the occasion of an identification parade held by the police in the course of the investigation. The previous statement relied on is recorded in a panchnama written on that occasion in the presence of a competent police officer. It is objected that evidence, whether oral or written, of that statement is not admissible. The position is that a witness may, under S. 157, Evidence Act, be corroborated by proof of any former statement made by him at or about the time when the fact deposited to took place or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact. Here there is no question of the first alternative but the statement objected to was certainly made before an authority legally competent to investigate. The power to investigate, however, would ordinarily rest on the powers conferred on the police by Chap. 14, Criminal P. C., and it is argued that the terms of S. 162 of that Code, as amended in 1923, exclude the evidence now tendered. There is no doubt as to the effect of the amended section, and I need only refer in this connexion to the case of Emperor v. Vithu Balu (1). This does not, however, conclude the present case, as the investigation with which I am concerned was one conducted by the Bombay police. I had understood that the distinction was recognized, but I find there is no direct decision on the point. S. 1, sub-S. (2), Criminal P. C., specifically lays down that nothing contained in the Act shall apply to the police in the town of Bombay, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the provision in S. 162 of the Code excluding statements : applies to any statement made to a Bombay police officer. Such a statement remains unaffected except in so far as it may be excluded by anything in the City of Bombay Police Act, 1902. The objection of the defence must therefore be based on S. 63 of that Act, and the terms of that section have remained unamended, being still identical with the terms of the corresponding section in the old Code. As such they have been judicially interpreted, by decisions which it is now too late to question and which are certainly binding on me, to mean that, although the use of the written record of the statement of the witness is prohibited, the general provisions of the Evidence Act as to proof of such statement by oral evidence are not overridden, and the statement can be proved by oral evidence and is admissible under S. 157 of the Act. I, therefore, allow the evidence.

"made to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter"

Babaji Manaji Patil—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 123 of 1929, Decided on 23rd January 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Belgaum.

* Arms Act, S. 19 (f)—Possession of jambia is not offence in Bombay Presidency under S. 19.

Possession of a jambia or a kind of dagger is not an offence under S. 19 unless the prohibition contained in S. 15 has been retained by some notification of the Local Government. The only prohibition retained by the Bombay Government by its notification published at p. 2093 of the Bombay Government Gazette is that contained in S. 13, and therefore possession of a jambia does not constitute an offence in Bombay Presidency under S. 19 (f). [P 483 C 2]

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Belgaum reporting for the orders of this Court a case in which one Babaji Manaji Patil has been convicted of an offence under S. 19 (f), Arms Act and sentenced to a day's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 40.

The weapon in respect of which the accused was convicted was a jambia, a kind of dagger, which the Sub-Inspector of Police found in his house when searching the house for stolen goods. The possession of such a weapon is not an offence under the Arms Act unless S. 15, which makes the possession of arms of any description without a license an offence, is applicable to the District of Belgaum. It is clear from Sch 2, Arms Act 1878, as amended up to date, that throughout British India, with the exception of the Punjab, Burma and the Delhi Province, all arms except those coming under the general classification of firearms are excluded from the operation of all prohibitions and directions contained in the Act, provided that the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, retain all or any of the prohibitions and directions contained in the Act in respect of any arms in the case of any class of persons or of any specified area. The possession of this weapon is not, therefore, an offence under S. 19 of the Act unless the prohibition contained in S. 15 of the Act has been retained by some notification of the Local Government.

The notification of the Bombay Government in connexion with Sch. 2 is published at p. 2093 of the Bombay Government Gazette, dated 6th August 1925, and from this it appears that the only prohibition which has been retained is that contained in S. 13. We, therefore, accept the recommendation of the Sessions Judge, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

S. 109, the learned Magistrate found that it was not sufficiently proved that the accused entered the compartment after it contained the maximum number of passengers, and therefore acquitted the accused under S. 258, Criminal P. C.

With regard to the offence under S. 108, Railways Act, the learned Magistrate, relying on the case in Ishwar Das Varshni v. Emperor (1), held that the accused pulled the chain for sufficient and reasonable cause for removing the overcrowding. The finding of the Magistrate is that there were forty-five passengers, whereas the utmost capacity allowed by law was for thirty passengers. Under S. 63, Railways Act, it is the duty of the railway administration to fix the maximum number of passengers for each compartment. S. 93 of the Act provides penalty for neglect of the provisions of S. 63. S. 102 provides penalty on a railway servant compelling passengers to enter carriages already full. S. 109 lays down the penalty on a passenger entering a compartment already containing the maximum number of passengers exhibited thereon under S. 63. Whether the cause is reasonable and sufficient would depend on the facts of each particular case. In the present case the necessity for pulling the chain arose from the neglect of the railway administration to observe the provisions of S. 63. We think the accused had reasonable and sufficient cause to pull the chain in order to remove the overcrowding, which it was the duty of the railway administration to prevent under S. 93 of the Act. But the learned Magistrate convicted the accused on the ground that in the written statement of the accused he stated that one of the reasons for pulling the chain was to obtain the names of European passengers who were in the first or second class compartments and who came and used abusive language to him. The accused in his statement stated :

"In this way on account of overcrowding as there was a havoc in the compartment and in order to reduce the overcrowding the railway authorities in spite of their having been told from time to time did not pay heed. I had no other remedy, but to pull the chain for the safety of myself and other passengers and only for as many times as was necessary. Two European passengers abused me and came to assault me. I asked the railway authorities and the police to get me their names. But they did not do so and this is also one of the reasons for pulling the chain."

If the learned Magistrate considered that one of the reasons for pulling the chain, viz., the removal of the overcrowding, was a sufficient and reasonable cause under S. 108 of the Act, we think that the learned Magistrate erred in holding that the accused was deprived of the defence of sufficient and reasonable cause merely because there was an additional reason for pulling the chain which in the opinion of the Magistrate was not sufficient and reasonable. We think, therefore, that the conviction under S. 108 must be set aside.

With regard to the conviction under S. 121, Railways Act, we think that in a case where a person without sufficient and reasonable cause pulls the emergency chain, he renders himself liable for prosecution under S. 103 only, and not under S. 121 for preventing the running of the train and thus obstructing or impeding a railway servant in the discharge of his duty. In the case of Girjashankar Dayashankar v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. (2), Batchelor, J., observes (p. 120) :

"Reading the sections together, the fair conclusion seems to me to be that the stopping of the train by the wrongful pulling of the communication chain is one special kind of obstruction, for which the legislature has made special provision. It has ordained a particular punishment, which is lighter than that allowed for other obstructions presumably because the stopping of the train by this mechanical means is not likely to be attended with any danger to the travelling public. This differentiation of the consequences or results seems to me strongly in favour of the view that the special provisions of S. 108 are not to be controlled by the more general language of the wider sections."

It was, therefore, held by Batchelor, J. following the maxim generalia specialibus non derogant, that the offence committed by the plaintiff in that case was punishable under S. 103 and not under S. 121 or S. 123. The facts proved in the present case are not sufficient to attract the operation of S. 103 of the Act. We think therefore, that the accused cannot be convicted under S. 121, Railways Act.

For these reasons we would set aside the convictions and sentences; and order the fines, if paid, to be refunded.

* Motor Vehicles Act, S. 7 (1)—Expression "to ply for hire" means to exhibit vehicle so as to invite public to travel in it.

The expression "to ply for hire" ordinarily means to exhibit a vehicle in such a way as to invite those who may desire to do so to hire it or to travel in it on payment of the usual fares, and also to offer its use on payment to any member of the public, thereby soliciting custom. The owner of a bus driving it on a private errand cannot therefore be said to have been using it as a motor vehicle plying for hire : A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 166 and *A. I. S. R. Parulekar—for Petitioner.

Mirza, J.—This is an application for revision of a conviction of the applicant under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act 8 of 1914. The applicant is the owner of a Ford bus which is licensed to ply for hire. He holds a general license under S. 6, Motor Vehicles Act, which entitles him to drive motor cars generally all over British India. In respect of the Ford bus he has in employment a driver of the name Pathare, who holds a license in form "B" entitling him to drive the bus as a vehicle "let or plying for hire". The applicant also holds a license in form "A" under R. 3 (1) of the rules regulating the use of motor vehicles let or plying for hire which entitled him originally to let or ply the bus for hire on the Ratnagiri-Kolhapur Road only. On 28th April 1920, the applicant was proceeding in the bus from Ratnagiri to Dapoli to interview the District Superintendent of Police who was encamped at Dapoli in order to obtain from him an extension of the permit contained in license form "A" for the bus to ply for hire throughout the Ratnagiri District. The applicant was driving the bus himself on this occasion. He was accompanied by the driver Pathare and two of his friends Messrs. Mandrekar and Rege who are both senior pleaders practising at Ratnagiri. The applicant received no fare from any of the three persons accompanying him in the journey. On these facts the City Magistrate, First Class, Ratnagiri, before whom the applicant was tried, held that the applicant had contravened the provision of R. 7 (1), Motor Vehicles Rules which requires that a motor vehicle (meaning a motor vehicle let or plying for hire) :

"shall not, in any circumstances, be driven by any person other than a driver, who shall carry with him and produce, whenever required by a police officer, a public driver's 'B' permit, signed by the District Superintendent of Police that he is a competent and careful driver, that he has a thorough knowledge of the rates for hire sanctioned, and that he is in all respects a fit person to be the driver of a motor vehicle to be let or plied for hire."

The learned Government Pleader contends that the use of the words "in any circumstances" in R. 7 (1) implies that once a motor car is licensed for being let or for plying for hire it can be driven only by a driver possessing a permit in form "B" whether as a matter of fact it was at the time let or was plying for hire or not.

In Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkirisami Thevan, A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 166, the Madras High Court has held that the act of plying for hire can only be done at the place and time that the hiring is effected. Similarly, in Sardul Singh v. Emperor (1) the Lahore High Court has held that the expression "to ply for hire" as used in the Punjab Motor Vehicles Plying for Hire Rules ordinarily means to exhibit a vehicle in such a way as to invite those who may desire to do so to hire it or to travel in it on payment of the usual fares, and also to offer its use on payment to any member of the public, thereby soliciting custom. The Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules are similar to the rules applicable in the present case. We see no reason to differ from the rulings of these two High Courts. It is clear from the evidence that the applicant was driving the bus on a private errand and cannot be said to have been using it as a motor vehicle meaning a motor vehicle let or plying for hire. We reverse the conviction and sentence and order that the fine if paid, be refunded to the applicant.

P. V. Kane—for Applicant.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—This is a revision application against an order of the First Class Magistrate, Kopergaon, convicting the applicant under S. 41 (i), Factories Act, 12 of 1911, as amended up to date, and sentencing him to pay fine of Rs. 20.

The applicant is the manager of a concern called Gurhal Ghar in which jaggery is manufactured from sugarcane. There is an engine in a separate walled room and outside it are machines called crushers for extraction of juice from sugarcane and the juice is then pumped through pipes to a shed in which it is stored in pans for boiling. All these buildings are in the same compound surrounded by a fence. Three men were employed on the engine, fourteen on the crushers and thirty-seven worked in the shed where the pans are. The building has been registered under the Factories Act and the prosecution arose owing to a complaint from the

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 432=10 Lah. 505.

Assistant Factory Inspector, who on visiting the premises found that the engine was not properly fenced.

The main contention put forward by Mr. Kane who appears for the applicant is that this Gurhal Ghar is not a factory as defined in the Factories Act, and that therefore, S. 18 which relates to the fencing of machinery does not apply to it. "Factory" is defined as follows in S. 2:

(9) "factory" means:

(a) any premises wherein, or within the precincts of which, on any one day in the year not less than twenty persons are simultaneously employed and steam, water or other mechanical power or electrical power is used in aid of any manufacturing process."

It is now argued that as only three persons were employed on the engine and fourteen on the crushers and the remaining thirty-seven in the shed in which the pans are, and as the engine shed and the latter shed are separate buildings, there were not as many as twenty persons simultaneously employed on the premises or within the precincts within the meaning of this definition.

The word "premises" is defined in Murray's Oxford Dictionary as "a house or building with its grounds or other appurtenances." According to the ordinary use of this expression when speaking of a concern like a factory "premises" will include all the buildings of the factory together with the compound in which they stand. "Precinct" is defined in the same dictionary as "The space enclosed by the walls or other boundaries of a particular place or building" and

"more vaguely, the region lying immediately around a place, without distinct reference to any enclosure, the environs."

It appears to us to be perfectly clear that according to the ordinary use of language all these persons, those employed on the engine, those employed on the crushers and those employed in the boiling shed must be said to be employed both "on the premises" and "within the precincts" thereof, and, if any authority in support of that proposition be required, it will be found in the case of Ramanadham v. Emperor (1).

A further point raised was that the manufacturing process in this case does not begin until the juice reaches the pans, and that the crushing of the sugar cane for which the engine is required is not part of the manufacturing process. It appears to us that there is no substance in this contention. It is to be noted that the purpose for which the persons on the premises are employed is not material. All that the definition requires is that a number of persons not less than twenty shall be simultaneously employed in the premises or within the precincts, and that mechanical power is used in aid of any manufacturing process. It appears to us to be absurd to say that the engine in this case is not used in aid of the process of manufacturing the jaggery.

Finally a point was raised that S. 48 of the Act provides that no prosecution under S. 41 shall be instituted except by or with the previous sanction of the Inspector, which is not shown to have been obtained in this case. This point was not taken at the trial nor has it been raised in the revision application made to this Court. We cannot be sure therefore that we have all the materials before us necessary for the consideration of this point. But we have been referred to a Government Resolution of 1st April 1924, by which the Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of Factories have been appointed to be Inspectors of Factories within the whole of the Bombay Presidency. The complaint in this case was made by an Assistant Inspector. There seems to be no reason therefore to suppose that there is any substance in this point either.

In our opinion there is no ground for this Court to interfere in revision. The application is dismissed and the rule discharged.

Criminal Ref. No. 132 of 1929, Decided on 30th January 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Belgaum.

Criminal P. C., S. 367 — Language of S. 367 is per-emptory and failure to comply with it vitiates order.

The language of S. 367 is peremptory on the point that the judgment shall contain point or points for determination, the decision thereon and reasons for the decision and consequently

if an appellate Court fails to comply with these requisitions, the irregularity amounts to an illegality and vitiates the order: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 512, Dist. [P 488 C 2, P 489 C 1]

H. B. Gumaste—for Complainant.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Belgaum recommending that an order passed by the District Magistrate of Belgaum, dismissing an appeal, should be set aside on the ground that the order is not in accordance with S. 367, Criminal P. C.

It appears that one Shanmukh and five other persons have been convicted by the Bench Court of Belgaum of offences punishable under Ss. 323 and 426, I. P. C. They appealed and the District Magistrate issued notices and heard both parties. Having done so he passed the following order :

"The lower Court's order contains a full statement of facts and there is nothing for me to describe. The lower Court's appreciation of evidence in the case appears to me to be correct. The appellants' pleaders' arguments were not convincing against the appellant's guilt.

I do not, therefore, see any reason to interfere in the lower Court's judgment. Appeal dismissed."

It is manifest and is not disputed that as the appeal was not summarily dismissed the District Magistrate was required to record a judgment, which judgment should have satisfied the requirements of S. 367. Numerous authorities have been quoted by the Sessions Judge in support of his view that failure to comply with these requirements is a material irregularity which vitiates the decision. The learned Government Pleader, who has opposed the reference, has attempted to distinguish these cases on the ground that the District Magistrate before passing his order made notes of the arguments of pleaders. He suggests that the points for determination in the case can be gathered from these notes of the arguments and that they may fairly be read together with the order as constituting when combined a proper judgment. We are unable to agree with this view. We have read the notes of the arguments and it appears to us that the District Magistrate has merely jotted down a few rough and disconnected notes of certain points which were pressed before him. It cannot be said that these notes contain even the points for determination in the case, much less the reasons for the decision arrived at by the District Magistrate. Our attention has been drawn to one case: Emperor v. Patilbuva (1), in which it was held that an irregularity in the mode of drawing up a judgment, that is to say, the particular irregularity which was noticed in that case, might be cured by S. 537. The whole of the judgment which was then under consideration does not appear to be contained in the report, but from those passages which have been quoted it would appear that it went much further to satisfy the requirements of S. 367, Criminal P. C., than the order with which we are concerned in the present case. We think it desirable to point out that the head-note in this case is misleading. The head-note is :

"Section 537, Criminal P. C., covers any irregularity in the mode in which a Magistrate has drawn up a judgment."

It is quite clear, however, that there is no such finding. Fawcett, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, merely held that the case before the Court was one in which there was some irregularity in the way in which the Magistrate had drawn up his judgment, and that the irregularity there present could legitimately be brought within the provisions of S. 537. In the present case the irregularity appears to us to be of a more serious nature. We think also that the referring letter of the Sessions Judge ought to weigh with us in the matter. He has stated in his letter that if, upon a perusal of the lower Court's judgment, he had been fully satisfied that no failure of justice had in fact occurred, he might not have troubled the High Court with this reference. In the circumstances we cannot say that the irregularity complained of in the present case is a mere technicality. We think we have no alternative but to set aside the order of the District Magistrate under reference and to direct that the appeal be reheard and judgment recorded in accordance with law.

Mirza, J.—I agree. The language of S. 367, Criminal P. C., is peremptory on the point that the judgment :
"shall contain the points or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision."

The order with which we are here concerned fails to comply with these requisitions. The irregularity amounts, in my opinion, to an illegality and vitiates the order.

The main test for deciding whether a person is a licensee of a property or a lessee is that of exclusive possession. If the effect of the agreement is to give exclusive possession to the holder, though subject to certain reservations then it is a lease; if the agreement is merely for the use of the property in a certain way and on certain terms while it remains in the possession and control of the owner it is a license: *Glenwood Lumber Co., v. Where it is clear from the terms of the agreement that the holder is put in exclusive possession of certain premises although the time for which the property was to remain with him is not expressly specified but there is a provision that he need not give vacant possession without one month's notice, this provision implies that the exclusive possession of the holder is to be for one month at least and the effect of the agreement is a lease in favour of the holder. Y. V. Bhandarkar—for Applicant.

Engineer and Crawford, Bayley & Co.
—for the Crown.

Mirza, J.—The applicant applies for revision of his conviction and sentence on a charge under S. 231, Bombay City Municipal Act.

The Bombay Municipality acquired in 1924 certain premises at Bapty Road for a public purpose which was the extension of the Municipal workshops. At the date of the acquisition 16 persons including the applicant were in occupation of the premises as tenants from the original owner and were using the premises as bullock and buffalo stables. The municipality did not proceed with the demolition of the stables but allowed the occupants to continue on the premises by leave and license. Later the municipality experienced a difficulty in collecting compensation from the occupants and on 10th March 1925, entered into an agreement with the applicant whereby the applicant was to pay to the municipality a monthly sum of Rs. 180 as compensation for the use and occupation by him as licensee of the said premises. During the continuance of the agreement, the licensee was to be at liberty to continue the occupancy of the remaining 15 occupants of the premises as licensee, to recover from them the amounts they had agreed to pay for their occupancy of the premises as licensees, and in case any of them vacated the premises to substitute for him any other occupant but on condition that such new occupant was to occupy the premises only as licensee and would vacate the same on being given 48 hours' notice. The agreement further provided that the applicant was to give vacant possession of the premises to the municipality on being given one month's notice.

It appears that the applicant is the owner of all the buffaloes that are now on the premises and is using one of the stalls on the premises as a place for garaging his motor car. On 2nd May 1929, the Municipal Commissioner on behalf of the municipality served a requisition on the applicant requiring him under S. 231, Bombay City Municipal Act, to drain the motor garage into the existing drain with all the necessary appliances and fittings. The requisition is dated 24th April 1929. The applicant having failed to comply with the requisition the present prosecution was launched against him.

In his statement before the learned Presidency Magistrate, Second Court, the applicant stated that he was a tenant of the Municipal Commissioner but was not a rent farmer. He admitted that in part of the stable he had kept buffaloes and that there was a garage where he had kept in his motor car. He further admitted that all the buffaloes in the stable belonged to him.

It has been urged before us by Mr. Bhandarkar on behalf of the applicant that the applicant is not an owner or occupier of the premises within the meaning of S. 231, Bombay City Municipal Act. In view of the applicant's statement before the Magistrate it is not open to Mr. Bhandarkar in our opinion to contend that the applicant is not the occupier of the motor garage in respect of which the requisition has been made. Mr. Bhandarkar has further contended that the requisition made by the municipality is in respect of the premises which are alleged to be in the applicant's occupation as a rent farmer and the applicant is not a rent farmer under the terms of the agreement but only a licensee. The terms of the agreement no doubt do not use the terms lease, demise, or rent. But to constitute a lease it is not essential that such terms should be used.

A lease is defined in S. 105, T. P. Act, as:

"... a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised, or of money, . . . to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferrer by the transferee, who accepts the transfer on such terms.

The transferrer is called the lessor, the transferee is called the lessee, the price is called, the premium, and the money, share, service or other thing to be so rendered is called the rent."

It is clear from the terms of the agreement that the applicant was put in exclusive possession of the premises although the time for which the property was to remain in the applicant's possession is not expressly specified. But there is a provision that he need not give vacant possession without a month's notice. That provision, in our opinion, implies that the exclusive possession or enjoyment of the property which the applicant was to have under the agreement was to be at least for a period of one month. Further, there is a provision in the agreement that a sum of Rs. 180 was to be paid every month in respect of the use and occupation of the premises by the applicant. The consideration here set out would, in our opinion, be the money rendered periodically within the terms of the definition in S. 105, T. P. Act.

In order to determine whether the relation subsisting between the municipality and the applicant is that of lessor and lessee as contended by the municipality or of licensor and licensee as contended by the applicant, regard must be had to the substance of the agreement subsisting between them. The test to be followed in such cases is laid down Halsbury in the article on "landlord and tenant" in Vol. 18 of the Laws of England, p. 337, para. 770, as follows:

"It is essential to the creation of a tenancy of a corporeal hereditament that the tenant should have the right to the exclusive possession of the premises. A grant under which the grantee takes only the right to use the premises without exclusive possession operates as a license, and not as a lease. In deciding whether a grant amounts to a lease, or is only a license, regard must be had to the substance of the agreement. If the effect of the instrument is to give the holder the exclusive right of occupation of the land, though subject to certain reservations, or to a restriction of the purposes for which it may be used, it is a lease: if the contract is merely for the use of the property in a certain way and on certain terms, while it remains in the possession and control of the owner, it is a license. To give exclusive possession there need not be express words to that effect; it is sufficient if the nature of the acts to be done by the grantee require that he should have exclusive possession."

The same principle is illustrated by the case of Glenwood Lumber Co. v. Phillips (1). At p. 408 Lord Davey in his judgment observes:

If the effect of the instrument is to give the holder an exclusive right of occupation of the land, though subject to certain reservations or to a restriction of the purposes for which it may be used, it is in law a demise of the land itself."

In the case of Indian Hotels Co. v. Phiroz (2). Fawcett, J., in his judgment at p. 89 in comparing the definition of a lease under S. 105, T. P. Act, and a license under S. 52, Easements Act, observes:

"Having regard to these definitions, there is no substantial difference between the Indian and the English Law on the subject. The words "right to enjoy" in S. 105, T. P. Act, when read with the rights of the lessee laid down in S. 105, of the same Act, clearly show that there should also be a right to exclusive possession to constitute a lease under the Transfer of Property Act. Therefore, I take it that the test of exclusive possession is the main one to be applied in deciding this case."

The agreement dated 10th March 1925 amounts, in our opinion, to a lease. The money paid under the agreement is rent. If the applicant is the sole tenant of these premises he would be the occupier within the meaning of S. 231 and therefore liable to comply with the requisition. If he has allowed other persons to occupy parts of the premises and recovers money or any other consideration from them in respect of such occupancy whether it be called rent or compensation for use and occupation, he would be a rent farmer. The agreement mentions in one of its preambles that the municipality has agreed to farm the premises to the applicant. That also indicates that the intention of the agreement was for the applicant to be the rent farmer in respect of these premises in relation to the then occupants of the premises. If the applicant is to be held to be the rent farmer in respect of these premises he would be deemed to be the "owner" according to the ruling in Emperor v. Aziz Gaffoor (3).

The conviction, in our opinion, is correct. The application is dismissed and the rule discharged.

Broomfield, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Broomfield, J.—This is a reference made by the District Magistrate, Kolaba, in a case in which one Ganpat Krishnaji has been convicted of an offence under S. 379, I. P. C., and has been bound over for six months under S. 562, Criminal P. C.

The facts are that the complainant owed a small sum of money to the accused, and the accused, in order to put pressure on him to pay the debt, drove off two bullocks belonging to the complainant, which were grazing, and tied them up in the verandah of his house. The accused pleaded guilty, but the District Magistrate is of opinion that on the facts found the conviction of the offence of theft is illegal, and he recommends that it should be quashed. In our opinion the District Magistrate is mistaken in his view of the law. It has been held in Queen-Empress v. Aga Muhammad Yusuf (1) and in Queen-Empress v. Sri Churn Chungi (2), the latter a Full Bench ruling, that

"A creditor by taking any moveable property of his debtor from the debtor's possession without his consent with the intention of coercing him to pay his debt commits the offence of theft as defined in S. 378, Penal Code."

The opinion of the trial Magistrate, therefore, that though the accused was guilty of what he calls a technical offence of theft he had no dishonest intention is not correct. We see no reason why we should differ from the statement of the law in the cases referred to.

The conviction is correct and as the accused has been dealt with under S. 562 we see no reason to interfere. The papers should be returned to the District Magistrate.

v.

Narain Das—Complainant—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1504 of 1929, Decided on 14th February 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Attock, D/- 11th May 1929.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 145, 146—Where petitioner under S. 145 is not proved to be in possession of house within next two months before preliminary order, action under S. 145 (6) cannot be taken—Opposite Party admittedly in possession at date of order—S. 146 is inapplicable.

N applied under S. 145 for an order restoring him to possession of a house from which he had been dispossessed by G, five days before the date of the petition. G replied that he had been in possession of the house for many years and that there was no such dispute as was likely to bring about a breach of peace. The Magistrate holding that the evidence of either party was untrustworthy held that it was impossible to decide on the evidence whether any or which of the parties was at the date of his preliminary order in possession of the house. He, however, took action under S. 146.

Held; that the portion of the order of the Magistrate where he stated that it was impossible to decide which party was in possession on the date of the preliminary order was wrong as admittedly G had been in possession since at least five days before the application by N. There was no necessity to decide as to who was in possession on the date of his order.

Held further: that it could have been competent for the Magistrate to take action under S. 146, had none of the parties been in possession at the date of the preliminary order if it could not be decided as to which of them was in possession at that date. But as G was in possession then S. 146 did not apply. The Magistrate could have also restored possession under S. 145 (6) to N if he could have held that he was in possession within two months next before the date of the preliminary order.

[P 492 C 2]

Bhawani Singh Puri—for Petitioners.
Kishan Dayal for Respondent.

Judgment.—One Narain Das applied under S. 145, Criminal P. C., for an order restoring him to possession of a house as he had been dispossessed by Gurdas and some others five days before the date of his petition. The respondents replied that they had been in possession of the house for many years and that there was no such dispute as likely to bring about a breach of the peace, particularly as the respondents had already been bound down under S. 107, Criminal P. C. at the instance of the petitioners. The Magistrate First Class held that the evidence of both parties was equally interested and untrustworthy and that he was not prepared to accept the evidence of either side. He therefore held that it was impossible to decide on this evidence whether any and which of the parties was at the date of his preliminary order in possession of the house. He was unable to hold that the petitioner had been dispossessed forcibly and wrongfully within two months before the date of his order. He, however, considered it proper to take action under S. 146, Criminal P. C., and ordered the attachment of the property until a competent Court determined the rights of the parties thereto or the person entitled to possession thereof. Against this order both sides have put in revision petitions in this Court.

That portion of the order of the Magistrate, First Class, is clearly wrong where he states that he is not prepared on the basis of the oral and contradictory evidence to decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of his preliminary order in possession of the house. Admittedly the respondents have been in possession of the house since at least five days before the petitioner presented his application. The respondents continued in possession and they were in possession at the date of the Magistrate's preliminary order. There was, therefore, no necessity to decide who was in possession on the date of the Magistrate's preliminary order for that was admitted. What the Magistrate meant to find was that he could not say on the evidence who was in possession within two months next before the date of his preliminary order.

In these circumstances it is obvious that S. 146 does not apply. Had none of the parties been in possession at the date of the Magistrate's preliminary order, or if it could not be decided as to which of them was in possession at that date, it would have been competent for the Magistrate to take action under S. 146. But as the respondents were in possession then, that section did not apply. Of course, if the Magistrate could have held that the petitioner was in possession within two months next before the date of his preliminary order, under S. 145 (6) he could have restored the possession to the petitioner. As he was unable to come to this finding and as the respondents were in possession on the date of his preliminary order the matter ended there.

I, therefore, dismiss Criminal Revision No 1845 of 1929, presented by the petitioner and, accepting Criminal Revision No. 1504 of 1929 presented by the respondents, I set aside the Magistrate's order of attachment. The respondents must remain in possession until dispossessed in due course of law.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order. — The Assistant Engineer, Kurnool, under the authority of the President, District Board, Kurnool, filed a complaint against the owner and driver respectively of Bus No. K. V. 62 alleging that they had committed an offence by using that bus on 14th October 1928 for carrying passengers at separate fares on the Chittoor—Kurnool road without the District Board's license, an offence coming within the purview of S. 166 (1), Madras Local Boards Act of 1920 and punishable under S. 207 of that Act. The complaint was presented to the Stationary

Sub-Magistrate, Kurnool. He recorded the complainant's sworn statement and, holding that the act complained of was not "plying a bus for hire" and that the contracts with the passengers had been entered into within the limits of the Kurnool Municipality and not within the limits of the jurisdiction of the District Board, decided that upon the allegations made, there had been no contravention of S. 166 (1), Local Boards Act. He therefore dismissed the complaint. A petition for revision was presented to the Sessions Court, Kurnool Division by the complainant against that order and the Sessions Judge set aside the order of the Sub-Magistrate and directed the District Magistrate to take the complaint on the file and make such further enquiry into it as was necessary under the law. Against that order the petitioners have presented this criminal revision petition.

According to the sworn statement of the Local Fund Assistant Engineer, on the date in question the bus was carrying passengers at "separate fares" from Kurnool to Nandyal and the owner of the bus had not obtained the license from the District Board required by S. 166 (1), Madras Local Boards Act. The facts seem to be that the passengers were picked up within the municipal limits of Kurnool and carried in the bus to Nandyal going over, in the course of the journey, one of the roads belonging to the District Board of Kurnool. For the purposes of the argument before us and in the Court below it was not suggested that any passengers were picked up by the petitioners at any place within the limits of the District Board.

The short point for consideration by us is whether this motor bus under the circumstances must obtain a license from the District Board of Kurnool. S. 166 (1), Madras Local Boards Act is as follows :

"No person shall, on any public road in a district, ply any motor vehicle for hire or use any such vehicle for carrying passengers or goods at separate fares or rates on such road, except on a license obtained from the President of the District Board."

The Stationary Sub-Magistrate held that the second part of Cl. (1), S. 166 namely, "use any such vehicle for carrying passengers or goods" must have the same interpretation placed upon it as that applicable to the first part, namely, "plying for hire," and that, as there had been no plying for hire within the limits of the District Board's area, no license was necessary and no offence had been committed. Before the learned Sessions Judge the petitioners relied on a decision reported in Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkiriswami Thevan (1). In that case Madhavan Nair and Curgenvan, JJ. held that a person who lets out his car for hire within a municipality need not obtain a license from a District Board, if the car travels beyond the municipal limits and traverses any of the District Board roads and that the "plying of a motor vehicle for hire" means the act of waiting for or soliciting custom, and therefore, so soon as any person has hired it, the act of plying for hire is complete and that it cannot be said that a vehicle plies for hire on a public road merely because it is made use of a hired vehicle on that road and that a vehicle cannot be said to ply for hire on a road unless the actual hiring takes place on that road. The facts are set out on p. 215 as follows:

"The case was tried as a summons case and he was asked to show cause why he should not be convicted upon a complaint that he had plied his motor car for hire from Mayavaram to Tranquebar on the 27th, 28th and 29th March 1925 without obtaining a license."

Although, however, the terms of the complaint were not supported by the prosecution evidence, a defence witness was examined who deposed that the accused was in the habit of letting out his car for hire to vakils, mirasdars and others wishing to engage a car for a trip from Mayavaram. It may be taken, therefore, that the accused in this case admitted hiring out his car for journeys from Mayavaram. In the other case (C. C. 200) the question put to the accused was in similar terms and the evidence was in consonance with it. In both the cases only the first portion of S. 166 (1) would apply, because admittedly there is no proof that the vehicles were used for carrying passengers or goods at separate fares or rates. The statement of the facts, in our view, makes this clearly distinguishable from that because according to the sworn statement of the Local Fund Assistant Engineer the passengers in this case were carried at separate fares whereas in Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkiriswami Thevan (1) the whole bus had been engaged for the trip from Mayavaram. Therefore the only thing that that Bench had to consider was the first part of S. 166 (1) and not the latter part of it and the argument on behalf of the Board in that case was that a vehicle plies for hire on a public road if it is made use of as a hired vehicle on that road, so that it is not a necessary condition that the actual hiring should take place upon that road. That argument, however, did not find favour with that Bench and we think quite rightly. We are in entire agreement with the decision in that case. But here the facts are different. Before us on behalf of the petitioners it is argued that the latter words of Cl. (1) of the section namely, "use any such vehicle for carrying passengers at separate fares" on a District Board road mean plying for hire on the District Board road. If this is so, then the latter part of the clause is redundant. We cannot accept that argument. We think that that section is intended to make persons who use the road of a District Board for making money by using motor vehicles upon it pay for that privilege. The first part is intended to make persons who ply a motor vehicle for hire within the limits of the District Board pay for it by taking out a license and the latter part of it is, in our view intended to make persons who pick up passengers at separate fares outside the area of the District Board and who carry those passengers over a road of the District Board also take out a license. What is meant by "separate fares" is individual fares as distinguished from a fixed amount for the whole vehicle and it was as we read the facts in the Local Fund Overseer, Mayavaram v. Pakkiriswami Thevan (1) the latter case that was there being considered.

We are referred to several English cases but except where the definitions are given of what is "plying for hire" they do not assist us because we are here dealing with the words of a section which in our view, clearly express the intention of the legislature. Under these circumstances, we are satisfied that the order of the Sessions

Judge was quite proper and we agree with the reasons he has given for that order. This criminal revision case is, therefore dismissed. For the reasons given above, criminal revision case 337 of 1929 is also dismissed.

Order.—This is a petition against the conviction of the petitioner for criminal misappropriation. It was charged and found against the petitioner that he in his capacity as Village Munsiff misappropriated for himself a sum of Rs. 10 collected by him from the complainant in the case. The conviction was confirmed on appeal and the petitioner asks me to interfere in revision.

It is necessary to go shortly into the facts alleged. The petitioner admits having passed to the complainant a receipt for Rs. 10, Ex. A-1, on 12th January 1928. That receipt is on a sheet of paper and appears between two other receipts, Ex. A, for Rs. 10 dated 3rd January 1928, and Ex. A-2, for Rs. 20 on 5th February 1928. Exs. A-1 and A-2 are on a piece of paper which has been passed to the sheet on which A appears. The complainant's case was that he paid all three sums. It is admitted by the petitioner that no credit has been given in his accounts to the complainant for the payment on 12th January 1928. His explanation is that no payment was made on that date, but that he made the entry as the complainant said to him that he had lost the former sheet with the receipt given on 3rd January 1928, and so he has given a duplicate. In explanation of the difference of date the petitioner's case was that as the complainant did not remember the date he himself only inserted the year and the month and that the figure 12 is not his. The complainant examined in the witness box stated that the payment of Rs. 10 on 12th January 1928, was entered on the same sheet as the receipt Ex. A, and that a new sheet was begun with the receipt Ex. 42 on 5th February 1928. That is quite obviously not correct. On the other hand, the petitioner has not explained how if the sheet containing A was not with him when he entered A-1, he entered the word "ditto" in Cols. 2 and 4, and why the entry A-1 is not stated therein to be a duplicate receipt. I do not further go into these points as I am of opinion that the appeal will have to be re-heard by the lower Court and I do not wish to hamper its decision.

I consider that the appeal must be re-heard because the lower Court's judgment is vitiated by a confusion of ideas and by a too cursory dismissal of the defence evidence. The defence case was that the complaint which the complainant made to the Tahsildar really was not that he had paid Rs. 10 to the petitioner which has not been credited but that he had paid Rs. 5 in excess of what was due. The petitioner admitted that he had collected a few rupees in excess from the complainant but that excess collection was duly credited and therefore, was not misappropriated. Such small excess collections are very common and almost inevitable during the kist collection season, and so long as they are duly credited no real harm is done. But the lower appellate Court fixes on the admission of excess collection as an admission that the petitioner had dishonestly collected that amount and as a proof, therefore, of embezzle.

ment. That is obviously a wrong view altogether, since the accounts show the excess collection and, therefore, there was nothing dishonest about it. In another part of its judgment the lower appellate Court seems to think that there was not, as a fact any excess collection. I do not follow its argument here. It admits that the actual amount due from the complainant was Rs. 56-3-10. The trial Court puts at Rs. 55, and that the complainant paid Rs. 30 to the petitioner, and then Rs. 29-11-9 on a distraint. So obviously there was excess collection. The Sessions Judge thinks D. W. No. 8 in setting out the story of this excess collection "gives away the appellant completely," and in another passage he speaks of the defence story as being that complainant suspected the petitioner of having misappropriated Rs. 5; but the defence story was that the complainant suspected the petitioner of having collected Rs. 5 in excess. As a matter of fact this excess collection has no real relevancy to the case of the embezzlement of Rs. 10 and the fact that a few rupees were collected in excess and credited in the petitioner's account is no evidence whatever that he collected and misappropriated Rs. 10.

The Sessions Judge again too cursorily dismissed the defence evidence. The strong part of the defence case was the evidence of the Tahsildar and his Revenue Inspector and duffadar that on 11th February 1928 the complainant had admitted to them that his only complaint against the petitioner was the matter of the excess collection and not any matter of misappropriation. It happened that the complainant in this case was sent on 20th March 1928, by the Magistrate to the Tahsildar (as Taluk Magistrate) for enquiry under S. 202, Criminal P. C. He examined the karnam who supported the complainant and returned the complaint with his opinion (Ex. G) that the petitioner was criminally responsible. When it was returned again with a direction to examine the petitioner himself the Taluk Magistrate refused to do so quoting a recent Full Bench decision of this Court in Appa Rao Mudaliar v. Janki Ammal (1). Now in neither report by him did the Tahsildar mention that at a conversation a few days earlier the complainant had admitted that he had no complaint to make about the misappropriation; nor did he examine the Revenue Inspector and duffadar about this conversation. This is undoubtedly a remarkable circumstance to which due weight has to be given. The Tahsildar's explanation is that at that stage he should not import facts within his personal knowledge, and thought he had no jurisdiction to examine the Revenue Inspector and duffadar. He was not pressed further and asked what provision of law prevented him from examining them or importing his own personal knowledge. It is suggested before me that he might have thought that the Full Bench decision prevented him from going into the accused's side of the case. If it were so his view was clearly mistaken. There is nothing in the decision which prohibits a person to whom a complaint is sent for enquiry under S. 202 from importing his own personal knowledge into it or examining witnesses whom he knows to be able to throw light on the matter. But the lower appellate Court has jumped, rather hastily, to my mind, to the conclusion that the Tahsildar's explanation is dishonest, and that the story of the admission of the complainant is, therefore, untrue. I think this part of the case requires a more balanced consideration than has been given to it especially since the lower Court proceeds to infer from the Tahsildar's dishonesty that neither the Revenue Inspector nor the duffadar can be speaking the truth. I regard the lower appellate Court's judgment as vitiated by these unsatisfactory features which have prevented a proper decision of the appeal. I consider that the appeal ought to be re-heard because the alleged offence is not a trivial one, and if really committed by the petitioner he cannot be allowed to go unpunished. I, therefore, reverse the decision of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal for being re-heard. The petitioner will remain on bail pending the re-hearing.

Criminal Revn. No. 115 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 97 of 1928. Decided on 29th July 1929, from judgment of Joint Magistrate, Kumbakonam, in Criminal Appeal No. 49 of 1928.

Motor Vehicles Act, S. 4 (a)—Police officer stopping vehicle need not be one engaged in regulating traffic.

Part (a) of the section requires that a driver should stop in three sets of circumstances, firstly that traffic may be regulated, secondly that a name and address may be obtained with a view to prosecution, and thirdly for the purpose of enforcing any of the provisions of the Act, such as checking the license and inspecting a bus where it is suspected to be overloaded and it is not necessary that the police officer stopping the vehicle should be engaged in regulating traffic. [P 497 C 2]

Watrap S. Subramania Ayyar—for Petitioner.

K. Venkatraghavachari for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—These proceedings under the Motor Vehicles Act were instituted against the petitioner on a report by Head Constable No. 1346 to the Sub-Inspector of Kumbakonam. In the charge framed against him it was alleged that he drove bus No. 333 in Kaluthai Tope Road, Kumbakonam, and "instead of stopping his bus on seeing bus No. 416, which came in the opposite direction, and without caring for the regulation under which C. P. I. (the Circle Inspector) asked him to stop, drove very fast."

There are two separate actions imputed in this charge, the first being that the accused failed to stop his bus on seeing bus No. 416. I understand it to be the rule that, when two motor buses are about to pass each other, it is the duty of one of them to stop, presumably in the interests of safety. It has been admitted, however, by the prosecution in this case that, on the occasion in question, it was the duty of the driver of the other bus 416 to stop his vehicle and accordingly the petitioner was found not guilty of failing to observe this rule.

There remains the charge that he failed to stop when the Circle Inspector asked him to do so. It has been contended on behalf of the petitioner that, under S. 4, Motor Vehicles Act, a driver can only be stopped by a police officer who is engaged in regulating traffic. This, I think, is so clearly against the language of the section as not to merit further discussion. Part (a) of the section requires that a driver should stop in three sets of circumstances, firstly, that traffic may be regulated, secondly that a name and address may be obtained with a view to a prosecution, and thirdly, for the purpose of enforcing any of the provisions of the Act. The allegation by the prosecution is that the bus was overloaded and that the Inspector wished to inspect it and to check the license. These, I think, were reasons for stopping it coming under the third and last category above the enforcement of the Act.

There remains the question of fact whether, before the petitioner's bus passed the bus in which the Inspector was seated, he made a sign to the petitioner to stop which the petitioner saw and disregarded. I should in ordinary circumstances have accepted the evidence of the two police witnesses, were there not considerable difficulty in the way of such a course. The report of the Head Constable, which certainly ought to contain the elements of the offence charged is, as I read it, that the petitioner's bus ought to have stopped when passing the other bus and that it not only failed to do so but did not stop in spite of the order of the Circle Inspector. I am quite unable to extract from this report the definite statement that, irrespective of the rule requiring the stopping of the bus upon meeting the other bus, the Circle Inspector signalled to the petitioner to stop before the passing took place. This is also the impression which I get from the examination-in-chief of both the Head Constable and the Circle Inspector. The Head Constable says :

"Bus Tan No. 333 driven by the accused passed and it was not stopped even when I and the Inspector asked him to do so."

In chief examination the Inspector says "It did not stop when it passed my bus" and it was only elicited from him in cross-examination that hands were put up to stop the bus. The driver and the conductor of bus No. 416 were examined as D. Ws. 1 and 2 and one was unable to state whether, before the accused passed bus No. 416, the Inspec-

ment. That is obviously a wrong view altogether, since the accounts show the excess collection and, therefore, there was nothing dishonest about it. In another part of its judgment the lower appellate Court seems to think that there was not, as a fact any excess collection. I do not follow its argument here. It admits that the actual amount due from the complainant was Rs. 56-3-10. The trial Court puts at Rs. 55, and that the complainant paid Rs. 30 to the petitioner, and then Rs. 29-11-9 on a distraint. So obviously there was excess collection. The Sessions Judge thinks D. W. No. 8 in setting out the story of this excess collection "gives away the appellant completely," and in another passage he speaks of the defence story as being that complainant suspected the petitioner of having misappropriated Rs. 5; but the defence story was that the complainant suspected the petitioner of having collected Rs. 5 in excess. As a matter of fact this excess collection has no real relevancy to the case of the embezzlement of Rs. 10 and the fact that a few rupees were collected in excess and credited in the petitioner's account is no evidence whatever that he collected and misappropriated Rs. 10.

The Sessions Judge again too cursorily dismissed the defence evidence. The strong part of the defence case was the evidence of the Tahsildar and his Revenue Inspector and duffadar that on 11th February 1928 the complainant had admitted to them that his only complaint against the petitioner was the matter of the excess collection and not any matter of misappropriation. Criminal Revn. No. 115 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 97 of 1928, Decided on 29th July 1929, from judgment of Joint Magistrate, Kumbakonam, in Criminal Appeal No. 49 of 1928.

Motor Vehicles Act, S. 4 (a) — Police officer stopping vehicle need not be one engaged in regulating traffic.

Part (a) of the section requires that a driver should stop in three sets of circumstances, firstly that traffic may be regulated, secondly that a name and address may be obtained with a view to prosecution, and thirdly for the purpose of enforcing any of the provisions of the Act, such as checking the license and inspecting a bus where it is suspected to be overloaded and it is not necessary that the police officer stopping the vehicle should be engaged in regulating traffic. [P 497 C 2]

Watrap S. Subramania Ayyar—for Petitioner.

K. Venkatraghavachari for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—These proceedings under the Motor Vehicles Act were instituted against the petitioner on a report by Head Constable No. 1346 to the Sub-Inspector of Kumbakonam. In the charge framed against him it was alleged that he drove bus No. 333 in Kaluthai Tope Road, Kumbakonam, and "instead of stopping his bus on seeing bus No. 416, which came in the opposite direction, and without caring for the regulation under which C. P. I. (the Circle Inspector) asked him to stop, drove very fast."

There are two separate actions imputed in this charge, the first being that the accused failed to stop his bus on seeing bus No. 416. I understand it to be the rule that, when two motor buses are about to pass each other, it is the duty of one of them to stop, presumably in the interests of safety. It has been admitted, however, by the prosecution in this case that, on the occasion in question, it was the duty of the driver of the other bus 416 to stop his vehicle and accordingly the petitioner was found not guilty of failing to observe this rule.

There remains the charge that he failed to stop when the Circle Inspector asked him to do so. It has been contended on behalf of the petitioner that, under S. 4, Motor Vehicles Act, a driver can only be stopped by a police officer who is engaged in regulating traffic. This, I think, is so clearly against the language of the section as not to merit further discussion. Part (a) of the section requires that a driver should stop in three sets of circumstances, firstly, that traffic may be regulated, secondly that a name and address may be obtained with a view to a prosecution, and thirdly, for the purpose of enforcing any of the provisions of the Act. The allegation by the prosecution is that the bus was overloaded and that the Inspector wished to inspect it and to check the license. These, I think, were reasons for stopping it coming under the third and last category above the enforcement of the Act.

There remains the question of fact whether, before the petitioner's bus passed the bus in which the Inspector was seated, he made a sign to the petitioner to stop which the petitioner saw and disregarded. I should in ordinary circumstances have accepted the evidence of the two police witnesses, were there not considerable difficulty in the way of such a course. The report of the Head Constable, which certainly ought to contain the elements of the offence charged is, as I read it, that the petitioner's bus ought to have stopped when passing the other bus and that it not only failed to do so but did not stop in spite of the order of the Circle Inspector. I am quite unable to extract from this report the definite statement that, irrespective of the rule requiring the stopping of the bus upon meeting the other bus, the Circle Inspector signalled to the petitioner to stop before the passing took place. This is also the impression which I get from the examination-in-chief of both the Head Constable and the Circle Inspector. The Head Constable says :

"Bus Tan No. 333 driven by the accused passed and it was not stopped even when I and the Inspector asked him to do so."

In chief examination the Inspector says "It did not stop when it passed my bus" and it was only elicited from him in cross-examination that hands were put up to stop the bus. The driver and the conductor of bus No. 416 were examined as D. Ws. 1 and 2 and one was unable to state whether, before the accused passed bus No. 416, the Inspector raised his hand, whereas the other denied that such an action took place. There is no doubt that, after the petitioner had driven his bus by, the police officers called out to him to stop and he eventually stopped. But inasmuch as the conviction is based on the finding that the petitioner received and disregarded the signal to stop before passing the other bus I am unable to agree that the evidence supports it.

I allow the petition, set aside the conviction and direct that the petitioner be acquitted and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

BEASLEY, C. J., AND PANDALAI, J.
Gunduthalayan — Accused — Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 432 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. No. 733 of 1929, Decided on 2nd November 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Salem, in Criminal Case No. 18 of 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 302 — High Court's power to enhance sentence defined.

The High Court should not enhance the sentence unless it is satisfied that the sentence of death was the only possible sentence which could have been passed by the Sessions Judge: A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 268, Rel. on. [P 499 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 423—Appeal to High Court—It is desirable before sending notice of enhancement of sentence, that record of case is sent for.

Although it is quite legal for High Court to issue notice of enhancement at the time of admitting an appeal, when an appeal comes up for admission by the appellate Court, it would be desirable if before causing a notice to show cause against enhancement of sentence to be sent, the records of the case were sent for.

N. S. Mani—for Appellant.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Beasley, C. J.—There were two charges against accused in the Sessions Court of Salem, one of murder under S. 302, I. P. C. and the other of causing hurt with a dangerous weapon under S. 324, I. P. C. He was convicted of both the offences and was given a sentence of transportation for life in respect of the charge of murder and three months' rigorous imprisonment in respect of the other charge.

When the appeal came up for admission by the High Court the learned Judge who had to consider it admitted the appeal as of course is the invariable custom in cases of murder appeals, and at the same time ordered notice to issue to the accused to show cause why the sentence of transportation for life awarded to him should not be enhanced; so that we have here his appeal against his conviction and also his appearance on notice to show cause why the sentence passed on him should not be enhanced.

The facts of the case can be stated quite briefly and they are that in the village of Pavalathampatti there was the usual festival in connexion with the Pongal and the procession of bulls in front of the temple and the custom, according to the evidence, is that the first honours should go to certain persons. In this case, P. W. 10, was entitled to the first honours, according to the evidence being so entitled on the hereditary principle. But the accused who is a distant cousin questioned P. W. 10's right to enjoy the first honours; there was a dispute about it and the Goundan headman thought that it would be better to adjourn the bull play for two days in order that the matter might be settled. Then (there is a conflict about this), the accused is said by the majority of the prosecution witnesses to have objected to any adjournment of the play saying that he was entitled to the honours; and there is evidence that the deceased man also objected to the adjournment saying that the matter might be decided on the spot, that the deceased remonstrated with the accused for interfering with the judgment of the headman and that the result was a sort of a challenge to him, whereupon the accused took out his knife and stabbed him on his left nipple inflicting a very serious injury from which he died. At this P. W. 3 ran forward to interfere and he was also stabbed by the accused and this forms the subject of the other charge against the accused, namely, causing hurt with a dangerous weapon. The dying man was taken to the Salem Hospital. In the meantime his father, P. W. 6, gave a report to the Village Munsiff in which the accused was charged with the offences. The deceased also made a dying declaration, Ex. C, to the Stationary Sub-Magistrate in which he sets out the dispute with regard to the honours and states that it was the accused who stabbed him. He died on the 17th, the date of the occurrence being the 15th. Although in his defence the accused denies that he ever stabbed the deceased and says that the crime was foisted on him, the evidence is quite clear and abundantly proves that it was the accused and none other who stabbed the deceased and clearly justifies his conviction of the offence of murder and Mr. Mani who appears on his behalf does not dispute the justice of his conviction. He, however, is concerned with the question of sentence and argues that under all the circumstances the sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge is the correct one and the learned Sessions Judge has properly exercised his discretion in awarding the lesser sentence. What the learned Sessions Judge says about it is contained in para 6 of his judgment. He therein states

"As regards the punishment to be awarded, this appears to be an offence committed without premeditation. Some evidence has been adduced for the prosecution that there was ill feeling between the accused and the deceased on account of a woman called Thailammal, who had been allowing the accused her favours, and whom the accused suspected of becoming intimate with the deceased. I do not attach much weight to this evidence, and I do not think that any such enmity was the cause of the stabbing. I find, therefore, that the offence was committed without premeditation and on one of these unfortunate momentary impulses which seem to be so common amongst the inhabitants of this district. I consider, therefore, that the accused, who is a young man of 24, may be shown mercy; and the sentence of the Court is that he be sentenced to transportation for life upon the first count under S. 302, I. P. C."

Those are the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge and we think the proper test to be applied to these cases for enhancement of sentence is whether the only sentence which could have been passed on the evidence was the sentence of death. In a case before a Bench of the Bombay High Court, Emperor v. Mangal (1), Sir Norman Macleod, C. J. says this:

"There are many murder cases which come on appeal to this Court in which it has been evident that the Sessions Judges were too lenient and had exercised the discretion which they are given by law too much in favour of the accused. But, as I have already stated, we do not like to interfere except when we think that the sentence of death is the only possible sentence to be inflicted. In this case, although we think that the Sessions Judge ought to have sentenced the accused to death, we are not disposed to proceed with the notice to enhance the sentence."

We are of the opinion that the reasons stated by Sir Norman Macleod, C. J. for not interfering with the discretion of the Sessions Judge are sound, namely, that the High Court should not enhance the sentence unless it is satisfied that the sentence of death was the only possible sentence which could have been passed by the learned Sessions Judge. In this case, although we think that the sentence that should have been passed upon the accused was one of death, we cannot say that it was the only possible sentence which could have been passed.

Under those circumstances we are not disposed to interfere with the punishment awarded by the learned Sessions Judge.

At the same time we are quite satisfied that the accused was properly convicted of the offence of murder and of causing hurt with a dangerous weapon and his appeal against his conviction must be dismissed.

Another matter to which our attention was directed by Mr. Mani was that the learned Judge who admitted the appeal ought not, at the time of admitting the appeal, to have caused notice to issue for enhancement of sentence and that the proper procedure is for the Criminal Bench itself on hearing an appeal, if satisfied that there should be an enhancement of the sentence, to issue notice to show cause against enhancement and he has referred us to the case in Emperor v. Mangal (1), to which we have already referred. But in that case the Bench of the Bombay High Court, whilst holding that this procedure adopted was quite legal, expressed the opinion that it was undesirable. We agree that the procedure is not illegal and it is one which has been very frequently adopted in this Court. At the same time we wish to say that we think that when an appeal comes up for admission by the appellate Court it would be desirable in future if, before causing a notice to show cause against enhancement of sentence to be sent, the records of the case were sent for. We think that would be more regular than merely reading the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and issuing notice as was done in this case though no doubt sufficient of the facts appear in that judgment.

JACKSON, J.

Public Prosecutor—Appellant.

v.

Munusami Mudali—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 329 of 1929, Decided on 6th September 1929, from acquittal order of Sess. Judge, North Arcot, in Criminal Appeal No. 40 of 1928.

Madras Abkari Act (1 of 1886), S. 30—Officer has no power to arrest though armed with search warrant.

Though an officer armed with his own report can arrest a person under S. 31 an officer armed with a search warrant from the Collector under S. 30 is not authorized under that or any other section to arrest. [P 500 C 1]

S. Venkatachala Sastri—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an acquittal. Accused was acquitted for an offence under S. 224, I. P. C., because his arrest in his house by a searching abkari officer was held to be illegal.

The point taken by the learned Public Prosecutor is that under S. 30, Act 1 of 1886, the Collector may issue a warrant authorizing a search, and under S. 31 an abkari or police officer of a certain rank after recording reasons may search. The officer in the latter case under S. 31 may, if necessary, arrest, but, though the person to whom a warrant is given, may be an officer of the same rank, he is not authorized under S. 30 or any other section to arrest. It is anomalous that an officer armed with nothing more than his own report can arrest, and an officer armed with a regular search warrant cannot arrest.

I fully see the anomaly, but I am unable to read the Act so as to avoid it. The Act seems to be badly drafted.

In these circumstances, the acquittal must stand. The appeal is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 755 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 684 of 1929, Decided on 21st November 1929, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Tanjore, D/- 26th August 1929.

* Criminal P. C., Ss. 251 to 259—Accused leading evidence of good character by way of defence—Prosecution cannot as of right lead rebutting evidence—If essential to just decision, Magistrate may allow such rebutting evidence but prosecution cannot insist upon his doing so.

In a warrant case tried under Chap. 21, when the accused leads evidence of good character by way of defence the prosecution cannot as a matter of right claim to lead rebutting evidence for the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the prosecution no such privilege. If the Magistrate in his discretion thinks such evidence essential to the just decision of the case he may summon it, but the prosecution cannot insist upon his doing so. [P 500 C 2]

A. Srirangachariar for V. Rathnam—for Petitioner.

Parakat Govinda Menon—for the Crown.

Order.—The question raised in this petition is whether in a warrant case tried under Chap. 21, Criminal P. C., when the accused leads evidence of good character by way of defence, the prosecution may as a matter of right claim to lead rebutting evidence. The learned Magistrate is right in holding that the Criminal Procedure Code gives the prosecution no such privilege. If the Magistrate in his discretion thinks such evidence essential to the just decision of the case he may summon it, but the prosecution cannot insist upon his doing so.

The reason for this rule is probably that it is only in rare cases that general evidence of good character is of much avail; especially as till the contrary is proved an accused person is always presumed to be of good character. Therefore, to make character a substantial issue in an ordinary case would be waste of time. Anyhow the law of procedure is clear, and there is no ground for this petition. The petition is dismissed.

H. S. Gour—for Appellant.

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Judgment.—In Civil Suit No. 266 of 1924 on the file of the Sub-Judge No. 2, Yeotmal, Udobhan son of Madhoji sued Mt. Tulja wife of Narayan, and Nenuram son of Jogidas Marwari, on a contract alleged to have been entered into with the plaintiff by defendant 1 for the sale of her two fields Survey Nos. 9 and 42 of mouza Kotamba. These fields were said to be inherited by the woman on the death of her mother Mt. Mukti. She was to sell for Rs. 1,100 and was alleged to have executed a souda-chitti on 24th February 1924, having received Rs. 1,000, and agreeing to execute the sale deed within a month. She failed to do so. She was said to have executed a bogus sale-deed in defendant 2's favour on 12th April 1924, of the same fields. The plaintiff sued for specific performance of the contract of sale on payment of Rs. 100, the balance of the consideration.

For defendant 1 it was contended that on the death of her father Zingu, who owned the fields Survey Nos. 42 and 9, about 27 years ago his widows Deoki and Mukti enjoyed this land till their death. Deoki sold Survey No. 42 to Narayan and Tukaram 18 years ago and Mukti, i. e., defendant 1's mother, sold Survey No. 9 to Bhagoo Bhamti about 25 years ago. Defendant 1 was the sole heir of her father Zingu on the death of his widows and defendant 2 fraudulently got a sale deed from her on 12th April 1924, without giving her any writing about the agreement to give her Survey No. 9. One Punamchand who attested that sale deed undertook to fight out a litigation with defendant 2 and to give Survey No. 9 to defendant 1 and in order to do so he obtained thumb marks of defendant on blank papers. It was denied that defendant 1 ever entered into any contract of sale of the fields with the plaintiff or executed the souda-chitti, dated 24th February 1924 or received any consideration.

For defendant 2 it was denied that defendant 1 executed the souda-chitti. It was said to be antedated, bogus, fraudulent and fabricated after the sale-deed to defendant 2 to defraud him. Punamchand was said to have created it in the name of the plaintiff, his servant having himself attested defendant 2's sale deed. Defendant 2 further contended that he was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the alleged contract of sale in plaintiff's favour and that as such the contract could not be enforced as against him.

The suit was tried on the following issues:

"1 (a) Did defendant 1 agree to sell the fields in suit to plaintiff for valid consideration as per plaint?

(b) If so, did defendant 2 know of it at the date of his sale-deed?

(c) Is the transaction under the souda patrak dated 24th February 1924, a real genuine one?

"2 (a) Is the souda chitti dated 24th February 1924, antedated, bogus, fraudulent and fabricated to defraud defendant 2 as alleged?

(b) Is it obtained by one Punamchand under misrepresentation and fraud and under the circumstances alleged by defendant 1, in the plaintiff's name as alleged?

(c) Is the agreement under the souda chitti in suit with plaintiff for an inadequate consideration as alleged?

"3 (a) Is defendant 2 a bona fide purchaser of the property from defendant 1 without notice of the alleged agreement of sale with plaintiff?

(b) If so, can the plaintiff's agreement of sale be enforced by superseding defendant 2's sale-deed in suit?

"4. Is the plaintiff's claim not maintainable for not including the relief of possession as alleged?

"5. Should the agreement of sale in suit be specifically enforced?

"6. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?"

The Judge in his judgment, referring to the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, writes:

"It clearly reveals the fraudulent nature of the transaction embodied in the souda-patrak. It exposes Punamchand Marwari completely, though he had taken all care to screen himself in order to finance and fight out the litigation as a third uninterested party. This he obviously did as he had attested the sale-deed in favour of defendant 2. I have carefully considered the evidence adduced to prove that the date 25th February 1924, of the death of Mukti mother of Tulja, in the register of births and deaths for Kotumba maintained at the Police Station, Babulgaon, was false and fabricated later on."

The Judge found that the fields were worth Rs. 5000 to Rs. 6000 and that the consideration of the agreement of sale was grossly inadequate. The entry of 25th February 1924, was genuine. He found on issue 1 (a) and (c) in the negative and the whole of issue 2 in the affirmative. Dealing with issue 1 (b) and issue 3 (a) and (b) the Judge found that defendant 2 was the purchaser of the fields from Tulja for value, and further that he had no notice of the alleged agreement to sell in the plaintiff's favour, and that the agreement of sale could not be specifically enforced. The plaintiff's claim was dismissed with costs. This judgment was dated 30th November 1925.

The Judge on 1st December 1925, suo motu took proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for offences under Ss. 463, 467, 471, 191 and 192 and 196, I. P. C., in respect of the souda-chitti dated 24th February 1924, filed by Udebhan, the plaintiff in Civil Suit No. 266 of 1924. Notices were issued to Udebhan, Laxman, Bahiru, Bholchand and Punamchand. Those proceedings resulted in an order dated 22nd July 1926, the Sub-Judge finding that the non-applicants committed the offences mentioned above, namely, under S. 109 read with Ss. 467 and 471, and under S. 193 read with S. 191, I. P. C., and that the non-applicant Udebhan had also committed an offence under S. 423. The Judge held that Punamchand had brought into existence a false souda chitti, and ordered the complaint against the four persons to be tried.

Punamchand, Laxman, Bahiru and Udebhan came to this Court in Civil Revisions Nos. 182-B to 185-B of 1926 against the order of the District Judge, Amraoti, who rejected an application made to him against the complaint laid. The four civil revisions were rejected here. Bholchand had died and, therefore, did not come to this Court.

The criminal case was committed to the Court of Sessions. Laxman, a pleader's clerk, was given a pardon and Udebhan, Bahiru and Punamchand were sent to stand their trial before the Court of Sessions. The trial resulted in the conviction of Udebhan and Bahiru under S. 467, I. P. C., they being given three months' rigorous imprisonment each, and in the conviction of Punamchand under the same section, he being sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years and to pay a fine of Rs. 4,000 or in default to further rigorous imprisonment for one year. Against that conviction the present appeal has been filed.

Before entering into the legal objection raised to the appellant's conviction I will deal with the arguments advanced on the merits of the case. Much time was spent to establish the unreliability of the entries in the Kotwar's book and the police station register as regards the date of the death of Mukti, mother of Mt. Tulja. But it is unnecessary to go into this in any detail, for I agree with the opinion expressed by the trial Court in para 10 of its judgment that it would be unsafe to rely upon the entries in Exs. P-8 and P-14. And the recital in Ex. P-17 tends to show that Mt. Mukti died on 25th February 1924. But even if that has not been established, and the woman died on 22nd February, we have the approver's story that the souda chitti was not executed until the month of May 1924. The conviction really depends on the approver's statement and its corroboration in material particulars. Much of his story is admitted by the defence. Tulja seems now to have been got at, but in the civil suit it is clear that she admitted that she gave a blank paper to Punamchand with the thumb-impression on it, being told that the paper would be used to write the plaint on which the suit was intended to be brought. She denied then executing the souda-chitti in favour of Udebhan and said it was false and fraudulent. In her present statement she also states, though siding with the present appellant Punamchand, that he took her thumb-mark on four blank papers, and denies that she executed the souda-chitti. It seems to me that the story of the approver as regards the blank paper with her thumb-impression on it has been sufficiently corroborated.

There are other circumstances in the case which leave little doubt as to Punamchand's guilt. His story is that he had a ten annas eight pies share in the sale taken in the name of Nenuram, Nenuram and Pannalal owing the balance, and he has called evidence to show that this was the case, and that entries showing this transaction were entered in the books of Hiralal. This is denied by Nenuram, and Panralal states that Punamchand had no interest in that transaction. But taking it for granted that this was the case, it does not follow that Punamchand then held the souda-chithi dated February, that year executed in the name of his servant Udebhan. And it further seems that because Nenuram and Pannalal denied Punamchand's interest in Nenuram's sale, deed that the false souda-chitthi was called into being. It is very unlikely that there should have been any sale in the name of Nenuram alone if the property could already be claimed by Punamchand from his servant Udebhan. The sale-deed itself states that the property had not been sold nor was it encumbered by Tulja. It has to be remembered that Punamchand was an attesting witness to that document, and I find it hard to believe that he would, by that attestation, agree to a sale to Nenuram alone, though he and Pannalal might have had a share in it, when in reality the property, which it is evident he was very anxious to obtain, was in his power to obtain by virtue of a civil suit in the name of the nominal transferee Udebhan. All the circumstances point to the truth of the approver's story, that Mt. Tulja was not present when the souda-chitthi was prepared and that the document was antedated.

It seems to me that it has been established that the false souda-chitthi was executed at Yeotmal and not at Kotamba. Reliance is placed on the evidence of witnesses 2, 3 and 4 for the defence who testify to the dharwar chitthi. The story of that dharwar chitthi and its assignment by Chunnilal to the appellant seems to have been carefully manufactured to meet a case like the present arising out of the transaction. I think that the approver's story is true and that the souda-chitthi is a forgery.

The charge under which the appellant has been convicted is one under S. 467, viz., forgery of a valuable security. An elaborate legal argument has been addressed to me by the learned counsel for the appellant, contending that though his client might be guilty of an abetment of forgery he cannot be punished for the offence of forgery itself, nor can he be punished for the abetment without being charged with that specific offence; and that at least the case must go back to enable the Sessions Court to charge the accused with abetment of forgery. Now, the case is that though the appellant did not actually with his own hand scribe the false document, yet he had it made and was present when it was prepared. I am referred to the case of Padmanabha Panji Kannaya v. Emperor (1) and Hulas Chand Baid v. Emperor (2), which lays down that the effect of the recent amendment of S. 238, Criminal P. C., by the insertion of sub-S. 2-A therein, specifically mentioning the case of an "attempt" to commit an offence, is that S. 238, Criminal P. C., does not justify a conviction for abetment without a separate charge therefor, and it is argued that the defective charge cannot be changed here. But it seems to me that S. 238, Criminal P. C., provides for conviction for a minor offence where evidence is insufficient to prove a graver offence. S. 114, I. P. C., lays down that whenever any person is present when the act or offence, for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment, is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence.

Section 238, Criminal P. C., expressly provides that when a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although the attempt is not separately charged. The test seems to me to be that all the legally necessary elements of the offence of which the accused is convicted are also necessary elements of the offence with which the accused was charged. The graver charge gives the accused notice of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor charge of which he may be convicted; and it seems to me immaterial in the present case whether the accused was tried for a substantive offence or abetment. S. 236,

(1) [1910] 33 Mad. 254=2) M. L. J. 34=5 I. C. 145=7 M. L. T. 79.

(2) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 63.

Criminal P. C., lays down that where there is doubt as to what offence has been committed, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences; and in which case, under S. 237, of that Code, if the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of S. 236, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it. Sundara Aiyar, J., in Subhaya v. Emperor (3), after referring to Padmanabha Panji Kannaya v. Emperor (1), the case relied on by the appellant states:

"I do not think that the learned Judges, who decided the case: Padmanabha Panji Kannaya v. Emperor (1), intended to lay down a universal rule that in no case can a conviction for abetment be possible where the charge was only of the principal offence. The question is what were the facts charged? If on those facts two charges could be framed namely, the commission of the principal offence, and the abetment, then by virtue of provisions of S. 237, the accused may be convicted of the offence of the abetment though it was not charged separately against him. The Act lays down no specific provision with respect to the question decided here. But the principle is laid down in Ss. 236 and 237."

In the present case, not only did the accused instigate the forgery of the souda-chitthi but he was present when the forgery was made, and it seems to me that the appellant is the real person, and the actual writer may have been the abettor; and appellant being present he is guilty of the principal offence. I think that in the present case the accused could have been convicted under S. 464/114 on the present charge.

I confirm the conviction. As to the sentence it is argued that it is severe. But here we have the case that not only did the accused make a false document but that a suit was filed thereon, and under these circumstances I do not think the punishment inflicted, viz., that of three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 4,000, can be deemed excessive. The appeal is dismissed. The appellant's bailbond is cancelled and he is sent to Yeotmal.

Criminal Revn. No. 6-B of 1929, Decided on 22nd April 1929, from decision of 2nd Addl. Sess. Judge, Akola, D/- 19th September 1928, in Criminal Appeal No. 261 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 110 — Testimony of police officer that person is by habit thief only matter of opinion and hearsay—Such evidence is inadmissible under S. 110.

•The testimony of a police officer that a person is by habit a thief is inadmissible in evidence against a person against whom proceedings are instituted under S. 110 when such evidence is only a matter of opinion and hearsay. This fact, however, is not sufficient to set aside the order passed against him under S. 110 when the latest incident is coupled with two previous convictions on charges of his belonging to, and associated with, a gang of habitual thieves and robbers: 48 Mad 450, Rel. on.

G. G. Hatvalna—for Applicant.

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant, who has had two previous convictions under S. 401, I. P. C., has been bound over by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola, under S. 110 (a) read with S. 118, Criminal P. C., to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. This order was passed on 7th August 1928. It was sought to be revised under S. 125, Criminal P. C., by the District Magistrate, Akola, who, however, refused to interfere in the matter. An appeal was then filed by the applicant to the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Akola, but it was also rejected and he has, therefore, come up to this Court in revision.

It is contended on behalf of the applicant that there is no evidence except that of the police officers to prove that the applicant was by habit a thief, and therefore in the absence of more reliable evidence no order under S. 110, Criminal P. C., should have been passed against him. It is also argued that the testimony of these police officers is only a matter of opinion and hearsay, and therefore was not admissible as a piece of evidence.

Having myself read the evidence of the police officers (P. Ws. 1, 2, 6, 7 and 8) the remarks made by the learned pleader for the applicant with regard to the legal character of their evidence are perfectly true in the light of the observations to be found in the case of K. Ranga Reddi v. Emperor (1). I, therefore, agree that the whole of this evidence was inadmissible and legally insufficient to prove that the applicant was by habit a thief.

But as the learned Government Advocate rightly contended that is not enough to discharge the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against the applicant. It is admitted that the applicant has had two previous convictions under S. 401, I. P. C., though a long time has elapsed since the last conviction. The latest incident that happened at the shop of Mt. Badji (P. W. 3) which has been believed in by all the three lower Courts coupled with the two previous convictions on charges of his belonging to and associated with a gang of habitual thieves and robbers, is, in my opinion, enough to warrant the passing of the order for binding the applicant over to be of good behaviour. I accordingly uphold the order sought to be revised and dismiss this application for revision.

Ramdularey—Accused—Applicant.

Manohar—Complainant—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 344 of 1929, Decided on 28th November 1929, from decision of Dist. Magistrate, Bilaspur, D/- 29th July 1929, in Criminal Appeal No. 105 of 1929.

Cattle Trespass Act, S. 22—Compensation cannot be awarded in absence of loss and unless specifically claimed—Sentence of imprisonment under S. 22 in default of compensation is illegal.

Compensation under S. 22 cannot be allowed in the absence of loss alleged or proved. The Magistrate cannot award it arbitrarily at his own sweet will. The complainant must make a specific claim about it. Further the Magistrate can only award compensation for illegal seizure of cattle and cannot impose fine. He is also not competent under S. 22 to pass sentence of imprisonment and thus when he passes a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of compensation, the sentence is illegal. [P 505 C 2]

S. T. Bhawe—for Applicant.

Order.—The applicant Ramdularey was convicted under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, by Mr. C. F. Cleophas, Magistrate, Second Class, Bilaspur, and was ordered to pay Rs. 140-13-0 as compensation. He filed an appeal in the Court of District Magistrate, Bilaspur, who reduced the compensation, for the loss caused by the seizure or detention from Rs. 70-6-6 to Rs. 20 and ordered that: "in default of these payments, the accused shall suffer simple imprisonment for one month."

The only ground pressed by the learned pleader for the applicant runs as follows:

"The lower appellate Court erred in allowing under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, compensation Rs. 20 to the complainant in the absence of any loss alleged or proved."

The contention is correct and must prevail. There is no allegation either in the complaint dated 1st September 1918 or in the statements made by Manohar on 1st September 1928, 18th September 1928 and 4th May 1929 that any loss was caused by the seizure or detention. The law has provided summary and expeditious mode of recovering compensation under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, for loss caused by such seizure and detention, but it cannot be awarded arbitrarily at the sweet will of the Magistrate, unless the complainant makes a specific claim about it. No such claim was made in this case. The complainant, not having claimed any compensation, was not entitled to any. The order passed by the District Magistrate awarding Rs. 20 as compensation is wrong and illegal and is hereby set aside.

The use of the word "fine" in para. 3 of the judgment of the lower appellate Court is also wrong. No fine can be imposed under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, and a Magistrate can only award compensation for illegal seizure of cattle. The learned District Magistrate has also passed the following order:

"In default of these payments, the accused shall suffer simple imprisonment for one month."

A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of compensation is illegal. A Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act. As laid down in S. 23 of the same Act, the compensation, fines and expenses mentioned in S. 22, may be recovered as if they were fines imposed by the Magistrate. The order about the payment of fines paid and expenses incurred by the complainant in procuring the release of cattle and about the Court costs is upheld, and the order about "reasonable compensation" is set aside. The amount if already paid will be refunded to the applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 410 of 1929, Decided on 5th December 1929, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Jubbulpore, D/- 23rd July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 439—Complaint enquired into by two Magistrates and dismissed—Sessions Judge refusing to take action in revision—High Court will interfere only if there is strong probability that further enquiry will result in conviction.

Where a complaint is dismissed under S. 203 but under directions of the Sessions Judge an enquiry is again made into the case by another Magistrate with the result that no sufficient grounds are made to commit him to sessions trial and where the Sessions Judge refuses to revise the order, there must be very strong reasons for the High Court to interfere and it will interfere only if there is a very strong probability that further enquiry would result in a conviction: 26 All. 564, Hel. on. [P 506 C. 2]

Forbes—for Applicant.

Order.—A man named Patali Dhait was found lying dead in a railway line, the head being completely severed from the body, on 5th September 1927. The police considered the advisability of charging the non-applicants with causing his death but decided to take no action. The applicant Mathuraprasad, brother of deceased, filed a complaint against the non-applicants. This complaint after investigation was dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C. The Sessions Judge directed further enquiry into the case and a full inquiry was made by another Magistrate, Mr. Dewey. Mr. Dewey considered there were no sufficient grounds for committing the accused to sessions trial. The applicant applied to the Sessions Judge for revision of this order but his application was unsuccessful. He has now applied to this Court asking that further enquiry should be ordered.

In Fattu v. Fattu (1), Knox, J., remarked that, where an accused person had been discharged and the Sessions Judge directed a commitment, the High Court should be most unwilling to interfere. It is obvious that, where the Sessions Judge refused to take action, this Court should require even stronger grounds before deciding to interfere. The offence in this case was committed two years ago. There have been enquiries before two Magistrates and interference in this Court would be proper only if there was a strong probability that further enquiry would result in a conviction. There is no special reason for holding that the evidence of the witnesses, who have been disbelieved by the experienced Magistrate who heard them, is, in reality, convincing. It is not of great consequence that the Magistrate has laid excessive stress on contradictions which are, perhaps, not material. Satola made a statement at an early stage, but this is not a strong guarantee that his statement is true. Evidence about hearing cries in the night is of a nature which renders it open to doubt. None of the witnesses appear to be above suspicion. The evidence of Col. Oxley throws great doubt upon the prosecution case. I see no reason to think that Mr. Dewey was wrong in thinking that there was no really credible evidence to support the prosecution case: there is certainly no reason for interference by this Court. This application is dismissed.

Criminal Rev. No. 452 of 1929, Decided on 10th January 1930, case reported by Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, under S. 438, Criminal P. C.

Criminal P. C., S. 340—Deputy Commissioner appointing Public Prosecutor to defend accused—Public Prosecutor though not member of bar held to have been so appointed by accused—Criminal P. C., S. 4 (r).

The District Magistrate considering it possible that the complaint against two Government Officials was a false one, made in consequence of the accused performing their duty, directed the Prosecuting Inspector to defend the accused. The trying Magistrate allowed the Prosecutor to so defend the accused.

Held: that though the Public Prosecutor was not a member of the Bar it could not be held that he was not a person appointed by the accused with the permission of the Court to defend them though it was desirable that they had made such appointment: A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 218, Ref. [P 507 C 1, 2]

V. Bose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, reports the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C. A complaint of criminal trespass and assault was filed against two Government Officers. The District Magistrate, considering it possible that this complaint was a false one made in consequence of the accused performing their duty, directed the Prosecuting Inspector to defend the accused. The trying Magistrate, in an order dated 13th November 1929 allowed the Prosecuting Inspector to appear for the defence: the Magistrate recognised that the direction of the District Magistrate did not override the necessity of permission of the Court. The pleader for the complainant objected to his appearance and the Sessions Judge made a reference to this Court, expressing the opinion that the order of the District Magistrate was ultra vires; he stated that it was doubtful whether the time of the Public Prosecutor should be utilized in defending cases.

It is not for this Court to decide how a Prosecuting Inspector should be employed. The only question I have to consider is whether the Inspector, who is not a member of the Bar, was rightly allowed by the Court to defend an accused person. S. 310, Criminal P. C., states that an accused may be defended by a pleader. S. 4 (r) of the same Code states that "a pleader" included any person appointed by the permission of the Court to act in a proceeding. The definition of "pleader" was recently considered by the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Dorabsha Bomanji (1). The words are general, and I can see no reason for holding that the Prosecuting Inspector was not a person appointed by the accused with the permission of the Court to defend them, though it is desirable that they had made such appointment. There is no reason for interference by this Court. The case is returned to the trying Magistrate.

BEASLEY, C. J. AND PANDALAI, J.

V. Seeniah Naidu — Complainant — Petitioner.

Abdul Wahab Sahib — Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 156 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 135 of 1929, Decided on 25th October 1929, against judgment of Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Chittoor, D/- 13th August 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 250 (3) — Appeal against order for compensation — Forum indicated in Chap. 31 — Appellate Court competent to record additional evidence under Criminal P. C., S. 428.

Though S. 250 (3) gives the complainant a right to appeal against an order for compensation in certain cases the section does not indicate a forum, which has to be found out by reference to Chap. 31. The appeal would therefore lie under S. 250 (3) coupled with the relevant section in Chap. 31 viz. S. 407 and all the provisions in that chapter including the power to take additional evidence given by S. 428 apply. A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 331 and 33 Mad. 90 Dist. [P 508 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 428 — Additional evidence taken—Reasons not recorded — No failure of justice—Proceedings not vitiated.

Where the omission of the appellate Court to record reasons for taking additional evidence under S. 428 does not cause a failure of justice the proceedings are not vitiated. [P 508 C 2]

S. Nagaraja Ayyar—for Petitioner.

K. Venkataragavashari — for Respondent.

Pandalai, J. — This is a petition to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chittoor dismissing the appeal to him from an order of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Chittoor whereby the petitioner who was the complainant in a case of assault before that Magistrate was ordered to pay under S. 250, Criminal P. C., Rs. 100 by way of compensation to the accused as, in his opinion, the complaint was false and vexatious.

Two points are taken in this petition, viz., (1) that the appellate Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in taking further evidence purporting to act under S. 428, Criminal P. C., because, according to the appellant's advocate, the appeal was not one under Chap. 31, Criminal P. C., to which alone S. 428 applies and (2) that the appellate Magistrate acted illegally in omitting to record reasons for taking further evidence as he was required to do under S. 428.

As to the first objection reliance is placed upon the decision of Devadoss, J. in Sami Vannia Nainar v. Penaswami Naidu (1), in which that learned Judge held that in an appeal under S. 476 (b), Criminal P. C., the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to take additional evidence whether the party objected to the reception of such evidence or not. I do not think that that decision is applicable to this case. The ground of that decision was that an appeal under S. 476(b), Criminal P. C., was not one under Chap. 31 of that Code. That decision was itself based upon an earlier decision in Krishna Reddi v. Emperor (2) to the same effect. The reason of that decision is seen from the terms of S. 476(b) itself which says that any person on whose application a Court has refused to make a complaint under S. 476 or against whom such a complaint has been made may appeal to the Court to which such Court is subordinate. Upon the terms of that section it is clear that not only the right of appeal but the forum to which the appeal should be preferred are clearly prescribed. That section is in other words self-sufficient and any appeal under that section is not one under Chap. 31.

In this case, however, that is not so. S. 250 (3) says that a complainant or informant who has been ordered by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding Rs. 50 may appeal from that order as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate. Now it is contended on those words that the appeal is under that section on the analogy of the decision above referred to. But the analogy is not complete because all that S. 250 (3) says is that a complainant against whom an order for compensation is made is, so far as the right to appeal is concerned, put on the same footing as if he had been convicted and sentenced to pay a fine, by that Magistrate. To find out to what Court the appeal is to be filed, we have to resort to the general chapter on appeals and that is Chap. 31 and the section applicable to this case is S. 407. It follows, therefore, that it is incomplete to say that an appeal from an order under S. 250 is an appeal under that section; for, to make the statement complete it must be said that the appeal is by virtue of Ss. 250 and 407. I am, therefore, of the opinion that this particular appeal was none the less under Chap. 31, Criminal P. C., because the right of appeal was generally conferred by an earlier section not within that chapter. If the appeal was in the terms of S. 428 "under this chapter," all the powers conferred by that section were immediately attracted to this appeal and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had ample power to take additional evidence. That disposes of the first contention.

The second objection is also not supportable. It is no doubt the case that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate omitted to record reasons as he ought to have done when he thought it necessary to take further evidence but that by no means invalidates his proceedings because by S. 537, Criminal P. C., an omission of that character will invalidate the proceedings only if the omission has occasioned a failure of justice. There is nothing to show that any failure of justice was caused in this case by the omission to record reasons by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

Both the objections in this petition, therefore, fail and the petition must be dismissed.

M. Subha Rao—for Petitioner.

P. K. Sen with S. N. Ray—for Opposite Party.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This is an application by the complainant Narayan Maharana for the revision by this Court of a judgment of acquittal passed by the District Magistrate of Cuttack in a charge brought by Narayan Maharana against Mr. S. C. Ghosh, the Principal of the Orissa School of Engineering, under S. 342, I. P. C., and it serves to illustrate an important principle which should govern the exercise of the power of revision.

The subject matter of the charge may be briefly stated. Mr. Ghosh succeeded on 15th March 1928, as Principal of the School of Engineering at Mr. Parkinson the former Principal, who had been suspended on charges of misappropriation of Government property. An auditor had been appointed to investigate Mr. Parkinson's accounts and on 16th March that audit had begun. The complainant Narayan Maharana and three other men were mistris who had been employed under Mr. Parkinson. Mr. Ghosh had been ordered to take stock of the furniture in Mr. Parkinson's bungalow and to enquire what part of it was Government property. On 27th April Mr. Parkinson was to have gone to the school to answer some audit objections but he saw the four workmen mentioned outside his bungalow and called them in to question them concerning some of the charges, which it appears were to be made against him, in which some one or more of these workmen were said to have been implicated. He elicited from the workmen some information which he considered important and sent for the auditor. The auditor reduced the statements of the four workmen into writing and then took them with him to the school to interview Mr. Ghosh. The nature of Mr. Ghosh's conversation with the workmen is of no importance to this case but what they told him set him upon the making of further enquiries. He sent for two other persons and questioned them. Being anxious to prevent the four workmen from being tampered with by Mr. Parkinson or anyone under his influence Mr. Ghosh asked the durwan of the school to keep the four men in the science room in front of his office and to keep them under observation while further enquiries were made. This took place between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon and it is said that on the order of Mr. Ghosh the durwan locked up the science room and confined the four men there until some time considerably later in the afternoon. Mr. Ghosh is charged with having kept these men under unlawful detention for the period during which they are said to have been in the science room.

At 11 p.m. on the same night the first information report was lodged. This was investigated by the police and Mr. Ghosh was questioned. The police on 2nd May made the report "mistake of law" apparently meaning that the facts did not constitute an offence in law. On 6th May the matter came before the Sub-Divisional Officer who dismissed the charge under S. 203, Criminal P. C. On 15th May the four men lodged a complaint, but this was dismissed on the following day as defective by reason of the fact that there were four complainants. There was then a second complaint by Narayan Maharana and this was dismissed on 22nd May by the Sub-Divisional Officer. On 22nd June Narayan Maharana made an application to the Sessions Judge for a further enquiry into the matter and on 25th July the Sessions Judge made an order for a further enquiry. For some reason the enquiry did not begin until 2nd November, and on 17th November a report was made by Mr. Smith, Deputy Magistrate, recommending the prosecution of Mr. Ghosh. The District Magistrate on 10th December 1928 ordered the prosecution. The trial was begun on 4th January 1929, and after no less than 11 sittings (including four at which the accused was present but the proceedings were adjourned), the judgment of acquittal, the subject of this application, was delivered on 19th January 1929.

It is not necessary to go further into the facts of the alleged offence, but it is sufficient for the purposes of this judgment to state that the reasoning of the District Magistrate is thoroughly defective. The case was an extremely simple one and I will merely state that upon the evidence it is abundantly clear that Mr. Ghosh should have been convicted of a technical offence and a nominal penalty should have been inflicted, such for example as a fine of Rs. 4 half of which might have been distributed amongst the four men who were unlawfully detained, and this sum would have amply compensated them for any damage which they could possibly have claimed in a civil Court. The Magistrate, however, acquitted Mr. Ghosh, coming to the conclusion that the extent of the detention proved to his satisfaction did not amount to unlawful confinement, and that Mr. Ghosh had no "criminal intent" in what he did; he seems to have thought that "criminal intent" means in law intention to act criminally. It is very unusual for this Court to interfere with a finding of fact but in a case of greater magnitude interference with such a defective judgment would have been necessary. The Magistrate no doubt properly inclined to the view that the offence was utterly trivial and that the prosecution was inspired by motives other than the pursuit of justice. But he could and should have given effect to this opinion by convicting the accused and imposing a purely nominal penalty. Instead of doing so he strained the evidence to show that no offence had been committed and his own finding of the facts and his own reasoning demonstrate that his conclusion that no legal offence was committed is impossible to justify.

Having briefly stated this view I shall now explain the principle upon which the Court should nevertheless decline to interfere. Firstly, although in my view the offence was undoubtedly committed it is of a ridiculously trivial character and had the Magistrate convicted, any penalty greater than that which I have indicated would clearly have been improper. The sum which I have suggested might have been awarded by way of compensation to the four men detained, would have been entirely in the discretion of the Court, and it is quite probable in the circumstances that the Magistrate would have refused to allow any part of the fine to pass into their hands. It must be remembered that the object of criminal proceedings is not the compensation of private parties but the vindication of the laws of the State. The Magistrate states his conclusion, for which I think there are very good grounds, that Mr. Ghosh was honestly endeavouring to do his duty and that this prosecution, however justified, it may be on technical grounds, is inspired by malice. Now it cannot be doubted that by having to defend this case Mr. Ghosh has been put to an extraordinary amount of expense and trouble which is far more than adequate punishment for the technical offence which in my opinion he has committed, and to ask this Court to send the case back for a retrial is in the circumstances a gross abuse of legal process. The powers of the High Court in criminal revision are not intended for the gratification of private malice, nor are they to be used to vindicate the position of a private prosecutor where a merely technical offence has been committed, however clearly that technical offence may have been proved.

I desire to call attention to the scandalous waste of time and money disclosed by these proceedings. The numerous adjournments allowed by Magistrates in petty criminal cases and the great time which elapses between the original offence and the ultimate judgment indicate the need of a very drastic revision of the practice. The trivial offence committed in this case took place nearly a year ago and the legal costs incurred must have been enormous. Magistrates should refrain from granting adjournments save in cases where they are clearly necessitated for the purpose of justice. In a petty criminal case both parties should appear on the first day of hearing ready for the completion of the entire trial at a single hearing. If this case had been investigated on these lines the hearing should not have taken more than an hour and a half at the outset. The application for revision is rejected.

Sanichara, was that on or about 6th May 1928 at village Sikandarpur, police station Maharajganj, they kidnapped Basumatia Chokri aged about eight years, from the lawful guardianship of her father Rampati Mahto, with intent or knowing it to be likely that she would be compelled to marry Kuber Pandey of Karasghat, police station Baikunthpur, against her will.

Appellant Dhanpat is a neighbour of the complainant Pati or Rampati Mahto, a Nunia of Sikandarpur. The girl Basumatia is a daughter of Pati Nunia by a former wife. In Jyeth of last year Pati went to his mamhar (maternal uncle's house) at Banpura, with his present wife Mt. Tetri and two young children, to attend some weddings, Basumatia being left behind with Sitmi, a seven year old daughter of Mt. Tetri by a former husband, to look after Pati's buffalo. On 2nd Jyeth (6th May 1928) there was a marriage at the house of Dharamdeo Tiwari (D. W. 3) in Sikandarpur, and Basumatia and Sitmi went to see the barat. When they were coming back past the house of appellant Dhanpat Tiwari, Mt. Sanichara took Basumatia inside. Dhanpat and Sanichara then prevailed on Basumatia to go with them to a village Deokali, seven or eight kos away, with a basket of pakwan (sweets), on a promise of giving her a luga and a jhula (piece of cloth and a jacket). The party—which included Dhanpat's son Sribhagwan—actually left early the next morning and were met and accosted on the way by three witnesses in the case (P. Ws. 3, 7 and 8). About three days afterwards Basumatia was put through a form of marriage, against her will, with one Kuber Pandey of Karasghat, Dhanpat officiating as the priest. After the wedding, Dhanpat and Sanichara sent Basumatia with Kuber Pandey in a palki to Karasghat. Kuber's mother and elder brother Jagdish Pandey (P. W. 10) discovered at Karasghat that Basumatia was not a Brahmin but a Nunia. Jagdish thereupon had a panchayet held at Deokali and, getting no satisfaction, lodged an information at the thana of Baikunthpur on 17th May charging Sheoprasad Dube, son of Mt. Sanichara and father of the girl who it had been settled was to be married to Kuber, and one Pucha Kuer, with cheating by personation. While this case was under investigation, Pati Mahto learnt on his way back from Banpura that Basumatia has been missing, and lodged a sanha about it at the thana of Maharajganj on 20th May. The police submitted a charge-sheet in Jagdish Pandey's case under S. 419, I. P. C. against Sheoprasad Dube and Pucha Kuer, but the case was ultimately compromised on 27th June 1928, on the persons then accused paying Jagdish Rs. 200. On 2nd July Pati Mahto preferred a complaint under Ss. 363, 366 and 419, I. P. C. against Dhanpat, Mt. Sanichara and others before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Siwan, who committed Dhanpat and Sanichara to the Sessions on a charge under 366, I. P. C.

The case was tried by jury.

Mt. Sanichara's defence was that Basumatia had not been kidnapped but had carried sweets for them accompanied by her father Pati Mahto, and that it was not Basumatia but the daughter of her son Sheoprasad that had been married to Kuber Pandey. There was a quarrel at the time of the rukhsati, and in the confusion that followed Basumatia was forcibly taken away by the barat party of the bridegroom Kuber Pandey. Pati Nunia knew all the facts, though he had gone back from Deokali; and he had falsely brought the present case because he was disappointed that Jagdish Pandey's case had been compromised without his getting anything out of it.

Dhanpat Tiwari's defence was that the case had been brought on account of enmity; that he had nothing to do with Basumatia being kidnapped and did not even attend the wedding at Deokali; and that Pati Mahto had not gone away from Sikandarpur to Banpura at all.

By a majority of four to one the jury brought in a verdict of guilty against both Dhanpat and Sanichara. The Assistant Sessions Judge accepted the verdict and passed sentence as already stated.

Dhanpat alone appeals.

The first point raised on his behalf is that the Assistant Sessions Judge did not sufficiently explain the law to the jury, and the case of Rupan Singh v. Emperor (1) is relied on in support. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge's note on this point in the heads of charge is:

"Sections 361 and 366, I. P. C., read and explained to the jurors."

It has been held in several cases that this is not a sufficient record of the charge on the questions of law but the convictions in Rupan Singh's case (1) were quashed on much more substantial grounds than a mere insufficiency of record in this respect. In an unreported decision of this Court, Prabhu Singh v. Emperor (2) where this part of the heads of charge merely ran "charges read and explained from the Code," Jwala Prasad, J., referred to several previous decisions and held (my learned brother concurring) that:

"there was no misdirection to the jury on the score that the law was not explained as is required by S. 297 of the Code," adding "Mr. Hasan Imam very frankly concedes this." The position was also examined in Chotan Singh v. Emperor (3) where it was held (to quote from the head-note):

"The failure of the Judge to record in the charge what actually his explanation of the law was did not necessarily involve the setting aside of the conviction if the omission had not occasioned a miscarriage of justice," and

"The High Court will not order a retrial when it is of opinion that, if the jury accepted the evidence which was put forward on behalf of the prosecution there was no doubt that they were entitled to convict the accused of the offence charged."

In the present case it cannot be pretended that the law applicable to the facts was all complicated. Basumatia, if taken away was taken away from her father's keeping and as to her age there was unchallenged evidence before the jury that she was eight or nine years old: the lady Doctor (P. W. 5) saying that her age did not exceed ten years. Following the ruling in Chotan Singh's case (3), I am not prepared to interfere on the ground that the record is not sufficient to show that the jury was adequately directed on the questions of law arising in the case.

It has next been urged that the delay of nearly two months in the lodging of the complaint has not been properly placed before the jury. I see no force in this contention at all. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge has pointedly referred to the relevant dates the 20th. May when Pati Nunia, lodged his sanaha, the 27th June when Jagdish Pandey's case was compromised and the 2nd July when

Pati Nunia filed his petition of complaint. He then proceeds:

"Now it would be for you gentlemen to consider whether under these circumstances the delay would be such as would go to the very root of the case of the prosecution and would destroy their whole story of kidnapping."

The heads of charge do not contain a specific reference to Ex. 6, the order-sheet in Jagdish Pandey's case, from which it appears that Pati Nunia objected more than once to the matter being compromised but the omission can obviously furnish the appellant with no ground of complaint.

The third point raised in the appeal is that sufficient stress was not laid on the fact that the name of appellant Dhanpat was not mentioned in the case under S. 419, I. P. C., brought by Jagdish Pandey. As to this the learned Assistant Sessions Judge records after dealing with the evidence of Basumatia:

"Here I would remind you gentlemen, that the case at Gopalganj was under S. 419, I. P. C. which was of cheating by personation, and therefore you will have to consider how far it would have been necessary in that case to give that part of the story there which was connected with kidnapping. You will have also to consider whether the omission in any particular statement there would go to show that those statements made in the kidnapping case have been falsely got up for the purposes of this case or not."

He again refers to the point when dealing with the evidence of the Sub-Inspector of Baikunthpur, and, after mentioning that the witness had sent up Basumatia and Rampati Nunia as witnesses in the case under S. 419, I. P. C., to prove that Basumatia was Pati's daughter and that she had been married to Kuber Pandey and went to his house as a Brahmin girl, he observes:

"It would be for you gentlemen to consider whether it was material for the Sub-Inspector to inquire and for the witnesses to depose to a cheating case under S. 419, I. P. C., about Dhanpat Tiwari who actually did not cheat Jagdish or Kuber. The cheating case was against the father of the girl Kosila and Rucha Kuer."

It seems to me clear that the non-mention of Dhanpat during the investigation of Jagdish Pandey's case was placed before the jury in a perfectly proper manner and that sufficient stress was laid on it by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge in charging the jury.

The only other question raised is that of the sentence. The offence of the appellant has been aggravated by the procuring of a large number of false defence witnesses but even so, the sentence does seem excessive. In my opinion a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100, with nine months' rigorous imprisonment in default would be sufficient to meet the ends of justice and I would further under S. 545, Criminal P. C., direct that the fine if recovered be paid to Pati Nunia as compensation. Apart from this modification of the sentence I would dismiss the appeal.

Macpherson, J.—I agree. I desire to add that prior to the decision in Ohhotan Singh v. King Emperor (3) in the vacation of 1927 where somewhat different views are expressed though perhaps obiter it appeared to be settled law in this Court that in recording "the heads of the charge to the jury" as directed under S. 367, Criminal P. C., it was sufficient for the Sessions Court at least unless the case was extremely complicated to record as a head of the charge that the sections of the Penal Code relating to the offence charged had been read and explained to the jury. In Prabhu Singh v. Emperor (2) Bench and Bar regarded the matter as not open to dispute. In Eknath Sahay v. Emperor (4) the record of which I have examined, the head of charge to the jury "laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided" (S. 297) was not more extensive than in the present case when allowance is made for the difference in the nature and complexity of the two cases. Indeed it has been the normal practice to record this head of charge in the manner in which the Sessions Judge usually made a brief note of it for his own guidance. S. 367 expressly provides that in a trial by jury the Court need not write a judgment. Any suggestion to the Courts that in recording the heads of the charge to the jury they should practically write a judgment and indeed should write out to no purpose the elements of criminal law which the Court must explain to a jury but no experienced Judge sets out in a judgment is in my opinion strongly to be deprecated. To my mind no exception can be taken to the record by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of the head of the charge showing how he laid down the law to the jury.

Gobind Ram Marwari—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No 44 of 1929, Decided on 17th April 1929, from an order of Deputy Magistrate, First Class, Monghyr, D/- 24th November 1928.

Police Act (5 of 1861), S. 34 (3)—Cart kept in parti land by side of road with width of 40 feet—There is no presumption by implication of annoyance to public.

Although easing by a man on a public road may constitute an offence inasmuch as it causes annoyance to the residents or passengers, the mere fact that a cart was kept in the parti land by the side of the road with a width of 40 feet, cannot raise any presumption by implication that it caused annoyance to the public: 20 Cr. L. J. 452, Rel. on. [P 514 C 2]

N. C. Ghosh—for Petitioner.

C. M. Agarwala—for the Crown.

Chatterji, J.—This application is directed against an order passed in appeal convicting the petitioner under S. 34, Police Act, and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 5.

It is urged in this Court that the act complained of does not, in view of the findings arrived at, come within the purview of S. 34, Cl. (3), Police Act.

It appears that a certain cart was kept by a cartman on the road in front of the petitioner's shop in Bari Bazar in the town of Monghyr for about two hours. The cartman was convicted on his plea of guilty and fined Re. 1.

The learned appellate Court refers to the evidence of the reporting constable that there is parti land between the road and the accused Gobind's shop and that conveyances stop in this parti. He also states that the road in front is some 40 feet wide and further that only one wheel of the cart was on the metalled portion of the road and that, owing to the road being sufficiently wide it did not actually cause any stoppage of traffic or obstruction; but all the same he considered that the case came within the purview of S. 34, because the needless keeping of a cart on the road for such a long time must necessarily cause annoyance to the public using that road. One can understand that in the circumstances of a particular case the keeping of a cart for a length of time may cause annoyance so as to constitute an offence under Cl. (3), S. 34. But in the circumstances of this particular case and having regard to the findings arrived at namely, that there was no stoppage of traffic or obstruction or annoyance actually caused, there is no justification for the conviction. It has been laid down by Das, J., in Ramcharitar Kahar v. Emperor (1) that before a person can be convicted under S. 34, it must be established that the act complained of was to the obstruction, inconvenience, annoyance, risk, danger or damage of the residents or passengers. Although the easing by a man on a public road may constitute an offence inasmuch as it causes annoyance to the residents or passengers, the mere fact that the cart was kept in parti land by the side of the road with a width of 40 feet cannot raise any presumption by implication that it caused annoyance to the public. In the circumstances the contention of the learned advocate for the petitioner must succeed.

The application is allowed, the conviction set aside, and the fine, if paid, is to be refunded.

Adami, J.—I would only add that in my opinion the proposition set out by Das, J., in Ramcharitar Kahar v. Emperor (1), is too wide. Wherever an obstruction or a nuisance must by its nature cause inconvenience or obstruction under the section, I would hold that there would be an offence under it. It is not necessary in every case to produce witnesses to say that they have been obstructed or annoyed: for instance the mere act of committing a nuisance on a road by way of easing oneself is sufficient to bring the person so acting within the section. In the same way if a cart is left on the middle of a road it must be held that it was causing an obstruction though it may be that no one comes forward to say that he was actually obstructed. In the present case the finding is that there was no obstruction and that there would be no obstruction by the placing of the cart on the spot where it was found. I therefore agree with my learned brother that the accused should be acquitted.

Furthermore there is a doubt in my mind whether the petitioner who was sitting at his shop could be held responsible for the keeping of the cart on the road outside his shop as the cart did not belong to him.

Sohrai Sao and another—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 15 of 1929, Decided on 8th June 1929, against decision of Sess. Judge, Gaya, D/- 8th January 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Misreception of inadmissible evidence.

Misreception of a piece of evidence which is inadmissible but which has very little weight and admission of which causes no substantial injustice, does not vitiate the trial. [P 519 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 154—Purpose of cross-examination is to obtain admission on which party cross-examining may rely.

A party is allowed to cross-examine its own witness because that witness displays hostility and not necessarily because he displays untruthfulness. The main purpose of such cross-examination is to obtain admissions and it would be ridiculous to assert that a party cross-examining a witness is thereby prevented from relying on admissions and to hold that the fact that the witness is being cross-examined implies an admission by the cross-examiner that all the witness's statements are falsehoods: A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 501, Rel. on; Bradley v. Ricardo, (1891) 8 Bing. 57, Ref; Faulkner v. Irine (1858), 1 F. & F. 251; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 193; A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 690, Diss. from. [P 519 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 302—Extenuating circumstance—Reason for passing lesser sentence ought to be express and adequate—Wife murdered to save dishonour of family is no extenuating circumstance.

The reason for passing a lesser sentence on conviction for murder ought to be express and adequate. Such reasons are sometimes to be found in the order of the mentality to which the person belongs. But the fact that a murder of his wife by a husband was inspired with a view to save his family from dishonour which would sooner or later have fallen upon them by reason of the habits of the wife does not constitute any extenuating circumstance, for lesser sentence of transportation. [P 520 C 1]

(d) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Doubt—Feeling of doubt is matter for consideration before verdict and not after.

The feeling of doubt as to the guilt of the accused is a matter to be considered by the tribunal before but not after the verdict. It has no place in the determination of the sentence after conviction. If the evidence is not strong enough to justify an irrevocable sentence the accused is entitled to acquittal, for law does not recognize the right of a judicial tribunal to give effect to more than one degree of doubt. [P 520 C 1]

(e) Criminal Trial—Duty of Court—Court must administer law and not grant mercy.

Legislature has wisely not thought fit to entrust judicial tribunals with the prerogative of mercy and the Judges must remember that they are sworn to administer the law not as they wish it might be but as they find it. [P 520 C 2]

H. L. Nandkeolyar and B. P. Jamuar—for Appellants.

C. M. Agarwala—for the Crown.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This is an appeal by Sohrai Sao and Sawki Sao, who are brothers, against their conviction by the Sessions Judge of Gaya, under S. 302, I. P. C. of the murder of Mt. Gauri, the wife of Sohrai Sao. The learned Sessions Judge sentenced both of the appellants to transportation for life and we issued a rule directing the appellants on the hearing of the appeal to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced to death. The trial took place with the help of four assessors, one of whom was of opinion that both of the accused were guilty, and three that neither was guilty.

The appellants together with a third brother Kishun and an uncle Kasi Sao reside in a house in village Tarwan. On the night of the murder of Mt. Gauri the uncle, Kasi, was sleeping at the village kachery, and the youngest brother Kishun was sleeping at the shop owned by the three brothers at a short distance from the house. Neither Kasi nor Kishun is directly implicated in the crime. There were also in the house Mt. Dakhia, the mother of the appellants, Mt. Panhas Kuar, the sister of Kasi Sao, Mt. Balua, Kasi Sao's wife and the deceased woman Mt. Gauri. The deceased was about 22 years old and lived in purdah. There is some evidence that she was not on good terms with the other women who used to scold her because she sometimes went out of the house stealthily at night, and that the two brothers would also scold her for the same reason. It is true that the evidence on this point is slender and the relatives of the appellants, in their efforts to shield them and to dispose of any motive for their crime have one and all declared that she was a woman of good character. But since the evidence of these relatives is false on many and material points I am disposed to give little credit to it. The mother of the appellants Mt. Dakhia died before the case reached the committing Magistrate's Court.

In the very early morning of 16th August a rumour spread through the village that Mt. Gauri had died on the previous night of cholera, and it is not disputed that this rumour was started by the appellants assisted by their third brother Kishun. The women were heard wailing inside the house and the two appellants were seen standing at the doorway of their house and were heard consulting about the cremation of the dead body. A number of villagers assembled outside the house. One of them Budhan Pasi who had met Kishun and had been told by him of the death from cholera, entered the angan of the house by the door leading from the angan on to the road. He there found the body covered with a piece of cloth lying partly on a veranda on the south side and partly in the angan. The ground of the angan and the verandah appeared to have been recently washed and smeared with ashes but blood stains were still apparent. Lying by the side of the body was a curved knife. He uncovered the body and found that the throat had been cut. He enquired of the appellants why they had alleged that she had died of cholera and the appellants replied that in fact she had committed suicide by cutting her throat. A number of other witnesses relate the same story, that is to say, the fact that the appellants were standing at their door and weeping, that on enquiry the appellants stated that Mt. Gauri had died of cholera and of the later discovery by the witnesses that the woman's throat had been cut.

It must soon have become clear to the appellants that the story of cholera could not be sustained and that having regard to the fact that the woman's throat had been cut the death must be explained on the basis of suicide. Accordingly shortly after sunrise the appellant Sohrai came to the village katchery where he spoke to Deonarain Lal the diwan of the landlord and stated that his wife had committed suicide by cutting her throat. The diwan said that he ought to go to the thana and lodge an information. He refused to go stating that he was ill and in fact it would appear that he was suffering from acute toothache. The diwan then sent for Tilak Rajwar, one of the two choudidars of the village, and told him to lodge an information. Tilak stated that he must first see the body and went to the house. There he saw the body and noticed that it had been freshly washed and that the hair was still wet. He saw that an attempt had been made to wash the floor of the angan and the verandah of blood and ashes were scattered about and there were blood marks on the walls of the verandah. Mt. Dakhia and the other women were present and weeping by the side of the body. They said that they knew nothing as to how the deceased had come to her end. Tilak waited there about an hour until the second choudikar Bipat Dusadh arrived. This man had also heard at the house two hours after sunrise. He was left to watch the body while Tilak went to give the first information. Tilak left the house and met Sohrai a short distance away. He asked him to come to the thana. At first Sohrai said he would not on account of his toothache but ultimately he reluctantly consented. The appellant Sawkhi had by that time disappeared. At the thana, which was reached at about noon Sohrai lodged an information in which he stated that for the last 17 or 18 days he had been ill with fever and toothache, that his wife who had been attending him the night before when he had told her that his pain would end with his life had wept and said: "What should I do by remaining alive" that he had risen when about two gharis of the night were remaining to make water and had found his wife lying where she was in fact found with her throat cut the knife lying by her side. He adds:

"I raised an alarm and began to wail and weep when the other members of my house viz., my mother came up. My aunt opened the door of my house when the people of the mohalla and the village also began to come in."

The brother referred to is clearly his co-appellant Sawkhi. The story that the house had been opened to the village people immediately on raising his alarm is clearly untrue for no one of the neighbours heard the wailing of the women until at or very shortly after dawn and the first that was heard of the matter was the story of the death of Gauri from cholera. The Sub-Inspector went at once from the thana to the house and called Shiva Prasad Lal, a patwari and the diwan Deonarain Lal to assist him in making an inquest report. He saw at once that it was not a case of suicide and he took a statement from the chaukidar Bipat Dusadh, which forms the first information in this case. He searched the house and found blood marks in the angan and in the verandah room immediately adjoining it. A great quantity of blood had clearly flowed on to the floor and an attempt had been made to clean this up with water and to conceal the blood with ashes. There were blood marks on the walls of the verandah room to a height of two feet. There were also blood marks on an earthen kothi which stood in an adjoining room and the appearance of the marks was such as to suggest that a person with blood stained hands had touched it.

On the following day he went to the back of the house where at a distance of about twenty paces there runs a pyne. In this pyne he found an earthen pot and in this was a nimastin or half sleeved shirt which the appellant Sohrai admits to be his. It bore blood stains. Concealed in some bushes immediately behind the house were two dhotis and a sari. These were wet and had evidently recently been washed. They had been wrapped up together and concealed behind some bushes. The Sub-Inspector noticed that they bore blood stains. One of the dhotis, the appellant Sohrai admits, belongs to him. As to the other there is a certain conflict of evidence. Kishun and the other relatives say it is his property but a dhobi who washes the clothes of the family says that it is the property of Sawkhis; the evidence is, I think inconclusive on this point. The sari was the property of the mother of the appellants. The report of the Chemical Examiner states that the nimastin was stained with blood as was the dhoti identified as belonging to Sohrai. No blood was detected on the other dhoti whose ownership is doubtful or on the sari. It appeared, however, to the Sub-Inspector and the patwari that these garments were blood-stained. In any case they had been washed, had been wrapped together and were wet. The Chemical Examiner has also found stains of human blood on the knife which the Sub-Inspector found lying near the body and in the samples of earth which the Sub-Inspector scraped from the blood-stained ground and the earthen kothi. The Sub-Inspector sent off the body for post-mortem examination and the evidence of Col. Napier, the Civil Surgeon is to the effect that the wounds found on the deceased could not have been self-inflicted.

The appellant Sohrai was arrested on the following day. The appellant Sawkhi absconded and did not surrender until the case reached the committing Magistrate. The appellants called no evidence either before the committing Magistrate or at the trial. At the hearing of the appeal Mr Nandkeolyar, who has conducted the case for his clients with conspicuous ability and great earnestness, has offered the following argument. He admits that it is impossible to contend that the deceased committed suicide. He suggests that the story related in the first information by Sohrai is substantially true and that on awaking Sohrai found his wife dead in the angan and called the female relatives. Terrified by the embarrassing position in which they found themselves and fearing that they would be charged with the murder they first invented the story of the death from cholera. When it became apparent that this could no longer be maintained they fell back on the story of suicide. He suggests that although they may themselves have believed that it was a case of murder they had no one on whom they could fasten their suspicions, and accordingly made the most of the possibility of suicide. Indeed in the first information lodged by Sohrai at the thana he evidently sought a motive for the suicide in the grief of his wife at his painful illness and the additional fear that if he died she would be unable to remarry. Sohrai in addition to lodging a first information made a statement to the Sub-Inspector at the house before his arrest. In this statement Sohrai had said that he had pledged some of his wife's ornaments and that on the night of the occurrence they had quarrelled over this fact and that the quarrel probably led her to commit suicide.

Mr. Nandkeolyar contends that these varying statements as to the motive for the suicide are mere exhibitions of the distracted mind of a man, who is trying to find a plausible explanation for what he very well knows to have been a murder, but believes himself in a desperate position because he has no adequate solution to offer to the question of the identity of the murderer. It is further pointed out that the house affords easy opportunity for the entrance and escape of a murderer. In the north wall of the angan there is an unclosed door-way which provides uninterrupted access and it is said that an assassin may very well have entered through this door-way in the night and have equally easily escaped. In view of the facts that no one can suggest a possible murderer with any adequate motive this suggestion is inherently improbable, and in view of the conduct of the inmates of the house it is altogether unbelievable. Had the accused really found his wife two hours before sunrise, as he says, he would have raised a commotion which could not have failed to attract the attention of the neighbours as well as that of the other females of the household. At a much later hour when the story of cholera had been invented, when the washing of the floors had been completed the females then began to wail in a manner which attracted the neighbours and the appellants also wept outside their house. The theory moreover does not account satisfactorily for the attempt to conceal the blood-stained clothes. It is probable that these clothes were disposed of in the pyne behind the house before it became light. It is moreover clear that the woman was killed while sleeping for no one heard a sound of a cry or a struggle and as the prosecution point out an assassin from outside would have had no motive for killing the sleeping woman or for moving her body to a position half in and half out of the verandah where it is clear that she had been sleeping. It has been suggested that a silver necklace and a gold nose ring had vanished from the person of the deceased. Now the nose rings could not have been removed while she was awake. It could only have been removed after her death and the person who removed it after cutting her throat would necessarily have been drenched with blood and he would have been standing in a pool of blood while he performed the operation. In this condition he could not have slipped out of the northern door-way without leaving most conspicuous blood stains of which there is no trace whatever. In my opinion this theory of a murder by a stranger is quite impossible to believe and the suggested explanation of Sohrai's conduct therefore falls to the ground.

As to the accused Sawkhi it is suggested but with very little force that he was not present. He was seen by several witnesses at the door of the house weeping with Sohrai. He had been seen by the two chaukidars for the two days previously in the village and at the shop. Immediately after the event he fled to a village called Etawa where his father-in-law resides and took refuge with him. The whole family has attempted to shelter Sawkhi by saying that he had been absent from Tarwan for several days although they were unable to suggest where he had gone. But Kasi Sao, the uncle, is proved to have written a letter to Sawkhi and to have sent it to Etawa after Sawkhi had left for that place. In it he advised Sawkhi to get the people of Etawa to say that he had been there for several days. The letter was delivered to Sawkhi, but there is no evidence as to the nature of Sawkhi's action as a consequence of receiving the letter. It is therefore no evidence against Sawkhi but it serves to discredit Kasi Sao in his story that he did not know where Sawkhi had gone. The reference to "my brother" in Sohrai's first information which I have quoted above is clearly to Sawkhi and not to Kishun. Sawkhi moreover has not attempted to call any evidence as to his whereabouts at the time of the occurrence. *

A further point was taken by Mr. Nandkeolyar on behalf of the appellants based upon the matter of an alleged reception before the Sessions Judge of inadmissible evidence. The youngest brother Kishun was examined as a prosecution witness and upon manifestation by him of hostility to the prosecution the learned Judge in his discretion gave to the prosecution leave to cross-examine him. He was asked whether he had not previously made a statement which had been recorded by the Deputy Magistrate which conflicted with the account given by him in the Sessions Court. That statement after mentioning his visit to the house and the finding of the woman with her throat cut runs as follows:

"I enquired from mother who had killed her. She said "Sohrai had cut the neck" Sohrai was also in the house but not within hearing distance from us. I did not ask him anything. For a month Sohrai and his wife were not pulling well with each other. I do not know why. I had not seen Sohrai ever beat her but I saw them quarrelling during the period of one month as mentioned above. I could not make out why they quarrelled among them"

Now it is conceded by the prosecution, and rightly that the quotation of the mother's statement, although the mother is now dead, was inadmissible. Had the mother herself made the statement in the witness-box as quoted by Kishun it would not have amounted to evidence at all but merely to a statement in usurpation of the functions of the Court. It would have been otherwise if she had been reported as having said: "I saw Sohrai cut her throat." This part of the defence objection is sound, but the misreception of this piece of evidence could, in my opinion, have had very little weight and no substantial injustice has been done. Moreover it would not appear that any objection was raised at the trial.

It is, however, further objected that the entire statement (and in particular that portion relating to quarrels between Sohrai and his wife) was inadmissible for the following reason: The witness had been declared hostile and according to the contention of Mr. Nandkeolyar this necessarily implies that the witness was wholly discredited and the prosecution having discredited their own witness are not entitled to rely upon any part of his evidence. I am aware that in India from time to time this curious view of the consequence of declaring a witness hostile has become current. The whole idea has been allowed to grow out of an observation reported as having been made by Lord Campbell in an old Scottish case: Faulkner v. Brine (1). This was accepted by the Calcutta High Court in such cases as Khijruddin v. Emperor (2) and more recently by Cuming and Lort-Williams, JJ., in Mokbul Khan v. Emperor (3). In this latter case the learned Judges said:

"In other words a party cannot be allowed to say that his witness is a truthful witness so far as a part of his evidence is concerned but an untruthful witness so far as some other portion is concerned."

* The theory so stated is fallacious. A party is allowed to cross-examine his own witness because that witness displays hostility and not necessarily because he displays untruthfulness. The theory has gained currency owing perhaps to the common belief that the sole object of cross-examination is to discredit the witness whereas its main purpose is to obtain admissions, and it would be ridiculous to assert that a party cross-examining a witness is thereby prevented from relying on admission, and to hold that the fact that the witness is being cross-examined implies an admission by the cross-examiner that all the witness's statements are falsehoods. The correct view was, in my opinion, expressed in Emperor v. Jehangir Cama (4). Moreover the opinion of Lord Campbell has never been followed in England and the English Law upon which the Evidence Act is founded was clearly stated by Tindal, C. J., in Bradley v. Ricardo (5). Therefore that part of Kishun's statement which is contained in his statement to the Magistrate was clearly admissible.

In my opinion the guilt of both the appellants has been established on the clearest possible grounds and admits of no doubt whatever and the appeal should be dismissed. The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion, upon what I think is very inadequate evidence, that the murder was committed by the appellants with a view to save their family from dishonour which would sooner or later have fallen upon them by reason of the habits of the deceased. But even if there had been adequate ground to believe that they were so inspired this would not constitute any reason for relieving these men of extreme penalty. It would establish a most dangerous and immoral principle to concede to any jealous husband the right to assassinate his wife and escape the gallows. The reason for passing the lesser sentence must be express and adequate. Such reasons are some times to be found in the order of mentality to which the person belongs. A simple-minded ignorant savage who slaughters a person whom he really believes to be a dangerous magician may well fall into this class. In this province moreover the position of women, deprived of contact with the world, of education and of all opportunity for mental development, would, save in very extreme cases, justify a Court in treating them as persons who should not be sentenced to death. Sometimes also an extenuating fact may be found in the circumstances of the crime itself, such, for example, as those which often occur in agrarian riots where a free and honest fight on equal terms results in death although the crime may nevertheless not fall within the exceptions to S. 300, I. P. C.

I must observe that a feeling of doubt as to the guilt of the accused is a matter to be considered by the tribunals before but not after the verdict. It has no place in the determination of the sentence after conviction. If the evidence is not strong enough to justify an irrevocable sentence the accused is entitled to acquittal, and our law does not recognize the right of a judicial tribunals to give effect to more than one degree of doubt. It is not permissible for a Judge to sentence a prisoner to transportation for life on the ground that he is sufficiently certain of the guilt for that purpose but not sufficiently certain to sentence him to death. I mention this matter because it may throw light on some of the reported decisions which are otherwise inexplicable on judicial grounds.

Finally it must be noted that those in whose hands is placed the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy are not trammelled by any legal considerations whatever and may be trusted to exercise their powers. The legislature has wisely not thought fit, to entrust judicial tribunals with the prerogative of mercy and Judges must remember that they are sworn to administer the law not as they wish it might be but as they find it. The case we are dealing with is one of brutal assassination of a sleeping and defenceless woman and I can see no reason why the murderers should not suffer the extreme penalty. I would, therefore, set aside the sentence of transportation for life and sentence the appellants Sohrai Sao and Sawkhi Sao to be hanged by the neck till they are dead.

Criminal Appeal No. 167 of 1929, Decided on 20th December 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Manbhum-Sambalpur, D/- 2nd September 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 302—Sentence.

Unless extenuating circumstances can be found, a murderer must be sentenced to death. [P 523 C 2]

J. Chatterji and R. S. Chatterji—for Appellant.

*C. M. Agrawal*a—for the Crown.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur convicting the appellant Khudu Rajak of the murder of his wife Puti Rajakin on 21st April last. He was sentenced to transportation for life and by direction of the Court notice was served upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be changed to one of death.

The accused is of the dhobi caste and is a resident of village Kana situated two miles from the Thana of Balarampur. He is aged about 27 years. His father died some four years ago and since then he has been master of his own assets and affairs. He is fairly well off and has a pucca house. His deceased wife Puti Rajakin was the daughter of one Panu Rajak of a village called Nekra in the same district about two miles from village Kana. At the date of her death she was about 17 years old. She married the appellant at about 8 or 9 years of age and went at once to her husband's house. She attained puberty four or five years ago. The life of the married couple was not happy. The appellant used to beat his wife and on at least one occasion she ran away to her father's house and complained to him of the treatment she received. She also complained to her grandmother, the mother of her father. Her own mother is dead and her father has married again. She complained to them that the appellant had beaten and ill-treated her and showed the marks on her body and she told her grandmother that the treatment by her husband was due to the fact that he had entered into an intrigue with another woman named Nuni Baisnabi. This person is of about the same age as the appellant. She is separated from her husband and carries on a small grocer's shop at Kana where she lives with her mother. There is evidence that the appellant used to spend much of his time with this woman.

The house of the appellant is a single storeyed building with a flat pucca roof. It has a verandah facing south; and north of this verandah there are three rooms each with a door leading on to the verandah. In the westernmost room cows are kept. This room has a door in its western wall by which access is obtained to a staircase of two flights leading to the roof. The upper end of the staircase is surrounded by walls standing up from the main roof and the enclosed space is covered to protect the stairs. The southernmost enclosing wall has a door in it by which a person passing from the staircase may come out on to the roof. The roof of the house has a small parapet a few inches high on the north side. Adjacent to the house and south of the verandah is a courtyard which is shared by the appellant with his uncle Nayan Rajak whose house lies on the east and south-east of the appellant's house.

On the night of 21st May there were in the house of the appellant only four persons, the appellant himself, his wife, who died that night, the appellant's mother and a boy of about 13 or 14 named Hiru Rajak. He is a distant cousin of the appellant and about four or five days before had been engaged by the appellant as his cowherd.

At 8-30 a.m., there appeared at the Balarampur thana the uncle of the appellant, Nayan Rajak accompanied by some villagers. He lodged a first information, which was recorded by the writer head constable, the Sub-Inspector being absent that morning on other business. He stated that early that morning Khudu had called to him to come up to the roof and see his wife who was lying dead having committed suicide by cutting her throat with a sword; that he had gone up to the roof and found Khudu there and on the middle of three khatias, which were lying side by side east and west, with their heads close to the eastern wall surrounding the staircase exit he saw the body of Khudu's wife. Her throat was cut, there was much blood about and a bloodstained sword was lying on the ground close to the khatia. He said that the other cots had been occupied, that on the north by the boy Hiru and that on the south by Khudu. He said that the sword belonged to Khudu, and that it together with a bow and arrows had been kept on the roof. He said that Khudu's mother slept in the courtyard downstairs. He further said that Khudu was weeping and that when he had been asked by Nayan and fellow villagers, who had been called to the scene, to come to the police station to give information Khudu had said: "Proceed, I am coming" and had set out before them. They had not, however, found him on the way.

The head-constable went to the spot at 10-30 a.m., and held an inquest on the body and subsequently sent it to the hospital for a post-mortem report. He found and took charge of the sword and its sheath and also found a bow and arrows close by. The deceased was lying on her right side and had two gaping wounds on the left side of the neck severing the spinal cord. They must have been inflicted with great force by a heavy sharp weapon and there can be no doubt that they were inflicted with the sword which was found.

Naya Rajak gave his evidence before the Sessions Judge and a particularly foolish cross-examination by Babu Chandi Charan Chatterji, who appeared for the defence, established beyond doubt that the sword was Khudu's property. The witness, however, somewhat altered the story that he had given in first information and this alteration is undoubtedly due to his desire to shield his nephew. He stated that the appellant had said that "some one had cut the woman's neck" and when reminded by the Court that he had stated in the first information that Khudu's mother slept that night in the courtyard he replied :

"I did not see her sleeping there. I said so but it was a mistake. I only saw the khatia."

He, however, admitted that he himself had slept in his own angan and from there he admitted that the courtyard was visible. It is very clear not only that Khudu's mother had in fact slept in the courtyard downstairs as stated in the first information but that Nayan had actually seen her sleeping there. The mother Sukhada Rajakin and the boy Hiru have both given evidence. The mother says that she and Hiru and the deceased woman were the persons who slept on the roof. She says that Khudu went out after the evening meal and that she does not know when he returned home. She says that the doorway leading from the bottom of the staircase into the cow room had been bolted and that no one can have got on to the roof by means of the staircase. She says that she had slept soundly through the night and when she had waked up she had found her daughter-in-law lying dead covered with blood and the sword on the ground and that she had then gone down the stairs and opened the door and found her son sleeping on the verandah. This is a very natural and very pitiful effort to shield her son and to my mind the story is entirely incredible. It will be remembered that three khatias were found on the roof by Nayan when he went up there. The northernmost one bore no blood stains. On the middle one Puti was lying but the southernmost one was conspicuously blood-stained.

It is to my mind certain that the husband and the wife both slept on the roof as stated by Nayan in the first information. Whether or not the boy slept on the roof is not certain but he is of an age when such a proceeding would seem very unlikely. The probability is that the third and northernmost khatia was placed upon the roof after the murder had been committed and it was probably placed there by the appellant assisted by his mother. It is true that in the first information Nayan says that the boy slept on the roof but he was not called to the scene until after the third cot was in position and I think it likely that at that time it had not been decided between Khudu and his mother to say that she (the mother) had slept on the roof. It is quite incredible that the mother could have slept on the roof or that she was the first to discover the crime for in that case Nayan would have been told of this fact the moment he appeared on the scene and neither in the first information nor in his evidence in Court does he make any mention of having been told that it was the mother who had first discovered the dead body. Moreover had she been the first to discover the murder she would undoubtedly have raised an outcry.

Indeed Rai Bahadur Jyotirmoy Chatterji who presented the case for the appellant with the greatest skill and energy, was constrained to admit that the story of the mother having slept on the roof was too incredible to have any chance of success. He, however, boldly advanced a very ingenious hypothesis to account for the death of the deceased. He admitted that the situation and structure of the buildings rendered it almost impossible that the murderer can have approached the roof otherwise than by the stairs and he offered the theory that the woman Nuni Baisnabi, who was the appellant's mistress, instigated the murder. He suggested that she may have previously arranged with some other person that on the night of 21st May, she should lure the appellant to an assignation at her own house and that in his absence and while the door to the staircase was left unguarded the assassin should come to the house and murder the wife who might be expected at that time to be asleep. It being pointed out to the learned advocate that in that case a murderer would probably bring his own weapon, he quickly and ingeniously replied that such a murderer if he found the sword which was admittedly on the roof would prefer to use such a convenient weapon and leave it behind him to divert suspicion. He admitted that this hypothesis was supported by no evidence whatsoever but urged that it was consistent with the facts and ought to be treated as a possibility. Ingenious however as the theory is, it must in my opinion fail as an explanation. In the first place it is extremely improbable that a woman in the position of Nuni Baisnabi can have possessed the means to purchase the services of such an assassin. Secondly the risk to be run by the assassin was such as would deter any sane man from the attempt. Thirdly there was no financial inducement in the actual commission of the crime for no robbery was committed. Fourthly it is quite impossible that Nuni Baisnabi could have induced a lover to undertake such an enterprise for the benefit of a rival lover. Lastly, if Nuni Baisnabi had been the instigator of the murderer the appellant is the one person who would have been selected by her as the assassin.

As against the appellant there is first of all the evidence of motive. He had relations with a mistress and it was on account of this relationship that he quarrelled with his wife and beat her. This fact was amply established by another piece of foolish cross-examination by Babu Chandi Charan Chatterji. Secondly the blood-stained weapon with which the murder must undoubtedly have been committed was the property of the appellant. Thirdly, we have the conduct of the appellant himself. He was afraid to go to the thana with his uncle. The murder must have been committed by a man and he was the only man in the house. The murder clearly could not have been committed by a chance robber for he would have had no motive for attacking this one woman out of two or three sleeping persons. To my mind the evidence establishes beyond all reasonable doubt the guilt of the appellant and the learned Judge quite rightly convicted him.

I pass now to a consideration of the sentence which has been passed upon the appellant. The learned Sessions Judge said :

"I find the accused guilty and convict him under S. 302, I. P. C. As, however, no adequate motive for the crime has been made out, I would not be justified in imposing on him the extreme penalty of the law."

In this matter the learned Judge has made a very grave mistake. It has long been well established law that unless extenuating circumstances can be found a murderer must be sentenced to death. It is a most painful duty which we are obliged to perform but it is our duty to insist that the Sessions Courts shall carry out the obligations imposed upon them by law. The question whether or not the death sentence is imposed should not depend upon the particular Judge who happens to try the case and in the interests of accused persons it is right that they should be able to expect the same results, no matter by what Judge they happen to be tried. I have been at pains to point this out in an earlier case Sohrai Sao v. Emperor (1). That also was a case in which the Court was obliged to enhance the sentence of transportation for life to one of death. In that case (1) decided on 8th June 1929 I said:

"The reason for passing the lesser sentence must be express and adequate. Such reasons are sometimes to be found in the order of mentality to which the person belongs. A simple-minded ignorant savage, who slaughters a person whom he really believes to be a dangerous magician, may well fall into this class. In this province moreover the position of women, deprived of contact with the world, of education and of all opportunity for mental development would, save in very extreme cases justify a Court in treating them as persons who should not be sentenced to death. Sometimes also an extenuating fact may be found in the circumstances of the crime itself, such, for example, as those which often occur in agrarian riots where a free and honest fight on equal terms results in death although the crime may nevertheless not fall within the exceptions to S. 300, I. P. C. I must observe that a feeling of doubt as to the guilt of the accused is a matter to be considered by the tribunal before but not after the verdict. It has no place in the determination of the sentence after conviction. If the evidence is not strong enough to justify an irrevocable sentence the accused is entitled to acquittal, and our law does not recognize the right of a judicial tribunal to give effect to more than one degree of doubt. It is not permissible for a Judge to sentence a prisoner to transportation for life on the ground that he is sufficiently certain of the guilt for that purpose but not sufficiently certain to sentence him to death. I mention this matter because it may throw light on some of the reported decisions which are otherwise inexplicable on judicial grounds. Finally it must be noted that those in whose hands is placed the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy are not trammelled by any legal considerations whatever and may be trusted to exercise their powers. The legislature has wisely not thought fit to entrust judicial tribunals with the prerogative of mercy and Judges must remember that they are sworn to administer the law not as they wish it might be but as they find it. The case we are dealing with is one of brutal assassination of a sleeping and defenceless woman and I can see no reason why the murderers should not suffer the extreme penalty."

In this particular case the reasoning of the learned Judge for not passing the sentence of death means either that he is not certain of the guilt of the appellant or that a person who murders his wife without reason is less blameworthy than one who does so in order to get rid of her in favour of a mistress. I have no desire whatever to make any observation which might be taken as a reflection upon the mental integrity of so experienced a Judge. The statement of his reason merely exhibits a confusion of mind. For the reasons I have stated I would dismiss this appeal, set aside the sentence of transportation for life and sentence the appellant Khudu Rajak to be hanged by the neck till he is dead.

Raza, J.—This is a reference from the learned third. Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow against a jury verdict acquitting a certain Chiraunji Lal. The case was tried by the learned Judge and a jury who unanimously acquitted Chiraunji Lal. We have been through the record. The learned Judge tried the case very carefully and very fairly. The charge to the jury was a good charge. The jury unanimously acquitted Chiraunji Lal. This is a case in which a great deal could be said on both sides. The Sessions Judge's view is a good view and a possible view but we cannot go so far as to say that the jury's view was a bad view or an impossible view. The case was undoubtedly not free from difficulty and the evidence of the complainant Chhotey Lal was open to considerable criticism. The jury took the view that the evidence was unreliable. We do not say that they were right but we certainly cannot say that they were wrong and in these circumstances we are unable to reverse their verdict. The result is that we acquit Chiraunji Lal and direct him to be set at liberty.

Criminal P. C., S. 239—Two persons abducting girl—Third person not taking part in abduction—Cheating third person by false representation as to caste of girl—Transactions cannot be said to be same.

A transaction of abduction for which two persons have been convicted cannot be said to be part of the same transaction when a third person not alleged to have taken part in the abduction proceeds to cheat, by false representation as to caste etc. of the girl, a person who buys the girl, there being no continuity of purpose, nor any contiguity of time. [P 524 C 2]

Judgment.—The joint trial of all these persons has not been justified by counsel for the Crown. He refers only to S. 239 (d) and contends that the transaction was one. I am unable to see how the transaction of abduction for which two persons have been convicted is part of the same transaction when a third person not alleged to have taken part in the abduction proceeded to cheat by false representation as to the caste etc. of the girl, a person who bought the girl. There does not seem any continuity of purpose or any contiguity of time. I, therefore, accept the revision and quash the conviction and the sentences as the trial was wholly illegal.

G. S. Pathak—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Ghazipur refusing to convert an order of discharge into an order of acquittal. The facts are these: One Jagardeo brought a complaint against the two applicants under S. 498, I. P. C. On 28th January 1929, the day appointed for the hearing of the case, the Magistrate was informed that the complainant and the applicants wished to compound the offence, and at the same time a written petition signed by all the parties was filed, praying the Court to pass the appropriate order. On that document itself appeared in the handwriting of the complainant the words "the compromise which is written here is correct." The Magistrate passed an order that the composition was to be verified and appointed 13th February for the first hearing. The applicants take objection to this order. They contend that when the composition was filed and the offence compounded the Magistrate's duty was, under S. 345, sub-S. (6), Criminal P. C., to acquit the accused. On 13th February, the complainant told the Court that he wished to withdraw from the composition, and the case was further postponed until 23rd March 1929. On that day the complainant did not appear to prosecute, and the Magistrate dismissed the complaint and discharged the applicants under S. 259, Criminal P. C. Subsequently the complainant brought a fresh complaint based upon precisely the same allegations as in the former complaint against the applicants. On this the applicants filed a revision against the order of the Magistrate of 23rd March 1929, by which the applicants were discharged.

The applicants contend that the order of the Magistrate should have been that of acquittal.

Section 345 makes it clear that an offence under S. 498 is compoundable by the husband of the woman without the permission of the Court. Sub-S. (6) enacts that the composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused. The only question, therefore, for the Magistrate on 28th January, was whether there was in fact a composition of the offence or not. The best evidence he could possibly have was before him, namely, a document signed by the parties in the handwriting of the complainant himself that the composition was correct. It seems to me that it was entirely unnecessary, when the parties were all present in Court, for any verification of the composition. The complainant was literate. He signed the document in his own writing. It must be presumed, unless it is proved to the contrary, that the complainant well understood the one small paragraph that appeared in the document. In any case, the only verification that was required was a simple question to the parties whether they signed the document and whether they understood its contents. There can be no doubt that on that day there was a valid composition within the meaning of S. 345, Criminal P. C., before the Court. It was, therefore, the duty of the Magistrate upon that day, and without any unnecessary delay, to have pronounced an acquittal. I am clear that it is incompetent for any person once having entered into a valid composition to withdraw from it. In criminal matters it is of the highest importance that there should be finality. It has been suggested in this case that the terms of the composition were not carried out, and that is why the complainant wished to withdraw from it. It is entirely immaterial whether the terms of the composition were carried out or not. The sole question is whether there was a composition on 28th January. A breach of the agreement might give rise to other remedies. I am confirmed in my view of the law in this matter by an overwhelming number of authorities in the other High Courts of India. They are unanimous that a composition once effected cannot be withdrawn: see Kusum Bewa v. Bechu Bewa (1); Mahomed Ismail v. Faizuddin (2); Mahomed Kanni Rowther v. Inayathulla Sahib (3); Murray v. Queen Empress (4); Kumaraswami Chetty v. Kuppuswami Chetty (5); Ram Rup Pal v. Mata Din (6). The revision is accepted, the order of 23rd March 1929, discharging the applicants is cancelled and an order of acquittal substituted.

Adami, J.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur under S. 438, Criminal P. C.

One Mangal Chand Marwari gave information against Makhan Goala to the effect that he had stolen an umbrella and that there had been an assault. The learned Deputy Magistrate, after a full trial of the case, came to the conclusion that the defence story was true and he acquitted the accused under S. 253 on 8th September 1928. In the order-sheet under O. 5, dated 8th September 1928, the order passed was:

"The accused is acquitted under S. 253, Criminal P. C. Enter false-S. 390, I. P. C."

Then in Order 6 on the same date the order is recorded:

"The information given to the police by the complainant appears to be frivolous and vexatious. The complainant is absent. Summon him to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay Rs. 50 as compensation to the accused under S. 250, Criminal P. C., on 15th September 1928."

The complainant showed cause on 15th September 1928, and on 19th the order directing compensation to be paid was signed by the Deputy Magistrate.

The learned Sessions Judge has referred this case on the point that the order directing cause to be shown not having been passed before the judgment was signed acquitting the accused, the provision of S. 250, sub-S. (1), has not been complied with, and that therefore, the order is ultra vires. S. 250, sub-S. (1), has been amended and requires that:

"The Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused."

The learned Sessions Judge is of opinion that the provision is mandatory and that unless the order to show cause is included within the actual judgment the order is ultra vires. There have been many cases on the point both under the old section and under the section as amended. In the present case we have the assurance of the trying Magistrate that he passed the order on the order-sheet acquitting the accused and the order calling upon him to show cause simultaneously though the two orders in the order-sheet have two separate numbers. We must accept the statement of the trying Magistrate. The question is whether when the order to show cause is, though not a part of the judgment, signed immediately after the judgment, the order can be taken to be part of the same proceeding and continuation of it. In my mind, there is no doubt that had the order to show cause been made on a subsequent date or after some interval, the provisions of the law must have been held not to have been complied with. But here in the present case it is obvious, on the statement of the Magistrate, that the two orders were really passed at one and the same time and were a part of the same proceeding. In the case of Ghulam Muhammad v. Vir Bhan (1) the learned Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court finding that both the orders were passed on the same day and one followed the other, was of opinion that there had been a substantial compliance with the requirements of S. 250, sub-S. (1), Criminal P. C. He followed the case of Emperor v. Punamchand Hirachand (2). The decision in the case of Jairaj Singh v. Ransi (3) is to the same effect. There have also been decisions which are to the same effect under the section before its amendment.

I would, therefore, hold that where the order to show cause is practically simultaneous with the order of acquittal or discharge the provisions of the section have been substantially complied with.

I think, therefore, that the reference must be rejected and the order of the Deputy Magistrate must stand.

v.

Mukhtiarkar of Karachi

Criminal Ref. No. 299 of 1929, Decided on 12th February 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 197—Failure of Mukhtiarkar to keep office compound in sanitary condition is failure in discharge of his official duty—Sanction of Commissioner is necessary for prosecution.

It being the duty of Mukhtiarkar to keep his office compound in a sanitary condition, he fails in his duty as a Mukhtiarkar if he does not do so and his action purports to be in the discharge of his official duty. In a criminal complaint against him sanction of Commissioner is necessary. (1916) 1 M. W. N. 384 and A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 172, Dist; 25 Mad. 15, Not Appl. [P528, C 1]

Kundan Mal Dayaram—for Karachi Municipality.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J.C.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Karachi who asks that this Court should quash the order of the Honorary Magistrates entertaining a complaint and issuing process against the Mukhtiarkar of Karachi. The reference is made on the ground that the complaint has been filed without the previous sanction of the Commissioner in Sind, as required by S. 197, Criminal P. C. In this case the Karachi Municipality had issued a notice under S. 131, Bombay District Municipal Act. (Bombay 3 of 1901,) to the Mukhtiarkar of Karachi on the ground that the compound of the old Small Cause Court in Karachi, which is the office of the Mukhtiarkar, was in insanitary condition.

The only point that arises in this reference is whether, assuming that the Mukhtiarkar kept the compound in an insanitary condition, he was acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. There have been a number of rulings cited on S. 197, Criminal P. C. but it is to be noted that most of the rulings, especially Municipal Commrs. Mad. v. Major Bell (1) cited by the learned pleader for the Municipality, was decided under the old S. 197, before it was amended in 1923. Under the old S. 197 the words were "as such Judge or public servant," but this has been changed and the wording now is "acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty." Before referring to the cases we may just consider the facts of the present case. It is clear that the Mukhtiarkar was in charge of the building in question as an official. The notice was given to him as Mukhtiarkar, the name of the Mukhtiarkar is not mentioned in the proceeding at all. All the proceedings in question were official. He was occupying the building as Mukhtiarkar. The sweeper appointed to keep the compound in a sanitary condition must have been a sweeper paid by the Government. It appears therefore prima facie that this is a case in which the Mukhtiarkar was acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. A distinction is made in the various cases cited between the cases in which an official is acting within the scope of his duty and the cases in which he has not done the act as an official but has taken certain action which is outside the scope of his duty. For example, the case most favourable to the Municipality seems to be Abdul Khader Sahib, In re (2) in which it was held by the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court that the offence of criminal breach of trust is not an offence which is committed by an official in his capacity of public servant as such, his capacity of public servant being only that which puts him, so to speak, in a position in which such an offence can be committed. Here, however, the case is a little different. It is a distinct part of the duty of the Mukhtiarkar to keep the office in a sanitary condition, and if he fails in his duty, he has failed in it as Mukhtiarkar. It cannot be said that, if it is proved that he kept the compound in an insanitary condition, the action was outside the scope of the Mukhtiarkar. The most recent case on the subject is A. I. R. 1929 Madras 172, which is referred to by the learned pleader for the Municipality but even that case, it seems to me, does not really support the Municipality. In that instance as a matter of fact, the learned Judge held that sanction was necessary, because it was held that, if a Judge fabricates a record, the alleged offence is committed by him while he is purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. There are other cases on the boundary line, but I am of opinion that S. 197, as it stands at present, is rather wider than it was, before the section was amended in 1923. The wording now is "acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty," and I am clearly of opinion that the Mukhtiarkar in this case was so acting.

We accordingly quash the order of the Honorary Magistrate and set it aside.

Criminal Ref. No. 294 of 1929, Decided on 21st December 1929, Criminal P. C., S. 215 — Offence not serious though death of person involved—Magistrate should not commit case to Sessions.

There is no reason to commit to the Sessions, cases where the Magistrate can adequately deal with the offence himself and no overriding reason exists for committal to the higher Court, even if the death of person is involved therein : 11 S. L. R. 79; A. I. R. 1924 Sind 61 and 15 Bom. L. R. 978, Rel. on. [P 528 C 2, P 523 C 1]

Hatim B. Tyebji—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge, Sukkur, proposing that this Court should quash the commitment to the Sessions Court of Sukkur of one Allahdad, son of Khair Mahomed, who has been committed to that Court for trial under Ss. 279, 337 and 304-A, I. P. C., by the Resident Magistrate, Rorhi.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge points out in his reference that the maximum sentence of imprisonment for any of the offences in question is only two years, a sentence which could have been passed by the learned Committing Magistrate himself. Moreover the offence under S. 304-A as well as the other offences are triable by a First Class Magistrate. The learned Additional Sessions Judge observes further that it has been held by this Court in Imperator v. Ismail (1) and in other cases that it is a point of law under S. 215, Criminal P. C., if the Magistrate without adequate reason commits a case to the Sessions in which he can adequately punish the accused himself: vide in particular Utlilbai v. Emperor (2). The learned Additional Sessions Judge correctly points out that there may be cases in which a committal is desirable even apart from the question of punishment. He observes :

"It is true that good cause for commitment is not limited to this reason of inadequacy of punishment. For there may be other good reasons, such as difficult or intricate questions of law, the desirability of trial by jury or assessors, or there being some connected matter already before the Court of Sessions. None of the above grounds exists in the present case."

The committal proceedings show that this was a case of a person being killed by a motor car colliding with stone-carrying truck, the accused being the driver of the car. It does not appear that there is any overriding reason or matter of such importance as to require commitment to the Sessions on grounds other than the question of the adequacy of the sentence. The learned Resident Magistrate in his committal proceedings has observed that it was a question in which the death of one person and injury to another person were involved, and that he considers, therefore, the matter to be serious and a proper one for commitment.

There, no doubt, has been at least one ruling in which it has been held that, when an offence ends in the death of a person, it is suitable that it should be committed to the Sessions. However, on the other hand there have been rulings to the contrary effect, namely that there is no reason to commit to the Sessions cases where the Magistrate can adequately deal with the offence himself, even if the death of person is involved therein. The rulings of this Court appear to be particularly in favour of the latter view: vide Imperator v. Ismail (1) mentioned above. The learned Additional Sessions Judge in the course of his order has also drawn attention to the case of Emperor v. Asha Byathi (3) in which their Lordships, while directing the Magistrate to conclude the trial himself, made the following remarks:

"In so doing we take occasion to observe that it is for many reasons undesirable in practice that our already overburdened Courts of Sessions should be still further burdened with the weight of cases committed to them by Magistrates, where such Magistrates are themselves competent to decide the cases and no overriding reasons exist for committal to the higher Courts."

I quite agree with the view there expressed and, accordingly, quash the commitment and direct the Resident Magistrate to proceed with and dispose of the case himself.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 1 of 1930, Decided on 10th February 1930, from order of first Class Magistrate, Karachi.

Criminal P. C. S. 256—Warrant case—Summary trial in—S.256 applies and accused is entitled to further time for producing his evidence,

Even if a warrant case is tried summarily, the provisions of S. 256 apply and after the prosecution case is closed, the accused is entitled to have further time for producing his evidence. [P 529, C 2]

Hassomal M. Gurbuzani for Applicant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the order of the First Class Magistrate, Karachi Taluka, who convicted the applicant under S. 448 I. P. C. and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 40/- or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one month.

The applicant contends that he should have been allowed to produce the defence witnesses. It appears that the case was heard on the 28th September and the accused was informed that, as the trial would be summary, he should appear at the next hearing with his witnesses. However, on the next hearing, namely, the 15th of October, he did not appear with the witnesses; but some of the prosecution witnesses were examined on that day, and the learned Magistrate refused to postpone the hearing any further for the defence witnesses. He also, as the judgment shows, did not examine two of the prosecution witnesses because they were absent and were "given up as the accused had no defence at hand."

The learned pleader for the applicant relies on S. 256, Criminal P.C. which he contends applies even in the case of summary trials if the case is a warrant case. The learned Public Prosecutor accepts this contention and I agree that the provisions of S. 256 should have been followed in this case, and the accused should have been allotted further time to produce his evidence in accordance with the provisions of that section. I agree that the provisions of S. 256 apply in warrant cases even if they are tried summarily. For this reason, the order of the learned First Class Magistrate is open to objection, and it is accordingly set aside. The fine, if paid, to be refunded.

I, however, do not see any reason why the case should not be remanded for a further hearing.

The case is accordingly remanded to the First Class Magistrate to enable the accused to call his witnesses in accordance with the provisions of S. 256 Criminal P. C. It will also be open to the prosecution, if so disposed, to call the two prosecution witnesses, Mohamed and Adam who were absent and given up because the accused had no defence at hand.

It may be observed that it seems to be a common opinion amongst Magistrates that, if cases are tried summarily, then S. 256, Criminal P. C. does not apply if the cases are warrant cases. I am, however, of opinion that S. 256 applies in such cases even if the proceedings are summary.

After the above order was passed it was suggested on behalf of the applicant that, as the case was decided as long ago as 15th October 1929 it would be preferable that the whole case should be tried de novo. We are of opinion that that is the best plan, having regard to all the facts of the case. The case should, therefore, be heard de novo by the learned Magistrate from its commencement.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1811 of 1929, Decided on 7th February 1930, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 30th September 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 253 (2) — Complaint prima facie disclosing offence—Magistrate cannot hold charge groundless unless he ascertains from complainant nature of evidence — Case of alleged breach of trust — Mere fact that matter is one of rendition of accounts does not justify discharge under S. 253 (2).

The mere fact that the matter is one of rendition of accounts and must be referred to the civil Court is obviously insufficient to justify an order of discharge under S. 253 (2) in a case of alleged breach of trust. To say that no case has been made out is not tantamount to saying the charge is 'groundless.' Where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, a Magistrate cannot hold the charge to be groundless unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced to prove it; and he can only judicially come to such a conclusion when he has at least ascertained from the complainant what is the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give: A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 149, Foll. [P 581, C 1]

Ram Lal Anand—for Petitioner.

Niamat Rai—for Respondent.

Order.—On 22nd May 1929, the petitioner filed a complaint under S. 406, I. P. C., against the respondent. This was made over to Lala Mathra Das Puri, Magistrate, Second Class, for disposal. The learned Magistrate after holding an enquiry under S. 202, Criminal P. C., issued a bailable warrant against the accused. On the date fixed the accused appeared, but the Magistrate, Lala Mathra Das, was on leave. The case was accordingly made over to another Magistrate Mr. Alamgir. Before him the accused objected that the complaint was incompetent, as a similar complaint filed by the same complainant had already been dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., by Mr. Mahamood, Magistrate, on 15th May 1929. Mr. Alamgir overruled the objection on 17th July 1929, and holding that he had jurisdiction to try the case adjourned the hearing to certain date, when the complainant was to be heard and his witnesses examined. In the meantime, the accused preferred a petition for revision to the Additional District Magistrate, repeating the objection that the dismissal of the former complaint under S. 203, barred the second complaint. The Additional District Magistrate heard this revision on 10th August 1929, and held that there was no force in the objection raised by the accused and that the second complaint was competent. But instead of dismissing the petition, he passed an order transferring the case to his file; proceeded there and then to examine the complainant who was present in Court, and forthwith passed an order discharging the accused under S. 253, Criminal P. C., remarking that :

"the matter was one of rendition of accounts and must be referred to the civil Courts."

The complainant has preferred a petition for revision to this Court and after hearing both counsel I am of opinion that the petition must succeed.

There is no doubt that the learned Additional District Magistrate had full power to transfer the case to his own file, but after such transfer he was bound to follow the procedure laid down in Ss. 252 and 253 of the Code.

It was open to Mr. Alamgir to hold an enquiry under S. 202 and to dismiss the complaint under S. 203. But after he had decided to summon the accused, the complainant should have been heard and his witnesses examined. In this case, neither Mr. Alangir before the transfer of the case, nor the Additional District Magistrate after the transfer, afforded the complainant any opportunity to produce his evidence. Under Cl. 2, S. 253, the Magistrate had no doubt a discretion to discharge the accused without taking all the evidence that the complainant wished to produce if he thought that the charge was groundless. But this does not mean that he could cut short the proceedings by refusing to summon any of the witnesses which the complainant wanted to examine. Moreover there is no clear finding by the learned Additional District Magistrate that he considered the charge to be "groundless." The mere fact that the :

"matter was one of rendition of accounts and must be referred to the civil Court" is obviously insufficient to justify an order of discharge under S. 253 (2) in a case of alleged breach of trust. As remarked in Sheriff Sahib v. Abdul Karim (1) :

"to say that no case has been made out is not tantamount to saying the charge is 'groundless.' Where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, a Magistrate cannot hold the charge to be groundless unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced to prove it; and he can only judicially come to such a conclusion when he has at least ascertained from the complainant what is the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give."

I set aside the order of the learned Additional District Magistrate, and send back the case for disposal to Lala Mathra Das Puri, Magistrate who had passed the order summoning the accused and who will now proceed to deal with the case in accordance with law. If, however, that Magistrate is not available, the District Magistrate may make over the case to the City Magistrate.

another in act of unloading pistol he knows to be loaded is guilty of negligence.

P knowing that a pistol was loaded, tried to unload it and while doing so acted so negligently that the pistol went off, killing C's son.

Held: that the act had been negligent on P's part and came within the purview of S. 304-A, and that the sentence of six months' simple imprisonment and Rs. 250 fine or three months more imprisonment in default was sufficient. [P 531 C 2]

B. R. Puri—for Petitioner.

M. L. Batra for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The evidence led in the case shows clearly that the facts of the case are as follows: The petitioner knowing that the pistol in question was loaded, was trying to unload it and while doing so, acted so negligently that the pistol went off and as a result the complainant's son was killed. In my opinion there is no doubt that this was a negligent act on the part of the petitioner and falls within the purview of S. 304-A, I. P. C. The only question therefore is of sentence. He has been given six month's simple imprisonment and Rs. 250 fine or three months' more simple imprisonment in default. The learned Sessions Judge has recommended enhancement to two years' rigorous imprisonment. The only case which I have been able to find which comes near this case in its facts is 12 Cox. 623. The sentence awarded was two months' imprisonment. I would have been inclined to leave matters as they stood but taking the above authority into account and the fact that the petitioner has been released on bail by an order of this Court, I consider that the petitioner may be let off with the sentence already undergone and the fine ordered. The application for enhancement is accordingly dismissed. The petition is accepted to the extent indicated.

Instead of doing so, they tried to sell her and being unsuccessful concealed her in the house of S where she was later on traced by her relations. It was contended that S did not know that D was a married girl.

Held: that even assuming that S did not know that D was a married girl, his attempt to sell her clearly made him liable under S. 366A. The manner in which S tried to dispose of D was clear indication of his intention or knowledge that the girl would be subjected to illicit intercourse. The conduct of N also showed his guilty knowledge and intention. A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 727. Dist. [P 532 C 2]

Dev Raj Sawhney—for Petitioners.

Khurshid Ahmad. for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Sher Singh and Nathu petitioners have been convicted under S. 366-A, I. P. C., and have been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment each.

The facts found by the learned Sessions Judge on appeal are that Mt. Daulate, aged about 16 years, having quarrelled with her husband, left his house with the idea of going to her maternal grandfather's house; and in doing so she had to pass through the village to which the two petitioners belong. In that village she first met Sher Singh petitioner and then Nathu. Nathu, it appears, is some sort of a distant relation of her maternal grandfather. She told him her story and he invited her to take her meal at his house and promised to take her to her maternal grandfather thereafter. She accepted this invitation and was given food by Nathu petitioner. During the night, however, Nathu instead of taking her to her maternal grandfather, took her to the house of Sher Singh who at about midnight put her on a mare and took her to a neighbouring village and attempted to sell her. He kept her there for some days. Being unsuccessful in disposing her off, Sher Singh brought her back to his own village and kept her concealed in his house. One of his neighbours who was inimically disposed towards him, having got scent of the affair reported the matter; the consequence was that a number of persons including the relations of the girl went to the house of Sher Singh and asked him to hand her over to them.

He, however, denied that she was in his house but later when pressed produced her from inside his house.

On these facts the two petitioners were convicted by the Magistrate under S. 366-A, I. P. C., and were sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment each. The Sessions Judge on appeal has maintained the conviction but has reduced the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts found by the learned Sessions Judge are supported by the evidence on the record and I do not consider that any good ground has been shown to enable me to examine such evidence on this petition for revision. The petitioners' counsel has contended that the petitioners specially Sher Singh had no knowledge that Mt. Daulate was a married woman and he could not, therefore, be convicted under S. 366-A, I. P. C. In support of this contention he cites Rati Ram v. Emperor (1) but this case, in my opinion, does not help him at all. The facts are quite distinguishable. In that case it was held that the accused gave shelter to the girl who was alleged to have been abducted by them and that they did not know that she was a married girl. In the present case, even assuming that Sher Singh did not know that Mt. Daulate was a married girl, his attempt to sell her clearly makes him liable under S. 366-A, I. P. C. He was not the legal guardian of the girl and the manner in which he tried to dispose her off is a clear indication of his intention or at least his knowledge that the girl would be subjected to illicit intercourse. It is not correct to say that a married woman alone can legally be subjected to illicit intercourse. So far as Nathu is concerned, the fact that by deceitful means he induced the girl to stay at his house and then instead of taking her to her grandfather took her to Sher Singh clearly shows his guilty knowledge and intention. In fact the circumstances of this case indicate a conspiracy between the two petitioners. I do not consider that the sentence is excessive at all.

In my opinion, the petitioners have been rightly convicted and I dismiss their petition.

Said Bibi—Petitioner.

Umar Din—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 5 of 1930, Decided on 14th February 1930, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Gujranwala, D/-21st December 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 488-(3)—Wife refusing to live with husband should be given chance to substantiate reasons for refusal by evidence—Court should consider grounds of refusal and pass order for maintenance in case of just grounds.

Where a wife lodges an application under S. 488 against her husband and is not willing to live with him, she should be given a chance by the Magistrate to substantiate her reasons for refusal to live with him by such evidence as she can produce. According to proviso 1 to S. 488 (3) it is desirable for the Magistrate to consider the grounds of refusal stated by the wife and in case he finds that there is just ground for her living apart from her husband he should pass an order of maintenance in spite of her not agreeing to live with her husband. [P 533 C 1]

Reference Order.—The facts of this case are as follows. Mt. Said Bibi lodged an application under S. 488, Criminal P. C., against her husband Umar Din. The trying Court Lala Mulkh Raj, Magistrate, 1st Class, Gujranwala, summoned the respondent, who offered to maintain his wife if she lived with him. She on being examined, stated that she was not willing to live with her husband, as he has another woman living with him since previous to his marriage with herself (applicant) and that he wanted either to kill her or to sell her. Thereupon the Magistrate dismissed the application without giving any chance to the applicant to prove her contention. The proceedings are submitted for revision on the following grounds:

The applicant Mt. Said Bibi should have been given a chance by the Magistrate to substantiate her reasons for refusal to live with her husband by such evidence as she could produce. According to the first proviso of S. 488 (3) Criminal P. C., it was desirable for the Magistrate to consider the grounds of refusal stated by her, and in case he found there was just ground for her living apart from her husband, he could have passed an order of maintenance in spite of her not agreeing to live with him.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 290 of 1929, Decided on 31st January 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 561-A—Special jurisdiction under S. 561-A can only be invoked in cases for which no provision is made in Code and to grant immediate relief—It must be exercised with due care—High Court should not exercise its inherent power for making pronouncement upon questions of law in order to guide Magistrate in conducting preliminary inquiry.

The special jurisdiction recognized by S. 561-A can be invoked only in exceptional cases for which no express provision has been made by the Code, and to redress only such grievance as calls for an immediate relief, which can be granted only by the High Court. The inherent jurisdiction should be exercised with due care and caution and must conform to sound general principles and precedents. It was never contemplated by the legislature that the High Court should exercise its inherent power for making pronouncements upon questions of law in order to guide a Magistrate in conducting a preliminary enquiry: *A. Shadi Lal, C. J.—This is an application, under S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., made by the Government Advocate on behalf of the Crown in a case which is pending before a Magistrate. The circumstances under which the application has been made, do not admit of any dispute. Seventeen persons are being prosecuted for several serious crimes, such as murder, dacoity, offences against the State and under the Explosive Substances Act, and also for criminal conspiracy. The Magistrate, who is conducting the preliminary enquiry, has already recorded the depositions of about 145 witnesses for the prosecution, and it is proposed to produce before him further evidence in support of the charges brought against the accused. But, as stated in the application there are many other witnesses:

"probably about 400 in number, who will be called in the Sessions Court (if the case is committed), whose evidence merely corroborates and supplements the evidence of the approvers and other principal witnesses," or is of a formal character.

It appears that two of the prisoners were arrested after the commencement of the enquiry, one of whom appeared before the Magistrate after 29 witnesses and the other after 84 witnesses, had been examined. The learned Government Advocate also states that another accused was arrested only a few days ago, after this application had been presented to the High Court.

To prevent delay at the preliminary stage of the case the prosecution do not desire to re-examine the witnesses whose evidence had been recorded before the appearance of the three absconding accused in Court. Nor do they wish to produce the witnesses, about 400 in number, who are expected to give corroborative or formal evidence. They, however, apprehend that the instructions contained in Chap. 9, para. 16, Vol. 2 of the rules and orders of the High Court, which require a Committing Magistrate to make his record complete, might prevent the Magistrate in the present case from complying with their request. They accordingly ask this Court to grant the following prayers :

"That directions may be given to the Magistrate that the above mentioned instructions contained in para. 16 at p. 74 of the High Court Rules and Orders, Vol. 2, should be relaxed so as to enable the Magistrate, if at any time he considers that a prima facie case has been established by the evidence led, to exercise the discretion given by S. 209 (3), Criminal P. C., and to refuse to issue process for the examination of further witnesses during the enquiry if he deems it unnecessary to do so.

(2) That directions may also be issued to the Magistrate that in spite of the said instructions above referred to, he is at liberty, if he considers it proper so to do, to pass an order under S. 512, Criminal P. C., dispensing with the attendance of the witnesses called prior to the appearance of any individual accused in his Court. The Magistrate may be further directed, if this Hon'ble Court deems fit, that these two accused be supplied with copies of the evidence of all witnesses recorded prior to their production in Court."

Mr. Amar Das, who appears for five prisoners, raises a preliminary objection that the law governing both the matters mentioned in the application is laid down in explicit terms in the Criminal Procedure Code and that the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court cannot be invoked for the purpose of guiding the Magistrate on points of law for which provision has been made by the legislature. Mr. Carden Noad, however, retorts that, though the Code states the law on the subject the instructions referred to above fetter the discretion of the Magistrate and that he would probably follow them, unless the High Court give directions to the effect that he is not bound to record all the evidence and that after he has taken all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or on behalf of the accused or as may be called for by himself he may refuse to issue process to compell the attendance of any witness at the instance of the prosecution or the defence, if, for, reasons to be recorded by him, he deems it unnecessary to do so. The determination of the question depends upon the interpretation to be placed upon S. 561-A, which is in these terms :

"Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice."

The reason for enacting this section, which, it is to be observed, was recently added to the Code by the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act 18 of 1923, does not require any elaborate discussion. No legislative enactment dealing with procedure can provide for all the cases that may possibly arise, and it is an established principle that Courts must possess inherent powers, apart from the express provisions of the law, which are necessary to their existence and the proper discharge of the duties imposed upon by law : vide "Courts and their jurisdiction" by J. D. Works 27, p. 170. This doctrine finds expression in S. 561-A, which as rightly pointed out by the learned Government Advocate, does not confer any new powers on the High Court, but merely recognizes and preserves the inherent powers previously possessed by it.

The section, as its language shows, embraces three classes of orders, namely, orders which may be necessary (1) to give effect to any order passed under the Code; (2) to prevent abuse of the process of any Court; and (3) to secure the ends of justice. The first two classes need not detain us long. It is an obvious proposition that when a Court has authority to make an order, it must also have power to carry that order into effect. If an order can lawfully be made, it must be carried out; otherwise it would be useless to make it. The power to enforce obedience to the mandates of the Court necessarily springs from the very existence of the authority to issue the mandates; and, if that power is not expressly given by the statute, it must be deemed to be inherent in the Court.

It is also clear that the authority of the Court exists for the advancement of justice, and if any attempt is made to abuse that authority, so as to produce injustice, the Court must have power to prevent that abuse. In the absence of such power the administration of law would fail to serve the purpose for which alone the Court exists, namely, to promote justice and to prevent injustice.

It is not, however, suggested that the present application has been made in order to enable the Magistrate to enforce any order made by him or to prevent abuse of the process of his Court. The object of the prosecution in making the application is to shorten the period of enquiry by dispensing with the production of evidence which may be deemed to be unnecessary at the present stage. It is no doubt open to the prosecution not to produce evidence which they consider unnecessary, but the trial Judge or the High Court may take objection to the legality of the order of commitment based upon an incomplete enquiry. The learned Government Advocate is naturally anxious to avoid such adverse finding, and asks this Court to make a pronouncement that the Code gives the Magistrate a discretion to curtail the proceedings in the manner specified in the application, and that he is not bound to follow the instructions requiring him to make his record complete by examining all the witnesses for the prosecution.

The matter is then narrowed down to the point whether these circumstances warrant the exercise by the High Court of its inherent jurisdiction on the ground that, in order to secure the ends of justice, it is necessary to make an order directing the Magistrate to conduct the enquiry in accordance with the suggestion made by the prosecution. Now, the rule is firmly established that the High Court does not possess nor did it ever possess, an unrestricted and undefined power to make any order which it might please to consider was in the interests of justice; vide, inter alia, Raju v. Emperor (1). The inherent power cannot be capriciously or arbitrarily exercised, but as observed by Woodroffe, J., in Hukum Chand v. Kamalanand Singh (2) the Court in the exercise of its inherent power must be careful to see that its decision is based on sound general principles and is not in conflict with them or the intentions of the legislature. That the inherent jurisdiction must be exercised with care is further emphasized, in so far as criminal cases are concerned, by the fact that, while S. 151 Civil P. C., which governs the exercise of the inherent power in civil cases recognizes the existence of this jurisdiction in all the civil Courts, superior as well as inferior, S. 561-A, Criminal P. C. expressly confines its operation to the High Court.

The jurisdiction to act ex debito justitiæ should be sparingly and cautiously exercised and only in those cases in which no other remedy is available. The application before us proceeds on the ground that the instructions quoted above are at variance with the law enacted by the legislature; and that, even when a conflict between the two is established, the Magistrate is likely to follow those instructions in preference to the statute law. To avoid this contingency we are asked to enter into a discussion upon the admissibility or otherwise of the depositions recorded in the absence of the absconding accused, and also to expound the law as to whether a Magistrate should or should not take all the available evidence before making an order of commitment. It must be remembered that the Magistrate has not determined these questions, and it is clear that any opinion which we may express at this initial stage, would be no more than a mere obiter dictum. That opinion may be followed by the subordinate Courts, but there can be little doubt that it would not be binding upon another Division Bench of this Court before whom the case may come up on appeal for final decision.

I am not aware of any judgment, and certainly none has been cited before us, in which a High Court has ever exercised its inherent jurisdiction to discuss questions of law which might arise, on the happening of a certain event, in a case pending in a subordinate Court. If we once decide to extend our inherent jurisdiction to a case of this description our decision would certainly be availed of by other persons interested in cases pending in the subordinate Courts; and we would be called upon to adjudicate upon all sorts of hypothetical questions. The High Court would then be required to perform the function of a legal adviser to the litigant and the subordinate Magistrate.

I have bestowed my anxious and earnest consideration upon the matter and reached the conclusion that the special jurisdiction recognized by S. 561-A can be invoked only in exceptional cases for which no express provision has been made by the Code, and to redress only such grievance as calls for an immediate relief, which can be granted only by the High Court. The inherent jurisdiction should be exercised with due care and caution and must conform to sound general principles and precedents. It was never contemplated by the legislature that the High Court should exercise its inherent power for making pronouncements upon questions of law in order to guide a Magistrate in conducting a preliminary enquiry. I would accordingly dismiss the application.

Broadway, J.—While it is possible that the rules of this Court might need consideration I am in complete agreement with my Lord the Chief Justice in the view that any opinion we might express would be a mere obiter dictum which would not have any binding force.

Indeed I consider that any such opinion might even be open to misconception by the subordinate Courts. I therefore concur in dismissing the application and in the reasons for so doing.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 718 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 650 of 1929, Decided on 13th December 1929, from judgment of Sub-Div. First Class Magistrate, Salem, in Criminal Appeal No. 15 of 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 257 — Discretionary powers of Magistrate in allowing witnesses to be cross-examined explained.

A Magistrate has a large discretion under S. 257. When, however, the accused clearly explains that he wanted an adjournment because his vakil was ill and if the witnesses are subsequently present there is no reason for not letting them be cross-examined.

Order—A Magistrate has a large discretion under S. 257, Criminal P. C., and if Lakshmayya v. Emperor (1) goes so far as to hold that once a Magistrate has summoned witnesses under S. 257, he is bound to compel their attendance although he is satisfied that it is unnecessary for the purposes of justice, I respectfully disagree.

However, in the present case the accused clearly explained that they wanted an adjournment because their vakil was ill, and as the witnesses were subsequently present there is no apparent reason for not letting them be cross-examined. The sentence is cancelled and the case ordered to be taken up as from when the cross-examination was refused. Fines will be refunded.

unless it appears to have been committed during derangement (13).

Every person is responsible for his acts although he may be suffering from mental derangement in cases where that mental derangement falls short of the unsoundness of mind described in S. 84, Penal Code, (14) and this unsoundness of mind should have reference to the time when the act was committed. The fact that a person subject to insane impulses or fits at some time before (15), or after, (16) the occurrence does not exempt him from responsibility.

If, however, a fit of madness had existed only shortly before the act, the presumption of sanity would be greatly weakened, or might absolutely disappear (17); but a plea of insanity at the time of trial will not avail the accused (18), although in such a case he will be tried in accordance with the procedure laid down in Chap. 34, Criminal P. C.

WHO IS ENTITLED TO EXEMPTION.

(18) Nota Ram v. The Queen, 56 P. R. 1866, Cr.

The cases decided by the various superior Courts of this country have laid down numerous precedents which serve a helpful guide for the present and the future.

A leading Indian case, Queen-Empress v. Kader Nasyer (19) has elucidated the law embodied in S. 84, I. P. C. In this case the appellant was tried on a charge of murder for causing the death of a boy. In defence the plea of insanity was urged. It appeared from the evidence that since his house was burnt the accused neglected house and field work, and frequently complained of pain in the head and spoke to himself; when pain was particularly severe he did not answer when spoken to; on one occasion he was seen eating rotsherd; he played and went about with children much more than was to be expected from a man of his age; the murder was committed without any sane motive; the accused was fond of the boy and he had no quarrel with the father of the boy; when the enquiry preliminary to the commitment was taken up, he was found not to be in a fit state of mind to be able to make his defence and the enquiry was not resumed until somewhat more than a year after.

On the other hand, the accused observed some secrecy in committing the murder: he tried to conceal the corpse and hid himself in a jungle; his recollection of the act was full and clear. The two assessors were for acquitting the accused on the ground of unsoundness of mind. The Sessions Judge disagreeing with them convicted him of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life.

The question before the High Court was, whether the circumstances were sufficient to exempt the accused from responsibility for the crime?

On the facts briefly narrated above the Judges arrived at the conclusion that the circumstances attending the murder showed that the accused could not have been devoid of such knowledge, though they also showed that he must, at the time, have been suffering from mental derangement of some sort. It was held that it is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility, the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law.

In this case the observations of the Judges on the question of the applicability of S. 84, I. P. C., in cases where insanity affects the offender's will and emotions are worthy of note.

"It might be said of our law, as it has been said of the law of England by Sir J. Stephen (20), that even, as it stands, the law extends the exemption as well to cases where, insanity affects the offender's will and emotions as to those where it affects his cognitive faculties, because where the will and emotions are affected by the offender being subjected to insane impulses, it is difficult to say that his cognitive faculties are not affected. In extreme cases that may be true; but we are not prepared to accept the view as generally correct that a person is entitled to exemption from criminal liability under our law in cases in which it is only shown that he is only a subject of insane impulses, notwithstanding that it may appear clear that his cognitive faculties, so far as we can judge from his acts and words, are left unimpaired."

The view expressed in this case have been generally and repeatedly followed by all the High Courts of this country (22).

The circumstances of a person having acted under the irresistible influence to the commission of homicide, is no defence, if at the time he committed the act he knew he was doing what was wrong (23), for a mere uncontrollable impulse of the mind co-existing with the full possession of the reasoning powers, will not warrant an acquittal on the ground of insanity; the question for decision being, whether the prisoner, at the time he committed the act, knew the character and nature of the act and that it was a wrongful one, (24); if he was not conscious that the effect of his act would be to injure any other person he must be held not guilty (25). Where a person is in a state of mind in which he is liable to fits of madness, it is for the jury to consider whether the act done was during such a fit, though there is nothing before or after the act to indicate it, and though there is, some evidence of design or malice (26).

DELUSION — ITS EXISTENCE AND EXTENT:

In Courts of law insanity has been looked upon as implying the existence of delusion, and the terms, "delusion" and "insanity" have been regarded as practically synonymous.

A delusion is an incorrigible false belief — a false belief which no evidence however, plain, no authority, however paramount, can overcome. In anything connected with the delusion the reasoning is vitiated, the judgment is unsound; and this vitiation and unsoundness spread beyond the delusion and the things connected with it, to an extent which we can never ascertain or define. The intellect of a person affected with delusion is like a plot of ground into which a brick of mushroom spawn has been inserted. We can never tell how far now in what direction the mycelium spread, nor in what quarter it will next evidence its presence by a fungus growth (27).

The law respecting the effect of the existence of a partial delusion at the time of the commission of an act is contained in the answer of the Judges to question 4 in the McNaghten Case. The question put by the House of Lords was as follows:

"If a person under an insane delusion as to existing facts commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?"

The Judges replied: The answer must of course depend on the nature of the delusion, but making the same assumption as we did before, namely that he labours under such partial delusion only, and is not in other respects insane, we think he must be considered in the same position as to responsibility as the facts with respect to which the delusion exists were real. For example if under the influence of his delusion he supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away his life, and he kills that man, as he supposes in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted a serious injury to his character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for such supposed injury, he would be liable to punishment."

It will be seen that the assumption upon which this answer proceeds is that the supposed offender's disease consists exclusively in the fact that he is under a mistaken belief that something exists which, if it did exist, might or might not justify his conduct, but that he has the same power of controlling his conduct and regulating his feelings of appreciating and reasoning about the facts which he mistakeably believes in, "as a sane man." "But the difficulty which these questions and answers suggest," says Sir Fitz James Stephen, "and leave untouched is this. How would it be if the medical witnesses were to say (as Dr. Griesinger says, and as the witness in McNaghten's case said in substance) that a delusion of the kind never or hardly ever stands alone, but is in all cases the result of a disease of the brain, which interferes more or less with every function of the mind, which falsifies all the emotions, alters in an unaccountable way the natural weight of motives, of conduct, weakens the will."

But it will be noticed that the Judges themselves never claimed that their answer was exhaustive; on the other hand in the opening words of their answer they say that they are making the assumption that the accused labours under such partial delusion only, and is not in other respects insane! In examining the criticism of Sir James Stephen, a distinguished authority (28) says: "I do not see how the Judges, or any one else, could give any other answer to the question, in the limited sense in which they understood it. If an act is prompted by delusion, and if the deluded actor is not in any other respect insane, then the only logical course to take is the course taken by the Judges."

Referring to the comment of Sir Fitz James Stephen, the same authority at another place (29) remarks that the learned Judge seems scarcely to appreciate the impossibility of arriving at any other answer, that was imposed upon the Judges by their reading of the question; and further that "the Judges assume that a limitation is implied in the question, and they give their answer subject to this limitation. If there is any error, as Sir Fitz James Stephen appears to think there is, the error is surely in applying this answer to a class of cases which was formally and expressly excluded from the scope of the answer by the terms in which it was given."

Section 84, I. P. C., does not confine itself within the four corners of the answers of the Judges in the McNaghten case. The question regarding the existence of a delusion, partial or complete, would depend on medical evidence and other circumstances of each case. Of course, in such cases the duty of the Judge and the jury is very delicate, as all the questions arising in them have to be approached in a very careful manner.

In Ghinua Uraon v. Emperor (30), a Full Bench case of the Patna High Court, it was held that if a person, otherwise sane, but labouring under the influence of an insane delusion commits an act of revenge for some supposed grievance or injury, he will be punishable according to the nature of the crime committed, if at the time he understood that he was committing a wrong and unlawful act; in other words he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as a sane person would be if the facts with regard to which the delusion exists were true. This is in perfect accord with the rule laid down in the answer of the Judges to question 4.

The delusions which indicate a defect of sanity such as will relieve a person from criminal responsibility, are delusions of the senses, or such as relate to facts or objects—not mere wrong notions or impressions, or of a moral nature; and the aberration must be mental, not moral, to affect the intellect of the individual. It is not enough that they show a deceased or depraved state of mind, or an aberration of the moral feelings, the sense of right and wrong being still, although it may be perverted yet not destroyed: and the theory of a moral insanity or insanity of the moral feelings, while the sense of right or wrong remains, is not to be reconciled with the legal doctrine on the subject (31).

Thus the fact that the accused while committing the crime was under some insane delusion is not per se sufficient to exempt him from criminal liability for his wrongful act, unless the impulse was such as to render him unconscious of what he was doing, or to make him ignorant of the fact that the act which he was about to commit was wrong (32).

CONDUCT, MOTIVE AND OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES DETERMINING THE QUESTION OF INSANITY.

In a trial for an offence, when a plea of insanity is raised by the prisoner his conduct in the transaction and his motive are essential points to be carefully gone into and investigated. In such a case the Court can judge only by inference to be derived from the prior and subsequent conduct of the prisoner as to the state of his mind at the time of the commission of the offence (33). In the undermentioned case (34), the prisoner who was charged with committing murder, was a young man of weak intellect and the motive actuating the offence was trivial and inadequate. As soon as he had killed his uncle by hacking him on the head and neck with a sword, the prisoner rushed out brandishing his weapon and shouting "Victory to Kali." He attempted to strike other persons, including his own father. When the paroxysm had passed off, during the police inquiry, the prisoner appeared to be rational, but immediately afterwards he developed aphasia, attempted to commit suicide, and was undoubtedly insane from that time for a period of five years. These signs were held the signs and indicia of insanity and the prisoner was held to have been suffering from a fit of melancholic homicidal mania at the time he hacked the deceased with the sword.

In some cases no suspicion of insanity rests upon the prisoner, apart from the crime. From the character of the crime itself, its suddenness, violence, cruelty and atrocity, its apparent absence of motive or purpose, a suggestion is raised that the offender must have been insane at the time of its commission. Mayne says (9) that a defence of this sort is generally set up, when the facts admit of no other, and it is usually eked out with evidence of previous outbursts of eccentricity or violence, and suggestions of hereditary insanity or of former diseases, which might possibly have affected his brain; and adds that it would be utterly unsafe to admit a Deputy Inspector General of Police, of C. I. D., Bengal—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 5 of 1929, Decided on 29th July 1929, from an order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Dinajpur, D/- 17th January 1929.

 Criminal P. C., S. 476-B — District Judge hearing appeal under S. 476-B has power to transfer appeal to competent Court and transferee Court can make necessary complaint.

An appeal to District Judge under S. 476-B preferred over an order of a subordinate Court refusing sanction for prosecution, can be transferred by the District Judge to any competent Court. The latter Court, on such transfer, has authority to make the necessary complaint under S. 476-B: 30 Cal. 771, Ref.; A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 172, Dist. [P 593 C 1]

Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Surojit Chandra Lahiri—for Petitioners.

Satindra Nath Mukherji — for Opposite Party.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule was issued on ground No. 9 which is to this effect: For that the learned Additional Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal or to lodge the complaint. The facts are that the petitioner sued the defendants upon a hatchita in the Court of the Munsiff at Raigunje in the District of Dinajpore, and on behalf of the defendants the suit was contested by the opposite party D. I. G., C. I. D., Bengal. The suit was transferred by the order of the District Judge from Raigunje to the Munsiff at Dinajpore. The petitioner applied to the Munsiff for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. It was refused and the suit was dismissed for non-prosecution. Thereafter the opposite party applied to the Munsiff for sanction to prosecute the petitioner under S. 476, Criminal P. C. on charges under Ss. 120-B, 109, 209, 471, I. P. C., etc. The application was refused by the Munsiff and the opposite party preferred an appeal from the order of the Munsiff to the District Judge of Dinajpore under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. The District Judge allowed the appeal and made a complaint under S. 476-B. Against that order there was an application for revision in this Court. This Court set aside the order of the District Judge and sent the matter back to the Munsiff with certain directions. The Munsiff again rejected the petition of the opposite party for sanction. The opposite party preferred an appeal to the District Judge against the order of the Munsiff, who transferred the case to the Additional District Judge to deal with it. The latter officer allowed the appeal by his judgment dated 17th January 1929. The petitioner objects to this order on the ground that the Additional District Judge had no authority to make the complaint under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. The matter is not free from doubt and I have given my best consideration to it. Under S. 476-B any person whose application under S. 476 has been refused or against whom such a complaint has been made may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of S. 195, sub-S. (3). Under S. 195 sub-S. (3) the Court to which the primary Court is subordinate shall be deemed to be the Court to which appeal ordinarily lies from the appealable decree or sentence from the former Court. Section 476-B then lays down that on such appeal being made the superior Court may thereupon pass necessary order.

Now, there can be no doubt that an appeal under S. 476-B lies to the Court to which the trial Court is subordinate, and in this instance the District Judge's Court is the Court to which appeal lies. So that so far as the filing of the appeal is concerned, there is no irregularity. The next question is whether the District Judge having received the appeal has authority to transfer it to the Additional District Judge. This question does not seem to have been finally settled under the Code as amended in 1923. But we may refer to a case under the old code, namely, the case of Ram Charan Chandra v. Taripulla (1). There the learned Judges in interpreting the relevant clauses of the old S. 195 held that no one except the District Judge has power to hear an appeal under Ss. 195 (6) and 195 (7) of the old code. The ratio of that decision as given by N. R. Chatterjee, J. is that a District Judge is competent to dispose of any appeal or proceeding himself or to transfer it to a Subordinate Judge. But under S. 195 (6) Criminal P. C. 1898, the power of revoking or granting any sanction given or refused is given to the authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate. The judgment of D. Chatterjee, J. also deals with the powers of a District Judge to transfer appeals pending in his file to an Additional District Judge. Now, these clauses of S. 195 have been repealed and the new Ss. 476-A and 476-B have been substituted. S. 476-B lays down that an appeal must be preferred to the Court to which the primary Court is subordinate in the sense that appeals ordinarily lie to the former Court from the decisions of the latter Court, but the final orders may be passed by the superior Court. The Court of the Additional Judge may be said to be a superior Court in relation to a Munsiff's Court. Reference may also be made to S. 8, Civil Courts' Act 1887 which empowers an Additional District Judge to discharge all the functions of a District Judge which may have been assigned to him. Section 24 (a), Civil P. C., gives unfettered jurisdiction to the District Judge to transfer an appeal or any proceeding pending before him to any competent Court subordinate to him. Now, it has been held that an appeal under S. 476-B is an appeal under the Criminal Procedure Code and has to be governed by the provisions of that Act: Rajani Kanta Kayal v. Bissoo Moni Dassi (2), Chunder Kumar Sen v. Mathura Debya (3) and Hamid Ali v. Madhusudan Das (4). If it is an appeal under the Criminal Procedure Code it is governed by S. 409, Criminal P. C. which says that an appeal to the Sessions Judge shall be heard by the Sessions Judge or by an Additional Sessions Judge. But an appeal under S. 476 in a civil matter is not preferred to the Sessions Judge but to the District Judge, the same officer who combines in him both the functions and power is given to District Judge under the Civil Procedure Code and the Civil Court's Act to regulate the procedure of an appeal.

I have been pressed for the view I have taken in this matter by considerations of reasonableness in the procedure laid down by the Code. Under S. 476-A the power under S. 476 may be exercised by a Court to which the trial Court is subordinate within the meaning of S. 195 (3). To give a strict interpretation that only the Court to which the primary Court is subordinate can make a complaint under S. 476 is to deprive Subordinate Judges and Judges other than District Judges, who ordinarily hear most of the appeals from the Munsiffs of the power of making any complaint under S. 476. It often happens and such cases frequently come before us, that when an appellate Court forms an opinion in connexion with any proceeding in a civil Court it does act under S. 476 and make a complaint before the proper Court. It is never intended to deprive Judge other than the District Judges, who hear ninety per cent of the appeals, of the power of making a complaint where they find that an offence has been committed.

Reference in this connexion has also been made on behalf of the petitioner to the decision in the case of Mohim Chandra Nath v. Emperor (5). That case does not discuss the question raised before us. There the appeal was not preferred to the District Magistrate to whom the trial Court was subordinate but to an officer specially empowered to hear appeals from Second Class Magistrates. In the view I have taken of this matter this rule should be discharged.

Jack, J.—I agree; but I would simply base my decision on the fact that the District Judge is empowered under S. 24 (a), Civil P. C. to transfer any proceedings to the Additional District Judge.

Where the accused are tried for offences under Ss. 363 and 367, I. P. C. every opportunity should be given to them to adduce evidence on behalf of the defence either oral or documentary and in refusing such evidence the Judge does not exercise proper discretion. If the Judge is of opinion that the evidence adduced by the accused is inadmissible or irrelevant or that such evidence is adduced for the purpose of vexation or delay or to defeat the ends of justice he can refuse to receive such evidence. Suhrawardy, J. — In this case the accused have been convicted under Ss. 363 and 367, I. P. C. and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. It is not necessary to consider the various points which have been urged before us in appeal by the learned advocate appearing for them, as we think it enough if we refer to one objection which is to the effect that the learned Addl. Sessions Judge did not give sufficient opportunity to the accused to examine the witnesses for the defence. It appears from the record that before the Magistrate the accused had submitted presumably under S. 211, Criminal P. C. a list of 19 witnesses to be examined at the trial on their behalf. Before the prosecution case was closed the defence pleader on 19th March 1929 prayed for calling for certain records from the District Magistrate's room and for summoning three defence witnesses for the following day. The learned Judge ordered that the records should be called for and directed the District Magistrate to summon the witnesses for the following day. On the following day, that is, 19th March, apparently the witnesses did not come and the defence pleader put in a petition for adjournment of the case for a day to produce certain defence witnesses. The learned Judge dismissed the application on the ground that those witnesses would not prove relevant matters or any matter admissible in evidence under the law, without allowing the accused to produce their witnesses and then deciding about the relevancy of their evidence. We think that the learned Judge should have in a serious case like the present allowed the accused an opportunity of adducing such evidence as they chose. If at the examination of the witnesses for the defence the learned Judge was of opinion that the statements made by them were not admissible or were not relevant in evidence he could rule them out. He did not exercise a proper discretion in refusing to examine the witnesses for the defence. Under S. 216, Criminal P.C., the Magistrate was bound to summon all the witnesses named by the accused for appearance before the Court of the Sessions Judge except those whose evidence was taken by the Magistrate himself or whom the Magistrate considers to have been included in the list for the purpose of delaying or defeating the ends of justice. We think that in this particular case the accused have a just grievance that they were not allowed to adduce evidence on their behalf.

We accordingly set aside the convictions and sentences passed by the learned Addl. Sessions Judge and direct that the accused be retried according to law. Every opportunity should be given to them to adduce evidence on behalf of the defence either oral or documentary. If the learned Judge is of opinion that the evidence adduced by the accused is inadmissible or irrelevant, or that such evidence was adduced for the purpose of vexation or delay or to defeat the ends of justice, he can refuse to receive such evidence.

We direct that the accused be retried according to law. It will be in the discretion of the Sessions Judge to allow bail to the accused pending their retrial.

Objection has been taken to the propriety of the charge framed on the authority of the decision in Mafizaddi v. Emperor (1). If it were necessary to decide the point, we would have had to examine the case, but as the case is to be retried, the Sessions Judge will do well to frame separate charges for kidnapping and abducting.

Jnananjan Niyogi—Accused — Appellant.

Criminal Appeal No. 909 of 1929, Decided on 6th February 1930.

Penal Code, S. 124-A — Person vilifying the British by contrast, by holding up admired character as pattern is guilty, under S. 124-A.

It is one thing to hold up an admired character as a pattern in a speech and quite another to vilify the British by contrast; but a speaker cannot be allowed to use the former as a cloak for the latter if the result of what he says in fact be to inspire his audience with hatred and disaffection towards Government. Where the speaker, in his speech, oversteps the boundary line, he is guilty under S. 124-A. [P 510 C 2]

Mrityunjay Chattopadhyaya, Manindra Nath Banerjee, Debabrata Mulherjee and Bholanath Roy—for Appellant.

Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Pearson, J.—The accused Jnananjan Niyogi has been charged under S. 124-A, I. P. C., in regard to a speech made by him on 16th June last at Hazra Park, Bhowanipur. He has been convicted and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year, and against that he now appeals.

As stated by the learned Magistrate the evidence shows that the meeting lasted from about 6-30 to 9 p. m., that about 4000 persons attended composed mostly of young men and students, and about 100 volunteers dressed in a khaki uniform also attended. The occasion was a gathering in memory of the late Mr. C. R. Das.

The speaker begins by reminding his audience of the faith that Mr. Das had had in the nation, and his belief in its future, his desire to build up its strength; that the people of this country would be able to bring about a revolution on the face of the earth; that possessed with a new idea the Bengalis would be able to create that revolution. At first, he goes on, no one would accept him

"but the force of revolution latent in Bengali danced a mad dance in his heart, roared and having crowned with success the new revolution showed the world that the Bengali could think on new lines, see in a new light and again tread the path of creation. What has he left for us to-day? that force of revolution."

Then again:

"Just now Nripendra remarked that today we were not merely desirous of destroying dyarchy. Why? Because the immense force which lies in the soul of Deshbandhu can create a new path".

Shortly afterwards we get this:

"We do not still believe that the whole world has really admitted that the English are carrying on the administration of our country against our consent. We want to convince the world that the English carry us along against our consent. We want to convince it that we do not accept their unfair administration and ordinance. We know that we do not accept."

Then there is a call to tell the English that Government cannot be carried on in this country by neglecting public opinion. Then attention is directed to the misery and poverty of the country, and how Mr. Das offered his life "to crown with success the independent rule", destroying and ending the subjection of the country. The revolutionary force envisaged by Mr. Das is then put forward as a cure for the "agony of subjection."

"So, with our creed of revolution in our hearts we say that we shall build up the country, we shall build up the nation, we shall not look expectantly towards the English. After 150 years of English administration we have thoroughly realized that the French are not our enemies, Germany is not our enemy. Italy is not our enemy, our only enemy is the English. It is our right to curtail their strength and their talent."

Of this last passage it has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the contradistinction of French and Germans goes to show that the economic feature is that on which the speaker is insisting. From the above passages cited, and reading the article as a whole, we note that the learned Magistrate has come to the conclusion that although in one way the speech was an exhortation to his audience to emulate the example of Mr. C. R. Das, the whole tenor is a tirade against the present Government of the land and for its complete overthrow. The speech, he says, is delivered with a venom which is sure to excite feeling of hostility and hatred to Government. Naturally it is one thing to hold up an admired character as a pattern, and quite another to vilify the British by contrast; but a speaker cannot be allowed to use the former as a cloak for the latter if the result of what he says in fact be to inspire his audience with hatred and disaffection towards Government. Our duty is only to say whether we consider he has brought himself within the terms of S. 124-A, and although we are not prepared to say that we are at one with the Magistrate in his wholesale condemnation, we think that at certain points in his speech the boundary line is undoubtedly overstepped, particularly having regard to the nature of his audience. Especially is this so even upon a fair, free and liberal construction when he refers to the unfair administration and ordinance of the English, and again when he speaks of the English being our only enemy.

Mention must be made of the written statement filed by the accused. It does not affect the intention of the accused, which is to be derived from a construction of the speech itself. Nevertheless it is a matter to be taken into consideration, and shows how the accused is minded. It does him no good; at any rate. He impugns the good faith of even the highest judicial tribunals; he makes the statement that England and England alone has driven Bengal from literacy into dismal illiteracy, and, in a later passage, that England has strangled the commerce and manufactures of India. We cannot agree that the speech was calculated primarily to emphasise, as the written statement suggests, the economic adversity of India with a view to appeal to his hearers to emulate the sacrifice and self-reliance of Mr. Das. The language goes far beyond that. We think that the conviction was right and must be upheld. The sentence we think is more than is demanded by the circumstances.

We reduce the sentence from one year's to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The appellant will surrender to his bail forthwith and serve out the remaining portion of the sentence.

R.M./R.K. Order accordingly.

v.

Criminal Revn. No. 686 of 1929, Decided on 4th September 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, 24-Perganas, D/- 26th April 1929.

Bengal Public Gambling Act, Ss. 3, 4, 5 and 6—Presumption under S. 6 arises only under peculiar circumstances mentioned by statute itself—Magistrate not satisfied that premises are used as common gaming house, —No presumption under S. 6 arises.

The presumption of law under S. 6 arises only in the peculiar circumstances mentioned by the statute itself, i. e., if the warrant authorises a search on the footing of the premises being a common gaming house and when the search results in a find of instruments of gaming.

When the requirements of S. 5 are not strictly complied with inasmuch as the Magistrate does not say anywhere in the proceedings that the premises were used for a common gaming house, the presumption under S. 6 does not arise, and if there is no evidence showing that the premises had been kept for the profit or gain of the accused, they cannot be convicted under S. 3 or S. 4. [P 542 C 1, 2]

Hiralal Ganguli—for Petitioners.

Birlhusan Dutt—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioners have been convicted under S. 3 and 4, Bengal Public Gambling Act (Act 3 B. C. of 1867), petitioner 1 under S. 3 and all the other petitioners under S. 4 of the said Act. The question for consideration in this rule is whether the convictions are supportable in so far as they are based upon finding that the place where gambling used to go on was a common gaming house within the meaning of the Act. Offences under Ss. 3 and 4 have for their foundation as one of the ingredients the fact that the place where gaming goes on is a common gaming house within the meaning of the definition given in S. 1.

As regards this matter the learned Sessions Judge held in the first instance that :

"petitioner 1 or those who were interested in the venture along with him have not been proved by any evidence to have either drawn commission or worked so as to ensure more or less certain profits."

He found, however, that instruments of gaming were found in the premises which were in the occupation of petitioner 1, who is said to be the lessee of the premises; and as those instruments were found on a search purporting to have been carried out under the provisions of S. 5 of the Act, he applied to the case the presumption provided for in S. 6 thereof. The said presumption is to the effect that when instruments of gaming are found in a place searched in accordance with a warrant issued under S. 5, the place is to be regarded as a common gaming house until the contrary is proved. The question therefore, is whether the presumption upon which the learned Judge has relied really arises in the present case.

The search warrant that was issued under the provisions of S. 5 of the Act did not state that the premises were used as a common gaming house; but it was stated therein that the user of the premises was for unauthorized race-gambling. The learned Sessions Judge held that user for unauthorized race-gambling and user as a common gaming house mean one and the same thing. The reasoning upon which the learned Sessions Judge came to that conclusion is that unless the premises were a common gaming house the Magistrate could not issue the search warrant; or, in other words, that if the premises were used merely for unauthorized race-gambling without it being shown that they constituted a common gaming house the learned Magistrate could not have very well issued the search warrant. The learned Sessions Judge has observed further that it must be assumed that the Magistrate was aware of the law. On an assumption of this character the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the search warrant must have been issued because the Magistrate was satisfied that the premises were a common gaming house as defined in S. 1 of the Act.

I am clearly of opinion that in the process of reasoning that the learned Sessions Judge has adopted he has begged the very question he had to determine. The question is whether the presumption under S. 6 arises in the case. The law says that it will arise if the warrant authorized the search on the footing of the premises being a common gaming house, and when the search held under warrant has resulted in a find of instruments of gaming. The reason of the presumption is that where the Magistrate is satisfied on the material before him that the premises constitute a common gaming house, and there is the find, there is a prima facie case. The argument that because there is a find and because the search was in execution of a warrant it should be taken that the Magistrate must have been satisfied that the premises were a common gaming house, and that therefore the Court which tries the case will also take it that they were a common gaming house, is to ignore the reason of the presumption which is a statutory presumption and to proceed on a wholly different line and create a new rule of evidence altogether.

The presumption of law arises only in the peculiar circumstances that are mentioned by the statute itself. In the present case the requirements of S. 5 of the Act have not been strictly complied with, and the Magistrate has not said anywhere in the proceedings that in issuing the search warrant he was satisfied that the premises were used as a common gaming house. In circumstances such as these, the presumption mentioned in S. 6 of the Act, in my opinion, does not arise. If this presumption does not arise, as I hold that it does not, and as there is no evidence showing that the premises were kept for the profit or gain of petitioner 1 or his confederates, as the learned Sessions Judge has himself observed in his judgment, it must be held that it has not been established that the premises were a common gaming house. The petitioners' convictions therefore fail.

The rule is, accordingly, made absolute.

The convictions of and sentences passed upon the petitioners are set aside and it is ordered that the fines if paid be refunded.

Mrityunjay Chattopadhyaya, Manindra Nath Banerji and Susil Kumar Banerjee—for Petitioners.

Amiruddin Ahmed for Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case it appears that while the Sadar Sub-Registrar of Pabna was sitting on a judicial proceeding certain persons who were deed-writers finding fault with a certain ruling which he had given about the alteration of a figure in a deed came into his room and insulted him and caused interruption to his duty. The Sub-Registrar made a complaint to this effect to the District Registrar who happened also to be the District Magistrate and at the end of his recital of the circumstances he says that the accused persons may be prosecuted under S. 228, I. P. C. The District Magistrate apparently in his double capacity sent the case to the Sub-Divisional Officer for disposal and the Sub-Divisional Officer apparently summoned the accused under S. 228. In the meantime at the earliest possible moment the accused made an application to the Additional Sessions Judge taking several objections to the proceedings and this application was rejected. Thereupon the accused obtained a rule from this Court calling upon the prosecution to show cause why proceedings against the accused should not be quashed or why such other order should not be made as to this Court may seem fit and proper the ground upon which the rule was issued being that the Sub-Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction to issue process and that S. 476, Criminal P. C., is not applicable to the case. It would appear that throughout the proceedings the case has been assumed to be one under S. 228, I. P. C.

Mr. Chatterjee on behalf of the accused person calls our attention to the fact that S. 228 deals with an offence which by Sch. 2, Criminal P. C., may be tried by the Court in which the offence is committed subject to the provisions of Ch. 35 of the Code and this provision in Col. 8, contrasts with the provision made in respect of an offence (which also comes under S. 480, Criminal P. C.) under S. 175. In that case the Court by which the offence is triable is said to be the Court in which the offence is committed subject to the provisions of Ch. 35 or the Court of the Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First and Second Class. Beginning with the assumption that the Court by which the offence is triable is the Court in which the offence is committed, we are taken to S. 480, Criminal P. C. We find in that section refers first of all to a case where an offence is committed in the view of or presence of any civil, criminal or revenue Court and in such a case a summary procedure is prescribed and the Judicial Officer who is insulted and interrupted in his duty may cause the offender to be detained in custody and then sentence the offender to fine not exceeding Rs. 200 and he is required to record the facts constituting the offence with the statement, if any, made by the offender. In default of payment of fine he may pass a sentence up to one month's rigorous imprisonment. If, however, the Court considers in such a case that this punishment is insufficient, S. 482 empowers the Court to record the facts constituting the offence with the statement of the accused if any and to forward the case to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the same and also empowers the Court to take security from the offender and in default of giving sufficient security to forward such person in custody to such Magistrate. Having regard to the fact that an offence under S. 228 is made triable by the Court in which the offence is committed subject to the provisions of Chap. 35 it appears to me that prima facie the intention of the legislature was that such a case should be dealt with under Ss. 480 and 482.

In this case the offence was committed before the Sub-Registrar and S. 84, Registration Act, makes it clear that the registering officer is a public servant and that a proceeding under the Registration Act is a judicial proceeding for the purposes of S. 228. As Col. 8, Sch. 2, assumes that the offence is committed in a Court it may well be argued that there is no difficulty in holding that the Sub Registrar is a Court for the purposes of Col. 8, Sch. 2. It would appear that under the Registration Act of 1877 there was a clause in addition to what is now repeated in S. 84, Registration Act of 1908, to the effect that the Registrar should be and the Sub-Registrar should not be a Court within the meaning of the section which corresponds to Ss. 480 and 482. It is, therefore, somewhat difficult to lay it down that by virtue of the Criminal Procedure Code the Sub Registrar is a Court for the purposes of Ss. 480 and 482 and we find that S. 483 appears to leave the matter to the directions of the Local Government. In this case it appears that the Local Government has made no direction as regards the Registrar or the Sub-Registrar being a civil Court within the meaning of Ss. 480 and 482 and the result of that is that the offence under S. 228 if committed before a Sub-Registrar cannot be dealt with under Ss. 480 and 482, that is to say, in the first instance by the Court in which the offence was committed. On my part there is a grave difficulty in saying that such an offence can be dealt with outside the provision made in S. 480 or 482 or in the absence of any directions by the Local Government in saying that it can be dealt with by himself under S. 480.

After examinng the matter it appears to me that it is almost hopeless to suppose that in the proceeding now started any final result can possibly be arrived at under S. 228. To my mind the intention of the legislature is that a charge under S. 228 as distinct from a charge under S. 175 should be dealt with in a summary manner under S. 480 or else in a rather more elaborate manner provided by S. 482 and the latter section is confined to a case where the Court against whom the offence is committed has applied its mind on the question to decide if a fine of Rs. 200 will not be adequate. It has, however, been pressed upon us that in this case the Magistrate to whom the matter had been sent has tried it as a complaint in a summons case. But it does by no means follow that he will find in the end that S. 228 is the only section which can be applied. It will be open to him if he thinks fit to find that the accused is guilty of another offence triable as a summons case and S. 186, I. P. C., is suggested as a possible alternative. In the circumstances it is said that we should not quash the proceeding but let the Magistrate go on with it. In my judgment that contention must prevail. We think we ought to give direction in this case to the effect that under S. 228 proceedings should not be further continued but that the Magistrate's proceedings should not be quashed because it is open to the Magistrate to consider the facts and come to a conclusion whether under any other section he should proceed. With this direction the rule is discharged.

Braja Lal Chakrabarti and Gopendra Krishna Banerji—for Opposite Party.

Cuming, J.—The petitioner in this case who is an advocate of this Court is also the owner of a motor bus and apparently carries on the trade of a motor bus owner. He was prosecuted at the instance of the Corporation of Calcutta and has been fined Rs. 50 on the ground that he is liable under S. 175, Calcutta Municipal Act 1923 read with Sch. 6, Item 18, to take out a license as a carrier.

The petitioner contends that he carries only passengers and not goods for hire. His case is that small cases such as suit cases are allowed on his bus but no hire is paid for the carriage of the goods and hire is only paid for passengers. His contention would seem shortly to be this that a person who carries only passengers for hire is not a carrier within the meaning of Sch. 6, item 18, Calcutta Municipal Act. The whole case depends upon the meaning of the expression "carrier." In Halsbury's Laws of England vol. 4, p. 2 we find the word "carrier" defined as "Any person who carries goods or passengers for hire or gratuitously by land or water is a carrier."

Accepting this definition there can be no doubt but that the petitioner is a carrier within the meaning of S. 175 read with Sch. 6, item 18 and as such he is liable to pay the tax. The decision of the lower Court is therefore right. The rule is discharged.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 103 —Search—Presence of Panchas—Panchas should actually accompany person making search.

Both the letter and the spirit of S. 103, namely, the provisions that the panchas are to attend and witness the search, and that the search shall be made in their presence, require that the panchas should actually accompany the persons making the search and should be actual witnesses to the fact of the finding of the property. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section that the Panchas should merely be summoned and kept present outside a building while the search is being carried on within it, and then called in to see what has been found. [P 546 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 103—Panchas not fending object can be proved beyond doubt

The mere fact that the Panchas are not present throughout a search under Bombay Abkari Act, S. 43 (1) (a), and do not witness every detail of it is not sufficient in itself to vitiate the conviction, especially where the accused is himself present at the search, and it is open to the Court to find the fact of possession of an offending article proved, provided that on a consideration of all the evidence in the case it is satisfied that the fact has been proved beyond reasonable doubt: 4 Cr. Where the failure to comply with the provisions of S. 103 leave the evidence in an unsatisfactory condition, so that there is reasonable doubt as to whether the offending articles were really in the possession of the accused, the conviction ought not to be sustained. [P 548 C 1]

M. K. Gadgil and B. G. Modak — for Applicant.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J. — The accused, on whose behalf this revision application has been presented, was convicted by the Second Class Magistrate, Vengurla, for an offence under S. 43 (1) (a), Abkari Act, the conviction being based on evidence to the effect that a bottle containing kaju liquor was found in a room of his house and two other bottles also containing some liquor were found buried in a heap of ashes, under the roof of his padvi. The bottle of liquor alleged to have been found in the house contained one and a half drams and the two bottles found in the ash heap outside contained six drams and four drams respectively. The accused appealed against his conviction but his appeal was dismissed.

The only contention put forward in this revision application, which, in our opinion, has any substance is that the search of the accused's house was not carried out in the manner prescribed by S. 103, Criminal P. C. It is provided there that before making a search, the officer about to make it shall call upon two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to attend and witness the search. It is further provided in Cl. (2) that the search shall be made in their presence. Now in this case, although Sub-Inspector Naik, who took part in the search, has stated at the beginning of his deposition that the house was searched in the presence of panchas, it appears that the three persons who were summoned as panchas did not actually witness the search of the house and finding of the bottle of liquor therein. Sub-Inspector Naik says that he was standing outside the house until the bottle of liquor was found, and then he went inside the room. Two of the panchas, according to him, were with him. The third pancha, he says had gone into the house, and he mentions that the pancha who went inside was probably Mahabaleshwar.

Mahabaleshwar, however, was examined as a witness and he has stated that neither he nor the other two panchas went inside until the bottle of liquor was found. Inspector Mondkar, who actually made the search, has stated that the Police Patil who was also one of the panchas went inside with him. But the Police Patil was also examined as a witness and has stated that he and the other two panchas went inside with Mr. Naik after the finding of the bottle of liquor and not before. This witness deposes that four persons went into the house to make the search. They were three excise peons and Inspector Mondkar. They were accompanied by the accused but not by any of the panchas. It is quite clear, therefore, that there were not two of the panchas present inside the house while the search was being made and when the bottle was found, and it is doubtful on the evidence whether there was even one present inside the house at that time. We consider that both the letter and the spirit of S. 103, namely, the provisions that the panchas are to attend and witness the search, and that the search shall be made in their presence, require that the panchas should actually accompany the persons making the search and should be actual witnesses to the fact of the finding of the property. It is not, in our opinion a sufficient compliance with this section that the panchas should merely be summoned and kept present outside a building while the search is being carried on within it, and then called in to see what has been found.

The question then arises whether this irregularity in the search and the failure to comply with the clear provisions of S. 103 make it necessary that the conviction of the accused should be set aside. In connexion with this point we have been referred to a number of authorities but unfortunately the majority of them are not in any authorized report. The learned counsel for the applicant relies on Ah Tuck v. Emperor (1) and Lachmi Narain v. Emperor (2). The former case was a prosecution for gambling under the Burma Gambling Act. The irregularity there was that the persons called as panchas were not respectable persons of the locality within the meaning of S. 103. It was pointed out by the Court that the provisions in S. 103 were aimed against possible chicanery and unfair dealing on the part of the officers entrusted with search warrants and were made in order to ensure confidence in neighbours of the persons whose houses were searched and in the public generally that anything incriminating which may be found in premises searched shall be really found and shall not be what is called "planted." These remarks are apposite, but the actual decision in the case was that as the Burma Gambling Act requires that search shall have been made strictly in accordance with S. 103 in order that a certain presumption under S. 7 of that Act could be drawn, and as the provisions of S. 103 had not been complied with, therefore the presumptions could not legitimately be applied. That is a point somewhat different from the one with which we have to deal.

The case of Lachmi Narain v. Emperor (2) was a prosecution under the Opium Act and the irregularity was that the officer making the search entered the premises without search witnesses. Das, J., who tried the case, remarked as follows (p. 743):

"It is with some object that the legislature has provided the safeguards and when they are deliberately broken it is, in my opinion, not for the accused to show that they have been prejudiced. The prejudices is, in my opinion, on the face of the record. They should not have entered the premises without search witnesses, the object being that it may not be in their power to smuggle articles into the house and bolster up a false case against them."

The conviction, however, in that case was not set aside on this technical ground, but by reason of the cumulative effect of a number of irregularities affecting other matters besides the search.

The Government Pleader, who maintains the view that in spite of the irregularities in the search nevertheless the conviction ought to be sustained, relies mainly on Ramesh Chandra Banerjee v. Emperor (3). The search in that case was made in the presence of witnesses, but the accused were not allowed to be present as required by S. 103. It was held by Woodroffe, J. that the exclusion of the occupants of the place during the search was not a technical but a substantial violation of the law. The effect, however, of such irregularities, according to the learned Judge, is to necessitate a careful scrutiny of the evidence as to the search, but if, notwithstanding the irregularities, the Court holds that no advantage has or could have been taken of them, they have no further effect. Therefore, in spite of the irregularities in the search in the course of which certain incriminating articles were found, the Court accepted the evidence produced by the prosecution as proving that as a matter of fact those articles were found. To quote from the judgment (p. 370):

"However this be, the fact remains that the accused were not present at the search, and this is an irregularity which they are entitled to ask us to consider. The evidence must undoubtedly be carefully scrutinized on that account. It is to be noted, however, that there were two search witnesses present. But after all if, upon a careful scrutiny of the evidence, we come to a conclusion that notwithstanding the absence of the accused, advantage was not, and could have been, taken of it, the irregularity, whilst serving to exact from the Court a careful scrutiny of the evidence relating to the search, has no further effect. It is not sufficient to suggest that articles might have been fraudulently introduced : we must see whether there are any reasons to suppose that this was done."

In the particular case the Court held that there were no such reasons.

The Government Pleader also referred to Rutroo v. Emperor (4) and Abdul Hafiz Khan v. Emperor (5). The first was a case under the Arms Act in which the irregularity was that the search did not take place :

"in the presence of some officer especially appointed," as required by S. 30, Arms Act. The decision was that in spite of the search not being lawful, there being sufficient evidence that the accused was in unlawful possession of the arms, the conviction was justified. In Abdul Hafiz Khan v. Emperor (5) which was a case under the U. P. Excise Act, it was also held that an irregularity in the search did not render illegal the conviction of a person who was found in possession of an excisable article on such search. The irregularity there was that the officer making the search did not obtain a warrant from the Collector, and that, though he had taken witnesses with him, these witnesses were not "respectable inhabitants of the locality." In the course of his judgment Kanhaiya Lal, J. said p. 266 (of 27 Cr. L. J.)

"It is undoubtedly important that an officer making a search should comply with these provisions, for the credibility of the story may in many cases depend on the support it might receive from the persons accompanying him in the search. But if for any reason the officer making the search is unable to get two or more respectable witnesses of the locality and the search is effected in the presence of one or more men available at the time, leading to the discovery of an excisable article, the accused who is found in possession of that article can all the same be convicted, if the Court is satisfied from the evidence that an offence has been committed."

After considering these authorities we are not prepared to hold that the mere fact that the panchas were not present throughout the search and did not witness every detail of it would be enough in itself to justify setting aside the conviction. It would be open to us to find the fact of possession of the illicit liquor proved provided that on a consideration of all the evidence in the case we were satisfied that that fact had been proved beyond reasonable doubt. There are difficulties, however, in this case which arise directly from the fact that the provisions of S. 103 were not strictly complied with. As I have said the accused himself was present at the search and the evidence shows that before the search began the accused had searched the persons of the three excise peons and also the persons of the panchas. If, therefore, the circumstances had made it perfectly plain that the bottle of illicit liquor could not have been placed where it was by someone from outside then we might have been able to find the accused's possession of it proved, although the panchas had not actually witnessed the finding of it. This, however, is just where the difficulty comes in. The accused appears to have alleged from the beginning that this bottle of liquor had been placed in the house by some enemy of his. This is no doubt the sort of defence which is usually put forward in these cases, but the defence has more to support it in this case than it usually has owing to the fact of a paper being found tied to bottle with certain writing on it, the meaning of which even after the lengthy discussion of it by the trial Magistrate still remains somewhat mysterious.

The trial Magistrate has expressed himself as being satisfied that this bottle, which is alleged to have been found hanging in a basket suspended from the roof, could not have been inserted from outside. It is not very clear on what this opinion is based. One of the panchas who was examined has stated in his evidence that at the time the bottle was found the accused said that it had been placed there by somebody from outside, and so an empty bottle was given to him and he was asked to place it in the basket, but was unable to do so. The witness proceeds to state, however, that if some loose stones in the wall were removed the bottle could have been placed in the basket from outside. On the other hand the Police Patil has stated that at that time, that is at the time of the search, it was not ascertained whether the bottle could or could not have been put in from outside. At a subsequent stage it appears that the trial Magistrate himself went to the house in order to test the defence theory. This test, however, was abortive, because the exact position in which the basket had been hanging was disputed and could not be exactly determined. Now it is obvious that if the panch witnesses had been present at the time when the bottle was found in the basket, as the provisions of S. 103 clearly require that they should have been, there could have been no doubt or dispute upon this point. The exact position of the basket with reference to the holes in the wall could have been fixed, and the Court would have been in a position to test the probability of the accused's story.

(5) A.I.R. 1926 All. 188.

As we consider that in this case the failure to comply with the provisions of the law relating to searches has left the evidence in an unsatisfactory condition, so that there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the bottle of liquor in the basket really was in the possession of the accused, we are of opinion that the conviction ought not to be sustained. I may state that as regards the bottles of liquor found in the ash heap it is not disputed that those could have been placed there by anybody, and apart from the bottle found in the basket, the conviction of the accused would admittedly not have been justified. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the accused is acquitted. The fine of Rs. 10, if paid, should be refunded to him. We see no reason to interfere with the order of the lower Court with regard to the property found.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 400 of 1929, Decided on 29th January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145 — Dispute not between two, opposite parties having adverse rights but between persons having joint rights—Still S. 145 can apply.

Seeing that S. 145 merely contains the words "a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof, and seeing that neither in S. 145 nor in S. 146 is there any provision which clearly limits the dispute, which can be dealt with under Chap. 12, to a dispute by "two opposing parties having adverse rights to its exclusive possession it cannot be said that because the dispute was not one between two opposing parties having adverse rights to exclusive possession of the land but was a dispute between two parties having joint rights to the land in dispute, each of which was claiming exclusive possession, S. 145 cannot apply : 11 C.W.N. 512, Diss. from. [P 549 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 146—Requirements for attachment under S. 146 is inability of Magistrate to satisfy as to who is in possession.

For a Magistrate to attach property in dispute under S. 146 all that S. 146 requires is that the Magistrate should be unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in "such possession", that is actual possession of the subject in dispute. [P 549 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 146—Dispute among Hindu brothers with regard to former joint family property — Elder brother in possession—Partition alleged—Magistrate, unable to come to conclusion as to partition or joint right and possession, passing order under S. 146—Such order held not proper—But order under S. 107 held would have been more appropriate.

A Magistrate took proceedings under S. 145 in respect of a dispute between three Hindu brothers and with regard to property which was formerly joint family property. The question in dispute was whether the three brothers were jointly entitled to the property in dispute or there had been partition in virtue of which the property in dispute had fallen to the share of the eldest brother who was in possession. The Magistrate could not make up his mind on the question and as he would not satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in exclusive possession of the land in dispute, he applied S. 146 and attached the land until the rights of the parties thereto were determined by a competent Court.

Held : that although it could not be said that the Magistrate's order under S. 146 was not competent it was an order which ought not to have been made under the circumstances of the case. It was clear that whether there had been partition or not the eldest brother was entitled to be in possession. If the alleged partition really took place then he was entitled to be in possession in his own right. If it did not take place he was entitled to be in possession as the eldest brother and the manager of the family. The order of attachment, therefore, was not reasonable and if there was any danger to the breach of the peace proper order would have been to take proceedings under S. 107 and bind the parties for such term as was necessary : A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 318, Ref. [P 550 C 1]

(d) P. Murdeshwar—for Applicant.

Broomfield, J.—The facts giving rise to this revision application are as follows : The First Class Magistrate, Honavar, took proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., in respect of a dispute which was found to be likely to cause a breach of the peace relating to two fields Survey Nos. 56 and 57 in the village of Kalkod. The dispute was between three brothers and the question in dispute was whether the three brothers were jointly entitled to these two fields or whether there had been a partition in virtue of which the two fields had fallen to the share of Venkatraman, the elder brother. Besides two survey numbers there were a number of lands in other villages belonging to the family, and as there was reason to believe that there might be a dispute leading to a breach of the peace in respect of those other lands also, proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., were taken as regards those lands in the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Sirsi. The latter Magistrate after holding an inquiry decided that the case was not one which ought to be dealt with under S. 145. The view he took was that the dispute was one of a purely civil nature between members of a Hindu joint family about property in the joint possession of all the three brothers. In the circumstances he held that the Court was not competent to pass any order under S. 145, and that if any breach of the peace was imminent the proper course would be to bind over the parties under S. 107 Criminal P. C. He, therefore, directed that the proceedings should be dropped and the parties referred to the civil Court. This order was passed on 5th September 1929.

In the meantime, however, the proceedings in the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Honavar, had been continued. The learned Magistrate recorded evidence as to the question whether there had or had not been a partition and he found it impossible to make up his mind on the point. The order passed by him reads more like a judgment in a civil suit than in a magisterial proceeding. But he has finally come to the conclusion that it is doubtful whether Venkatraman, that is, the elder brother, alone or all the brothers together were in possession of S. Nos. 56 and 57 of Kalkod, and as he was unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in exclusive possession of the lands in dispute, he applied S. 146, Criminal P. C., and attached the two fields until such time as a competent Court had determined the rights of the parties thereto. The patel of Kalkod was appointed as receiver. This order was passed on 11th April 1929. Venkatraman now comes to this Court in revision and prays that the order of 11th April 1929, just referred to, should be set aside.

It is contended that the Magistrate was not competent to deal with this dispute under S. 145 and had no jurisdiction to make the order which he has made under S. 146. This contention has been supported by a reference to the case of Makhan Lal Roy v. Barada Kanta Roy (1). In that case it was decided that S. 145 did not apply because the dispute was not one between two opposing parties having adverse rights to exclusive possession of the land but was a dispute between two parties having joint rights to the land in dispute, each of which was claiming exclusive possession. That was the only reason given by the Court for holding that the matter could not be determined under S. 145. Seeing that S. 145 merely contains the words "a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof," and seeing that neither in this section nor in S. 146 is there any provision which clearly limits the dispute, which can be dealt with under Chap. 12, to a dispute by "two opposing parties having adverse rights to its exclusive possession," we should hesitate about following this decision, even if it were clearly in point. The ruling, however, does not properly apply to the facts of the present case, for whereas in that case it was found as a fact that the dispute was between parties having joint rights to possession, in the present case the Magistrate has been unable to make up his mind on the question whether the dispute is one between parties having joint rights or between one party who has an exclusive right in virtue of the partition and the other members of what was formerly a joint family. All that S. 146 requires is that the Magistrate should be unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in "such possession," that is, actual possession, of the subject of dispute. And although the Magistrate appears to have been mainly concerned with the question whether there had been a partition or not, it is also perfectly clear from his order that he was unable to satisfy himself on this question of actual possession.

But although we are not prepared to hold that the Magistrate's order under S. 146 was not competent, we nevertheless take the view that it was an order which ought not to have been made in the circumstances of the case. It is clear that whether there has been a partition or not, the elder brother Venkatraman is entitled to be in possession. If the alleged partition really took place then he is entitled to be in possession in his own right. If it did not take place then he is entitled to be in possession as the elder brother and manager of the family. The order of attachment by which the two fields have been placed in the possession of the patel of the village does not, therefore, seem to be a reasonable one. Moreover, it is fairly obvious that the dispute between the parties must sooner or later be settled by civil litigation and it is possible that the necessary civil proceedings may be complicated by the fact that proceedings under Ss. 145 and 146 have been taken in respect of these two fields, whereas the proceedings have been dropped with regard to other lands belonging to the family. The remarks of Marten, J., (now Sir Amberson Marten, C.J.), in In re, Mallappa (2) as to the improper use of S. 145 are very apposite in this case. If there is any danger to the breach of the peace, proceedings can be taken under S. 107 and all the parties can be bound over on such terms as may be necessary. We think that is the course which ought to be followed in this case. We, therefore, set aside the order of attachment dated 11th April 1929, and direct that possession should be handed over to the petitioner Venkatraman Rama Hedge.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

Emperor

v.

Sattegowda Satgowda Patil—Accused
—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 441 of 1929, Decided on 6th March 1930.

Arms Act (11 of 1878), S. 13—Taking blunt spear, capable of being sharpened, to parade ground for gymnastic purposes is "going armed."

A spear would not cease to be a spear by reason of its points and edges becoming blunt if they are capable of being sharpened at any time; and taking of such spear to the parade ground for gymnastic purposes amounts to going armed within the meaning of S. 13."

[P 551 C 1, 27]

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

R. A. Jahagirdar—for Respondent.

Mirza, J.—The opponent is one of the founders and promoters of a gymnasium class started in Sankeshwar in July 1928. It is admitted that he either brought or ordered from Poona four spears and one dagger for the purpose of the gymnasium class where exercises with spears and daggers were being practised. Two of these spears had brass heads and the dagger also was of brass. The other two spears had iron heads.

The opponent was prosecuted before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, First Class, Belgaum, for offences under Cls. (d) (e) and (f), S. 19, Arms Act, in respect of these five articles. The Magistrate held that the two brass spears and the brass dagger were not capable of inflicting injuries and were not arms within the meaning of S. 4, Arms Act, 1878. He held, however, that the two iron spears were dangerous weapons and could inflict injuries on human beings and cattle. He convicted the opponent in respect of the two iron spears of offences under Cls. (d), (e) and (f) of S. 19 and imposed a fine of Rs. 20 for each of the three offences, i. e., in all Rs. 60.

The opponent preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge of Belgaum against his conviction and sentences. Before the Sessions Judge it was conceded by the prosecution that the conviction of the opponent under Cls. (d) and (f) of S. 19 could not be sustained. With regard to the conviction under Cl. (e) of S. 19, the Sessions Judge was of opinion that the two iron spears come under the category of theatrical property and were therefore exempt from the prohibitions in the Arms Act, including those contained in S. 13. He, therefore, reversed the conviction and sentences of the opponent. The Government of Bombay have appealed to this Court against the Sessions Judge's order of acquittal.

The learned Government Pleader does not question the correctness of the Sessions Judge's reversal of the conviction of the opponent or offences under Cls. (d) and (f), S. 19, but contends that the acquittal of the opponent for an offence under Cls. (e), S. 19, is not correct.

The question we have to determine in this appeal is whether the opponent can be said to have gone "armed" in contravention of the provisions of S. 13. S. 13 provides:

"No person shall go armed with any arms except under a license and to the extent and in the manner permitted thereby."

"Arms" are defined in S. 4 as including inter alia spears and spear-heads. The two iron spears have been produced before us in Court. The edges of one of these spears are blunt but its pointed end is sharp. With regard to the other spear the point at the end is broken and the edges as well as the pointed end of this spear are blunt. These two weapons can undoubtedly be regarded as spears in the ordinary sense of the word. The one with a sharp end could be used as it is with some effect both as a weapon of offence and of defence. To sharpen the edges of this weapon would present no serious difficulty and it could then be used with greater efficacy for offensive and defensive purposes. With regard to the second spear although its pointed end is broken and hence blunt and its edges too are blunt these are defects which could be easily remedied and the weapon used for offensive and defensive purposes. A spear, in my opinion, would not cease to be a spear by reason of its point and edges becoming blunt if they are capable of being re-sharpened at any time. The Sub-Inspector of Police who gave evidence in this case said that both these iron spears are dangerous weapons and are capable of inflicting injury on human beings and cattle. These two iron spears in our judgment would not come under Cl. (d) of Government Notification under S. 13, Arms Act. That notification excludes ornamental arms of an obsolete pattern and theatrical property being virtually useless for offensive and defensive purposes. We are unable to agree with the Sessions Judge that these two spears are weapons of that kind.

The next question is whether it is satisfactorily proved that the opponent went armed with these two weapons. The evidence of Hasansab Imamsab, the Police Constable, shows that the opponent took part in the parades held under the auspices of the gymnasium and used the spear on these occasions. The witness has also stated that every day the spears and jambiyas were being brought and kept in the opponent's shop after the parades were over and were being taken from the shop of the opponent for the parades every morning and evening. The opponent in his statement before the Magistrate has denied that these spears were used on the occasion of the parades held under the auspices of the gymnasium; but having regard to the fact that these spears were either brought or ordered by the opponent for the purposes of the gymnasium and the further fact that the opponent was a founder and promoter of the gymnasium and was taking an active interest in its programme, it is not unlikely that the opponent did use these spears on the occasions when the parades were held. The learned Magistrate who tried the case was satisfied from the evidence that the opponent was taking the spears to the parade ground, was using them in person there, and was also giving them to the members of the gymnasium to be used by them on those occasions. We see no sufficient reason to differ from the Magistrate's appreciation of the evidence on this point.

It appears that the opponent was of the opinion that going about with these weapons did not require a license. It is clear from the evidence that it was not the opponent's purpose to use these weapons for any but gymnastic exercises. We are of opinion that the offence of the opponent does not call for any substantial sentence. We set aside the order of acquittal, convict the opponent of an offence under S. 19, Cl. (e), Arms Act (11 of 1878), and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 5. The iron spears in Court will be confiscated and the brass spears and the jambiya will be returned to the opponent.

Mahadeo Govind Nagarkar—Accused.

Criminal Reference No. 8 of 1930, Decided on 27th January 1930.

Penal Code, S. 403, Illus. (a)—Accused picking up spanner on road not knowing owner thereof is not guilty.A was convicted on his plea of guilty under S. 403 (he having tried to sell a spanner which he found lying on a public road).Held: that it was not a case where the accused had reasonable means of discovering and giving notice to owner of the spanner of having found it. The spanner was not of any appreciable value. The accused's plea of guilty was merely his admission of the facts alleged against him. The case therefore fell under illustration of S. 403 and the accused therefore was not guilty. P 552 C 2 Criminal P. C., S. 562—Accused already under probation—Order again putting him under probation for subsequent offence is illegal.

Where an accused is already placed under probation of good conduct on an earlier conviction, a sentence again placing him under probation for a subsequent offence is illegal.

Mirza, J.—This is a reference made by the District Magistrate, Poona, forwarding a report made to him by the City Magistrate, First Class, Poona, together with the record and proceedings in two cases, and recommending that the sentence passed by the President and Magistrate, First Class, Poona Bench, S. 3, in the second one of these cases being Cr. Case No. 430 of 1929 may be cancelled and some other lawful sentence as this Court may deem fit be substituted therefor.It appears that the accused had been previously convicted by the City Magistrate, First Class, Poona, on 4th September 1929, in the first one of these cases of an offence under S. 380, I. P. C. and released on probation of good conduct under S. 562, Criminal P. C., on his entering into a bond for Rs. 100 for one year. On 7th December 1929, the accused was convicted by the Bench Magistrate, Poona, in the second one of these cases of an offence under S. 403, I. P. C., and was again placed on probation of good conduct for a period of six months in his personal recognizance for Rs. 50. As the accused had already been placed on probation of good conduct on the earlier conviction, the sentence passed by the Bench Magistrate in the latter case is clearly illegal and must be set aside.

Having set aside the sentence, we have now to consider whether the accused has been properly convicted of an offence under S. 403. The First Class City Magistrate, Poona, expresses a doubt whether the accused can be said to be guilty of an offence under S. 403, for which he has been convicted. The accused pleaded guilty before the Bench Magistrate but his plea of guilty, as the First Class City Magistrate points out, is really no more than an admission of the facts that were alleged against him. The accused had stated that he had found the spanner, the subject matter of the alleged misappropriation, in the public road leading to the Poona railway station and that he had attempted to sell it. The First Class City Magistrate states in his report that the accused did not know who the owner of the spanner was, that the owner of the spanner had not been traced, that the accused had no means of discovering the owner of the spanner, and that nobody had identified the spanner. In the opinion of the First Class City Magistrate this was not a case where it could be said the accused had reasonable means of discovering and giving notice to the owner of having found the spanner. The value of the spanner is nowhere stated in the record but it could not have been of appreciable value. The case, in our opinion, seems to fall under illustration (a) of the illustrations to S. 403, I. P. C. That illustration is:

"A finds a rupee on the high road, not knowing to whom the rupee belongs. A picks up the rupee. Here A has not committed the offence defined in this section."

Illustration (a), however, must be taken to be qualified by illustration (f) to the same section. Illustration (f) is:

"A finds a valuable ring, not knowing to whom it belongs. A sells it immediately without attempting to discover the owner. A is guilty of an offence under this section."

As the spanner found by the accused does not appear to be of any appreciable value we are of opinion that the present case is governed by illustration (a) and not by illustration (f). In our opinion the conviction under S. 403 should not be upheld. We set aside the conviction and sentence.

Criminal Appeal No. 508 of 1929, Decided on 26th June 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Mianwali, D/- 28th April 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 162—Only those portions of statements of witnesses to police as have been actually read under S. 162 to contradict witnesses are parts of judicial record and can be treated as evidence in a case—Evidence Act, S. 145.

Only those portions of statements made by witnesses before the police as have been actually used under S. 162, Criminal P. The other parts of the statements cannot be relied upon by the prosecution or the defence in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused and should not be referred to by the Judge. [P 554 C 2]

Chandar Gupta—for Appellant.Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Agha Haidar, J.—Mt. Sabhai has been convicted of the murder of her husband, Ghulaman, by poisoning him, and has been sentenced to death under S. 302, I. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of Mianwali. The appeal on her behalf has been argued by Mr. Chandar Gupta in this Court and the record is also before us under the provisions of S. 373, Criminal P. C., for the confirmation of the sentence.

Ghulaman, the deceased husband of the appellant, was taken ill late at night on 19th December 1928, and died on 21st December, at about 7 a. m. Before he died he vomitted and purged, and it was suspected that poison had been administered to him. The lambar-dar, Mohammad Akbar Khan sent a ruqqa to the police station, Bhakkar, at 5 p. m. on 21st December 1928, and this ruqqa constitutes the first information reprot. The ruqqa says that Ghulaman barber had died that day after being sick for one day and that his wife, who was of a loose character was suspected.

The police arrived at the spot and were accompanied by Khan Ghulam Sarwar Khan (P. W. No. 4) who is a zail-dar and also an Honorary Magistrate.

As a result of the police investigation Mt. Sabhai and one Muri Hussain Shah were committed to the Sessions: Mt. Sabhai to take her trial under S. 302, I. P. C., while Murid Hussain Shah was charged under Ss. 302/109. Murid Hussain Shah has been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge and we are not concerned with him. The learned Sessions Judge has, as already stated, convicted Mt. Sabhai.

A number of prosecution witnesses have deposed that the deceased had stated in their presence that his wife Mt. Sabhai had poisoned him. These statements were rightly disbelieved by the learned Sessions Judge in view of the fact that, before the police, these witnesses had not made any such statements. Attempt was also made on behalf of the prosecution to prove that Mt. Sabhai had made a confession of the crime in the presence of Khan Ghulam Sarwar Khan (P. W. No. 4). The evidence of this witness has not been believed by the Court below on this point, and I entirely agree with the view of the learned Sessions Judge. He is a man who, according to his own admission had been "tackling" the appellant from time to time at the instance and in the presence, of the Police Officers. No reliance whatsoever can be placed upon the evidence of this witness.

The prosecution further relied upon the discovery of a certain packet containing a red powder which is alleged to have been produced by Mt. Sabhai on 26th December 1928. It may be mentioned here that the police reached the scene of the occurrence on 21st December and on 22nd December the house of Mt. Sabhai was searched. The discovery of this packet on 26th is a very belated one, and having regard to the persons who signed the discovery list, I am not prepared to hold that the discovery was fair and genuine. In my opinion the Sessions Judge was quite right in not accepting this alleged discovery as reliable.

The sole ground on which the learned Sessions Judge has based the conviction of Mt. Sabhai is that, on the night on which Ghulaman was taken ill, the last meal which he took was cooked and served by Mt. Sabhai. This meal consisted of Sag and Petha (pumpkin). Now, there is no evidence on the record to show that Mt. Sabhai had procured any poison or that she was in possession of it. Furthermore, she stated in the course of her statement before the Court below and this statement seems to have been accepted by the learned Sessions Judge, that sometime after taking his evening meal consisting of the above-mentioned dishes, the deceased took some fresh buffalo's milk. There was nothing improbable in a man of Ghulaman's position taking some milk before going to bed. We know nothing at all as to what the milk which constituted the last item of food taken by the deceased before he fell ill, actually contained. Therefore, the possibility of something deleterious and injurious to human life being present in the milk is not entirely excluded, and it cannot be said with any degree of certainty that the Sag and Petha mentioned above and not the milk contained the poison which killed Ghulaman. I may mention that on the record of this case there is evidence that village quacks deal in preparations of mercury and arsenic etc., and that ignorant people take these drugs in the belief that they possess rejuvenating properties. It is well known that most of these drugs are taken with milk at bed time. It is quite possible that the deceased, who was an elderly man, took some such drug as an aphrodisiac for a tonic. The report of the Chemical Examiner shows that arsenic was present in the intestines of the deceased.

Under the circumstances it cannot, therefore, be said that Mt. Sabhai, the appellant, was responsible for administering the poison which was found in the contents of the deceased's stomach and in the other vitals and which proved fatal to him.

On the record, as it stands, the conviction of the appellant cannot be supported. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and order that the appellant Mt. Sabhai be released forthwith.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree in holding that the evidence on the record is insufficient to sustain the conviction of the appellant. The appeal must, therefore, be accepted and the appellant acquitted.

I wish to add that the learned Sessions Judge has erred in treating the statements made by some of the witnesses before the police as substantive evidence in their entirety. Only those portions of such statements as had been actually used under S. 162, Criminal P.C., to contradict the witnesses in the manner provided for in S. 145, Evidence Act, in the course of their cross-examination or re-examination were parts of the judicial record and could be treated as evidence in the case. The other parts of these statements could not have been relied upon by the prosecution or the defence in determining the guilt or innocence of the appellant and ought not to have been referred to by the learned Judge. The attention of the learned Sessions Judge is drawn to the mandatory provision of the law on this point.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1117 of 1929, Decided on 20th December 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 28th October 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence — First information report is not substantive evidence and can be used only to corroborate or contradict maker thereof—It is, however, admissible under Evidence Act, S. 32 (1).

It is settled law that a first information report is not substantive evidence. It can be used only to corroborate or contradict the deposition of the maker thereof at the trial. It is, however, admissible under S. 32 (1), Evidence Act, as the statement of a person (since deceased) relating to the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death.

(b) Criminal Trial — Dying declaration — To prove dying declaration it is not necessary for witness to repeat words of deceased — If record of statement is proved it is sufficient.

To prove a dying declaration it is not necessary that the witness while giving evidence should repeat in his own words what the deceased had said; it is enough if he proves the record of that statement: A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 310, Foll.

[P 556 C.1]

Jai Gopal Sethi—for Appellant.

I. M. Mackay—for the Crown.

Tek Chand, J.—The appellant Kapur Singh, Jat, aged 32 years, of mauza Shahna in the Ludhiana district, has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., for having murdered Mt. Dhannon, a young Chamar woman of the same place, and has been sentenced to death.

The case for the prosecution is that some months before the occurrence the appellant had trespassed into the house of Mt. Dhannon with the intention of outraging her modesty. He was caught at the time and was severely beaten by the Chamars. Later on he was convicted under S. 451, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo one day's imprisonment and pay a fine of Rs. 200. The appellant felt himself disgraced at his conviction by a criminal Court on the complaint of a Chamar woman and wanted to have his revenge on her. Accordingly on 3rd July 1929 at about 6 p. m. he armed himself with a tesha (adze) and went to the house where Mt. Dhannon lived at the time. She was standing near the tanur, ready to bake her bread, and two other Chamar women, Mt. Aso (P. W. 4) and Mt. Nandan (P. W. 5) were close by. He attacked her with the adze and inflicted a number of injuries on her, felling her to the ground. Ram Ditta sweeper (P. W. 3) and Bhanta Singh lambardar (P. W. 12) were near the spot and witnessed the assault. An alarm was raised but the appellant made good his escape. Mt. Dhannon was taken to the police station where she made a report. The police registered a case under S. 326, I. P. C., and started the investigation.

As Mt. Dhannon's injuries were of a serious nature she was taken to the hospital at Rai Kot where she was examined by Sub-Assistant Surgeon Chanda Singh (P. W. 2) on 5th July. He found eleven incised wounds on her body, of which four were on the right upper arm, one on the left forearm, four on the right thigh, one on the left thigh, a small superficial wound on the breast and one on the finger. There was also a contusion on one of the thighs.

In the opinion of this witness all the injuries were simple except the contusion, which he considered to be grievous. On the evening of the 8th July it was noticed that tetanus had set in in one of the wounds. Azizul Hassan (P. W. 9) Sub-Inspector of Police, was accordingly sent for and he recorded her dying declaration (Ex. P. B.). Medical treatment was continued in the hospital but Mt. Dhannon died on 9th July at 5 p. m. The dead body was taken to the mortuary at Jagraon and was examined by Sub-Assistant Surgeon Dr. Lal Chand (P. W. 1) on 10th July 1929.

The learned Sessions Judge has accepted as true the evidence of the three eyewitnesses, Ram Ditta, Mt. Aso and Mt. Nandan, and has also relied on the so called first information report made by Mt. Dhannon at the police station shortly after the occurrence and her dying declaration recorded by the Sub-Inspector on 8th July 1929.

Mr. Sethi for the appellant has subjected to minute analysis the evidence of the eyewitnesses and has also argued that the statements of Mt. Dhannon mentioned above are inadmissible in evidence. But after hearing him at length and giving due weight to his arguments, I am of opinion, that they are devoid of force. The three eyewitnesses gave their evidence in a clear and straightforward manner and are agreed as to the main incidents of the occurrence. The discrepancies pointed out by Mr. Sethi are too meticulous and important to be noticed in detail. They relate to the order in which the blows were inflicted, the position in which the victim was at the time, and the person to whom the appellant addressed the query as to where Mt. Dhannon was. The learned counsel attempted to discredit these witnesses on the ground that they were sweepers and belonged to the same brotherhood as the deceased. He also adversely criticised the failure of the prosecution to produce any of the other persons who are stated by these witnesses to have come on the scene on hearing the uproar. It must, however, be borne in mind that the scene of the occurrence was in the part of the village which is inhabited by Chamars. It was, therefore, not surprising that the eyewitnesses are of that class. Further, as has been rightly pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, there is no doubt that the Jat inhabitants of the locality were unwilling to take part in the investigation against a member of their own tribe, who was being prosecuted for having assaulted a Chamar woman. This is clear from the conduct of Bhanta Singh (P. W. 12) who admittedly arrived on the scene very shortly after the occurrence and saw the deceased wounded, but in spite of his being a lambardar, took no steps to report the matter to the police, nor did he join the investigation. In these circumstances no importance can be attached to the circumstance that the prosecution rely merely on the evidence of Chamar witnesses. Ram Ditta, Mt. Aso, and Mt. Nandan, the three eye-witnesses were mentioned in the report made by Mt. Dhannon at the police station within two hours of the occurrence. They are not shown to have any enmity with the appellant and no reason has been urged to throw doubt on their veracity.

Equally devoid of force is the contention that the two statements of Mt. Dhannon are inadmissible in evidence. It is no doubt true that if Ex. P. R. were to be treated as a first information report strictly so called, it would not be admissible in this case. It is settled law that such a report is not substantive evidence. It can be used only to corroborate or contradict the deposition of the maker thereof at the trial. But this was not possible in this case as Mt. Dhannon had died before the matter came before the Court. It is, however, admissible under S. 32 (1), Evidence Act, as it is the statement of a person (since deceased) relating to the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in her death. Mr. Sethi eventually conceded that this was so, but contended that in that event, both this statement as well as the dying declaration (Ex. P. B.) recorded by the Sub-Inspector Azizul Hassan (P. W. 9) on 8th July were inadmissible, as that witness while giving evidence did not repeat in the witness-box in his own words what the deceased had said on each occasion, but had merely proved the records of those statements. This argument is, however, effectively disposed of by Paratap Singh v. Emperor (1), where a similar contention was raised and overruled. Mr. Sethi has not attacked the soundness of that ruling and I see no reason to differ from it. In both these statements Mt. Dhannon had stated that she was wounded by the appellant with a tesha and in my opinion they are valuable corroboration of the testimony of the eyewitnesses.

Lastly, Mr. Sethi laid great emphasis on the observations of the learned Sessions Judge that "it appeared that the appellant liked Mt. Dhannon and she liked him" and there was intimacy between them. He also drew our attention to the remark of the learned Judge that Santa, the husband of the deceased, was known in the village by the nickname of Ghugi, which indicated that he was "not much of a man" and that the appellant is "the village beau," who was liked by, and had become friendly with Mt. Dhannon. On the assumptions underlying these remarks the learned counsel based an argument that in view of this intimacy it was most unlikely that the appellant should have killed Mt. Dhannon, and that it was highly probable that she had been killed by her husband and the other sweepers. We have, however, searched in vain the whole of the judicial record for any evidence, direct or circumstantial, which could justify these assumptions. Both counsel are agreed that there is not a tittle of evidence to suggest that there was intimacy between the deceased and the appellant, or that she was a consenting party to the trespass by the appellant in her house for which he was eventually convicted in November 1928. They also expressed their inability to point out the source from which the learned Judge had learnt that Santa was commonly described as Ghugi or that the appellant was the "beau" of the village. Santa was not questioned on the point when he appeared to give evidence for the prosecution, and no other witness has deposed to this effect. The learned Judge appears to have based his remarks on some extra-judicial information, which he was clearly not entitled to import into his judgment. Mr. Sethi conceded that if these observations of the learned Judge were excluded from consideration, there was nothing else to support his argument, except that there is evidence that the appellant had taken a house on mortgage in the mohalla where the deceased lived, and that from this it might be concluded that the deceased used to meet him in this house. This is, however, a very far fetched conclusion which I find myself unable to accept.

After a careful consideration of the evidence on the record I have no doubt that it was the appellant who assaulted the deceased with the tesha, on the occasion and in the manner described above.

The next question for consideration is whether the act of the appellant amounts to murder. Now it is noticeable that nearly all the injuries were inflicted on the arms and the legs. The only injury on any vital part of the body was a superficial incised wound No. 8 on the breast. It is also significant that several of the wounds were flesh-deep and had healed to a large extent before her death. The only two grievous injuries noticed at the time of the post-mortem examination were, one on the thigh and the other on the left index finger. The weapon used was a heavy iron adze and the appellant could, if he had intended, inflict much more serious injuries on the deceased, who was quite unarmed at the time and was not in a position to offer any resistance. It seems to me that his intention was merely to wound her and not to put her to death. Nor can he, in the circumstances, be said to have the knowledge that he was causing such injuries as were likely to cause death. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have been influenced to a very great extent by the circumstances that tetanus had set in in one of the wounds and that death resulted therefrom. But having regard to the fact that the fatal result is not the usual and probable consequence of these injuries and the medical evidence is not very definite on the point the appellant cannot be held guilty of the offence of murder.

Mr. Mackay, who appeared for the prosecution, very fairly and properly conceded that it was doubtful whether the offence was one under S. 299 and that Explan. 2 to that section, on which the learned Sessions Judge had relied, was inapplicable.

In my opinion the act of the appellant falls within S. 326, I. P. C., and he must be convicted of that offence.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 302 and in lieu thereof convict the appellant under S. 326, I. P. C., and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

Mohri Ram—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1572 of 1929
Decided on 21st February 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Montgomery, D/- 9th July 1929.

Penal Code, Ss. 287 and 304-A—304-A applies to rash and negligent acts, directly causing death—Where accused are guilty of negligence but death is not directly caused by their acts, offence is under S. 287.

Section 304-A only applies to such acts of the accused as are rash and negligent and are directly the cause of death of another person.

F took lease of a flour mill with M as partner who was to act as manager. R was employed to act as Mistri. A shaft with a leather belting was installed in the mill but part of the belting protruded outside the building. Two girls playing near by were caught in the belting, one being killed and the other crippled.

Held; that the offence by M and R was under S. 287 and not under S. 304-A. They had negligently omitted to take care of the machinery as was sufficient to guard against probable danger to human life but they never intended to cause the injury. The girls had no right to go to the mill compound. [P 558, C 2]

But F who had not taken any active part in the management of the mill could not be held liable even under S. 297. [P 553, C 1]

R. C. Marchanda—for Petitioner.

Judgment—This judgment will dispose of cases Nos. 1572 and 1573 of 1929 as both arise out of the same incident and the same judgment of the Sessions Judge of Montgomery. The facts as found by the Sessions Judge are these:

Fateh Chand, petitioner, took the lease of a flour mill in November 1927 and a month later he took Mohri Ram petitioner as his partner in the business of the flour mill. Mohri Ram was to act as the manager and Munshi Ram, petitioner, who also was employed at the same time, was to act as the mistri. Both had to be paid a salary in lieu of their services. In December 1927 a shaft with a leather belting was installed in the flour mill for water supply but part of the belting protruded outside the factory building. On the 30th December the same year two small girls who resided in a neighbouring house went into the compound of the flour mill to play and it seems that one of them went too near to the belting and was caught therein and killed. The other girl attempted to save her and in doing so was injured and has become a cripple for life.

On these facts three petitioners, Fateh Chand, Mohri Ram and Munshi Ram, were convicted by a Magistrate under S. 304-A, I. P. C. and while Munshi Ram was sentenced to imprisonment and fine, the other two were sentenced to fine alone. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge has held that offence of Fateh Chand fell merely within the definition of S. 287 I. P. C. and has consequently altered his conviction accordingly. He, however, upheld the conviction of the other two convicts under S. 304-A but reduced the sentence of Munshi Ram by remitting the sentence of imprisonment altogether. The result was that Munshi Ram was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500/- or in default to six months' rigorous imprisonment while Mohri Ram and Fateh Chand were sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500/- and Rs. 300/- respectively and in default to six months' and four months' rigorous imprisonment respectively. The three convicts have presented petitions for revision in this Court.

I have heard counsel on behalf of them all. Taking the case of Fateh Chand first, it has been found that after entering into the agreement of partnership with Mohri Ram this convict took up service elsewhere and apparently did not take any active interest in the management of the flour mill. The learned Sessions Judge is not able to agree with the conclusion of the Magistrate that "he must have taken some part in the working" of the factory, and it was for that reason that he altered his conviction to S. 287, I. P. C. because, according to the learned Judge:

"He shares with the others in negligent omission to take such care of machinery as was sufficient to guard against any probable danger to human life."

In my opinion Fateh Chand not having taken any active part either in erecting the shaft and the belting or in the management of the mill cannot be held liable even under S. 287 I. P. C. for the manner in which these had been erected or were worked. His petition, therefore, is accepted and conviction set aside. The fine, if realised from him, shall be refunded.

With regard to Munshi Ram and Mohri

Ram they were both in charge of the flour mill, one as its manager and the other as its mistri and were, therefore directly responsible for the condition of the shaft and the belting. At the same time I am unable to hold that they could be convicted, under the circumstances, of offence under S. 304-A, I.P.C. That section only applies to such acts of the accused as are rash and negligent and are directly the cause of the death of another person. In the present case it is to be noted in the first instance that the two girls had no right to go to the compound of the flour mill and it was never contemplated by these two petitioners that any injury would be caused to them, nor was it their intention to cause them any injury. Their convictions under S. 304-A must, therefore, be set aside. I am of opinion that both these petitioners are liable to be punished under S. 287 I. P. C. because they were in possession of and had the care of the flour mill and consequently of the belting which was the cause of this accident, and it is obvious that they omitted to take care of such machinery negligently as was sufficient to guard against probable danger to human life. They should have known that by leaving the belting protruding outside the building and without fencing, there was danger to persons who might be passing near the belting. I alter their conviction to S. 287, I. P. C. and reduce their sentences of fine to Rs. 250/- in the case of Mohri Ram and Rs. 150/- in the case of Munshi Ram; in default of payment of fine they will both suffer rigorous imprisonment for three monthss each.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 43 of 1930, Decided on 5th March 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 4th December 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Magistrate cannot return challan to police after taking cognizance of case—Such course is illegal and unfair to accused.

The Police produced an accused under S. 302, I. P. C. before a Magistrate on 1st September with a view to his committal to Sessions.

The Magistrate adjourned the case to 2nd September in order to give opportunity to the accused to engage a counsel. On 2nd September, however, the case was not taken by the Magistrate and the police took back the challan alleging that it was incomplete but on the same day a statement under S. 164 was recorded by the Magistrate, in which the accused made full confession of his guilt. Later on at the close of the prosecution case the accused retracted his confession alleging that the same had been made under promise of pardon.

Held: that the confession could not be used against the prisoner. There was no law which authorized the Magistrate to return the challan after he had taken cognizance of the case. The course adopted by the police in taking back the challan was illegal as well as unfair to the accused and the confession could be ruled out for that reason alone. [P 560 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 364—Questions to accused cannot be asked when no inquiry had been made against him in Court.

Section 364 authorizes a Magistrate to put questions to accused in order to enable him to explain any evidence that may have been produced against him during the inquiry or trial but where no inquiry had been made, the accused cannot be questioned.

A Magistrate before whom a person accused under S. 302, I. P. C. was produced and who had made a confession, after asking him the preliminary questions for satisfying himself that he was making the confession voluntarily, put him the following question, instead of allowing him to make any statement he liked, "Did you on 27th August at M, commit murder of S, deceased, intentionally causing injuries to him with a hatchet."

Held: that the question was not justified under the circumstances, as there were no facts before the Magistrate nor was there any evidence on which he could formulate such question. S. 364 had no application to a case like this. No inquiry having been made or commenced in the Court, the question could not be asked under S. 364. [P 560 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Quere—Confession under S. 164 after case sent to Magistrate for inquiry—Whether can be recorded.

It is a question whether a confession under S. 164 can be recorded by a Magistrate after a case has been sent to him for inquiry.

[P 560 C 1]

Sahib Dalal Suri—for Appellant.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Jai Lal, J.—Pahlwan alias Pahlu has been convicted of the murder of Salihon on 27th August 1929, and has been sentenced to death.

The facts, as alleged on behalf of the prosecution, are briefly these: Salihon originally belonged to Kamalia in the district of Multan, but about a year before his death he settled down at the village Ghasitwahn within the limits of the police station of Kabirwala. His wife

Mt. Nuran and his daughter Mt. Alam Khatun and probably his son also resided with him. It appears that about a month before his death Mt. Nuran contracted illicit connexion with the prisoner, and this fact having become known to the deceased, her husband, he protested and, in fact, beat her. In spite of this, however, the illicit connexion continued. The result was that the deceased decided to go back to his original home and a few days before his death he went to Kamalia in order to arrange for a lease of some land for cultivation. He returned a couple of days before 27th August and it seems that his intention to leave the village was made known to Pahlu who decided to put him out of the way by killing him and thus to secure Mt. Nuran to himself. Consequently, on 27th August about noon, when Mt. Nuran was absent from her house, he went to Salihon at his house and asked him to go with him to help him in cutting fodder. Salihon accompanied the appellant and never returned to his house.

Mt. Nuran, on return to her house, was informed, by her daughter Alam Khatun, that Salihon had gone to the field with the appellant and when she found that he had not returned as he should have done she made an enquiry from the prisoner as to the whereabouts of her husband. The prisoner first told her that he had gone to his son. She went to her son but did not find her husband there. Both the mother and the son then returned to the village and made further enquiry from the appellant, he told them that he had gone to another place. Finally, Nuran mentioned the matter to Pahlu lambardar who is a first cousin of the prisoner and both went to the field of Pahlu accused and found marks of struggle and some blood on the spot. This raised their suspicion of foul play and the matter was reported at the police station. Investigation was started and it appears that during the investigation Pahlu accused gave information as a result of which the body of the deceased was recovered from a well, and the next day, on further information given by him, a hatchet was recovered from another well.

On 1st September, the Sub-Inspector of Police produced the accused for enquiry before a Magistrate with a view to his committal to the Sessions Court, who, however, adjourned the case to 2nd September in order to give an opportunity to the accused to engage a counsel. On 2nd September, however, the case was not taken up by the Magistrate and the police took back the challan alleging that it was incomplete; but on the same day a statement of the accused was recorded by the Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal P. C. In that statement the prisoner made a full confession of his guilt. On 3rd the enquiry before the Magistrate commenced and the evidence for the prosecution was recorded.

After some adjournments and at the close of the prosecution case, the prisoner was examined by the Magistrate but he retracted his confession on that occasion alleging that the same had been made under promise of pardon and under pressure from the police. The prisoner, in fact, alleged that he had been beaten by the Sub-Inspector. At the trial also the accused made the same statement as he had made before the committing Magistrate.

So far as this confession is concerned, I am of opinion that it ought not to be used against the prisoner. In the first instance, it is a question whether a confession under S. 164, Criminal P. C., could be recorded by the Magistrate after the case had been sent up to him for enquiry. No doubt, it was an incomplete challan, but there is no law which authorized the Magistrate to return the challan after he had taken cognizance of the case on 1st September, and had fixed 2nd September for the hearing of the case. On that date, as I have already stated, the police took back the challan, alleging that the same was incomplete. Indications are that this was done as a pretext to enable the Magistrate to record the statement of the accused under S. 164, Criminal P. C., it apparently being realized by the prosecuting agency that so long as the case was pending in the Court of the Magistrate, a statement under S. 164, could not be recorded. In my opinion this course in addition to being illegal was unfair to the accused and for that reason alone, I would rule out the confession.

Further there are circumstances which materially affect the value of this confession, if they do not make it inadmissible.

As soon as the prisoner was produced before the Magistrate, the latter, after asking him the preliminary questions for satisfying himself that the prisoner was making the confession voluntarily and understood the consequences of making such a confession, instead of allowing the prisoner to make whatever statement he liked, put the following question to him:

"Did you, on 27th August 1929, at Mauza Ghasitwahn commit murder of Salihon, deceased intentionally by causing injuries to him with a hatchet?"

To this question the prisoner gave a reply in the affirmative. The question, in my opinion, was not justified under the circumstances of the case, as there were no facts before the Magistrate nor was there any evidence on which he could formulate such a question.

The whole of the statement of the prisoner was recorded in the same manner. Questions were asked from the accused and answers were given by him practically in the affirmative. It is no doubt true that S. 364, Criminal P. C., provides that, in recording the statement of the accused, the Magistrate should act in the manner provided in S. 364, Criminal P. C. But I do not think that S. 364 has any application to a case like this where the very first question asked by the Magistrate is in the form already described by me above. That section authorizes a Magistrate to put questions to the accused in order to enable him to explain any evidence that may have been produced against him during the enquiry or the trial. In the present case no such enquiry had been made or even commenced in the Court of the Magistrate and therefore the first question, at any rate, could not have been asked under the provisions of S. 364, Criminal P. C.

The learned Additional Government Advocate contended that even if the record of the confession be ruled out on the ground that it was not properly recorded under S. 164, still the confession could be used on behalf of the prosecution, provided it is otherwise properly proved.

In view of what I have stated above as to the value of the confession in this case, I do not think it is necessary to consider that question. In my opinion, therefore, the confession in the present case must be excluded from consideration against the accused.

The facts, as alleged by the prosecution have been sufficiently established by the testimony of Mt. Nuran, Mt. Alam Khatun and Pallu lambardar. Mt. Nuran gives evidence as to her illicit connexion with the accused and as to her having been beaten by her husband on that account and also as to the intention of the deceased to leave the village. She also gives evidence as to her having gone to fetch water and on her return as to having found her husband absent from the house and as to being told on enquiry by Mt. Alam Khatun that the deceased had accompanied the accused. She further gives evidence as to the various statements made by the accused to her about the whereabouts of her husband two of which have been proved to be false. Mt. Alam Khatun states that the deceased was at his house when her mother had gone to fetch water and that the accused came and asked him to accompany him in order to cut fodder and that the deceased went with the accused but never returned.

Pallu lambardar states that seeing the deceased and the accused going towards the field of the accused he made an enquiry and was told that they were going to cut fodder in the fields. Pallu lambardar further gives evidence and so does Mt. Nuran of having seen marks of struggle in the field of the accused having pointed out the well where the dead body of Salihon was found. Pallu lambardar also proves the fact that a hatchet was recovered on information given by the accused, so do Ahmed Yar Khan and Sub-Inspector Qutab Khan.

In my opinion there is ample evidence on the record from which the prosecution case, as described above, has been fully established. Excluding the confession, therefore, from consideration, it appears that there are the following facts against the accused :

(1) That he had motive to kill the deceased.

(2) That he took the deceased with him on 27th August 1929, to his field.

(3) That the deceased did not return to his house thereafter.

(4) That on being questioned the accused gave explanations about the whereabouts of the deceased which were false and self-contradictory.

(5) That marks of struggle were found in his field.

(6) That on information supplied by the accused the dead body of the deceased was recovered from a well and lastly;

(7) That a hatchet was recovered from another well on information given by the accused.

The medical evidence shows that Salihon died as a result of three incised wounds on his neck and that five of his ribs were broken, but probably after death.

In my opinion the above facts leave on doubt that it was the accused Pahlu who caused the death of the deceased Salihon and then threw his body in the well. His conviction, therefore, for the murder of Salihon is fully justified by the evidence on the record and the sentence of death was the only appropriate sentence under the circumstances of the case.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal and confirm the sentence of death passed upon the convict.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1174 of 1929, Decided on 27th January 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 18th November 1929.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Accused asking for copies of statements made by some prosecution witnesses to police—Police diary showing that their statements were recorded jointly with other witnesses—Court can refuse to supply such copies.

When witnesses for the prosecution M and J were examined, the accused's counsel asked for copies of the statements made by those witnesses to the police. On referring to the police diaries, the Court found that the statement of J was recorded jointly with another prosecution witness who was tendered for cross-examination but was not cross-examined.

Held : that the Court in the circumstances could refuse to supply a copy of the statement made to the police : Lah. Cr. App. No. 1095 of 1924, Rel. on. [P. 562 C 1; P. 563 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Statements of witnesses recorded in inquest report—

Court can refuse them to be read out to assessors.

The Court is justified in refusing to allow the brief statements of witnesses incorporated in the inquest report to be read out to the assessors as there is no provision in the Code for doing so. [P 563 C 1]

B. R. Puri—for Appellants.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Johnstone, J.—On 19th July 1925 at about 8 a. m., Wasawa Singh, a sunar of Fatehgarh, Sukkar Chak in the Amritsar District was stabbed in the left arm and in the left flank. He was taken to the hospital at Amritsar and died of peritonitis on the morning of 5th August. Three persons were prosecuted in connexion with this outrage, namely, Banta Singh and his two sons, Pindar Singh and Kunna Singh. The learned Sessions Judge of Amritsar has convicted Banta Singh under S. 302, I. P. C. and Pindar Singh under the same section read with S. 34, I. P. C., and he has acquitted the third accused. Banta Singh has been sentenced to death and Pindar Singh to transportation for life. We have heard Mr. B. R. Puri, for the appellants and Mr. Des Raj Sawhney for the Crown.

The story told by the prosecution is briefly to the following effect: A wall separated the vacant sites belonging to the deceased and the appellant Banta Singh. Between 7 and 8 a. m., on 19th July Kunna Singh began demolishing the wall, notwithstanding the protests of the deceased, whose father, Kesar Singh (P. W. 3) came to the place and joined with his son in remonstrating. Banta Singh and Pindar Singh meanwhile watched over Kunna Singh. After some abuse had passed, the three accused went off to their house, remarking that they would settle the matter. The deceased and Kesar Singh then started for Kesar Singh's shop, but before they reached their destination the three accused appeared in the gali, Banta Singh and Pindar Singh carrying spears and Kunna Singh a dang. Banta Singh thrust his spear into the deceased's left side, Pindar Singh afterwards stabbing the deceased's left arm with his spear. at the instigation (it was said) of Kunna Singh. The deceased collapsed on the ground and the accused, after daring the sunars, disappeared towards their home via the haveli of a man named Rupa Singh, who is a nephew of Banta Singh.

The attack was observed by a number of persons and the prosecution produced five eyewitnesses: Kesar Singh who had been with the deceased from the beginning, Mt. Durgi and Mt. Bisso, respectively daughter and sister of the deceased, and Jowand Singh and Rur Singh (P. W. 7 and P. W. 8). The last two named persons are sunars like the deceased, but are apparently not related to him. Another sunar, Bala Singh (P. W. 9) arrived too late to see the assault, but was told by the deceased the names of his assailants. Rur Singh admits that, after the attack a large number of persons assembled, including Jats, Hindus and Muslims and Jowand Singh particularly refers to Hakam Singh lambardar (D. W. 32) and Ahmad Din chaukidar (D. W. 12). The appellants both denied their presence at the scene of the outrage, Banta Singh asserting that he was at Sultanwind village 7 or 8 miles away, attending an Akali Diwan, and Pindar Singh alleging that he had gone to his well, three miles from the village, before sunrise. The defence also set up the theory that a sunar named Banta Singh had fought with the deceased, and a large number of witnesses was produced by the accused at the trial.

Before considering the evidence, I must advert to certain questions of procedure and evidence which were raised at the trial and have been emphasised by the learned counsel for the appellants. The first point urged was this. When Mt. Bisso was examined, and again when Jowand Singh was examined, the accused's counsel asked for copies of the statements made by those witnesses to the police. On referring to the police diaries, the Court found that the statement of Mt. Bisso had been recorded jointly with that of Mt. Durgi, and similarly that the statement of Jowand Singh had been recorded jointly with that of Indar Singh (P. W. 10), who was tendered for cross-examination but was not cross-examined. This question has already been decided by this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 1095 of 1924, decided on 23rd March 1925, and I can see no reason to go contrary to the view there expressed that in such circumstances a Court is justified in refusing to supply a copy of a statement made to the police.

The next legal argument was that the prosecution had made use of an inadmissible document as the first information report. What happened was this. When the Sub-Inspector heard that the deceased had been conveyed to the hospital, he got a Magistrate (Sayad Karam Shah, P. W. 4 to record the statement of the deceased and that statement is the document (P. M. p. 8 of the paper book). The document contains a bare recital of the occurrence. Immediately afterwards the Sub-Inspector recorded a more detailed statement of the deceased, and the prosecution has used this later statement (P. G. 1 at p. 3 of the paper book) as the first information report. The contention is that the procedure is wrong. Now, the statement P. M. was not made to the police and cannot be regarded as a first information report. The first information received by the police was by means of a telephonic message from the Civil Hospital. Evidently, therefore, the document P. G. 1 was not a first information report, but there is no doubt that the statement made by the deceased to the Sub-Inspector comes within the purview of S. 32, Evidence Act.

A third point taken was that, during the cross-examination of the Sub-Inspector, the Court refused to allow the brief statements of witnesses incorporated in the inquest report to be read out to the assessors. It would appear that such statements could be made use of under S. 162, Criminal P. C., but the accused's counsel at the trial did not ask for that. There is no provision in the Code for reading out such statements, which are inadmissible unless they have been put to the witnesses themselves, and that action was not taken. The learned Sessions Judge was correct in refusing the counsel's request. It is also to be observed that the Judge was correct in holding that the other statements made by witnesses to the police were not formally proved and were inadmissible. The objection to their admissibility is, no doubt, a technical one, but all that need be said is that, even if the statements had been proved, they would not have materially assisted the defence.

Turning now to the facts of the case, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the place of the occurrence was the lane, and that the appellants left the wall after the quarrel and came to the lane, following up Wasawa Singh and his father. Most of the houses in that locality are occupied by sunars and it was consequently natural that sunars should be eyewitnesses of the attack. No doubt, their evidence is not disinterested, but it cannot be discarded for that reason alone. The most important evidence is that of the victim himself and it is highly improbable that he would falsely implicate persons, who according to the defence theory had no hostility to him. The story of an alleged quarrel and fight between the deceased and a Banta Singh, sunar, is not at all established by the witnesses for the defence. Equally unreliable is the alibi evidence led in favour of the appellants. It is quite possible that Banta Singh could have committed the crime and yet been seen emerging from Sultanwind village, when the Sub-Inspector arrived there, and the alibi does not preclude the possibility of Banta Singh's having attacked the deceased in Fatehgarh beforehand.

The medical evidence shows that the deceased had penetrating wounds in the left arm and left flank. The wounds were in the same line and it is quite possible, as the doctor himself hinted, that the two wounds were caused by one thrust of a spear. The dimensions of the wounds diminish gradually as between the entrance wound in the arm, the exit wound in the arm and the entrance wound in the flank. The circumstance suggests that perhaps only one blow was actually inflicted, and in any event in view of the possibility of such being the case I am of opinion that the benefit of doubt must be given to the defence. That being so, there is reason to question the allegation that Pindar Singh had a spear with him or that he used it. The learned Sessions Judge found that the part attributed to Kunna Singh has been exaggerated, and it is possible that Pindar Singh too has been accused of doing more than he did.

In my opinion the act of Banta Singh amounted to the offence of murder. The use of a spear against a human being is very often attended with fatal consequences, and Banta Singh obviously intended to cause an injury which in the ordinary course of nature would result in death. I would, therefore, maintain the conviction of Banta Singh under S. 302, I. P. C., and confirm the sentence of death. I would accept the appeal of Pindar Singh and set aside his conviction and sentence.

Faizul Hassan—Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1855 of 1929, Decided on 7th March 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 12th November 1929.

Post Office Act, S. 3—Letters found lying in khola and made over to Postmaster are in course of transmission—Charge under S. 52 in such case is not defective and alternate charge under S. 201, Penal Code does not contravene Criminal P. C., S. 236—Penal Code, S. 201.

M, a servant of K, having discovered a number of letters lying in a khola opposite a post office, handed them over to his master. One of the letters was addressed to P and K took it to the addressee who stated that the letter had never been delivered to him. The matter was reported to the Postmaster F who took possession of the letters saying that he would take necessary action in the matter. No action being taken by F, the matter was reported to the Postmaster-General with the result that F was sent up for trial. The Magistrate framed two alternate charges against him, first under S. 52, Post Office Act and the other under S. 201, Penal Code. The Magistrate found F guilty only under S. 201. It was contended that the charge framed by the Magistrate was defective and prejudiced the accused, the alternate charge was illegal and contravened the provisions of S. 236, Criminal P. C.

Held: that the first charge was not defective, as the postal articles in question were "in course of transmission by post" according to S. 3, Post Office Act, when they were made over to F by K and, therefore, the mere fact that the letters had been posted when F was not the Postmaster of the Post Office was immaterial. The framing of the charge in the alternative under S. 201 did not contravene S. 236, Criminal P. C. [P 565 O 1, 2]

Ram Lal and M. L. Batra—for the Crown.

Din Muhammad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In July 1928, a man named Munshi, servant of Doctor Ram

Kishen of Khanna, discovered a number of letters lying in a khola opposite the Khanna Sub Post Office. He picked up some of these letters and took them to his master, informing him of his discovery. One of these letters was addressed to Master Piare Lal, and Doctor Ram Kishen took it to the addressee who stated that the letter had never been delivered to him. These people thereupon reported the matter to the Sub-Post Master, Faizul Hasan and with him went to the khola where they found a number of other letters etc. All these letters etc., were taken possession of by Faizul Hassan who said that he would take the necessary action in the matter. As no action was taken by Faizul Hassan for some months an anonymous letter was sent to the Post Master General detailing the facts, an enquiry was held, with the result that Faizul Hassan was sent up for trial before a Magistrate. The Magistrate framed two alternative charges against Faizul Hassan. The first charge was under S. 52, Post Office Act, and related to the destruction, secretion or throwing away of postal articles whilst still in course of transmission by post. The alternative charge was under S. 201, I. P. C. and was as follows:—

"I, Vidya Sagar, Magistrate First Class, with powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., hereby charge you, Faizul Hassan, that you on or about the end of July 1928, while you were acting as Sub Postmaster, Khanna, knowing or having reason to believe that the offence under S. 52, Post Office Act, punishable with imprisonment for seven years and with fine has been committed, did cause certain evidence of the said offence to disappear, to wit, to destroy, secrete or throw away undelivered letters and post cards in the course of transmission by post, recovered from the khola near the Post Office, with the intention of screening one Lajpat Rai, the postman concerned from legal punishment, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 201, I. P. C."

The Magistrate came to the conclusion that no offence under S. 52, Post Office Act, had been established but convicted Faizul Hassan on the second charge under S. 201, I. P. C. Faizul Hasan thereupon preferred an appeal to the Sessions Judge before whom certain objections were taken. The first of these was that the charge, as framed by the trial Magistrate, was defective and had prejudiced the appellant in his trial, and secondly, that the alternative charge was illegal and contravened the provisions of S. 236, Criminal P. C. These objections found favour with the learned Sessions Judge who thereupon accepted the appeal remanded the case for a retrial.

Against this order for a retrial the Crown has moved this Court under Ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C., and it has been urged that the learned Sess. Judge was wrong in holding that the charge under S. 201, I. P. C., was defective and further that it had not been shown that the accused had in any shape or form been prejudiced or hampered in his defence by the phraseology of the charge.

It seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge arrived at his conclusion owing to the fact that the provisions of S. 3, Post Office Act were not brought to his notice, with the result that the meaning of the expression "in course of transmission by post" was not fully appreciated. S. 3, runs as follows:

"For the purposes of this Act, a postal article shall be deemed to be in course of transmission by post from the time of its being delivered to a post office to the time of its being delivered to the addressee or of its being returned to the sender or otherwise disposed of under Chap. 7."

In view of this definition it is perfectly clear that the postal articles in question were "in course of transmission by post" when they were made over to Faizul Hassan by Doctor Ram Kishen and Master Piare Lal etc., and that, therefore, the mere fact that some of the letters had been posted in 1927 at the time when Faizul Hassan was not the Post Master of this Sub-Post Office is immaterial.

I agree that the phraseology of the charge under S. 201, I. P. C. is not very happy and the charge, as remodelled by the learned Sessions Judge, is more to the point. At the same time it seems to me that the charge, as framed by the Magistrate, was in no shape or form misleading. Indeed, Mr. Din Muhammad, who appeared for the respondent, frankly and very properly admitted that his client was never under any misapprehension so far as this charge is concerned and fully understood that the gravamen of the charge was that he had suppressed or destroyed postal articles which were still in course of transmission by post and which had been made over to him by Master Piare Lal, and that in suppressing or destroying these articles he was suppressing or destroying the evidence of an offence under S. 52, Post Office Act, committed by a person other than himself. In face of this definite and frank admission it is exceedingly difficult to see how the phraseology of the charge can be held to have in any way prejudiced or hampered Faizul Hasan in his defence on this charge.

In fact Mr. Din Muhammad practically asked that this petition should be accepted, and that the learned Sessions Judge be directed to dispose of the appeal on the merits.

Nothing was urged by Mr. Din Muhammad in support of the second objection relating to S. 236, Criminal P. C. It is, therefore, only necessary for me to say that, in my judgment, the framing of the charges in the alternative did not contravene that section.

I, therefore, accept this petition and, setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge directing a retrial return the appeal for disposal in accordance with law.

Jiwan Singh and others — Opposite Parties.

Criminal Revn. No. 729 of 1929, Decided on 17th January 1930, from an order of Sess. Judge, Moradabad, D/-16th August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 107 — Scope—It is not necessary to prove an overt act towards breach of peace.

Section 107 is one appearing in a chapter devoted in the Criminal Procedure Code to the object of preventing a breach of the peace, and to prove the existence of circumstances which may lead a reasonable man to apprehend a breach of the peace. It need not always be necessary to prove also an overt act towards a breach of the peace on behalf of any of the accused. [P 566 C 1,2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 107 — Subsequent breach of peace is best evidence.

In a criminal case, if the accused persons, seeing proceedings under S. 107 against them pending, attempt to commit a breach of the peace, such evidence would be the best evidence to prove their intention to commit a breach of the peace. [P 566 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 107—Only persons definitely contemplating breach should be bound.

Court should not treat the case of all the opposite parties in a lump but should find out-the persons who could definitely be said to have contemplated a breach of the peace.

[P 566 C 1]

S. Mohammad Husain—for the Crown.

Vishva Mittra—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—I feel considerable difficulty in deciding this matter because both the subordinate Courts have gone wrong in certain particulars. They have differed in opinion. The trial Magistrate was of opinion that the opposite party should be bound over, while the appellate Court discharged the order of the Magistrate. The Magistrate has made the mistake so often commented upon by this Court of treating all the accused in a lump without discrimination and without an attempt to discover which of them was likely to commit a breach of the peace. After reading the evidence I have not the slightest doubt that Sirajuddin is in some danger of being submitted to physical force by some of the Jats of his village. The difficulty exists in the confusion caused by the trial Court treating all the accused persons as if they formed one single individual. The appellate Court has gone wrong in his opinion that to bind over persons it is not sufficient to prove a danger of the breach of the peace but further it must be proved that the accused were guilty of some overt act towards a breach of the peace. There is no such necessity, and I emphatically disagree with any such opinion expressed by any High Court. The ruling referred to by the Sessions Court, Mathura Sahu v. Emperor (1) is not available in this Court. Counsel for the opposite side has referred me to a Lahore ruling, Joti Sarup v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 689 in which such an opinion may be said to have been expressed by a Sessions Judge. There is no opinion of the High Court. The Sessions Judge's opinion is merely by the way as to the absence of any single overt act and no principle is laid down by the High Court. An overt act towards a breach of the peace would be a substantive offence to be dealt with under the Indian Penal Code, S. 107 is one appearing in a chapter devoted in the Criminal Procedure Code to the object of preventing a breach of the peace, and to prove the existence of circumstances which may lead a reasonable man to apprehend a breach of the peace. It need not always be necessary to prove also an overt act towards a breach of the peace on behalf of any of the accused. The learned Judge has further expressed other opinions with which I entirely disagree. He was of opinion that if the complainant was assaulted and beaten during the proceedings that would not be any evidence to bind over the opposite party because such evidence as existed at the time of the institution of the proceedings could only be used. This will be taking a very narrow view of criminal responsibility, and it is obvious that the learned Sessions Judge's mind was dwelling on circumstances which would be considered in a civil suit where a cause of action that accrued subsequent to the filing of the suit would not be noticed by a civil Court.

In a criminal case, if the accused persons, seeing proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., against them pending, attempted to commit a breach of the peace such evidence would be the best evidence to prove their intention to commit a breach of the peace. I am thus in disagreement with the general view taken by both the subordinate Courts, and I have got to arrive at a decision independently on the evidence on the record. That evidence has satisfied me that though the mosque was built a long time ago there is friction at present between the complainant and the Jats over the taking out of some Hindu procession. Rightly or wrongly the complainant as Imam of the mosque objects to the procession, while the Jats appear to be keen on taking one out. There is an existing source of dispute. This was further proved by a dead pig, an animal suffering under particular contempt of the Mahomedans, being left in the mosque. There is certainly a danger of the breach of the peace, and that danger exists in reference to the complainant and is likely to proceed from the Jats of the village. My difficulty, however, is to discover the persons among the accused who are likely to commit such a breach. As I have already pointed out, the trial Court has treated the cases of all the opposite parties in a lump. The complainant has mentioned different persons at different times as bearing a grudge against him.

(1) [1916] 14 A. L. J. 769=36 I. C. 164 = 17 Cr. L. J. 484.

'So far as I can make out the only persons who are definitely mentioned out of the accused are Jaggu, Sheonath and Indar about whom he made a report to the police on 16th February 1926, (Ex. A-2). No doubt the report was made a long time ago, but the same dispute is still simmering. They are the only persons out of the accused about whom it could be definitely said that they are among those Jats who contemplate a breach of the peace. I cancel the order of the Sessions Judge with regard to Jaggu, Sheonath and Indar and restore the order of the Magistrate with regard to them. The bonds and sureties given by them shall again become operative. As to the rest, I do not find definite individual evidence against them and I dismiss the application for revision as regards them.

Criminal Revn. No. 80 of 1929, Decided on 24th April 1929, from order of Addl. Prosy. Magistrate, Calcutta, D/- 8th January 1929.

Calcutta Police Act. (4 B. C. of 1866) Ss. 45, 46 and 47—Presumption is inapplicable where search in consequence of which find takes place is of place other than that ordered to be searched.

Under S. 47, Police Act, if gaming instruments are found in a house, the presumption is that it is a common gaming house, provided the finding of the instrument is in conformity with S. 46. The search in consequence of which the find takes place must, therefore, be of a place of which a search warrant is issued and no such presumption can be drawn from search resulting in find of a place which is not ordered to be searched. [P 567 C 2]

Probodh Chander Chatterjee and Bireswar Chatterji—for Petitioners.

Mrityunjoy Chatterji—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Of the several grounds upon which the conviction of the petitioners which is under S. 45, Calcutta Police Act, (4 B. C. of 1866) in this case has been assailed, none is of any substance except one which in my judgment goes to the very root of the matter and is positively fatal.

The learned Magistrate in dealing with the question which is the primary question in the case, namely, whether the place can be called a "common gaming house" has observed :

"Section 47 of the Act lays down that if gaming instruments are found in a house, the presumption is that it is a common gaming house."

This proposition is entirely correct provided the finding of the instruments is in conformity with the provisions of S. 46, as S. 47 itself provides for by the use of the words "under the provisions of the last preceding section." To go back to S. 46 for a second, the search as a consequence of which the find takes place must be of the place, etc., in respect of which the search warrant was issued under that section. In the present case, the search warrant was for premises No. 71/4 Bentinck Street and the search was of premises No. 71/5 Bentinck Street. This is not a technical defect but a matter of substance, the law attaching serious consequences and importance to the discretion that a Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police exercises in the matter of issuing a search warrant under this section. The result is that what would hold good in respect of premises No. 71/4 cannot hold good as regards 71/5 unless of course the latter is included in the former of which, however, there is no evidence.

Apart from the presumption under S. 47 upon which the learned Magistrate has relied, the evidence aliundi does not satisfy the requirements of the definition of a common gaming house as given in S. 3 of the Act.

The result is that the convictions of the petitioners must fail. The rule is made absolute. The petitioner's convictions and sentences are set aside. The fines, if paid should be refunded.

Criminal P. C., S. 494—Where accused is discharged on withdrawal of prosecution fresh complaint can be entertained.

Prosecution against an accused under S. 359, I. P. C. was withdrawn with the leave of the Court and an order under S. 494, Criminal P. C., was passed, the accused being discharged. Subsequently a fresh complaint was made to the Magistrate.

Held: that the order of discharge could not prevent a fresh complaint being entertained and inquired into. [P 568 C 2]

N. N. Sircar and D. N. Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the petitioner was accused of an offence against a woman under S. 354 P. C. After certain negotiations to which I shall refer in a moment the case was withdrawn with the leave of the Court. The letter purporting to compromise the case runs thus:

—"I have the honor to withdraw from prosecution the marginally noted case with the permission of the Superintendent of Police and pray that the case may accordingly be withdrawn."

Thereupon an order was passed by the Sub-divisional Officer of Brahmanbaria under S. 494, Criminal P. C. Then the accused man the present petitioner came before the Sub-Divisional Officer again as prosecutor in a case upon the narrative that he had paid Rs. 1000/- to a relative of the person who had been the prosecutor in the previous case, that he had paid this sum to that relative in order that it might be given to the District Superintendent of Police so that the District Superintendent of Police might give this sum to some charity, that the relative after he had taken the money from the present petitioner did not give it to the District Superintendent of Police and the petitioner was able to get only half of the money back out of the hands of this relative of the man who had prosecuted him on the previous occasion. That being his own story the Sub-Divisional Officer began to think that the order under S. 494 was an attempt to compound an offence which was not really compoundable and so he acted upon this information and therefore set aside the order of discharge. So far as the merits of the proceedings go I think it is a reasonable thing to do if done in a proper way.

Then the matter was taken by the applicant to the Sessions Judge who was very much worried as to the proper way to go about the matter and finally he thought that the best thing to do was to set aside the order of discharge, because the Sub-Divisional Officer had not as much power to do that as the Judge had. He says that the best course for the Sub-Divisional Officer was to get a complaint direct from the woman concerned in the previous charge and to proceed to try that case out upon a fresh complaint. This the Sub-divisional Officer has done and the complaint of the woman against the present applicant is now in the course of trial.

It is contended before us that strictly speaking the proper procedure to get rid of this order of discharge would be by an order of the Sessions Judge to serve a notice upon the applicant calling upon him to show cause why the complaint in the previous case should not be further enquired into. On the other hand it is pointed out by the learned Advocate General that whether this order of discharge stands or does not stand it is of no importance because it cannot in any way prevent the woman's complaint being enquired into. I entirely agree in the view taken by the learned Advocate General. In no circumstances can any order that is made on this application affect the validity of the woman's complaint or of the proceeding which the Sub-Divisional Officer has taken in the ordinary course to try out that complaint. So far as the present question is concerned it is entirely unnecessary for us to wrestle with any such difficulty.

This case is therefore discharged.

Criminal Appeal No. 59 of 1930, Decided on 27th February 1930, from order of First Addl. Sess. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 12th January 1930.

(a) Criminal Trial — Evidence — First information report by itself is not convincing.

By itself a first information report can hardly be regarded as evidence of a convincing nature. [P 569 C 2]

* (b) Evidence Act, S. 32—Deceased dying of independent malady after assault and hurt—Dying statement as to cause of death is not admissible in evidence against assaulter in trial under S. 324, I. P. C.

Where a person dies in a hospital after being assaulted and hurt, not of the injuries but of a malady independent of such injuries, such for example as pneumonia, the dying statement of such person is not admissible in evidence in a trial of his assailants under S. 324. [P 569 C 2]

Matiuddin—for Appellant.H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the First Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow at Bara Banki preferred by one Wali Mahomed, who has been convicted of an offence under S. 325, I. P. C., along with two other persons who have not appealed. There is no dispute now as to the facts of the case. Nanhey, who was a Fakir by caste and who was a relation of the two accused Ittada Baksh and Farzand, had abducted the wife of the latter. Farzand was forced to take proceedings to get his wife back, and having done so he enticed Nanhey into his house and gave him a severe beating. Apart from numerous bruises Nanhey sustained a compound fracture of the right leg. The nature of the injuries shows that they were not intended to cause death and it is the finding of the learned Judge that they did not cause death. Nanhey was taken to the police station where he made a report on the morning of 8th September in which he named Khader Bakhsh, Farzand and Wali Mohammad as his assailants together with another person whose name he did not know. He was removed to hospital, where he became seriously ill. On 15th September his dying statement was taken. In that statement he repeated the first information report but added that there were fifty or sixty persons concerned in the assault. As his condition became critical he was removed to King George's Medical Hospital, Lucknow, where he died of pneumonia on 3rd October 1929. The Judge accepts the statement of Dr. Modi, who conducted the post-mortem examination, that the cause of death was pneumonia and that there was no reason to connect the onset of pneumonia with the injuries inflicted. The Judge agreeing with the assessors found all the three accused guilty of an offence under S. 325 and it is for me to consider only whether the evidence was sufficient to justify the conviction in the case of Wali Mohammad. No doubt the appellant is mentioned in the first information report and in the so-called dying declaration. The first information report in itself can hardly be regarded as evidence of a convincing nature, and the dying declaration is open to a legal objection that it is not strictly speaking admissible under the Evidence Act.

In order to be admitted under S. 32, para. 1, Evidence Act, it should be made by a person as to the cause of his death, or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death, in cases in which the cause of that person's death comes into question. Now the cause of death came into question although it has been found that the injuries were not the cause; but once it has been held that the cause was pneumonia it cannot properly be held that the statement made by the deceased showing that he had been severely beaten is a statement made as to the cause of his death. Thus I am doubtful whether the learned Judge was right in laying stress on the statement as against the three accused. The Judge has said that the evidence of the two eye witnesses Bashir and Puttu fully corroborates the information report and the dying declaration. Bashir was not an eye witness. He came up after the assault had been committed and it is not stated that he saw Wali Mohammad although he knows him. Puttu made conflicting statements as to what he saw so much so that in my opinion his evidence is of little or no value. At least he only stated that he recognized Wali Mohammad by his voice and he never committed himself to saying that Wali Mohammad took any part in the assault. Thus the so-called corroboration of the first information report and the dying declaration is of little value. Further the Judge has observed that the accused themselves alleged that the deceased came to their house in order to commit theft but Wali Mohammad made no such statement and he does not live in a house near that of his co-accused. The connexion of Wali Mohammad in the affair said to have been a liaison between him and the widowed daughter of Khuda Baksh and sister of Farzand. The Judge appears to have some misgivings in convicting him as he fails to see why a person behaving in the manner that Wali Mohammad behaved should join in in assault on another person for an immoral connexion with a woman in the same family. In my opinion, however, the question of motive is immaterial; possibly it was sufficient to induce Wali Mahommed to join in the affair but I am not satisfied that the evidence justifies the conviction. The learned Judge in my opinion lays too much stress both on the dying declaration and on the evidence of the two witnesses Bashir and Puttu whom he describes as eyewitnesses. Puttu it may be observed has been engaged in litigation with Wali Mohammad and this may have been one of the reasons why the man was named. I give the appellant the benefit of the doubt and allow the appeal, set aside his conviction and sentence and order that he be set at liberty.

In order that an offence may be established under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act, the seizure of the cattle must be legal and consequently driving heads of cattle across the railway line at a place where there is no fence and where there is a regular track does not constitute any offence under S. 24 in the absence of any damage to the line: 43 I. C. 445; 1 P. L. T. 176 and 29 C. W. N. 987, Rel. on. [P 570 C 2]

(b) Cattle Trespass Act (1 of 1871)—Conviction not justified under law and fine arbitrary—Conviction can be set aside—Criminal P. C., S. 439.

Where a conviction was not justified under the Cattle Trespass Act and especially where the fine was arbitrary, High Court interfered and set aside the conviction. [P 571 C 2]

H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Bhagwati Nath Srivastava—for Accused.

Judgment.—Four persons have been convicted of an offence under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act (Act 1 of 1871) and S. 125, Cl. (2), Railways Act in a summary trial and fined Rs. 100 each under the former section and Rs. 20 each under the latter. The case has been referred to this Court by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich on the ground that the conviction under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act is illegal, but the learned Judge is of opinion that the conviction and sentence under S. 125 (2) Railways Act can be maintained. I am not concerned with any injuries that may have been inflicted in this case on the person of any railway servant as no charge was framed under any sections except those to which I have referred, and I have merely to consider whether the evidence in this case justifies a finding that these persons were guilty either of an offence under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act, or of an offence under S. 125 (2), Railways Act. The four persons were driving ten head of cattle across the railway line at a place where there was no fence and where, according to the Magistrate, there was a regular track. They were stopped by a railway employee who tried to seize the animals with a view to taking them to the pound, and they forcibly opposed the seizure. In order that an offence may be established under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act, the seizure of the cattle must have been legal, that is to say, the animals must have been liable to seizure under S. 11 of the same Act. S. 11 authorises persons in charge of public roads, which under the provisions of S. 125 (4), Railways Act, includes railways, to seize any cattle doing damage or straying. Cattle which have been driven across a railway line by their owner cannot be said to have strayed and damage must be proved. In this case it was not even alleged that the cattle were doing any damage, and it is not easy to say what damage could have been caused by them while they were merely being driven over the line. The Magistrate in his explanation says that when he inspected the locality on 24th September 1929, that is to say eight weeks after the alleged offence, he found that some ballast kankar had been scattered, an earthen embankment had been fissured and worn out and some grass nibbled; but he does not profess to believe that this damage was caused only by the cattle in the present case, and such a view would be untenable in face of his own judgment where he says that a regular track had been worn across the land at this place. I must therefore find that the cattle caused no damage and this being so they were not in my opinion liable to seizure. Whether the railway employees could or could not order the owners of the cattle to remove them and refuse them a right of passage need not be considered. S. 24 refers only to those who forcibly oppose the seizure of cattle liable to be seized. In my opinion the cattle were not liable to be seized and no penalty can be imposed under the Cattle Trespass Act upon the owners for forcibly opposing the seizure. I have already stated that no charge was preferred against them under the Indian Penal Code for causing hurt or assault and I find therefore that the reference as to the conviction and sentence under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act should be accepted. I am not referred to any ruling of this Court on this point but there are two rulings of the Patna High Court reported in Criminal Law Journal Reports both of which insist on the fact that damage must be proved before a conviction under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act can be sustained: see Sukhnandan Rai v. Emperor (1) and Dassi Guala v. Sardar Mahton (2). The same view was held by the Calcutta High Court in Manik Chandra Roy v. Ismail Kalu (3).

I would, however, go further than the learned Judge and find that the conviction under S. 125 (2), Railways Act is also unsustainable. That section applies if cattle were wilfully driven on any railway otherwise than for the purpose of lawfully crossing the railway. In order that these persons should be convicted under that section it must be proved that their purpose was not lawful. Now there is no provision in the Railways Act by which the public is forbidden to cross railway lines or drive animals across them at places other than level crossings, and if the railway erects no fence the public will continue to cross the line and drive their animals across it until they are stopped. I find no section in the Act under which the public can be stopped. It is not obligatory on railway companies to provide fences unless they are directed to do so by the Governor General in Council: but where they do not choose to erect fences they cannot in my opinion prevent persons crossing the railway line at will. They have their remedy where the cattle are found to commit damage or to stray without owners on the railway ground but the mere crossing of the railway is not unlawful. Thus on general grounds I am of opinion that the conviction under S. 125 (2) should be set aside. There is also a special ground for so doing. The section lays down that the fine may extend to Rs. 10 for each head of cattle to be recovered from the owner. There is no finding in this case as to the number of cattle owned by each of the accused. An arbitrary fine of Rs. 20 each should not have been inflicted. It is true that this may be considered to be a more or less trivial point but it is an additional reason for interfering in a case where the conviction is not justified by the law under which the Magistrate purported to act. I, therefore, accept this reference as to the conviction under S. 24, Cattle Trespass Act and I also accept the request made on behalf of the accused as to their conviction under S. 125 (2), Railways Act, and I order that both the sentences and convictions be quashed and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Asghar Hasan—for Accused.

Order.—This is a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow sitting at Bara Banki in respect of a conviction and sentence under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act (Act 8 of 1914). Mohammad Hanif is a licensed driver of a public motor vehicle which is licensed to ply between Lucknow and Bara Banki and Bara Banki and Haidergarh. On a certain date he drove this public vehicle on the road from Bara Banki to Fyzabad and he has been convicted under S. 16 of the Act read with rule No. 79 of the rules for having contravened the condition of his license in plying on a route in respect of which he held no permit. On the facts it is clear that at the time Mohammad Hanif was not driving the vehicle for hire. He was using the vehicle for the purpose of transporting himself, his brother and his cleaner from Bara Banki to Fyzabad. He was proceeding to Fyzabad as he had private business there. The license Form F states the route on which the vehicle is permitted to ply, and the learned Magistrate considered that by proceeding from Bara Banki to Fyzabad he was plying. Now it is to be noted that the word 'ply' standing alone, though used in the license, is not used in the definition. In the definition Rule 3 No. (g) a 'public motor vehicle' is stated to mean a vehicle which is let for hire or which stands or "plies for hire" in any public place. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the word 'ply' in the permit Form F must be read to mean "ply for hire". In this connexion it appears to me impossible to hold that it can have any other meaning. To take the other view would involve extraordinary consequences. If a permit was granted to ply between Lucknow and Bara Banki to a public motor vehicle and that public motor vehicle was garaged outside Lucknow on the Cawnpore road the holder of the permit would, if this view were taken, be liable to a criminal prosecution on every occasion that he drove vehicle empty to the garage or drove it back empty to the place in which he commenced his business. The learned Sessions Judge has taken a correct view of the matter and in these circumstances the conviction cannot stand. I set aside the conviction and sentence of fine and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded. The order suspending the license will be annulled.

Matinuddin, J. Jackson and Fateh Shah—for Appellants.

H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Judgment. — In this case Iqbal Husain and 12 others have appealed against the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Sitapur convicting them of offences under S. 304, I. P. C., and S. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing them to various terms of imprisonment. I have heard the learned counsel for the appellants as also the learned Government Pleader and have carefully perused the evidence on the record. It is common ground that a riot did take place in village Dubsena, Thana Mahmudabad, District Sitapur. Iqbal Husain, Hamid Husain, Fida Husain and Bad-shah Husain, all four brothers, at one time owned the entire village of Dubseena. Fida Husain died and his share devolved upon his son Tahawar Husain. About ten years ago Tahawar Husain mortgaged with possession his patti to Badshah Husain, and recently he sold his equity of redemption to Iqbal Husain and Hamid Husain who have recovered possession of the mortgaged share of Tahawar Husain by redeeming the mortgage from Badshah Husain. This redemption of the mortgage created bad blood between Iqbal Husain and Hamid Husain on the one hand and Badshah Husain on the other.

A small portion of the mortgaged patti consisting of 16 bighas seven biswas, however, was not redeemed by Iqbal Husain and Hamid Husain, and is still in the possession of Badshah Husain, and Durjan Pasi is a tenant of a plot in that portion of the patti which is still in the possession of Badshah Husain. The fight between the two factions took place over the collection of rent from this Durjan Pasi. It is common ground between the parties that Durjan Pasi wanted to pay his rent in kind. Upon the evidence on the record I am more inclined to believe the version of the appellants that Paras Ram, Sumer, Mahesh and Gobinde went with Ram Charan and Bhup Singh, tenants of Badshah Husain, to collect Durjan's rice in payment of the rent due from him. Durjan began to weigh out the rice, and the rice which was weighed was put into baskets and Bhup Singh and Ram Charan were going to take it away when Mumtaz Husain, Ali Husain, Phullar and Ghulam Ali came up on behalf of Iqbal Husain and Mumtaz Husain the son of Hamid Husain. An altercation ensued, the party of Badshah Husain insisting upon Bhup Singh and Ram Charan taking away the rice and Mumtaz Husain, Ali Husain and others wishing to prevent them. While this altercation was going on, the partisans of both sides rushed up to Durjan's house and then Mumtaz knocked the baskets of rice from the heads of Bhup Singh and Ram Charan, and Ali Husain struck Paras Ram with a lathi, and then the fight became general. Gobinde fled from Durjan's house to the house of Chhedi Pasi. Chhedi Pasi as P. W. 9 deposes that after a while when the fight ceased Sardar told the men of Mumtaz Husain that Gobinde had taken refuge in his (Chhedi's) house. Iqbal Husain, Ali Husain, Mumtaz Husain, Ghasite and Sardar then ran to Chhedi's house and dragged Gobinde out of the house and began to beat him with lathis and practically left him for dead at Chhedi's house, and then when most of the men of Badshah Husain had been severely beaten the party of Ali Husain and Mumtaz left the place. Sarju Chaukidar went and made a report at the thana and Mumtaz Husain also made a report at the thana which is Ex. 6. The police investigated the offence and prosecuted both sides for riot and, as Gobinde died two days after the beating he had received, they prosecuted Mumtaz Husain and the men of his party on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C., but the learned Sessions Judge has convicted them only of the minor offence under S. 304, I. P. C., as also of the offence under S. 147, I. P. C.

The first point for determination in this appeal is whether the medical evidence justifies the conviction of the appellants of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under S. 304, I. P. C. The Civil Surgeon of Sitapur was of opinion that the cause of Gobinde's death was peritonitis. At the time of the post-mortem examination he found the peritoneum congested and flakes of pus present. He also found that the skull of the deceased was fractured. He deposed that the peritonitis from which Gobinde died was caused by a circular rupture half an inch in diameter in the ilium through which the contents had escaped. This rupture in his opinion must have been caused by violence but he could not connect the rupture with any one of the injuries of which he found marks on the body. Thus it is clear from the medical evidence that no case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder has been made out against anybody and in this state of the medical evidence it would not be safe to hold all the 13 appellants guilty of constructive culpable homicide by reason of the provisions of S. 149 read along with S. 304, I. P. C. In my opinion upon the evidence on the record the appellants cannot be legally convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. They are, however, clearly guilty of the offence of grievous hurt under S. 325, I. P. C., read with S. 149, I. P. C., as Gobinde's skull was fractured and grievous hurt was also inflicted upon Mahesh, according to the evidence of the Civil Surgeon of Sitapur (Ex. 2). For the reasons given above, I acquit all 13 appellants of an offence under S. 304, I. P. C., read with S. 149, I. P. C., but in its stead convict them all of an offence under S. 325/149, I. P. C.

I now turn to discuss the plea of the right of private defence of person and property raised on behalf of the appellants by their learned counsel Mr. John Jackson. It was strenuously argued on behalf of the appellants that the defence version of the occurrence, as set forth by Panchu Chamar and Ram Charan Chamar, should have been accepted by the learned Sessions Judge and that, if this version of the occurrence be accepted, then the accused were clearly entitled to the right of private defence of person and property given in Ss. 100 and 103, I. P. C. In support of his contention, the learned counsel for the appellants relied upon the ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Baij Nath v. Emperor (1). He also cited another ruling reported in Indarjit v. Emperor (2). Upon the strength of the rulings quoted above it was contended that the appellants were merely acting in maintenance of an existing peaceful possession and that they were not enforcing any right or supposed right and that they were merely maintaining a possession already lawfully achieved. Reliance was also placed upon another ruling of the late Court of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner reported in Sarabhawan Singh v. Emperor (3). A judgment of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court reported in Emperor v. Hira (4) was also quoted by the learned counsel for the appellants in support of his contention that the appellants were within their legal right in holding themselves in readiness to repel an attack on them and were protected by S. 97, I. P. C. It was also argued upon the strength of a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Hafiz Ali v. Emperor (5), that when a person was attacked while doing a lawful act he was entitled to stand his ground and defend himself. I have carefully studied these rulings and it seems to me that the facts of the present case are different from the facts of the cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellants and the ratio decidendi laid down in the rulings cited on behalf of the appellants, is not applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case. I have already shown that in the present case there was a free fight between two factions in village Dubsena. There was no question of maintaining a possession lawfully achieved or that Badshah Husain's party was the aggressor and that the appellants acted in the exercise of the right of private defence of person and property. At the commencement of the row the appellants may have had a reasonable case that they were merely doing a lawful act in collecting the rice crop in lieu of the rent due to them from Durjan Pasi, but they had no right to pursue the deceased Gobinde to the house of Chhedi and to drag him out of that house and to beat him mercilessly and to leave him for dead in front of Chhedi's house. S. 99, I. P. C. clearly lays down that the right of private defence either of person or of property in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence.

In the present case the appellants deliberately out of malice and hatred for the opposite party far exceeded their right of defence if any. The collecting of the rice crop from the house of Durjan was merely the occasion or the pretext which the appellants availed of for feeding fat their ancient grudge against the opposite party. The quarrel began with a few men on both sides, but it rapidly became a serious riot with dozens of men on both sides, and, in this view of the occurrence, neither party to the riot can claim the right of private defence. In Mulla v. Emperor (6) it was held by Daniels J. that where both parties came down armed with a full determination to settle their quarrel by force there could be no right of private defence. The same view was maintained by the Allahabad High Court in Queen Empress v. Prag Dat (7) in which it was held that when a body of men were determined to vindicate their rights or supposed rights by unlawful force and when they engaged in a fight with men who on the other hand were equally determined to vindicate by unlawful force their rights or supposed rights, no question of self defence arose.

The Bombay High Court in a ruling reported in Emperor v. Beohar Anop (8) has also laid down the same principle and held that the right of private defence cannot be successfully invoked by men who voluntarily and deliberately engage in fighting with their enemies for the sake of fighting, as opposed to the case where men are reluctantly forced to use violence in order to protect themselves from violence offered to them. Their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in this ruling relied upon a judgment of the Calcutta High Court reported in Kabiruddin v. Emperor (9) in which Rampini, J. delivered himself of the following weighty pronouncement:

"I have no doubt that according to the Penal Code no right of private defence arises in circumstances such as those of the present case when both parties arm themselves for a fight to enforce their right or supposed right and deliberately engaged in very large numbers in a pitched battle killing one man and wounding others."

The extract quoted above from the judgment of the learned judge of the Calcutta High Court is fully applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case. It is common ground that there was long-standing and deep-rooted animosity between Badshah Husain and his men on the one hand and Iqbal Husain and Mumtaz Husain on the other, and the visit to Durjan Pasi's house for the purpose of collecting rice merely furnished both sides with a pretext to give vent to their feelings of hatred for one another. As pertinently observed by the learned Sessions Judge:

"We no longer live in the Nawabi days and zamindars must be taught—in these days they frequently need teaching—that disputes about land must be settled by the Courts and not by he lathi."

I entirely concur in this observation of the learned Judge.

I hold, therefore, for the reasons given above that the appellants cannot justify their commission of the riot and their infliction of grievous hurt on the opposite party by pleading the right of private defence of person and property. I hold upon the evidence on the record that the appellants were members of an unlawful assembly within the meaning of S. 141, I. P. C.

The learned counsel for the appellants also relied upon the evidence of of alibi furnished by Iqbal Husain. D. W. 5, Hakim Niamat Rasul and D. W. 6, Syed Ainul Hasan are the two witnesses examined by Iqbal Husain in support of his alibi. Syed Ainul Hasan deposes that he cannot remember the date on which Iqbal Husain came to Bara Banki. He further states that he has not been asked to produce the memorandum showing that Iqbal Husain rented a house from him in Bara Banki. His evidence is therefore on the face of it, worthless. Hakim Niamat Rasul admits in cross-examination that he has no writing to prove the fact that Iqbal Husain came to Bara Banki just about the time when this riot took place. This medical practitioner keeps no register of patients, he pays no income-tax and he keeps no account of his fees. His statement that Iqbal Husain left Bara Banki on 28th September is, in my opinion, not based upon any fact capable of proof independently of the mere statement of this witness, and even if that statement be believed it does not make the presence of Iqbal Husain on the scene of the occurrence, when the riot took place, a physical impossibility. In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge was perfectly right in disbelieving the evidence of alibi furnished by the appellant.

The learned counsel for the appellants has not discussed before me the question of the guilt of each appellant in this case nor has he pointed to any evidence on the record in support of his allegation in his memorandum of appeal that the learned Sessions Judge has allowed himself to be influenced by extraneous circumstances and has adopted a most arbitrary criterion for convicting and acquitting the accused persons. So far as the question of the guilt of the 13 appellants before me is concerned, there is ample evidence on the record in proof of the fact that they took part in the riot and, as grievous hurt was inflicted on the deceased Gobinde and on Mahesh, I think all these 13 appellants can be rightly convicted of an offence under S. 325 I. P. C. read with S. 149 I. P. C. and S. 147 I. P. C.

As regards the question of punishment it seems to me that Iqbal Husain, Mumtaz Husain, Tahawar Husain and Ali Husain are the ring-leaders and the other appellants are merely their servants and supporters. I maintain the convictions and sentences passed upon each of the appellants for an offence under S. 147, I. P. C. I acquit all 13 appellants of an offence under S. 304 read with S. 149 I. P. C., but convict them of an offence under S. 325 I. P. C. read with S. 149 I. P. C. and sentence Iqbal Husain, Mumtaz Husain, Tahawar Husain and Ali Husain to three years' rigorous imprisonment each, and the remaining appellants to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. The sentences in each case will run concurrently.

To this extent this appeal is allowed. For the rest it stands dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 688 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 624 of 1929, Decided on 28th November 1929, against judgment of Sess. Judge, Cuddappah, in C. A. No. 19 of 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 235—Trial for rioting with common object of hurt—Charge of rioting found unsustainable—Further trial for hurt in absence of direct charge vitiates trial.

A man cannot be convicted of hurt unless he is charged with hurt and hence if from the charge as originally framed, accused are charged with rioting with the common object of causing hurt, and the Court finds the charge of rioting with the said common object unsustainable, on acquitting the accused of the said charge of rioting, the Court cannot proceed to find them severally guilty of grievous or simple hurt without framing a direct charge. The omission to frame a direct charge vitiates the trial : 27 Cal. 516 ; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1 (F.B.) Ref., 47 Mad. 746, Dist. [P 576 C2]

V. L. Ethiraj—for Petitioners.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioners have been sentenced: petitioner 1 to six months' rigorous imprisonment under S. 325, I. P. C., and petitioners 2, 3 and 4 to four months' rigorous imprisonment under S. 324, I. P. C.

They were originally charged generally that some one or other of them caused the hurt, and all were guilty by reason of S. 149 I. P. C. from the fact that they were rioting and the hurt was likely to be committed in prosecution of their common object.

The appellate Court has found that they did not riot and had no common object and then proceeds to find them severally guilty of grievous or simple hurt. A man cannot be convicted of hurt unless he is charged with hurt. As the charge stood accused were not in the least concerned in sifting who caused each particular injury; for all were to be held liable for the act of each. Therefore it cannot be said that the omission to frame a direct charge occasioned no failure of justice. Theethumalai Gounder v. Emperor (1) is distinguishable. There the accused were charged under Ss. 326 and 149, I. P. C. and could have been convicted under those sections, but the Judge convicted under S. 326 alone. But here the accused could not be convicted under S. 149. The case bearing more closely upon the present case is Abhi Misser v. Lachmi Narain (2), I. L. R. 27 Cal. 566 which is affirmed in Theethumalai Gounder v. Emperor (1) at 754 (of 47 Mad.).

The petition must be allowed and petitioners acquitted. Their bail is released.

Criminal Trial—Evidence—Deposition of witnesses as prosecution witnesses in counter case admitted with consent of both parties in another case as defence evidence—Procedure is not irregular—Criminal P. C., S. 530.

If in a trial Court the depositions given by defence witnesses, when examined as prosecution witnesses in the counter case, are filed with the consent of both sides, and if these witnesses are called and examined in the presence of the accused and swear to the truth of their previous statements, which are then filed with their consent to save time, there is nothing illegal or irregular in such procedure *A. Jackson, J.—This petition raises a point of some importance. It will be seen on p. 23 that the depositions given by D. W. 2 in a previous trial were read out to him and exhibited as evidence in the present case. This is precisely what I myself did in the case which was subject of appeal in Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1) when it was ruled that my action was fatally irregular.

Of course there is no objection to a witness being led, if both sides consent and the alternative and correct procedure according to that ruling would be for the Judge to copy out the previous depositions in his own hand.

You were examined at the previous trial?

Yes.

You deposed that etc. etc.

Yes.

and then the Judge is set busily to work for a few hours committing to paper what is already on paper. With the greatest respect I can see no necessity for this deplorable waste of time. The accused is in no way prejudiced. He can ask any supplementary questions he likes. He is present when these depositions are exhibited, so the rule in 2 Hawkins Pleas, Chap. 46 is not violated. As regards the implied consent discussed on p. 120 I may say perhaps that the depositions were exhibited at the express request of the defence vakils as in the present case. I have never been able to understand this ruling and think it should be examined by a Bench.

[This case coming on for hearing on Thursday the 16th January 1930, in pursuance of the above order, upon perusing the petition and the judgments of the lower Courts and the records in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. L. Ethiraj and A. S. Sivakaminathan for the petitioners and the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown and having stood over for consideration till this day. This Court made the following.]

Order.—This case arises out of a judgment in a criminal appeal in which the appellate Magistrate refused to reverse the conviction of the petitioners on the ground urged before him that the conviction was illegal because the trial Court had allowed certified copies of evidence given by the petitioners as defence witnesses in a counter case to be filed as evidence for the defence in this case. It is contended that the refusal of the appellate Magistrate is directly opposed to the ruling of a Bench of this Court in Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1).

On another ground raised it appears to us that the appellate Magistrate's judgment cannot be supported. He considered that S. 167, Evidence Act, did not compel him to order a retrial merely because these copies of depositions had been put in, since, to use his words: "without the evidence thus admitted there is sufficient evidence to prove the charges."

He seems to have entirely overlooked the fact that the evidence thus admitted was for the defence and not for the prosecution. He has thus decided the case against the accused by the simple process of ruling out and refusing to consider the evidence for the defence. But it would not suffice for us merely to order him to re-hear the appeal, if under the law as it stands stated in Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1), he would still have to reject these depositions and order retrial. We therefore had the question argued before us whether the 46 Madras case applies here and if it does, whether it does not lay down too strict a procedure, and whether we should not have the case posted before a Full Bench to consider whether Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1) case has been rightly decided.

We have perused the printed papers in the two cases which gave rise to the Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1) judgment. A criminal trial had proceeded for some time against two persons in part before one Special Sessions Judge. It was then split up into two. That Judge was succeeded by another, who decided on a de novo trial. At the de novo trial the second Judge permitted the depositions of the prosecution witnesses taken at the original trial to be filed as evidence for the prosecution; whether this was done at the request or with the consent of the defence is not material. The evidence of the defence witnesses was taken entirely by the second Judge. Now the judgment in Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1) proceeds on the general proposition that:

"in cases of life, no evidence is to be given against a prisoner, but in his presence" subject to the exceptions permitted by some express provisions of law. It is clear from the facts as set out above that the Bench was dealing only with a case where previous depositions not taken in the presence of the accused were used as evidence against him. We think that the decision does not go further than to decide that such a procedure is contrary to law, and if we may say so with respect, it embodies a very salutary principle, the principle upon which Reg v. Bertrand (2) on which Umar v. Hajee Emperor (1) relies, proceeded. In the latter case there was the additional infirmity that what was read over to the witnesses was not their actual depositions but only notes of those cases taken by the trying Judge. We do not think that Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1) can be taken to having decided that evidence taken in favour of a prisoner in a counter case in which he was a witness but was not himself the prisoner cannot be put in by him on his own behalf.

In the case before us the deposition given by defence witnesses 2 and 3 when examined as prosecution witnesses in the counter case was filed with the consent of both sides. We do not think that Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1) prohibits such a procedure, which obviously saves a great deal of time which would otherwise be occupied in merely copying down previous depositions. No one is prejudiced. Obviously the prisoner is not and if the Crown had thought its case would be prejudiced, it would not have consented to the procedure.

Our attention has been drawn to a ruling of a Bench of the Lahore High Court in Thakar Singh v. Emperor (3) but, so far as we can gather the facts of the case, it appears that the defence witnesses were not summoned and examined in Court, but their previous depositions were put on the record without the witnesses coming to swear to their truth. The same procedure appears to have been adopted in the case reported in Allu v. Emperor (4). In the present case, however, the defence witnesses were called and examined in the presence of the accused and they swore to the truth of their previous statements, which were then filed with their consent to save time. In another case, Emperor v. Harjivan Valji (5) at p. 178 (of 50 Bom.) a High Court Bench held that to file for the Crown depositions taken in one case as substituted evidence in another case against the same prisoner was merely an irregularity. But it may be noted that in that case all the depositions had been taken in the presence of the prisoner.

We do not therefore think it necessary to refer this case to a Full Bench on the question of reconsidering the decision in Umar Hajee v. Emperor (1). We hold on the facts here that there was nothing illegal or irregular in the procedure at the trial Court. However, as we have already remarked the appellate Magistrate has erred in refusing to consider that evidence recorded for the defence. We must therefore set aside his order and direct him to rehear the appeal and decide it after giving due weight to the evidence recorded in the previous depositions filed as Exs. 6, 6a, 7 and 9a. We order accordingly.

P.R.S./V.S. Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. No. 440 of 1929 and Criminal Petn. No. 399 of 1929, Decided on 9th January 1930, from judgment of Sess. Judge, South Arcot, in Criminal Appeal No. 54 of 1928.

Penal Code, S 409—Mere delay in payment of money into treasury entrusted to person does not amount to misappropriation.

It does not follow, merely because an instalment of an agricultural loan is not paid the very next day into the treasury, that thereupon and therefrom an inference begins to be drawn against the village Munsif that he has misappropriated the amount so omitted to be paid. Mere delay in payment of money entrusted to a person, when there is no particular obligation to pay it at a certain date, does not amount to and does not furnish by itself a sufficient proof of misappropriation: A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 613, Rel. on. [P 579 C 2, P 580 C 1]

K. S. Jayarama Ayyar for S. Nagaraja Iyer—for Petitioner.

K. N. Ganapathi for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner was the village headman of Sirukadambur vattam in the District of South Arcot. He was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tirukoilur of an offence under S. 409, I. P. C., criminal breach of trust by a public servant of a sum of Rs. 17-12-6 and sentenced to simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 60 or further imprisonment for 15 days in default. At the outset it does strike one that if the conviction is right the sentence is utterly inadequate. The conviction and sentence were, however, upheld by the learned Sessions Judge of South Arcot. The petitioner now applies to this Court to set aside his conviction.

The facts are, that on 19th June 1925 P. W. 1, a ryot within the jurisdiction of the village where the petitioner was the headman paid to the petitioner Rs. 17-12-6 being an instalment of an agricultural loan taken by him and which fell due on 10th April 1925. The petitioner paid this sum into the treasury on 20th July 1925, together with one rupee, in all Rs. 18-12-6. The additional sum was represented by the petitioner to be the interest levied from

P. W. 1 according to the rules for takavi loans for the delay in the payment of the instalment.

It is said that the amounts kept by the petitioner show that this additional sum of one rupee was paid by P. W. 1 and it was therewith that the ultimate sum of Rs. 18-12-6 was paid. The charge against the petitioner is that he misappropriated the sum of Rs. 17-12-6 dishonestly for his own benefit during the period between 19th June and 20th July. I have heard the learned Public Prosecutor on this point and I am unable to see that there is any evidence in the case except the delay to show that during the period between 19th June and 20th July the petitioner did dishonestly use this sum Rs. 17-12-6. The lower Court seems to be of the opinion that the delay is sufficient proof and that because the petitioner did not remit the sum of Rs. 17-12-6 immediately on receipt to the treasury he must be held or presumed to have misappropriated the amount to his own use. I do not think that there is any such presumption which arises on facts like the present. I asked the learned Public Prosecutor to say whether there was any rule under which a sum paid as an instalment of an agricultural loan should be paid into the treasury within a particular period. There appears to be no such rule. This, of course, does not mean that an officer who receives money of that character may retain it for all time with impunity and then say that as he was not required to pay it within a certain time, he is at liberty to do what he likes with it.

On the contrary it does not follow, merely because an instalment of an agricultural loan is not paid the very next day into the treasury, that thereupon and therefrom an inference begins to be drawn against the village Munsif that he has misappropriated the amount so omitted to be paid. The inference is purely one of fact and I certainly think there are no circumstances in this case from which such an inference could be drawn. What the petitioner himself said was that as the full amount of the instalment due, namely, the amount of the principal and the interest due, was not paid, he detained the amount till the balance was brought. There is nothing to show that this was not the case. The accounts apparently show that the interest was subsequently paid and when it was paid the total amount was sent to the treasury. P. W. 1, no doubt says that he did not pay the interest subsequently and that it was the petitioner himself, to cover up his fraud, that supplied the sum of one rupee and paid the total. But obviously the statement of a man like P. W. 1 in this case cannot be acted upon, where it turns the scale between guilt and innocence of the petitioner, because, upon his own statement, he bears some kind of grudge or ill will to the petitioner.

It seems that there was a previous case similar to the present against this petitioner and that the petitioner was acquitted on appeal. The present P. W. 1 has the effrontery to say that upon that acquittal the petitioner was restored to his office, and that if he were not so restored he would not have preferred this complaint. A man who can acknowledge such a conduct certainly does not deserve to have his words accepted as true, where the intention of it is to incriminate the petitioner whom he wishes to see out of his office. If authority were necessary for the proposition that mere delay in payment of money entrusted to a person when there is no particular obligation to pay it at a certain date, does not amount to and does not furnish by itself a sufficient proof of misappropriation, such authority will be found in A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 613 at p. 615, where it is stated that :

"where there is no time fixed for the payment of the money or where no place is assigned for the keeping thereof, the accused cannot be said to have committed the offence of criminal breach of trust for merely mixing the trust money with his own, etc."

There is no question here of mixing the money with the petitioner's money because there is absolutely no proof in the case of any such conduct. As the only fact proved against the petitioner was that he paid the money only 31 days after its receipt and that fact is legally insufficient by itself to prove that the accused committed criminal breach of trust, the conviction must be set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal P. C., S. 234 (1)—Accused tried for four offences in one trial—Trial is vitiated—Criminal P. C., S. 527.

V. K. John—for Petitioner.

K. N. Ganapathi for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 19 (c), Arms Act, of exporting arms in contravention of the provisions of S. 6 of that Act. In the trial Court he was charged with and convicted of four acts of export, and on appeal the learned Sessions Judge, while holding to be inadmissible some of the evidence on which the conviction was based, found that the evidence remaining was sufficient, and upheld the conviction. No objection has before me been taken to the merits of that decision. The objection urged is that the trial offended against the provisions of S. 234 (1), Criminal P. C., which enables a person to be tried for not more than three offences of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months. The charge in the present case, as I have said, enumerates four instances of the export of fire-arms. It is somewhat obscurely worded and so far as appears quite unnecessarily opens with a recital of the dates on which the petitioner is alleged to have "imported" these weapons by land from Bombay to Hospet. "Imported," I think, is an inappropriate word when used in such circumstances. It then goes on to allege that he subsequently took or exported them to a place in the Nizam's Dominions. No dates are attached to the acts of export. Mr. Ganapathi who appears for the Public Prosecutor informs me that the dates of the receipt of the weapons by the petitioner at Hospet were respectively 25th

May, 10th June, 13th August and 26th August, and suggests that the presumption is that he must have exported them to Hyderabad shortly after those dates of receipt. Prima facie, therefore, he exported them on different dates and the four acts cannot in any sense be said to have been committed in one transaction, nor am I asked to conclude that even any two of the weapons were exported together, so as perhaps to make three sets of offences within the meaning of S. 234 (1), Criminal P. C. It certainly lay on the prosecution to show that the terms of that section were complied with when asking the Court to entertain a complaint of these four acts of exportation. It has not been contended that all four acts constituted one "offence" as that word is used in the section.

The further question then arises as to the legal effect of non-compliance with S. 234, Criminal P. C. That has now, I think, been set at rest by the Privy Council judgment in Subramanya Iyer v. Emperor (1), which decides that it is not merely an irregularity which vitiates the trial. This ruling is in no manner affected by the later Privy Council case Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (2), which relates to the reading over of witnesses' depositions and distinguishes the earlier case. Instances in which Subramanya Iyer v. Emperor (1) has been followed by Indian Courts are supplied by Virupana Goud v. Emperor (3) (though it does not actually cite the case Tepanidhi Gobinda Chandra v. Emperor (4)).

I have accordingly no alternative but to set aside the conviction on these grounds. The petitioner besides being sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the present case, was sentenced to a prior term of six months' imprisonment in C. C. No. 61 on the file of the First Class Magistrate, Hospet, the two sentences running consecutively. I understand that he has already served his first sentence and is now in course of serving his second. Inasmuch as in the other case also I have found it necessary to set aside the conviction I think there are no grounds for making any further order in the present case. The petitioner will, therefore, be acquitted and set at liberty.

Criminal Revn. No. 825 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 739 of 1929, Decided on 19th December 1929, from judgment of Joint. Magistrate, Sivakasi, in Criminal Appeal No. 25 of 1929.

Penal Code, S. 424—Removing crop attached by Madras Village Courts is not offence under S. 424 since such Court has no right to attach it—Madras Village Courts Act (1 of 1889), S. 52.

Since a village Court cannot attach crops which are not moveables within the meaning of S. 52 by virtue of Madras General Clauses Act and S. 22, I. P. C., there is no fraud in removing such crops so as to sustain a conviction under S. 424, I. P. C. [P 581 C 2]

S. Narayana Ayyangar—for Petitioners.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The eight petitioners have been fined under S. 424, I. P. C., for removing crops attached by the village Court. Under S. 52, Act 1 of 1889, a village Court can only attach moveables. The definition of moveables must by provision of the Madras General Clauses Act, 1867, be sought for in the Penal Code; and under S. 22, moveables do not include crops. Therefore, a village Court cannot attach crops. The petitioners committed no fraud in removing them, and the conviction must be cancelled and all the fines be refunded.

Naturally it causes great confusion in the minds of simple villagers that under S. 2 (13), Civil P. C., moveable property includes growing crops, and under S. 22, I. P. C., or S. 3 (25-34), General Clauses Act, moveable property does not include growing crops. I would suggest that the legislature make it abundantly plain what a village Court can do in regard to crops as such. It might at the same time make it plain what is meant by "personal property" in S. 13 of the Act. I have held that personal property includes crops in Sundara Naicker v. Potti Naicker (1), but I admit that it is arguable either way. If personal only means moveable as defined in I. P. C., moveable should be the word employed.

Criminal Appeal No. 643 of 1929, Decided on 21st January 1930, from acquittal order of Bench Mags., Tiruvarur, in Bench Case No. 403 of 1929

Madras District Municipalities Act, S. 182 (1)—Either owner or occupier of premises, or both, may be proceeded against.

The only object of S. 182 (1) in saying that the chairman may require the owner or the occupier to remove encroachment is to enlarge the class of persons against whom notice may be sent and not to restrict it. Either the owner may be proceeded against or the occupier or both. There is nothing in the use of the word "or" in that section which restricts the municipality to choosing one out of the two persons proceeded against. [P 582 C 2]

K. S. Vasudenan—for Appellant.

P. S. Ramachandran and K. S. Desikan—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the Public Prosecutor against the order dated 29th August 1929 of the Bench Magistrate of Tiruvarur acquitting the respondents respectively the occupier and owner of premises within the Municipality of Tiruvarur, who were charged at the instance of the municipality with having disobeyed a notice under S. 182 (1), District Municipalities Act, to remove certain alleged encroachments in front of the said premises. The Bench without going into the merits of the charge acquitted the respondents upon the ground that under S. 182 (1), District Municipalities Act notice to remove construction or encroachment can only be given to either the occupier or the owner but not to both. The Bench further held that the municipality not having elected to proceed against the one or the other but having proceeded against both, the prosecution case failed. The only question in this appeal is whether this view is correct. In my view it is not. The only object of saying that the chairman may require the owner or the occupier to remove encroachment is to enlarge the class of persons against whom notice may be sent and not to restrict it. Either the owner may be proceeded against or the occupier or both. There is nothing in the use of the word "or" in that section which restricts the municipality to choosing one out of the two persons proceeded against. The order of acquittal of the Bench Magistrate is set aside and the case will go back to them for disposal according to law.

Moti Lal Saksena—for Applicant.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an appellate order of the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad upholding the conviction and sentence passed upon the applicant Burmha of an offence under S. 366, I. P. C. The story of the prosecution out of which this application for revision has arisen are briefly as follows:

One Mt. Nanka, a minor girl of about 12 or 13 years of age is said to have been taken away from her mother's lawful guardianship by Mt. Maharani, on the pretext that she wanted her to grind corn and then made her over to two other persons. The story of the minor girl Mt. Nanka is that she was living in Durjankapurwa with her mother Mt. Lachhna and had been married to one Bhagoti Ahir of village

Mau. She stated that 4 or 5 days before her arrest at Dharyanwan she was sleeping in the "usara" of her house when at about three gharis before sunrise the accused Mt. Maharani came to her and asked her to go with her to grind corn in her house. Mt. Nanka left her home with Mt. Maharani and did spend some time in grinding corn at the house of Mt. Maharani. Mt. Maharani then got her to the outskirts of the village and made her over to her own son Chedi and the applicant Burhma; these two persons took her to Baidkapurwa and there kept her at the house of one Shambhu. After she had been kept there for some days, four or five persons came with the applicant Burhma and they were taking her to another place when after going a short distance, one Bhagwan intervened and there was a lathi fight between Burhma and Bhagwan in which the latter was knocked down and Burhma then ran away. At this juncture a constable and a chaukidar arrived on the spot and Mt. Nanka and Badri were arrested and taken to the thana. Mt. Maharani, Ohedi, Mt. Ram Kali, Mt. Bhagana, Shambhu and Sudama were all acquitted, and it follows logically from this that it is not established who took Mt. Nanka away from her mother's lawful guardianship and how she came to be in the unlawful possession of the applicant Burhma.

On behalf of the applicant it is strenuously argued that the offence of kidnapping is not a continuous offence, and, in support of this contention, reliance is placed upon a ruling of Lindsay, J. reported in Emperor v. Gokaran (1) in which it was held that it was a well-established point of law that kidnapping was not a continuing offence. The same view was taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nemai Chatteraj v. Queen-Empress (2) in which it was held by a majority of the Full Bench that the taking away out of the guardianship of the husband was complete before the petitioner joined the principal offenders in taking the girl to Calcutta, and that the petitioner therefore could not be convicted under S. 363, I. P. C., and it was further held that the offence of kidnapping was complete when the minor was actually taken away from her legal guardian. The same view was taken by Sunder Lal, J., in Emperor v. Abdul Rahman (3) in which it was held that the offence of kidnapping was completed the moment a girl under 16 years of age was taken out of the custody of her lawful guardian and was not an offence continuing so long as the minor was kept out of such guardianship. Similarly, the Patna High Court in the case of Nanak Sao v. Emperor (4) held that the offence of kidnapping was not a continuing offence but was complete the moment the minor was removed from the keeping of the lawful guardian. The question, however, in the present case is when was the act of kidnapping completed. Upon the findings of the trial Court, which are accepted as correct by the lower appellate Court, Mt. Nanka is not proved to have been kidnapped by Mt. Maharani. She was, however, found in the unlawful possession of the applicant Burhma, at a time when she was not under the lawful guardianship of her mother. In the case of Idu v. Emperor (5) it was held by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that it was not necessary for a conviction under S. 366, I. P. C. that the accused should know definitely who the guardian of the minor girl was, whom he found wandering about and made use of for his own purposes.

Upon the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Courts, it is clear that the applicant Burhma found this minor girl at the house of Mt. Maharani away from the lawful guardianship of her mother and was taking her in the company of Badri and others to another place when he had a fight with Bhagwan and the police arrived on the spot and arrested Badri and the minor girl. The applicant when he joined Badri and others in taking the girl away from Mt. Maharani's house must have known that this minor girl had a lawful guardian from whose custody he was taking her away. The question of the offence of kidnapping being a continuous offence

(1) A. I. R. 1921 Oudh 226=24 O. C. 329.

(2) [1900] 27 Cal. 1041 = 4 O. W. N. 645 (F. B.).

(3) [1916] 88 All. 664 = 38 I. C. 486 = 14 A. L. J. 765.

(4) A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 493 = 5 Pat. 526.

(5) A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 385 = 27 O. C. 92.

does not arise in the present case, because the finding of the trial Court is that Mt. Maharani is not proved to have kidnapped Mt. Nanka. That being the case no offence of kidnapping in respect of Mt. Nanka is proved to have taken place before the applicant Burhma came on the scene and he, in taking away this girl in order to sell her to Bishun Dayal and in pocketing half the proceeds of the sale-price, was clearly guilty of an offence under S. 366, I. P. C. The fact that Bishun Dayal, the would-be husband and purchaser of Mt. Nanka was a Brahman whilst Mt. Nanka was an Ahiran does not affect the question of the guilt of the applicant. The sentence in my opinion, if anything, errs very much on the side of leniency.

For the reasons given above, I uphold the conviction and sentence passed upon the applicant and dismiss this application for revision.

MACPHERSON, J.

Mahabir Pandey — Accused — Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 627 of 1929, Decided on 22nd November 1929, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Darbhanga, D/- 24th September 1929.

Penal Code, S. 411—Stolen bullocks taken to distant village and left with professional grazer of that village for pasturage along with his own—Mere fact of possession of bullocks by such person will not warrant inference of dishonest possession.

Where bullocks were stolen from one village and taken to another village at a distant place and handed over to a person resident of that another village to pasture them with his own, the mere fact of possession of the bullocks by such person would not warrant the inference that the possession was dishonest so as to cast upon such person the onus of displacing the inference of dishonesty. [P 584 C 2]

Dhyan Chandra—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued to consider the conviction under S. 411, I. P. C., of the petitioner Mahabir Pandey and his sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment and fine.

It is established that three cousins of the petitioner, who is a Bhumihar, committed theft of two bullocks in village Chaits, thana Samastipur, and that the bullocks were found some days afterwards at the village of Jorauna in thana Singhia, in which village the petitioner was grazing his cattle and residing at the house of one Ramdhari Jha within a rasi of whose house the bullocks were found tied. The Court below have inferred that the bullocks were there in possession of the petitioner and that he has not shown that they were not in his possession dishonestly.

It has been urged that on the findings of the first Court, which apparently have not been set aside by the learned District Magistrate in appeal, the bullocks were not in the possession of the petitioner at all. The particular ground urged is that the petitioner was not present at the place where the bullocks were found tied though the complainant averred that he was. Apart, however, from the question of possession by the petitioner of the stolen bullocks on which I am not sanguine that in the circumstances of the case the petitioner can succeed, it appears to me that the conviction is unsound upon another ground. I consider that the inference of dishonest possession cannot safely be made in the circumstances of the case. The theft of the bullocks was perpetrated by the petitioner's cousins. The petitioner was grazing his cattle at a distant place. It would not necessarily follow that he would have reason to believe that cattle brought to him by his cousins in order to pasture them along with his own were not honestly come by. The mere fact of possession is in the peculiar circumstances of this case not sufficient in my opinion to warrant the inference which no doubt may under the statute be made in certain circumstances that he was in possession of them dishonestly and to cast upon him the onus to displace the inference of dishonesty.

Accordingly the conviction must be set aside, the petitioner must be released from custody or bail if he is on bail, and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

MYA BU, J.

T. Sathi Reddy—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1304 of 1929, Decided on 17th December 1929, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Rangoon, D/- 7th October 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 476 and 195—Complaint merely quoting S. 193, Penal Code but alleging fabrication of false evidence without any allegations of having given false evidence is no complaint for offence of intentionally giving false evidence.

It is absolutely necessary to give the particular false statements in a complaint for the offence of giving false evidence and therefore a complaint merely quoting S. 193, Penal Code, alleging fabrication of false evidence without any allegations of having given false evidence can in no sense be deemed to be a complaint for an offence of intentionally giving false evidence: A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 195; 32 Mad. 35; 26 All. 514; 35 All. 8, Disting.; A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 603, A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 721 Rel. on. [P 597 C 1 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. S. 537—Want of complaint affects jurisdiction of Court and legality of trial and is not covered by S. 537.

The want of a complaint for a particular offence is quite a different thing from an error, omission or irregularity in the complaint. It affects the jurisdiction of the Court and the legality of the trial and the case does not fall within the provisions of S. 537. [P 587 C 2]

Bose, Venkatram De, Darwood and Naidu—for Appellant.

The Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant T. Sathi Reddy one of the partners of the firm of K. C. V. Reddy & Co., labour contractors who have for some years procured labour on contract for the Port Commissioners and the B. I. S. N. Co., at Rangoon stands convicted and sentenced by the District Magistrate of Rangoon in Criminal Regular Trial No. 84 of 1929 under S. 193, I. P. C. The charge framed against the appellant was that he on or about 31st January 1929 when examined by Mr. Fischer, Income-tax Officer, intentionally gave false evidence with reference to the accounts of K. C. V. Reddy & Co. by stating:

"All the thumb impressions in the two registers are those of maistries. None of the thumb impressions are those of coolies."

The facts which led to the trial are as follows:

The Income-tax Officer commenced proceedings for the assessment of the firm by issuing a notice under S. 28 (2), Income-tax Act on 13th July 1928, calling on the firm to submit a return of income for the year 1927-1928. The return was furnished in two portions signed by K. C. V. Reddy, the senior partner which together showed a loss. The Income-tax Officer was not satisfied with the return and called for production of books of accounts. Certain books of accounts were produced among which there were the labour payment registers referred to in the charge. Certain other books were obtained by the Income-tax department at the instance of the appellant.

It is the case for the prosecution that the labour payment registers contained not only the thumb impressions of the cooly maistries, but also a large number of thumb impressions of coolies purporting to be acknowledgements of receipt of payments which were never in fact made for labour. In compliance with the summons calling on the firm to appear to answer questions before the Income-tax Officer in regard to the firm's accounts the appellant appeared before Mr. Fischer and made certain statements in the course of which the appellant on 31st January 1929 stated to Mr. Fischer inter alia:

"All the thumb impressions in the two registers are those of maistries. None of the thumb impressions are those of coolies."

Subsequently Mr. Nicholas, Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, Rangoon, on the report of Mr. Fischer directed the prosecution of the four partners of the firm of K. C. V. Reddy & Co., with the result that on 6th June 1929 a complaint was filed by Mr. Fischer in the Court of the District Magistrate. The complaint mentioned the names of the four partners as accused persons, the name of the present appellant being the third in the list.

The complaint stated inter alia that on 17th August 1928 and 17th November 1918, accused 3 together with an assistant in the firm produced certain books purporting to be correct books of the firm's accounts, that on 27th November 1928 other account books purporting to be a correct statement of the firm's account were obtained by the complainant at the instance of accused 3 from the Criminal Investigation Department; and that all the said account books were false to the knowledge of the accused and had been fabricated for the purpose of income-tax and to support the false return. The complaint charged the accused:

(a) that between the dates 1st April 1927 and 27th August 1928, they fabricated accounts for income-tax purposes and thereby committed an offence under S. 193, I. P. C.

(b) that on 20th and 21st August 1928 they filed a false return of income and thereby committed an offence under S. 177, I. P. C. and

(c) that they having produced books of accounts which are false to their knowledge thereby committed an offence under S. 196, I. P. C.

By the complaint, Criminal Regular Trial No. 59 of 1929 was instituted in the District Magistrate's Court. After recording evidence for the prosecution and examination of accused 4 the then District Magistrate on 19th August 1929 framed charges against accused 1 K.C.V. Reddy under Ss. 193, 196 and 177, I. P. C. and discharged accused 2 and 4, V. D. Reddy and T. N. Reddy and recorded the following order in regard to accused 3, the present appellant:

"Against accused 3 Sathi Reddy I direct that a new proceeding be opened under the original complaint to enquire into an offence or offences under S. 193, I. P. C. in respect of the statements which he made to the Income-tax Officer pursuant to the return of income made by K. C. V. Reddy & Co., in August 1923 for the income-tax year 1927-28."

In consequence of this order, the Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1929 was opened against the appellant on the same day. Thereafter the District Magistrate who made the order was transferred and was succeeded by the District Magistrate before whom the case against the appellant was tried up to the very end. In the judgment the District Magistrate remarked that his predecessor had discharged the appellant in Criminal Regular No. 59 of 1929 and opened new proceedings against him. In view of this remark it is contended that the discharge of the appellant in Criminal Regular No. 59 of 1929 initiated on the complaint of 6th June 1929, necessitated a new complaint for the valid initiation of the new proceedings in Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1929. I do not think that the remark of the learned District Magistrate referred to above should be so literally construed for, it is clear from the wording of the order of 19th August 1929 expressly discharging accused 2 and 4 and ordering a new or separate proceeding against accused 3 that the order was never meant to operate as an order of discharge of accused 3 the present appellant. I therefore fail to see that there was any legal necessity for the filing of a new or a fresh complaint to initiate the proceeding in Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1929.

The further ground which has been taken up on behalf of the appellant is that as there was no complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. against the appellant for the offence of intentionally giving false evidence, the District Magistrate was incompetent to take cognizance of the offence in view of S. 195 (1), (b), Criminal P. C. The complaint filed by the Income-tax Officer on 6th June 1929 made no allegation regarding statements made by the appellant before the Income-tax Officer. With reference to S. 193, I. P. C. the complaint charged accused 4 that between dates 1st April 1927 and 27th August 1928 they fabricated account for income-tax purposes and thereby committed an offence under the section. It is urged on behalf of the Crown that this is sufficient to give the District Magistrate power to take cognizance of the offence for which the appellant was prosecuted in Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1929. S. 193, I. P. C. prescribes the punishment for the offence of intentionally giving false evidence which is defined by S. 191 and for the offence of fabricating false evidence which is defined by S. 192. The question for determination is whether a complaint charging an accused under S. 193, I. P. C. specifically for the offence of fabricating false evidence before the fabricated evidence was used in a judicial proceeding can be regarded as a complaint for the offence of giving false evidence in the judicial proceeding by reason of the fact that the section under which both offences are punishable is mentioned in the complaint. I have referred to two cases decided by single Judges of the Allahabad High Court. Emperor v. Sundar Sarup (1) and Emperor v. Debi Prasad (2). In the former where an Assistant Collector trying a rent suit came to the conclusion that the plaintiff has committed perjury and sent the record to the Collector of the district (who was also District Magistrate) for "starting a case under S. 193, I. P. C.," the Collector ordered:

(1) [1904] 26 All. 514=(1904) A. W. N. 90.

(2) [1918] 35 All. 8=17 I. C. 578=10 A. L. J. 361.

"that a case under S. 193, I. P. C. be initiated against Sundar Sarup and made over for decision to a Magistrate, 1st Class."

It was held that although the order of the Assistant Collector could not be regarded as an order under S. 476, Criminal P. C. it fell within the definition of a complaint. In the latter, a Munsiff being of opinion that a document filed in a case before him had been tampered with, communicated his suspicions to the District Judge, who thereupon wrote to the District Magistrate requesting him to take action in the matter. It was held that the letter of the District Judge to the District Magistrate amounted to a complaint within the meaning of S. 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C.

It appears to me that in these cases, the basis on which the prosecution was respectively sought were manifest and there could have been no doubt as to whether the prosecution was to be for the offence of giving intentionally false evidence or for the offence of fabricating false evidence. These cases are therefore distinguishable from the present one in which the complaint specifically alleged the offence of fabrication of false evidence prior to the judicial proceeding in question. In Kalyanji v. Ram Deen Lala (3) where a complaint was made under S. 476, Criminal P. C. for offences under S. 193 and 196 I. P. C. and the complaint did not state what was the false evidence given by one of the persons accused, Wallace, J. pointed out that it was not for the Magistrate to fish about in order to find out what statements the complaining Court might have considered to be false and held that the complaint under S. 193, I. P. C. could not therefore stand.

A Bench of the Calcutta High Court has also ruled in Kalisadhar Addya v. Nani Lall Hazra (4), that it is absolutely necessary to assign a complaint made under S. 476 and 476 (b), the particular false statements alleged to constitute the offence under S. 193, I. P. C. I agree with this ruling. It is, however, not necessary for the purpose of the present case to go to the full extent of this ruling or that in Kalyanji's case. (3). But I have cited them to show that if it is necessary to give the particular false statements in a complaint for an offence of giving false evidence, a complaint merely quoting S. 193 but alleging fabrication of false evidence without any allegations of having given false evidence, can in no sense be deemed to be a complaint for an offence of intentionally giving false evidence.

The case is therefore one in which there was no complaint against the appellant for the offence of intentionally giving false evidence which the learned District Magistrate took cognizance of, and therefore the proceeding taken against the appellant in Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1929 was ultra vires and illegal. I have referred to the case of Maung Shwe Phe v. Ma Me Hmoke (5) in which it was held that where instead of making a formal complaint the Court ordered the prosecution of a party to the suit under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. and forwarded a copy of the order to the District Magistrate for necessary action, that the want of strict compliance with the provisions of the section by making a formal complaint was only a formal defect which did not vitiate the order. The ruling does not assist in establishing the legality of the proceeding now under consideration in which there is no order under S. 476, Criminal P. C., stating that the appellant had committed the offence of giving false evidence, to make up for the absence of a formal complaint for that offence.

Lastly, the counsel for the Crown invokes the aid of the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. and urges that error, omission or irregularity in the complaint does not vitiate the proceeding unless such error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. But, in my judgment, the want of a complaint for a particular offence is quite a different thing from an error, omission or irregularity in the complaint. There is no complaint in this case charging the appellant with the offence of intentionally giving false evidence and it affects the jurisdiction of the Court and the legality of the trial

(5) A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 195=8 Rang. 48.

The case does not fall within the provisions of S. 537.

I have read the case of V. C. Chidambaram Pillai v. Emperor (6) laid before me by the learned counsel for the Crown but for reasons already stated I consider that it is inapplicable to the present case. The proceeding in Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1929 from which this appeal has arisen must be and it is hereby set aside as being ultra vires and illegal. From this it follows that the conviction and sentence passed on the appellant in that trial are set aside. I do not enter an order of acquittal but leave it open to the authorities concerned to lay a complaint as required by law for the prosecution of the appellant if they deem fit to do so.

Judgment.—On 6th June 1929 a complaint was filed by the Income-tax Officer, Rangoon, against four persons of whom the petitioner Dhana Reddy was one. The four accused were alleged to be members of a firm carrying on business as labour contractors at Rangoon and the charges against them were that they fabricated accounts for income-tax purposes and filed false returns of income and produced books of account which were false to their knowledge. The Magistrate took cognizance of the complaint and examined witnesses for the prosecution. On 19th June he charged accused 1. directed as regards accused 3 fresh proceedings would be taken, and discharged accused 2 and 4. Dhana Reddy was accused 2. No reasons were given by the Magistrate for his discharge of two of the accused. On 30th August, that is, eleven days after the order of discharge, the Income-tax Officer filed a fresh complaint against the petitioner. In that complaint he set forth that a previous complaint had been filed and that the accused had been discharged but alleged that he now had evidence to place before the Court which was not within his knowledge at the time of filing the complaint referred to. The Magistrate examined the complainant on oath and took cognizance of the complaint. The accused has now come to this Court against the order taking cognizance. The first ground taken is that the accused having been discharged by the District Magistrate the Magistrate was not competent to take cognizance of a fresh complaint against him. I do not understand the learned advocate for the petitioner seriously to press now the extreme view that the order of discharge was an absolute bar to the opening of fresh proceedings. Authority for such an extreme view can be found in some of the earlier cases decided by the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras. Thus, in the case of Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chandra Bhatta-charjee (1), it was held that:

"where an original complaint is dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., a fresh complaint on the same facts cannot be entertained so long as the order of dismissal is not set aside by a competent authority."

(1) [1898] 28 Cal. 983=1 C. W. N. 57.

And this view of the law was approved by the High Court of Madras in the case of Mahomed Abdul Mennan v. Panduranga Row (2). But the decision in Niratan Sen's case (1) has been clearly overruled by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Dwarka Nath Mondul v. Beni Madhab Banerjee (3) followed by another Full Bench ruling in the case of Mir Ahmad Hossein v. Mahomed Askari (4). And the same view of the law has been taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Gounden (5). In Burma the late Chief Court and the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma have taken the same view, and the Courts now appear to be practically unanimous in holding that an order dismissing a complaint or discharging an accused person does not operate as an acquittal under S. 403 and does not bar the taking cognizance of a fresh complaint of the same offence even though the order of dismissal or discharge has not been set aside in revision by a competent authority. There can, I think, be no doubt now that that is the correct view of the law, and it is not necessary for me to discuss the arguments which have led the various Courts to come to this decision. The contention before me really is that although the Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain a complaint he should not in fact have done so without at first making a preliminary enquiry to satisfy himself that there was a good ground for making a complaint. Although there is no legal bar to the institution of fresh criminal proceedings against an accused person, who has been discharged, for the same offence as that with regard to which he has been discharged it is obvious that the Courts should be chary in taking cognizance of complaints in such cases; otherwise there would be nothing to prevent an accused person being harassed again and again with regard to one charge. In the case of Mi The Kin v. Nga E Tha (6) the learned Judicial Commissioner whilst holding that:

"the discharge of an accused person or the dismissal of a complaint is no bar to the institution of fresh proceedings otherwise than under S. 437, Criminal P. C."

pointed out:

"that in dealing with a complaint in such circumstances the Magistrate is bound to proceed in the manner laid down in Ss. 200 seq. that is, after examining the complainant, and if necessary, after a preliminary enquiry or local investigation, to decide whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding. In coming to this decision he is bound to exercise a proper discretion, and a discretion improperly exercised would be a ground for interference by a Court of revision."

I agree generally in these remarks. And as regards this aspect of the case, the only point to consider appears to be whether the exercise of the discretion of the Court to proceed without holding a preliminary enquiry is so clearly improper in the present case that the Magistrate should be ordered to hold such enquiry now, before taking further proceedings. The Magistrate who admitted the second complaint was not the same Magistrate as the Magistrate who discharged Dhana Reddy, and unfortunately, no reasons were given for the discharge in the order of discharge. When examined on oath as a complainant on the filing of this second complaint the complainant stated:

"the evidence I now propose to call was not available at the time I filed the first complaint."

If this statement is true it is impossible to say that the Magistrate exercised his discretion wrongly in taking cognizance of the complaint. I understand the fresh evidence referred to was the evidence of certain clerks who directly implicate the petitioner and who were not examined by the Court before he was discharged. These witnesses have since been examined by the Magistrate in the original case against K. C. V. Reddy. But beyond the statement of the complainant, the proceedings do not show that when cognizance was taken of the second complainant against Dhana Reddy the Magistrate had any material before him to show what these witnesses would state beyond what the complainant himself deposed to.

It has been suggested that as S. 437, Criminal P. C., now specifically prescribes that before an order of discharge is set aside the accused should have an opportunity of showing cause against its being set aside the Magistrate ought to have issued notice to the accused before taking cognizance of the offence. This contention I am unable to uphold. There is no question here of setting aside an order of discharge. The prosecution do not contend that the discharge order was wrong. What they contend is that with the fresh evidence now available they can establish the guilt of the accused.

Section 202, Criminal P. C., gives a Magistrate power to hold a preliminary enquiry before taking cognizance of a complaint but does not ordinarily contemplate the accused taking part in that enquiry. I am unable to hold that there was any necessity to give notice to the accused before cognizance was taken. The Magistrate would perhaps have been better advised, had he taken some steps to satisfy himself that fresh evidence really would be forthcoming before taking cognizance. After careful consideration, however, I am not satisfied that there is sufficient reason now for interfering with the Magistrate's orders. I do not understand it to be disputed that certain fresh witnesses have, since the filing of the complaint in the present case, given evidence before the Magistrate in the original case against the accused I. K. C. V. Reddy and that that evidence if believed would be evidence against the present applicant. And in deciding whether to take cognizance the Magistrate was justified in considering the fact that the complainant was a responsible official who had sworn before him that the fresh evidence he proposed to bring was not available when the first complaint was filed. There was in my opinion quite clearly no want of jurisdiction in the Magistrate when he took cognizance on account of the previous order of discharge, nor am I satisfied that there was such an improper use of his discretionary power as would in the circumstances justify the interference by this Court in revision at this stage.

The other objections taken to the action of the Magistrate as I understand them are :

(1) that the Income-tax Officer should, under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., have recorded a finding in writing before filing the complaint, and

(2) that the first complaint having failed the Income-tax Officer has become functus officio, and has no further power to file a fresh complaint.

In the first place it is to be noted that one of the charges brought against the petitioner is under the provisions of Ss. 417 and 511, I. P. C. So far as an offence under these sections is concerned S. 476, Criminal P. C., has no application. These objections can only be considered so far as the complaint under Ss. 193 and 196, I. P. C., is concerned. As regards the first of the two objections there is not sufficient material before me to say whether in fact a finding in writing has been recorded. As regards the second, no authority has been cited to me which justifies the view that the second complaint was incompetent. I do not propose, however, to discuss these two points any further or to come to any definite finding on them, because they seem to me to be points which should be raised first before the Magistrate. So far as I can discover no objection whatever has been taken as yet before the Magistrate on either of these two grounds. That being so, I do not consider that they should be dealt with in revision now. I therefore dismiss this application.

(a) Penal Code, 405—Scope.

Section 405 refers only to moveable property: 28 Cal. 372; 6 Bom. H. C. Cr. 83 and 88 Cal. 758, Foll. [P 591 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 20—Scope.

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 238—Person having license to fell aule-nath at teak trees only but Range Officer marking growing trees and allowing them to be felled—Officer charged under S. 409, I. P. C., and found guilty under S. 409 or S. 427, I. P. C., and convicted—Alternative conviction is bad.

A person had a license to fell only aule-nath at teak marked by a Forest Range Officer. But the Range Officer marked certain growing teak trees and allowed them to be felled by the licensee. The Officer was charged under S. 409, I. P. C. The Magistrate found him guilty of an offence under S. 439, Penal Code or an offence under S. 427, I. P. C. and convicted him.

Held: that alternative conviction under S. 427, I. P. C. was bad inasmuch as mischief is not a minor form of criminal breach of trust but is quite distinct from it. [P 591 C 2] (d) Penal Code, S. 425—Scope.

Intention to cause wrongful loss or damage is an essential for the offence of mischief.

Ba Han—for Applicant.

Baguley, J.—The applicant, U Ka Doe, is or was Forest Range Officer of Sitkwin Range Tharrawaddy Forest Division. One Po Thi got a free grant for ten tons of aule-nathat teak timber for construction of a kyaung. The condition of the license was that he was permitted to fell ten tons of aule-nathat teak marked by Range Officer, Sitkwin, that is, U Ka Doe, in Sitkwin Unclassed Forest. The procedure was that first of all U Ka Doe had to mark the teak trees in order that the free licensee-holder should fell them. After the trees were felled, the trunks were cut into logs and measured and the free hammer mark had to be put upon them. The Magistrate has found as a fact that instead of the teak trees so marked and felled being aule-nathat trees they were growing teak trees. He has charged U Ka Doe under S. 409, I. P. C.:

"That you on or about the month of Waso 1290 B. E., at Sitkwin, being a public servant in the employment of Government, namely a Forest Ranger, and in such capacity entrusted with certain property, to wit teak trees committed criminal breach of trust in respect of the said property."

After this charge had been framed, the accused entered upon his defence and in the end the learned Magistrate found him guilty of an offence under S. 409, I. P. C., or an offence under S. 427, I. P. C. He then sentenced U Ka Doe to six months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal to the Sessions Judge, the conviction was upheld, but the sentence was reduced to the term of imprisonment already undergone and a fine of Rs. 300 or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment. There were other accused in this case, but their fate is of no importance in the present matter.

The first point to be considered is whether the applicant could possibly have been convicted under S. 409, I. P. C.

in connexion with standing teak trees. The general current of authority is that S. 405, in which criminal breach of trust is defined, can only refer to moveable property: vide Jugdawn Sinha v. Queen-Empress (1), which followed Reg. v. Girdhar Dharamdas (2). The same opinion has also been expressed in Queen-Empress v. Bhagu (3) and Durga Tewari v. Emperor (4). In the last mentioned case, the accused was entrusted with a standing crop of paddy which he reaped as soon as it was ripe, but nevertheless it was held that S. 405 could not apply to his offence.

In the present case it is hardly necessary to decide whether a Range Officer is to be regarded as entrusted with the teak trees throughout the whole of his range or with dominion over those teak trees, for those teak trees must be held to be immovable property in the form in which they are entrusted to him and, therefore, he cannot be held to be guilty of criminal breach of trust in respect of them.

The alternative conviction under S. 427, I. P. C., I must also regard as bad. In the first place, there was not an alternative charge under S. 427 of mischief. The applicant has not been given any chance of defending himself with regard to the allegation of mischief. Mischief is not a minor form of criminal breach of trust. In fact the offence of mischief is quite distinct from criminal breach of trust and, most important of all, there is no allegation that Government has been put to any loss owing to the marking or cutting down of these teak trees, and the causing of wrongful loss or damage and intent to cause wrongful loss or damage is an essential for the offence of mischief.

It seems to me that the accused has been tried with the Magistrate's view at an entirely wrong angle. On the allegation which has been held to be proved, it would have been perfectly simple to have charged, him under the Forest Act and Rules, but for some reason which is not apparent the prosecution have chosen to take their stand on the Indian Penal Code. It is impossible, if I accept the facts put forward for the prosecution as proved, to convict the applicant under the Forest Act and Rules, because he has not been charged under these and has not been given any opportunity of putting up a defence which might meet a charge under the Forest Act. The applicant I am told, is an elderly man at the end of his service with the Forest Department and he has spent some time in jail and undoubtedly been put to a very great deal of expense in carrying this case through the Courts. It may be that he has been sufficiently punished for anything that he may have committed. I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence but make no order for a re-trial. The fine will be refunded. Whether further charges are brought under the Forest Act must lie with the authorities concerned.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 9 of 1930, Decided on 14th February 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 215—Where there is no evidence to support order of commitment, commitment must be quashed.

Where there is no evidence to support an order of commitment, the commitment must be quashed because absence of evidence is a question of law and not of fact: 5 C. W. N., 411: 9 C. W. N. 829; 6 All. 98 and 33 All. 29, Ex l. [P 592 C 2]

Moti Sagar and Har Gopal—for Petitioner.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application under S. 215, Criminal P. C., to quash a commitment. The petitioners are Mt. Ram Devi, a widow, Gansham Das, alleged to be her paramour, and Mt. Khemi Bai, her maid servant. All three have been committed for trial on a charge of murder.

Mt. Ram Devi was delivered of a male child which was found to be dead soon after delivery. The medical officer who made the autopsy was of the opinion that the child did not breathe after birth, and that there were no signs to show that it had been killed. The only injury that he detected on the body was the swelling of the scrotum. He found the testicles in a normal condition.

There was nothing in his evidence to show that the death might have been caused by the injury to the scrotum. Thus there is no evidence as to the cause of the death. Further, there is no evidence as to who caused the injury to the scrotum. According to the prosecution theory, the persons who were present at the time of the birth of the child were the three petitioners as well as a daughter of Mt. Ram Devi and a son of Gansham Das accused. On the evidence on the record the case of these two persons i. e. the daughter of one accused and the son of another, could not possibly be distinguished from that of the accused, so that if there was no case against those two, there could be none against the accused.

The only circumstantial evidence in this case is that the child was an illegitimate one and had been begotten by the male accused and so he and the mother had presumably a motive for causing its death. But in the absence of all other evidence it cannot possibly be said that the child had been killed or that all three or any one of the accused had killed it. The committing Magistrate himself disbelieved the evidence that the cries of the child were heard after its birth. Thus there is no evidence whatsoever in support of the charge of murder against any one of the accused. On the other hand, the evidence is that no murder took place. The Calcutta, Allahabad and Burma High Courts have held that, where there is no evidence to support an order of commitment, the commitment must be quashed because absence of evidence is a question of law and not of fact: see Jogeshwar Ghose v. Emperor (1), Sheo Bux v. Emperor (2), Empress v. Narotam Das (3) and Rustom v. Emperor (4).

The learned counsel for the Crown has taken me through all the evidence on the record but is unable to show that there is any evidence direct or circumstantial, to support the charge against any one of the accused.

I, therefore, quash the commitment.

AGHA HAIDAR, J.
Atam Parkash—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 200 of 1930, Decided on 21st February 1930, on report by Sess. Judge, Lahore on D/- 27th January 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 263 (h) — Besides brief summary of evidence if trial ends in conviction concise statement of reasons showing presence of ingredients necessary to complete offence should be given — Where such evidence and reasons are not given, order is illegal.

Though it is true that in summary trials the judgment need not be very long, yet it is the duty of the Magistrate to give a brief summary of the evidence and a concise statement of the reasons if the trial ends in a conviction. These safeguards are essential so that in the case of revision, the High Court may have sufficient material or arriving at the conclusion as to whether the order of the Magistrate is right or wrong. Further, the Magistrate must give reasons which would show that there was evidence to prove the ingredients necessary to complete the offence of which the accused is convicted: 18 Bom. 97 and 10 A. L. J. 251, Foll.

Where therefore a Magistrate does not at all mention any act of the accused which in his opinion constitutes an offence under S. 34, Police Act of 1861, and does not record the evidence in brief, his order convicting the accused should be set aside. [P 593 O 2; P 534 O 1]

The facts of this case are as follows:

Facts.—The accused and several persons whose cases have also been reported for revision were arrested by the police for being riotous in front of the Lahore Central Jail on 25th November 1929. They were all placed before a Magistrate on the same day, who after trying them summarily convicted and sentenced each of them to a fine.

Report.—The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:

The evidence against the accused and the other persons consists of the statement of an Inspector of Police and one other person to the effect that the accused was riotous, but there is nothing to show as to what particular behaviour on the part of accused and the other persons constituted their conduct being riotous. There is also nothing in the evidence to show that in being riotous the accused and the other persons were causing obstruction, inconvenience, annoyance, risk, danger, or damage to the residence or passengers, in the locality. According to S. 34, Police

Act, the commission of any of the offences specified in the eight clauses of the section must be accompanied by one or other of the elements mentioned above. In the record of the summary trials, there is nothing, whatever, to show that any of these ingredients was present at the time of the alleged riotous behaviour. Further, the imperative provisions of S. 263, Criminal P. C., have not been complied with, as the learned Magistrate has quite failed to arrive at a finding and record a brief statement of the reasons for convicting the accused. The heading under Cl. (h), S. 263, is as follows:

"The finding and in the case of a conviction a brief statement of the reasons therefor," but instead of this heading, there is in the record of each of the trials, a heading "statement of the parties" one which finds no place in S. 263. It was further urged before me that the accused and the other persons were afforded no opportunity of producing their defence and there is nothing on the record to show that the accused did not avail themselves of this right. The procedure which should have been followed in these trials is that prescribed for summons cases (vide S. 262) and under S. 244 which relates to the trial of summons cases, the Magistrate is required to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence. The proceedings, in my opinion, have not only been much too summary, but have not been held in accordance with law and in this connexion I would refer to Mehtub v. Empress (1) and the remarks of Straight, J. and Knox, J. as quoted in note (c) on p. 650, of Sohoni's, Criminal P. C., 12th Edition.

For the above reasons I would recommend to the Hon'ble High Court that the conviction and sentence of the accused be set aside and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Order of the High Court:

Order.—The order of the trying Magistrate cannot stand. It is contrary to every recognized rule of law and procedure. It is true that in a summary trial the judgment need not be a very long and detailed one but it is the duty of the Magistrate to give a brief summary of the evidence and a concise statement of the reasons if the trial ends in a conviction. These safeguards are essential so that in case of revision the High Court may have sufficient materials on the record before it for arriving at the conclusion as to whether the order of the Magistrate is right or wrong. The language of the legislature itself is sufficiently clear and if any authority were needed for this elementary rule of procedure Queen Empress v. Shidgauda (2) may be quoted. Furthermore as observed in Brijbasi Lal v. Emperor (3) the Magistrate must give reasons which would show that there was evidence to prove the existence of the ingredients necessary to complete the offence of which the accused is convicted.

Here the Magistrate does not at all mention any acts of the accused which, in his opinion, constituted an offence under S. 34, Police Act 5 of 1861. These are matters which ought to be present before the mind of every Magistrate when he is trying cases summarily; otherwise there is a danger of the summary trial, which after all is a judicial proceeding, being converted into a drum-head court-martial.

I accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge and setting aside the conviction of the accused order that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Facts.—Amin Lal brought a complaint against Jagat Narain and Shiv Narain under Ss. 477 and 323 I. P. C. Summonses were issued to them under these sections, prosecution evidence was recorded and thereafter the trial Magistrate on 16th April 1929 passed an order discharging the accused and calling on the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation to each of the accused under S. 250, Criminal P. C. On 31st May 1929 he passed a supplementary order awarding 25/- compensation to each of the accused. This petition for revision is against the order dated 31st May 1929.

Reference order. One of the offences alleged was one under S. 477, I. P. C. exclusively triable by a court of Sessions; S. 250, Criminal P. C. expressly refers to offences triable by a Magistrate. Mohamed Hayat v. Bhoia (1) A. I. R. 1921 Rangoon 15; 14 P. R. 1902 and Emperor v. Qundus (2) are all cases in which it was held that when a Magistrate invested with S. 30 powers tries a case ordinarily triable by a Court of Sessions he is not empowered to award compensation under S. 250, Criminal P. C.

A. I. R. 1926 A. 11. 159 establishes the same principle and further shows that there is no distinction introduced in cases where the alleged offences are several in number and some only are exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions.

In the face of these rulings I must hold that the trial Magistrate had no power to award compensation; I have been taken through the evidence by counsel for petitioner and find no reason to disagree with the trial Magistrate's finding that the accusations made were false and vexatious; it would appear that, with the law as it now stands, a complainant can avoid the consequences of instituting a false and vexatious complaint by adding a false and frivolous accusation of an offence triable only by Court of Sessions.

As I consider that the order dated 31st May 1929 awarding compensation against the petitioner is one contrary to law I report the case for the orders of the High Court under S. 438, Criminal P.C.

Zafar Ali, J.—The question for our determination is whether the order of the Magistrate in this case under S. 250, Criminal P. C., awarding compensation to the accused against whom a complaint under Ss. 477 and 323, I. P. C., was found to be false is legal, or is illegal in part or as a whole.

An offence under S. 477, I. P. C., is triable by a Court of Sessions, but the Magistrate in this case had jurisdiction to try it as he was empowered under S. 30, Criminal P. C., to do so. Mr. Soni, who appears for the Crown, contends that S. 250, Criminal P. C., makes no distinction between a Magistrate empowered, under S. 30 and one not so empowered, and he argues that an offence shown in Col. 8, Sch. 2, Criminal P. C., as triable by a Court of Sessions should be deemed to be triable by a Magistrate for the purposes of S. 250 where it has actually been tried by a Magistrate with S. 30 powers. This argument is seemingly plausible, because the term 'Magistrate' in the expression 'an offence triable by a Magistrate' which occurs in S. 250, would seem to be applicable to any Magistrate whether empowered under S. 30 or not. But in the light of the phraseology of Sch. 2, it appears repugnant to the general sense of that expression to interpret the word "Magistrate" there in its wider significance, and it has never been so interpreted. Mr. Soni confessed that he could cite no authority in support of his contention. On the other hand the rulings on this point are all against him: see 14 P. R. 1902 (Cr.) which was followed in 26 P. R. 1902 (Cr.) 1 P. R. 1919 (Cr.); 21 Weekly Reporter 1910, and Burma Law Journal, 38. In all these cases it was held that the words 'an offence triable by a Magistrate' in

S. 250 relate to an offence which is shown as triable by a Magistrate in Col. 8, Sch. 2, Criminal P. C. An offence under S. 477 not being triable by a Magistrate according to that schedule the Magistrate's order awarding compensation in respect of accusation of that offence was without jurisdiction.

Next comes the question whether it is a case where the complainant brings two false accusations, one of an offence triable by a Magistrate and the other of one triable by a Court of Sessions, the Magistrate is competent to award compensation in respect of the former though he cannot do so with regard to the latter. In my judgment the answer to this question must be in the affirmative as S. 250 would clearly apply to one accusation though not to the other. The Magistrate could have done so in the present case, but his order covers both the accusations and it is not possible to split up the compensation awarded for both the accusations jointly and to assign a portion of it to one accusation and the balance to the other. The order is therefore unenforceable in respect of either accusation on account of uncertainty and must be set aside.

In 15 P. R. 1919, also, there were two accusations of which one was of an offence triable by a Court of Sessions, and in the reference to the Chief Court made in that case two illegalities were pointed out: (1) that S. 250 was not applicable to that offence and (2) that the amount of compensation awarded was in excess of that which could be awarded under S. 250. A single Judge of the Chief Court reduced the amount but said nothing about the other illegality. That case therefore affords no evidence on the question now before us.

In view of what has been stated above the conclusions to which I arrive are (1) that S. 250 is not applicable to offences triable by a Court of Sessions according to Cl. 8, Sch. 2, Criminal P. C. (2) that where a complainant brings a joint accusation of both classes of offence and the Magistrate with S. 30 powers finds both to be false he is competent to award compensation only in respect of offences triable by a Magistrate, and (3) that if compensation is awarded for both kinds of offences and it is not possible to apportion the amount so awarded between the two, the order is bad for uncertainty and must be set aside as a whole. In the present case the Magistrate has made no such distinction and his order must therefore be set aside.

Jai Gopal Sethi and Harbans Singh—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Addison, J.—Basant Singh, son of Mewa Singh, appellant, has been sentenced to death under the provisions of S. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of Mt. Bachni, the infant daughter of his brother Hardit Singh, on the evening of 15th August 1929.

Mt. Raj Kaur is the widow of Dewa Singh the uncle of the appellant. Mt. Bishan Kaur is the widow of Pal Singh, a collateral of Dewa Singh and Mewa Singh. Relations became strained between Mt. Raj Kaur and Mt. Bishan Kaur for various reasons and Mt. Bishan Kaur was supported by Mewa Singh and his sons, including the appellant. Mt. Raj Kaur was preventing Mt. Bishan Kaur from going to her room on the roof through the courtyard and accordingly on the morning of 15th August the sons of Mewa Singh came with earth loaded on donkeys, apparently in order to build a wall in the courtyard so as to allow Mt. Bishan Kaur a passage which could not be interrupted by Mt. Raj Kaur. Mt. Raj Kaur objected and there was a scuffle. Thereafter Mt. Raj Kaur and her son Darbara Singh proceeded to the police station and made a report about this occurrence at 1 P.M. When she and her son returned in the evening they discovered that a kacha wall had been built in the courtyard in their absence. This they proceeded to demolish at once, an easy task as it was made of wet mud. The appellant Basant Singh arrived on the scene with his brother Hardit Singh, while Mt. Bishan Kaur and Mt. Labh Kaur, wife of Hardit Singh, looked on from the roof. Apparently the two brothers, Basant Singh and Hardit Singh, lost their tempers and Hardit Singh called out to his wife on the roof to throw the child down. His wife did nothing but Mt. Bishan Kaur, for whom the wall had been built, took the infant out of Mt. Labh Kaur's arms, brought it down to the courtyard and flung it at, or to, Mt. Raj Kaur who at the time was seated on the demolished wall. Basant Singh struck Mt. Raj Kaur's arm when she had the child in her arms and she therefore handed it to her daughter, Mt. Dalip Kaur. Basant Singh attacked Mt. Dalip Kaur and she took the child on to the roof and made her over to Mt. Pritam Kaur, a neighbour who was there. Basant Singh, the appellant, followed on to the roof, but Mt. Pritam Kaur refused to give the child up. She only gave her up on Mt. Labh Kaur's saying that it was no concern of hers. Thereupon Basant Singh seized the child by the legs, battered its head against the parapet of the roof and flung it down into the courtyard. After this Hardit Singh, the father of the child, went to the police station and reported that Mt. Raj Kaur in consequence of the dispute over the wall commenced flinging bricks and that one of the bricks struck the child and killed her. Mt. Raj Kaur did not go to the police station but sent telegrams reporting the occurrence.

The case for the prosecution is made out by Mt. Raj Kaur, her son Darbara Singh, her daughter Mt. Dalip Kaur, by Mt. Pritam Kaur, who has already been referred to, and by two Sud residents of the village, Dial Chand and Mulkh Raj. It is also supported, though in a halting fashion, by Pal Singh, a Jat of the village. Labh Singh, on the other hand, supports the defence story, but the learned Sessions Judge has given good reasons for rejecting his testimony. As against this evidence the appellant examined no witness in his defence.

The learned Sessions Judge has made use of the police diaries and he should not have done this. The principal use he made of them was to see when the various witnesses were examined and this he could have ascertained by questioning the various investigating officers. Without making any use of these diaries I hold that the guilt of the appellant has been clearly established. The investigating officers stated that nobody came forward before them to support the defence theory that a brick had been thrown by Mt. Raj Kaur and that this killed the child. It appears to me that S. 162, Criminal P. C., does not prevent a police officer from explaining his conduct in sending up a particular set of accused persons for trial by making a statement that he had received no information to such and such effect. This view was taken by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court: see Tota Meah Chaudhuri v. Emperor (1).

Mt. Raj Kaur impressed the Sessions Judge when she was giving her evidence and he stated that he was satisfied that her evidence was true. She appeared to him to be a woman of determined character whom the appellant and his family found considerable difficulty in overruling. There is also no reason why the two Sud witnesses, who have nothing to do with the parties, should be disbelieved. On the evidence I have no hesitation in holding that the appellant in a frenzy of passion because of the resistance of Mt. Raj Kaur deliberately killed the infant daughter of his brother with the intention of implicating Mt. Raj Kaur. I would, therefore, maintain his conviction for murder punishable under S. 302, I. P. C.

The question of sentence is a difficult one. At first sight the crime appears to be one of a very brutal type but it is not a case of deliberate murder. It is a case where the appellant in a fit of frenzy at the resistance of Mt. Raj Kaur when he was scarcely a reasoning animal, seized the infant and killed her. In these circumstances, and especially as such crimes are not common, I would accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the sentence to transportation for life.

Fforde, J.—I agree.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 138 of 1930, Decided on 31st March 1930, against order of Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 14th January 1930.

Penal Code, S. 34—Where fight resolves into single combat and results in death and injuries principles of joint responsibility do not apply.

Where a fight in response to a challenge resolves itself into two single combats and results in death of a person and injuries to the other the accused are individually responsible for their own act, there being no common intention but only single intention on the part of each of the accused to fight with his own opponent and the principles of joint responsibility provided for in S. 34 cannot be applied in such case. One accused cannot therefore be held responsible for the act of the other, [P 598-C 2]

Mehtab Singh—for Appellants.

R. A. Jermy for the Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Dhanwant Singh (24), Bhagwant Singh (21) and Balwant Singh (16), three brothers Jats of Chocke in the Ludhiana District were charged under S. 302/34, I. P. C. with murder, in respect of the death of Arjan Singh on 29th August 1929 and under S. 324/34, I. P. C., with having caused hurt to Bhag Singh, the elder brother of Arjan Singh at the same time. The learned Sessions Judge in agreement with the four assessors found Bhagwant Singh not guilty and acquitted him. In agreement with two of the assessors he convicted the appellants Dhanwant Singh and Balwant Singh under Cl. 2, S. 304 read with S. 34 and S. 324/34 and on both counts sentenced each to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that there was some ill-feeling between the two families over a wall and shortly before the occurrence there was a quarrel between the deceased and the two appellants and Bhagwant Singh over the trespassing of a camel into the fields of the deceased, who is alleged to have slapped Balwant Singh.

There are only two eyewitnesses of the subsequent occurrence Bhag Singh and Kishen Singh. According to the former he was cutting chart in his fields when Kishen Singh called out to him that the deceased was fighting with the two appellants and Bhagwant Singh. Witness ran in the direction of the fight and saw the three brothers assailing the deceased with kassis. Deceased had fallen under the assault and when Bhag Singh reached the spot he found his brother was dead. Balwant Singh caught witness by the hair and the other two brothers struck him with their kassis and knocked him senseless.

Kishen Singh on the other hand tells a somewhat different story. He was grazing his mare at a distance of some 50 or 60 karms from the spot when he saw the deceased pick up two kassis from the spot from a field and heard him shout out a challenge. Bhag Singh joined the deceased, arming himself with the second kassi and on the two appellants arriving on the scene a fight ensued between these four persons, Dhanwant Singh versus Bhag Singh and Balwant Singh versus the deceased. In cross-examination Kishen Singh made it appear that the two appellants at first ran away from the deceased and his brother, who pursued and overtook the appellants who then turned and opposed the deceased and Bhag Singh.

It was on this part of the evidence of Kishen Singh that the appellants apparently based a plea as to the right of private defence. The learned Sessions Judge did not accept the evidence of either Bhag Singh or Kishen Singh in its entirety on the ground that the former was exaggerating the case against the appellants while the latter was trying to favour them. On the medical evidence he arrived at the conclusion that there was a standup fight between the deceased and Balwant Singh on the one part and Bhag Singh and Dhanwant Singh on the other. He impliedly rejected the plea as to the right of private defence, which has again been urged before me, and after giving the case and the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellants my careful consideration I agree with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge of the affair. The post-mortem examination which was held on 1st September when the body was in an advanced stage of decomposition disclosed a bruise on the right ear and another above and behind the left ear. Five of the upper front teeth had been completely fractured as were also the right and left temporal bones.

Bhag Singh bore no less than 12 injuries of which two were incised wounds; Dhanwant Singh bore 4 injuries one of which was an incised one on the head and Balwant Singh sustained 5 injuries all due to a blunt weapon. In the case of each of these three persons the injuries were simple in nature. In my opinion it has been established by the evidence that in response to a challenge by Arjan Singh there was a fight between him and his brother on one side and the two appellants on the other, which resolved itself into two single combats or duels between the deceased and the appellants Balwant Singh and Bhag Singh and Dhanwant Singh respectively. Each of the combatants was armed with a kassi of which the cutting edge was used by Bhag Singh and Dhanwant Singh and the blunt side or socket and by the deceased and Balwant Singh. The absence of incised wounds on their persons in the case of the two latter would not necessarily indicate the kassis were not used by them. This implement is just as, if not more, effective when used as a weapon of offence with the cutting edge uppermost. The plea as to the right of private defence is I consider untenable and has not been borne out by the evidence. The testimony of Kishen Singh as to the two appellants having been pursued by the deceased and Bhag Singh is I think unreliable to this extent. On the above findings S. 34, I. P. C. will not apply and in the circumstances Balwant Singh cannot be held responsible for the act of Dhanwant Singh in causing hurt to Bhag Singh nor can Dhanwant Singh be held liable for the act of Balwant Singh resulting in the death of Arjan Singh. Each appellant is individually responsible for his own act and in my judgment it is not possible to apply the principle of joint liability provided for in S. 34. There was no common intention in the present case, but a single and individual intention on the part of each appellant to fight with his own opponent. For instance A and B two brothers challenge C and D two others to a duel owing to a common cause of quarrel. A kills D and B slightly injures C. Can B be held jointly responsible for the death of D and A for causing hurt to C? I do not think so, as the only intention which is common is to have a combat each with his own opponent.

For the above reasons I would partly accept the appeal and set aside the conviction of Balwant, Singh under S. 324 and that of Dhanwant Singh under S. 304 (2). I affirm the conviction of Balwant Singh under Cl. (2), S. 304 for causing the death of Arjan Singh and also the sentence which is by no means severe in view of the weapon used and the force employed. The conviction of Dhanwant Singh under S. 324 for causing hurt to Bhag Singh is also affirmed but the sentence is reduced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

ADAMI AND SCROOPE, JJ.

Bhagwan Das Bhagat—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Death Ref. No. 3 of 1930, and Criminal Appeal No. 22 of 1930, Decided on 11th February 1930, made by J. C., Chota Nagpur, on 17th January 1930, and from his decision, D/- 15th January 1930 respectively.

Criminal Trial—Retracted confession—It is not absolute rule of law that retracted confession cannot be accepted without corroborative evidence—But where corroborative evidence does not show beyond reasonable doubt that accused is guilty he should be given benefit of doubt—Evidence Act, S. 114.

A retracted confession must be supported by independent and reliable evidence corroborating it in material particular, but it cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted cannot be accepted as evidence of guilt without independent corroborative evidence. But where the corroborative evidence is insufficient to show beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the murder the accused should be given the benefit of doubt.

B. C. De for Appellant.

Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Adami, J.—The appellant, Bhagwan Das Bhagat, has been found guilty of the murder of his brother Mahabir alias Nunoo Bhagat, by the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, and has been sentenced to death. The sentence comes before us for confirmation.

On 4th October last, at dawn the chaukidars, Motid Ghatwar and Budhna were returning from their rounds in village Bagodar Dih when they heard from the appellant and two other men that there was a dead body floating in the tank of Anant Lal. They went to the tank and saw the dead body of a man floating in the water. While Budhna stayed behind to keep watch, Motia went to the police station and gave information at 7 a. m. The Sub-Inspector recorded an information of an unnatural death, and went off to the tank. He had the body taken out of the water in the presence of P. W. 11 and P. W. 12 and others, who identified it as that of Mahabir. It was in a very decomposed state. The upper half of a grindstone was found tied to the body by a rope round the chest, and a gamcha was tied round the neck. An inquest report was drawn up and the body was sent to Hazaribagh for post mortem examination.

The Sub-Inspector then went to Mahabir's house where, on a charpoy in the verandah, he found a bloodstained lendra and a torn pillow. There were drops of blood on the floor leading from the charpoy to the back door which opened towards the bari, adjoining which is the tank where the body was found. Bhagwan Das, the appellant was questioned and stated that he had last seen Mahabir on Sunday the 29th September. He thought that Mahabir might have gone to his father-in-law's house at Dumri. Ram Charitar, the son of the appellant was also questioned, but gave no information, nor did the wife of the appellant. Bhagwan's house was searched but nothing incriminating was found. The Sub-Inspector, however, had some suspicion against him because he knew that Bhagwan had laid an information at the police station in June in which he said he suspected Mahbir to be the thief, and because there had been a quarrel between the two men who were brothers.

On 5th October, Saturday, Bhagwan made a statement to the Sub-Inspector and took him to his bari where, from a heap of manure he took out a gilaf (wrapper). It showed signs of having been burnt and had stains of blood on it. Bhagwan was arrested and sent to the jail at Hazaribagh on 6th. On 11th

October Bhagwan made a confession before the Magistrate.

The confession was a very full one. It told how eight years before the two brothers and a nephew had divided the family inheritance, how Mahabir had encumbered his share and had tried to trick Bhagwan in conspiracy with one Iswar in an exchange of lands leading to a complaint by Bhagwan which was unsuccessful, how in February 1929, Mahabir executed a deed of gift of his lands in favour of Bhagwan and his son Ramcharitar, the agreement being that Bhagwan was to feed and maintain his brother; how Mahabir, at the instigation of Iswar, stole from Bhagwan's house a box containing a deed of a sale by Iswar to Bhagwan, and information was given at the police station, and how on 19th July 1929 Mahabir, on the ground that he had not been fed and maintained as agreed, executed a deed cancelling the deed of gift executed in February.

The confession proceeds to relate how on the 29th September while Bhagwan was away, Mahabir went to a field which he had transferred to Bhagwan and cut and took away the marua crop from it. When Bhagwan got home in the evening his son told him what had happened and he was very angry. At about 10 p. m. he went to the shop of one Madho and there met Chaman, Raghunath and Jungli. He told them what had happened and they, relating their experience of transactions with Mahabir, agreed that he must be put out of the way. The five men went to Mahabir's house and finding him in the verandah took his gamcha and twisted it round his neck and strangled him. While Raghunath twisted the gamcha round Mahabir's neck, Bhagwan helped by holding Mahabir's hand. Then they took Mahabir's body to the tank, fastened a grindstone by a rope to the chest and threw the body into the tank. They burned Mahabir's cloth on the bank, but when they tried to burn his wrapper also, but finding it made too much light and might attract attention, Bhagwan buried it under a manure heap.

At the inquiry before the committing Magistrate Bhagwan denied that he had killed Mahabir and said that the Sub-Inspector had beaten him and told him he would be made an approver, and so he had made the confession for fear of his life. The appellant's son, Ramcharitar, deposed before the committing Magistrate that on 29th when Bhagwan returned home at 6 p. m. he Ramcharitar, had told his father that Mahabir had robbed his marua. At midnight the boy went out to make water, and when he was returning he saw Bhagwan, his father, with Ohumru, Jangli, Madoo and Raghunath killing Mahabir. He saw them through a hole in the wall. He was attracted to look through the hole by the noise he heard.

In the Sessions Court Bhagwan adhered to his denial made before the committing Magistrate, and denied that anything was recovered in his presence. Ramcharitar in his examination-in-chief stated that he did not know how Mahabir died and that he did not go out to make water and that what he had said before the committing Magistrate was induced by a beating and tutoring by the constable and chaukidar. He admitted that he had deposed as recorded by the committing Magistrate, and in answer to a question said, after hesitation that what he had deposed during the inquiry was true. Then in cross-examination he denied that Bhagwan was angry when he heard Mahabir had cut his marua, and said that he, Ramcharitar, had seen nothing and never had said he had seen anything. He had twice been examined by the Sub-Inspector, and on the first occasion told him he had seen nothing, and on the second occasion had told the Sub-Inspector that he had gone out with his mother, and had come back, shut the door and slept.

In spite of the fact that the appellant retracted his confession both before the committing Magistrate and in the Sessions Court, and that Ramcharitar, the only eyewitness of the actual murder according to the prosecution, resiled from his statement made before the committing Magistrate, the learned Judicial Commissioner had held that the retracted confession has been so corroborated that the guilt of the appellant has been proved, and the assessors too have expressed opinion that he is guilty.

The oral and documentary evidence shows satisfactorily that the relations between the brothers were not happy. It is proved that in April 1928 Bhag-wan filed a complaint against Iswar asking for inquiry into an alleged fraudulent exchange of lands between Mahabir and Iswar to the detriment of Bhagwan, that on 22nd February 1929 Mahabir executed a deed of gift in favour of Bhagwan and his son, and then on 19th July 1929 cancelled the said deed of gift because Bhagwan had failed to feed and maintain him according to the agreement. It is true too that Bhagwan laid an information at the police station to the effect that he suspected that Mahabir had stolen a box containing some documents of his. Witnesses have shown too that on 29th in Bhagwan's absence Mahabir cut the marua in Bhagwan's field.

Therefore the confession has been corroborated in its account of the relations of the brothers up to the evening of 29th and the motive it supplies for the murder.

The grindstone found fastened to the body and the gamcha round the neck, as well as the production by Bhagwan of the wrapper with signs of burning on it corroborate the method of the murder and the disposal of the dead body given in the confession. The learned Judicial Commissioner has found that the fact that Bhagwan kept silent and gave no information that his brother was missing also points to his guilt. I do not, however, think that this is a strong point, for having regard to the illfeeling between the brothers Bhagwan would care little if his brother was absent.

The question is whether the corroboration of the retracted confession in this case is sufficient to fasten the guilt on the appellant.

A retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars, but it cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted cannot be accepted as evidence of guilt without independent corroborative evidence. Is the corroborative evidence in this case sufficient to fasten the guilt on the accused without any reasonable doubt? As to the actual murder the only witness put forward by the prosecution is Ramoharitar and he has resiled from his statement. The learned Judicial Commissioner is inclined to rely on his statement before the committing Magistrate but his evidence can hardly be held to be reliable and to corroborate the confession. He denied all knowledge of the occurrence when first examined by the police, and it was only three days after when his father had made a statement that he came forward and said he had seen the actual murder.

Bhagwan Das says he was induced to make the statement by the hope held out to him that he would be made an approver against the other men he mentioned as taking part in the murder. There is no evidence to corroborate his story that these men had enmity against Mahabir.

The medical evidence so far corroborates the confession that it shows that Mahabir was dead before his body was thrown into the tank. The medical evidence is to the effect that death was not due to drowning. But the body was so far decomposed that it was impossible for the Civil Surgeon to determine what the cause of death was. No wounds could be noticed nor could it be said definitely that death was due to strangulation. The finding of the gamcha twisted round the neck would appear to corroborate the story of strangulation in the confession, but the finding of blood on the bed and ground and on the wrapper of the deceased produced by Bhagwan before police points the other way. I can find no good reason for the presence of so much blood, if strangulation was as shown by the confession, the cause of death.

It may well be that Bhagwan had enmity with Mahabir and this was the cause why Bhagwan was suspected. There can be no doubt that the suspicion against him is very strong, but, in the light of the fact that he has retracted his confession and that Ramcharitar has resiled from his statement implicating Bhagwan I am very doubtful whether the fact that Bhagwan produced the wrapper of Mahabir and made a confession implicating other persons after the body had been discovered with a gamcha fastened round the neck which confession has afterwards been retracted is sufficient to show beyond reasonable doubt that Bhagwan caused the death of Mahabir.

I would, therefore, give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him.

Scroope, J.—I agree.

Criminal Appeal No. 39 of 1930, Decided on 20th March 1930.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—No sufficient motive for murder shown—Failure of prosecution to establish additional motive is not fatal defect in prosecution case—Penal Code, S. 302.

Where no sufficient motive for the assault on the deceased is shown the mere fact that the prosecution does not establish any additional motive for the assault cannot be taken as a fatal defect in the prosecution case. The accused may be the only surviving person knowing the cause of enmity with the deceased and the failure of the prosecution to elicit it is not a sufficient reason to disbelieve the eye-witnesses. [P 602 C 2; P 603 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 302—Best criterion of force and character of blow is result which it effects—Person striking with weapon like lathi on vulnerable part of body as head must be deemed to have intended to cause injury as he knew was likely to cause death.

The best criterion of the force and character of a blow is to regard the result which it has effected. A person delivering a violent blow with a lethal weapon like a lathi on a vulnerable part of the body as the head must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause the death of the person to whom the injury was caused: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 93, Rel. on; 5 P.R. 1893 Cr. and 9 S.L.R. 99, Dist.

Where, therefore, there are no indications that the accused dealt any other kind of blow or to cause any other sort of injury he can be held guilty under S. 302. [P 603 C 1]

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Hilton, J.—Sewa Singh appeals against his conviction under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentence of transportation for life for the murder, on 22nd September 1929, at Ajitwal, in the district of Ferozepore of Pala Singh.

Pala Singh died from extensive fracture of the right parietal bone of the skull caused by a blow from a blunt weapon such as a lathi. He had a swelling on the right side of his head three inches above the right ear. There was also a skin deep contusion on the left side of the front of the head which may have been caused by the same blow as the injury on the right side of the head, or in the alternative may have been caused by a fall after receiving the said blow.

Four eyewitnesses appeared for the prosecution and described the affair. They are Sham Singh (P. W. 4), Ramzan (P. W. 5), Umer Din (P. W. 7) and Amar Singh (P. W. 8). According to the account given by them Sham Singh (P. W. 4) and the deceased Pala Singh were proceeding along the village lane in one direction and were met by the appellant Sewa Singh, accompanied by one Ganda Singh, coming in the opposite direction. The appellant is said to have had a lathi and with his lathi he struck a blow on the head of Pala Singh which resulted in the latter's death.

There was also a witness named Mt. Fatti whose evidence corroborates the fact that Sham Singh (P. W. 4) and Pala Singh deceased were in each other's company just before the occurrence.

The defence was that the appellant did not strike the deceased and that the prosecution witnesses are inimical to the appellant and have told a false story on that account. No defence evidence was called.

There is no very clear motive for the crime, but Mt. Khemi (P. W. 9), the mother of the deceased, related that the appellant had a grudge against the deceased an account of his suspicion that the deceased had stolen a hen some three weeks earlier. When the deceased had offered to pay for the hen the appellant is said to have abused him and refused to accept such payment. The Sessions Judge has believed that there was such a quarrel about a hen but that it was not followed by any other dispute during the three weeks that intervened before the death of Pala Singh and that by itself it does not afford a sufficient motive for the assault upon Pala Singh. This view is, in my opinion, correct, but the fact that the prosecution have not established any additional motive for the assault cannot be taken as a fatal defect in the prosecution case. If there was any other cause of enmity between the appellant and the deceased it was not necessarily known to any other person than these two and as Pala Singh is dead it may be that the appellant is the only surviving person who is aware of such a matter and the failure of the prosecution to elicit it is not a sufficient reason for disbelieving the eyewitness.

There is, in my opinion, no good reason to doubt the evidence of these eyewitnesses, their alleged grounds of enmity with the appellant being matters of insufficient importance to justify a conclusion that they have perjured themselves in the present case. Sham Singh's presence at the scene of occurrence finds corroboration in the evidence of Mt. Fatti, while Ramzan and Umar Din live close to the spot where the affair took place and it would be strange if they had not witnessed it. I, would therefore, accept the version of the affair as given by these eyewitnesses.

The appellant's counsel has strongly contested the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the act of the appellant amounted to murder. All the assessors and also the learned Sessions Judge held that there was no intention to cause death. The Sessions Judge, however, considered that the deed fell under Cl. 2 or 3, S. 300, I. P. C.

Now, the facts are that the appellant struck a single blow with a lathi on the head of Pala Singh with sufficient force to cause extensive fracture of the skull. The medical witness deposed, and I agree with him, that the fracture of the skull was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The question thus remains whether the appellant had the intention of giving a blow with that force sufficient to cause that amount of bodily injury or not. If he had such an intention Cl. 3, S. 300 covers the case and the offence is one of murder. In my judgment there is no sufficient ground for imputing to the appellant an intention to deal a blow or to cause an injury different from that which he actually did cause. The best criterion of the force and character of the blow is to regard the result which it effected. There are no indications in the present case that the appellant had intended to deal any other kind of blow or to cause any other sort of injury.

The appellant's counsel has in the course of his arguments mentioned certain authorities including 5 P. R. 1893 (Cr.) and Saidino v. Emperor (1). Of these the last mentioned authority dealt with an entirely different sort of assault and does not appear to be helpful in deciding the present case. In the first mentioned ruling the instrument used was a wooden kharwanji and it was remarked in the course of the judgment that this was not a weapon of a lethal nature. Importance was also attached in that case to the fact that the blow was given in anger on the impulse of the moment. It was also pointed out that the question of the intention or knowledge with which the striker acted is always one of fact and not of law.

An authority to which the learned Public Prosecutor has drawn attention is Premam v. Emperor (2), the facts of which are closer to those of the present case. In that case it was held that a person delivering a violent blow with a lethal weapon like a dang on a vulnerable part of the body such as the head must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause the death of the person to whom the injury was caused.

In my opinion the appellant Sewa Singh intended to cause the bodily injury which he actually did cause and on that view of the matter I would uphold the finding and sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge and would dismiss the appeal of Sewa Singh.

Gopi Chand—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 109 of 1930, Decided on 25th March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Shahpur, D/- 13th January 1930.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Intention of culprits should be gathered from their acts and surrounding circumstances—Penal Code, S. 30.

Intention of the culprits has to be gathered from their acts and all the surrounding circumstances. [P 606 C 2]

Where from the circumstances there can be no doubt that the intention of the accused was to cause the death of a person, they must be assumed to have intended the natural consequences of their act and the burden lies heavily on them to prove that they had some other intention. In absence of any such proof the accused can be held guilty under S. 307.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Statement before investigating officer can be used to contradict witness but only if provisions of S. 145 Evidence Act. have been complied with—Evidence Act, S. 145.

Under S. 162 a statement made before the investigating officer can be used for the purpose of contradicting such witness when produced at the trial but after strict compliance with the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act.

[P 607 C 1]

If the witness admits to have made the statement the previous statement in writing need not be proved. If he denies to have made any such statement and it is intended to contradict him the relevant portions of the record contrary to his statement in Court must be read to him and the witness should be given the opportunity to reconcile the same. It is only after this is done that the record of the previous statement becomes admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness and can then be proved in any manner provided by law.

(c) Evidence Act, Ss. 145 and 155—S. 155 does not lay down how former statement is to be proved—Mode of proof is provided for in S. 145 which controls S. 155.

Section 155 only lays down that the credit of a witness may be impeached inter alia by proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence which is liable to be contradicted; but it does not lay down the manner in which the former statement is to be proved. The mode of proof of such a statement in writing when it is sought to be tendered in evidence for contradicting a witness is provided in S. 145. In other words S. 155 is controlled by S. 145 and is not independent of it.

M. L. Batra—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni and Nanak Chand—for the Crown.

Jai Lal, J.—This judgment will dispose of criminal appeals Nos. 109, and 110 of 1930. Gopi Chand and Fazal Karim have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Shahpur for an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., and have both been sentenced to transportation for life. They are alleged to have caused injuries to Nanak Chand, a shopkeeper of Chak No. 21 G-B, to which village both the appellants also belong, on the night preceding the 22nd July 1929.

No immediate cause of the alleged assault on Nanak Chand is disclosed by the prosecution evidence but there is abundant evidence on the record from which it appears that Gopi Chand and Nanak Chand were bitter enemies of each other. In fact the existence of enmity is common ground between the parties because it is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that it was due to this enmity that Nanak Chand was assaulted by Gopi Chand, his son Ishar Das and Fazal Karim who is alleged to be a friend of Ishar Das, while the defence is that Nanak Chand was assaulted by some unknown persons probably robbers who came with muffled faces and could not for that reason be recognized and that the appellants have been named owing to enmity and on suspicion.

The medical evidence shows that there were five injuries on the person of Nanak Chand; and incised wound on the left eyebrow, skin deep; a shot wound on the right side of the chest; a curved big incised wound on the shoulder; a curved incised wound on the right side of the back of the chest. Mt. Karam Devi, daughter of Nanak Chand also had received a pistol shot in the back.

The prosecution case in brief is that Nanak Chand was sleeping on the platform in front of his shop and Roshan Lal, aged about 12 years, his daughter's son, was sleeping near him and Mt. Karam Devi his daughter was sleeping a short distance away while Mt. Daropti his wife was sleeping inside the door. At about two in the morning Nanak Chand woke on hearing footsteps and the bark of a dog and saw three men standing by his bed. Two of them, that is, Gopi Chand and Fazal Karim, were armed with chhavis, while Ishar Das had a pistol. Nanak Chand sat upon the charpoy and raised an outcry upon which Gopi Chand gave a chhavi blow on his forehead. In the meantime Mt. Karam Devi arrived but was fired at by Ishar Das being hit in the back. Roshan Lal woke up but ran inside the house and a chhavi blow aimed at him by Gopi Chand missed him and fell on the ground. Nanak Chand ran towards the south but was pursued by the culprits and in the course of the pursuit Ishar Das fired four pistol shots one of which injured him in the back, the rest having missed, and Gopi Chand who had overtaken him struck him with the chhavi near the right shoulder and Fazal Karim also struck him with the chhavi with the result that he collapsed on an empty bedstead belonging to one Raja which was lying in the street in front of his house. As a result of this injury his right shoulder had to be amputated.

Several persons came to the scene of the occurrence on hearing the noise and the pistol shots and seeing them arrive the three culprits ran away towards the north but it is alleged by the prosecution witnesses that they identified them before they were able to make good their escape. The lambardar Mardan Ali had Nanak Chand carried to his house and then went in pursuit of the culprits and meeting Gopi Chand returning from the direction in which the culprits had run away, secured him and handed him over to the police. Ishar Das and Fazal Karim could not, however, be found then. After arresting Gopi Chand the lambardar sent his son Fazal Mehdi to the police station to report the affair. This person lodged the first information report at the thana and brought the head constable to the village. In the meantime Muzaffar Hussain son of the zaildar came to the scene of the crime at about four in the morning and learning that Fazal Karim had returned to his house went for his arrest but finding that the door was closed from the inside and Fazal Karim would not open it he jumped over the wall but as on seeing him Fazal Karim ran into the interior room of his house he locked the door of the room from the outside. The accused was taken out of the room by the head constable after his arrival at about 5 a. m. Ishar Das, it may be mentioned, is a fugitive from justice and his case, therefore, need not be considered.

The question that has to be determined is whether it has been satisfactorily established by the prosecution evidence that Gopi Chand and Fazal Karim assaulted Nanak Chand in the manner already described. The learned Sessions Judge has divided the prosecution evidence in three grounds: First of the inmates of the house, secondly residents of the village who arrived on hearing the pistol shots and saw the culprits and thirdly those who arrived later and deposed to what was being said by others who were present on the spot and who generally gave evidence as to the manner in which the appellants were arrested and other incidents connected with the affair.

With regard to the inmates of the house, the Sessions Judge has believed their evidence with the exception of Mt. Daropti wife of Nanak Chand who according to the learned Judge could not have seen the occurrence as she was sleeping inside; I do not, however, propose to examine the reasons given by him for discarding the testimony of Mt. Daropti in view of the fact that there is otherwise ample evidence of the other inmates of the house about the incidents mentioned by her though the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer strenuously contended that no good grounds had been given by the Sessions Judge for discarding the testimony of Mt. Daropti. Out of the remaining witnesses who profess to have witnessed the assault the Sessions Judge has accepted the evidence of P. W. Nadir but has excluded the evidence of other witnesses on the ground that it has been established that they are inimically disposed towards the accused. For similar reasons I do not think it is necessary to examine the grounds given by the Sessions Judge for discarding their evidence also. The testimony of the witnesses believed by the Sessions Judge is quite sufficient to support the prosecution version in the main and it receives corroboration from the medical evidence and the statement of the head-constable who deposes to having seen indications of assault having been committed in the manner described by the prosecution witnesses inasmuch as he says that he saw blood on the charpoy on which Nanak Chand was lying and also mark of a chhavi blow on the ground and further deposes to having taken charge of Gopi Chand on arrival at the village from the lambardar and to have arrested Fazal Karim from his house where he was locked in.

All the prosecution witnesses who have been believed by the Sessions Judge directly implicate both the appellants but in view of the fact that there was admittedly enmity between Nanak Chand and Gopi Chand the first question that we have to determine is whether Gopi Chand's participation in the crime has been established beyond any reasonable doubt.

Now, it is to be observed that Fazal Mehdi when he made the first information report did not mention the name of Gopi Chand. On the other hand he stated that there were two assailants, Ishar Das and Fazal Karim, and this statement he repeated not once but at least thrice. His explanation, therefore, that he really made a slip in omitting the name of Gopi Chand cannot be accepted as satisfactory. It must be remembered that Gopi Chand had been arrested, according to the prosecution witnesses, before Fazal Mehdi was sent to the police station. He clearly stated in the report that the two assailants had made good their escape (Fazal Karim had not then been arrested by the zaildar's son when he left for the thana), if he intended to implicate Gopi Chand it is inconceivable that he could have failed to notice the fact of his arrest before he went to the thana. Moreover Gopi Chand was arrested by Mardan Ali lambardar when returning to the chak. If he was one of the assailants it is unlikely that he would return to the scene of the crime knowing that he had been seen by the witnesses when assaulting Nanak Chand. It is further unlikely that an old man of his age would consider it necessary to join his son and Fazal Karim, who were both young men, in the assault. In my opinion there is an element of doubt as to the participation of Gopi Chand in this affair of which he must get the benefit. We would, therefore, accept his appeal and acquit him.

With regard to Fazal Karim, there is ample evidence from which it appears that he was armed with a chhavi and actually assaulted Nanak Chand and that his companion was armed with a pistol. He stated at the trial that he was not present at the scene of the crime but was arrested the next day in his house. He denied that he was secured by the zaildar's son in the room. But in this he has been flatly contradicted by the head-constable and the other witnesses. In fact one of his own witnesses corroborates the prosecution version as to the manner in which he was secured and arrested. He produced evidence to the effect that the assault was committed by some persons who were not recognized and that it was after the arrival of the police that the convicts were mentioned. This is obviously wrong because he along with Ishar Das was mentioned by Fazal Mehdi in the first information report. The defence evidence, therefore, is unreliable. I have no hesitation in holding that Fazal

The learned counsel, however, contended that on the facts alleged by the prosecution an offence under S. 307, could not be held to have been committed by the appellant. It was contended that the intention of the assailants was merely to chastise Nanak Chand and that they should have been convicted, if at all, under S. 325, I. P. C. I am unable to accede to this contention. Intention of the culprits has to be gathered from their conduct and all the surrounding circumstances. In this case previous enmity is admitted. It is proved by the prosecution evidence that the assailants were armed with a chhavi and a pistol and set upon Nanak Chand when he was asleep. They pursued him when he ran away and one of them fired four pistol shots at him while the other caused an injury with a chhavi which necessitated the amputation of his arm. It was only because the noise attracted the neighbours that the culprits were unable to cause greater injury to Nanak Chand and it was providential that three out of the four pistol shots missed the victim. Under these circumstances there can be no doubt that the intention of the accused was to cause the death of Nanak Chand as I must assume that they intended the natural consequences of their act and the burden lies heavily on them to prove that they had some other intention, but there is no indication of this on the record. It is obvious that if Nanak Chand had died as a result of the injuries received by him his assailants would have been held guilty of murder. The appellant Fazal Karim, therefore, has been rightly convicted under S. 307 and in view of the ferocious nature of the attack the maximum punishment provided by the law was fully merited by him. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal of Fazal Karim.

I desire to make a few observations on a matter which transpired during the hearing of this appeal. It appears that the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined by the counsel for the accused as to their statements made before the head-constable during the investigation, and also before the committing Magistrate. To some questions the answers were that the witnesses did not make the statement or that they did not remember having made them. No further questions were asked from them with regard to these statements and finally when the investigating officer appeared as a witness questions were put to him whether those statements were made by the witnesses. The learned counsel then attempted to refer before us to the statements made by the witnesses concerned before the head-constable in order to contradict their testimony in Court. An objection was raised that the appellants were not entitled to make use of those statements to contradict the witnesses because the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act, had not been complied with as the attention of the witnesses was not drawn to the statements recorded by the head-constable. The appellant's counsel conceded that the strict procedure provided by the law had not been followed in this case but he contended that this was due to the fact that the learned Sessions Judge did not permit the appellants' counsel to draw the attention of the witnesses to the statements made during the investigation. There is no record that this happened in the present case but it is not the first time that it has come to our notice that the trial Courts in many cases do not properly follow the procedure laid down by the Criminal Procedure Code and the Evidence Act on this subject and consequently difficulty is felt in this Court in granting permission to the appellants to refer to previous statements of witnesses with regard to which proper procedure has not been followed. In the present case, however, we allowed the appellants' counsel as a special case to refer to the previous statements of the witnesses assuming that proper procedure had been followed.

I would, however, note for the guidance of the Sessions Judge and the Magistrates that under S. 162, Criminal P. C., a statement made before the investigating officer by a witness can be used for the purpose of contradicting such witness when produced at the trial but after strict compliance with the provisions of S. 145 Evidence Act. That section provides that a witness may be cross-examined as to a previous statement made by him in writing or reduced into writing and relevant to the matters in question, without such writing being shown to him or being proved : but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. The proper procedure would, therefore, be to ask a witness first whether he made such and such statement before the police officer. If the witness returns the answer in the affirmative, the previous statement in writing need not be proved and the cross-examiner may, if he so chooses, leave it to the party who called the witness to have the discrepancy, if any, explained in the course of re-examination. If, on the other hand, the witness denies having made the previous statement attributed to him or states that he does not remember having made any such statement and it is desired to contradict him by the record of the previous statement, the cross-examiner must read out to the witness the relevant portion or portions of the record which are alleged to be contradictory to his statement in Court and give him an opportunity to reconcile the same, if he can. It is only when the cross-examiner has done so, that the record of the previous statement becomes admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness and can then be proved in any manner permitted by law.

It was contended by the appellants' counsel that having regard to S. 155 (3), Evidence Act, it was not necessary to draw the attention of the witness to the previous statement. I am unable to agree with this contention. S. 155 only lays down that the credit of a witness may be impeached, inter alia, by "proof of former statements inconsistent with any part of his evidence, which is liable to be contradicted", but it does not lay down the manner in which the former statement is to be proved. The mode of proof of such a statement in writing when it is sought to be tendered in evidence for contradicting a witness is provided in S. 145 of the Act. In other words, S. 155 is, in my opinion, controlled by S. 145 and is not independent of it.

K. N. Verma—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., against an order recommending that an order made by the Magistrate on 22nd April 1929, under S. 147 (3), Criminal P. C., be set aside.

It appears that an occurrence of some sort took place on 15th November 1928, in the nature of a petty assault which arose by reason of a dispute over an alleged right of way. The complaint lodged was sent for local inquiry and the result of the local inquiry was that the land over which the dispute arose was entered in the name of one Jiutupadhyas, that an obstruction had been caused and that the right of pathway existed. There was also a statement that an assault was committed. The Sub-Divisional Officer, as it appears from the letter of reference, considered the report and heard the parties and their pleaders on 12th January 1929, and asked for further report as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace. On 16th February the report of the police was considered, the complaint was dismissed and proceedings under S. 147, Criminal P. C., were instituted. The Honorary Magistrate heard the case after a written statement had been filed and he came to the conclusion that as the alleged obstruction was beyond three months of the date of the institution of the inquiry, he had no jurisdiction to make an order under S. 147 (2) but, at the same time passed an order under S. 147 (3) of the Code.

The learned District Magistrate appears to be of the opinion that the Honorary Magistrate was wrong inasmuch as in the opinion of the District Magistrate the inquiry was commenced on 12th January within three months of the alleged obstruction. 12th January was the date on which the Sub-Divisional Officer heard the parties and their pleaders on the question of the complaint. In my opinion the learned District Magistrate came to a wrong conclusion when he decided that that was the date of the inquiry within the meaning of the section. Sub-S. (1), S. 147, Criminal P. C., provides inter alia:

"he may make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and requiring the parties concerned in such disputes to attend the Court in person or by pleader" and shall thereafter inquire into the matter. It has been pointed out in the case of Ram Chandra Acharjee v. Aditya Chandra Pal (1) that the inquiry contemplated by the proviso to sub-S. (2) is the inquiry referred to in sub-S. (1); that is to say, the date on which the parties are heard and evidence is taken and adjudicated upon. With that view I am in agreement. Consequently the reference so far as S. 147 (2) is concerned must be discharged.

I agree, however, with the view that the order of the Magistrate under S. 147 (3) is illegal and must be set aside. That order is to be made only in those cases in which it is shown that no right of way exists. Any inference to be drawn from the facts of this case is that such a right of way does exist, although I do not decide the question. In any event, the order of the Magistrate under S. 147 (3), Criminal P. C., was bad in law and must be set aside. The view expressed by the District Magistrate, however, is equally wrong in the sense that the obstruction did not take place within three months of the date of the enquiry.

Order set aside.

Criminal Revn. Appl. No. 502 of 1929, Decided on 20th February 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Surat.

Penal Code, S. 153-A—Burden of proof shifts on accused when he asserts that natural inference does not hold good in his case.

Where the articles can bear a meaning only that they are calculated to produce hatred and enmity between two classes the natural inference from the publication of such articles and writing is that the person who published them had the malicious intention that they should produce such hatred and enmity. The burden of proof shifts to the accused when he asserts that the natural inference to be drawn from the publication of the articles does not hold good in his case: A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 215, Dist.

Purshottam Trikamdas, G. G. Mahadeva and K. Mehta—for Applicant.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Mirza, J.—This is an application for revision of a conviction and sentence of the accused for an offence under S. 153-A, I. P. C., by the Special Magistrate, First Class, Surat, confirmed in appeal by the Sessions Judge, Surat.

Ground 1 urged is that the lower Courts wrongly threw the burden of malicious intention upon the accused. It appears from the judgments of the two lower Courts that from a consideration of the three writings complained of they came to the conclusion that the natural meaning to be attached to those writings was that they would be calculated to produce hatred and enmity between the two classes, viz., the Hindus and the Mahomedans. Having come to that conclusion they state that if the accused relies upon the want of malicious intention which would take his act out of the purview of this section it would be for him to show that such was not his intention. Where the articles can bear meaning only that they are calculated to produce hatred and enmity between two classes the natural inference from the publication of such articles and writings is that the person who published them had the malicious intention that they should produce such hatred and enmity. The burden of proof shifts to the accused when he asserts that the natural inference to be drawn from the publication of the articles does not hold good in his case. It was conceded before the Sessions Court in appeal and it has been conceded in argument before us that the three writings complained of are calculated to produce hatred and enmity between Hindus and Mahomedans.

The next ground urged is that the accused being the editor of a newspaper published these three writings bona fide and as a piece of a news of public interest and that therefore no inference should be drawn against him that he had the malicious intention to produce hatred and enmity between Hindus and Mahomedans. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Hemendra Prasad Ghose v. Emperor (1). In that case, however, it was found that there was no malicious intention on the part of the editor of the paper who published the purport of a genuine telegram which had been previously received in Calcutta from a person in Mauritius offering to finance Mahomedan opposition against Hindus in Calcutta. The purport of the telegram was published with a view to ascertain whether it was authentic and as a warning to the authorities that a plot of that nature was being hatched in Calcutta and to prevent any disturbance of the peace between members of the two communities. In the present case the finding of both Courts is that the accused had the malicious intention to promote hatred between the two communities. To use the language of the Sessions Judge the accused "acted as a herald for either party and shouted defiance to each in turn." The second case relied on is P. K. Chakravarti v. Emperor (2). In that case it was found that the newspaper had given its readers in the ordinary way a perfectly legitimate and sensible piece of news without any intention to utilize that piece of news for the purpose of promoting or furthering class hatred. The original leaflet complained of in that case was in the vernacular but the paper had published its English translation and the object of the editor in publishing the leaflet in English obviously was to warn the authorities and prevent disorders. In the case before us it cannot be reasonably contended that the object of the accused was to warn the authorities or to prevent disorders. It has been urged that the accused sent the original of the anonymous letter signed "Gazi Mussalmans" to the District Magistrate and we must infer, therefore, that his object in publishing the letter was to warn the authorities against disturbances which were threatened. But there appeared no leader or comment in the accused's paper from which such intention could be inferred. The letter signed "Gazi Mussalmans" appeared under head lines which set out in bold print highly objectionable extracts of a provocative character to the members of the Hindu community. This letter appeared in the issue of 25th September. On the morning of 27th September, the accused brought out a special edition of his paper reporting a speech made by Dr. Raiji on the previous day in reply to the anonymous letter of the "Gazi Mussalmans." Again there is nothing in the morning edition of 27th September to indicate that the object of the accused was to put the authorities on their guard and to prevent disorders. The heading of the writing is "Dr. Raiji's reply to Gazi Mussalmans" and among other things the reply as reported is:

"I say to the Miyanbhais you are not the only users of a knife. With me also there is a knife."

The same day in the evening edition of the paper the accused published an anonymous letter purporting to be a reply by the "Lalas" to the "Gazi Mussalmans." Here again there is nothing which would show that the intention of the accused was to prevent disorders or to give a warning to the authorities.

Mr. Purshottam has appealed to us that the sentence passed on the accused is too severe. The offence of which the accused has been convicted is of a serious nature. The offence was committed at a time when there was a great tension of feeling between the Hindu and Mahomedan communities of Surat and the accused as the editor of a responsible paper in that locality ought to have behaved better than he did. Although it has not been proved that the publication of the three writings was directly responsible for the disorders which occurred on 28th September yet it cannot altogether be ignored that serious riots accompanied by loss of life and property took place between the two communities soon after the publication of these writings. The sentence, in our opinion, is proper.

We reject the application, and confirm the conviction and sentence. The bail bonds will be cancelled on the accused surrendering himself to the jailor.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 481 of 1929, Decided on 13th February 1930, from order of First Class Magistrate, Dhandhuka.

Criminal P. C., S. 488—Mahomedan wife—Divorce—Wife is not entitled under S. 488 to claim maintenance beyond period of iddat from date of irrevocable divorce.

A talak when it becomes irrevocable puts an end to conjugal relationship which had subsisted between the parties, and the divorced wife would not be entitled to claim maintenance from her husband beyond the period of iddat from the date of such irrevocable divorce. S. 488 has in no manner abrogated this part of the personal law of the parties. The existence of conjugal relations in the case of Mahomedans has to be determined by reference to the provisions of the Mahomedan law and not by considerations of equity and good conscience as understood in any other system of law: 19 All, 50, Foll.; 8 Cal. 736, Diss. from. [P 611 C 1]

G. N. Thakur and P. A. Dhruva—for Applicant.

M. L. Seth for J. L. Shah — for Opponent.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Mirza, J.—The applicant applies for revision of an order of the First Class Magistrate, Dhandhuka, ordering him to pay maintenance to the opponent at the rate of Rs. 12 per month from 1st November 1927. The opponent applied to the Magistrate on 1st November 1927 under the provisions of S. 488, Criminal P. C., for an order for maintenance against the applicant, who, she alleged, was her husband. The applicant contended that he had divorced the opponent according to Mahomedan Law in the year 1914 and that if there was any doubt with regard to the factum or validity of that divorce, he had divorced her in open Court by pronouncing the word "talak" three times, thereby indicating his intention that the talak was to take effect immediately and become irrevocable.

The Magistrate has given no finding as to whether the alleged talak in 1914 had taken place. He considers that the alleged talak in 1914 as well as the talak pronounced in Court are immaterial having regard to the provisions of S. 488, Criminal P. C. He observes:

"Besides, the right to maintenance conferred by S. 488, Criminal P. C., is a statutory right which the legislature has created, irrespective of the nationality or creed of the parties, the only condition precedent to the possession of that right, in the case of a wife, being the existence of conjugal relation."

He holds on the strength of a ruling in Luddun Sahib v. Mirza Kumar (1), which related to the case of a mutta wife of a Shia Mahomedan, that a wife would be entitled to maintenance under S. 438, Criminal P. C. irrespective of the fact that she was not entitled to maintenance under her personal law. He also holds a custom proved by which no female belonging to the family of the Koreshis* to which family both the applicant and the opponent belong, can contract a second marriage. He holds, therefore, that the declaration of talak by the applicant does not debar the opponent from claiming maintenance under S. 488.

This finding of the Magistrate is contrary to the ruling in Shah Abu Ilyas v. Ulfat Bibi (2), and is opposed to the principles of the Mahomedan Law of divorce which is the personal law of the parties. A talak when it becomes irrevocable puts an end to conjugal relationship which had subsisted between the parties, and the divorced wife would not be entitled to claim maintenance from her husband beyond the period of iddat from the date of such irrevocable divorce. S. 488, Criminal P. C. has in no manner abrogated this part of the personal law of the parties. The existence of conjugal relations in the case of Mahomedans has to be determined by reference to the provisions of the Mahomedan Law and not by considerations of equity and good conscience as understood in any other system of law.

The Magistrate should have ascertained whether there was a valid divorce of the opponent by the applicant in 1914 as alleged by him. If he was satisfied that there was such a divorce he should have held that the opponent was not entitled to any maintenance from the applicant under S. 488. If the Magistrate held that the alleged divorce of 1914 was not established to his satisfaction he could have held on the materials before him that an irrevocable divorce in the iddat form had been pronounced by the applicant in open Court, and would take effect immediately the pronouncement was made. In that case he could have made an order in favour of the opponent under S. 488, for maintenance from the date of her application until the expiry of her iddat after this divorce.

• We set aside the order of the Magistrate and remand the case to him for retrial according to law, in the light of our above observations.

The giving of a cheque on a bank as payment for goods, or in payment of a debt does not amount to a representation that the person giving the cheque has money to the amount in the Bank at the time, but does amount to a representation: (1) that he has authority to draw on the bank for that amount; (2) that the cheque is a good and valid order for the payment of its amount and that the cheque will be paid, i. e., that the existing state of facts is such that in the ordinary course the cheque will be met: 23 B. What the prosecution has to do in a case of cheating by means of cheque is to establish facts which point prima facie to the conclusion that the failure to meet the cheque was not accidental but was a consequence expected and therefore intended by the accused. It will then be for the accused to establish any facts there may be in his favour which are specially within his knowledge and as to which the prosecution could not be expected to have any information. G. N. Thakor, R. M. Desai and H. R. Desai—for Appellants.

P. B. Shingne—For the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—The accused in this case, who are alleged to be partners in the firm of Keshavji Madhavji, dealers in gunny bags, etc., have been convicted by the Presidency Magistrate, 6th Court, of an offence of cheating under S. 417 read with S. 109, I. P. C. in respect of a sum of Rs. 2,000.

The facts of the case are by no means clearly stated in the judgment of the learned Magistrate. They are set out as follows in the deposition of the complainant Chunilal, who is also a merchant dealing in gunny bags. He states that he had dealings with the accused's firm to a considerable amount up to 9th September 1928, on which date the account was closed and nothing remained due to the accused. On 18th September 1928, accused 1 came to the complainant and said that he required a loan of Rs. 500, which would be repaid on the following day. The complainant gave him the money. On the following day, that is, 19th September accused 2 and 3 came to the complainant. Accused 2 asked the complainant to give him a cheque for Rs. 1,500 of that date, 19th September against a cheque of the accused's firm for the aggregate amount of Rs. 2,000 bearing date 20th September. According to the complainant accused 2 said at this time that he was expecting some cheques from Ahmedabad and that the cheque for Rs. 2,000 would be duly honoured. The complainant agreed to the proposal. Accused 3 drew a cheque for Rs. 2,000 on behalf of the accused's firm and signed it in the presence of accused 2. The complainant gave his cheque for rupees 1,500, which was paid into the accused's account and in due course cashed. The accused's cheque for Rs. 2,000, on the other hand was dishonoured when it was presented on 20th and has been never met. Having failed to get payment on 20th the complainant says that he made inquiries and learnt that the accused had absconded. The fact appears to be that accused 1 and 2 had gone away to Nasik, but accused 3 remained behind. Subsequently, on 2nd November 1928, the complainant gave information to the police which led to this prosecution.

Mr. Thakor for the appellants has pointed out that in the complaint there is no reference to the accused having represented that they expected cheques from Ahmedabad. That is so. But it was not necessary that the complaint should contain all details of the statements made by the accused and there does not seem to be any good reason for disbelieving the complainant's evidence on the point.

There appears to be some dispute between the parties as to the facts previous to the 19th. The complainant's evidence, as I have said, is that Rs. 500 were borrowed by accused 1 on the 18th. The accounts of the accused's firm appear to show that Rs. 1,000 were borrowed from the complainant on 15th, Rs. 500 repaid on 16th and then rupees 1,500 borrowed on 19th in the shape of the cheque. The probabilities of the case appear to be in favour of the complainant's version of the facts. There would seem to be no object in the accused borrowing a Rs. 1000 on 15th, repaying Rs. 500 of it on the next day and then borrowing a further sum of Rs. 1,500 on the 19th. But this difference is in any case of no material importance. It is admitted that on 19th September on which date the accused gave the cheque for Rs. 2,000 the sum of Rs. 2,000 was owing by them to the complainant, and the cheque was given in payment of that debt.

The offence with which the accused are charged is defined in S. 415, I. P. C. as the deceiving of any person and thereby fraudulently or dishonestly inducing the person so deceived to deliver any property. Illus. (f) to the section is:

"A intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to repay any money that Z may lend to him and thereby dishonestly induces Z to lend him money, A not intending to repay it, A cheats."

In support of his contention that the representation made by the accused in this case amounted to a dishonest inducement within the meaning of the definition the Government Pleader has relied on two cases: Emperor v. Uttamlal (1) and Martindale v. Emperor (2). We consider that these cases are of no real assistance to us, owing to the existence in them of a number of special circumstances which we do not find in the present case and which must have affected the decisions. There is an English case, however, The Queen v. Hazelton (3) which is an old but a perfectly good authority for the proposition that the giving of a cheque on a bank as payment for goods, or in payment of a debt as here does not amount to a representation that the person giving the cheque has money to the amount in the bank at the time, but does amount to a representation (1) that he has authority to draw on the bank for that amount, (2) that the cheque is a good and valid order for the payment of its amount and that the cheque will be paid, i. e., that the existing state of facts is such that in the ordinary course the cheque will be met. It has not been disputed indeed by the learned counsel for the appellants that the effect of this transaction was that the accused promised to pay, and the complainant expected to be paid, the amount of Rs. 2000 on 20th September. It is perfectly clear that the offence of cheating is made out if the accused knew that the cheque would not be met. The contention of the defence is that the onus of proof in this respect is on the prosecution. According to Mr. Thakor it is for the prosecution to prove that the accused had no expectation that funds would be in the bank and that they did not intend to pay, and not for the accused to show that they had reasonable expectations of being able to meet the cheque or that they made any attempts to collect money for that purpose.

Now broadly speaking, as this is a criminal case, it is correct to say that the burden of proof is on the prosecution in the first instance; and clearly if the only facts proved by the prosecution were that the cheque was given on 19th and that on the 20th it was dishonoured, the accused could not be convicted of cheating or any offence. But the provisions of S. 106 as to facts specially within the knowledge of any person must be borne in mind. The prosecution cannot be expected and is not required to prove or disprove facts which are within the special knowledge of the accused himself. What the prosecution has to do, I take it, in a case of this kind is to establish facts which point prima facie to the conclusion that the failure to meet the cheque was not accidental but was a consequence expected and therefore intended by the accused. It will then be for the accused to establish any facts there may be in his favour which are specially within his knowledge and as to which the prosecution could not be expected to have any information.

The facts on which the prosecution is entitled to rely in this connexion are mainly these. At the material time the accused's firm was admittedly in embarrassed circumstances. There was a cheque for Rs. 7,000 drawn by the accused's firm on September 16th in favour of one Kishorilal which had to be met. The credit balance in the accused's banking account carried over on 15th September was Rs. 1,192-6-6. 17th September was a bank holiday. The 18th though not a bank holiday, was a Jain holiday and no transactions appear to have taken place in the accused's account on that day. The opening balance on 19th was Rs. 1,038-1-3. In the course of that day sums amounting to Rs. 6,200 were paid in. This amount included the cheque for Rs. 1,500 obtained from the complainant. In this way the amount of Rs. 7,000 was made up and the cheque for that amount was paid on presentation, the result of this payment being that there remained a sum of Rs. 238-1-3 in the accused's account. The evidence also shows that on 17th September the accused's firm had purchased 15 bales of Hessian for which they had to pay Rs. 4,000. This amount they did not pay (see the evidence of witnesses Dovidas and Kanji, the latter a clerk in the accused's firm). From the account books of the accused's firm which have been put in, it appears that though there was a nominal balance of Rs. 16,842-5-9 on 19th September and a nominal balance of Rs. 16,142-5-9 on 20th September the actual amount of cash in the shop on the former date was Rs. 1,213-12-3 on the first date and Rs. 0-12-3 on the second date. Then, further, it appears that the accused's firm did no business after 20th September. As I have stated, accused 1 and 2 had gone away to Nasik and, though accused 3 remained behind, the shop was to all intents and purposes closed.

(3) [1874] 2 C. C. 184=44 L. J. N. C. 11=13 C. C. 1=28 W. R. 182=31 L. J. 451,

That is clear from the evidence of the two witnesses just mentioned, Devidas and Kanji, and also that of witness Narbheram. An important point to be noted in this connexion is that the complainant was not informed by the accused about their difficulties in meeting the cheque. They did not ask him for time or make any communication to him whatever. The accused's clerk Kanji has stated in the course of his evidence that on 20th September presumably before they went to Nasik, accused 1 and 2 had instructed him to deposit in the bank money received from people to whom it had been given as "Uplak," that is advanced on loan. The witness, however, also states that no money was received in this way either on the 19th or on the 20th and it appears from his evidence that no attempt was made or was directed by accused 1 and 2 to be made to collect any outstandings either to meet the cheque given to the complainant or for any other purpose. Lastly, it appears from the evidence of this witness and from the account with the bank that on 4th October the account was practically closed by drawing out the sum of Rs. 225 out of the balance of Rs. 238-1-3.

The facts on which reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants are mainly these. The complainant has admitted in his deposition that his transactions with the accused's firm were on a large scale and that in the year 1984 Samvat, that is to say 1928, he had purchased goods from the accused's firm to the extent of Rs. 1,36,000. However as I have stated, whatever the previous business carried on by the accused's firm may have been, at the material time they were admittedly in low water and very hard pressed for money. It has also been urged that there had been previous instances of loans by the complainant to the accused. The complainant has denied this. But in the course of his evidence he had to admit that there was on one occasion, that is on 21st June 1928, a temporary loan of Rs. 700 to the accused which was repaid on 23rd June. There is also a transaction of 7th July 1928, an item of Rs. 2000 paid and debited to the accused which is alleged to have been a loan. The complainant's case is that this was the price of five bales of cloth which the complainant purchased from the accused and which was delivered on 25th July 1928. It is not disputed that the accused did repay this amount of Rs. 2,000 by the delivery of the five bales of cloth, the value of which was Rs. 1,995-10-6, and by paying a small balance in cash. In support of the contention that the transaction was a loan it is pointed out that the complainant charged the accused a sum of Rs. 8-8-0 as interest on the sum of Rs. 2,000 for the interval between 7th and 25th July 1928. It is difficult to decide with confidence between these two contentions because there is on the one hand the word of the complainant and his accounts, and on the other the word of the accused and their accounts, in which the transaction is entered as though it were a loan. I think that on the whole the circumstances point to the conclusion that the Rs. 2,000 was not really a loan in the ordinary sense but was the payment in advance for the five bales of cloth. But in any case the question is not really at all material. Neither the transaction of Rs. 700, which was a temporary loan in the ordinary course of business, nor the transaction in connexion with the bales of cloth purchased from the accused, could possibly justify any inference as regards the intention of the parties at the time of the transaction with which we are concerned. In neither of those cases was there any question of a cheque being given and dishonoured, and the evidence relating to those transactions in my opinion does not in the least affect the proposition which I have already stated, and which is not seriously disputed, namely, that the effect of the transaction with which we are concerned was that the accused promised to pay and the complainant expected to be paid the sum of Rs. 2000 on 20th September.

Then considerable stress has been laid on the fact that this cheque for Rs. 1500 which the accused obtained from the complainant was used for the purpose of meeting the cheque for Rs. 7,000, to which I have already referred, and also on the fact that in the course of 19th September other sums were paid into the bank by the accused, making up, with the cheque of Rs. 1,500, the total of Rs. 6,200. The suggestion is that if the accused had a dishonest intention they would probably have allowed the other cheque, that is the cheque for Rs. 7,000, to be dishonoured, and further that, as considerable sums of money were paid into the bank on the 19th, other sums might have been expected to be paid in on the 20th. It is in connexion with arguments of this kind that I think S. 106, Evidence Act, is important. For anything we know to the contrary, there may have been special reasons why it was essential that the cheque for Rs. 7,000, should be met at all costs. As I have stated the cheque had been drawn on 16th September and it was therefore some days overdue. For anything we know to the contrary, the payment of these sums into the bank on the 19th in order to meet this urgent claim exhausted all the resources of the accused's firm. An examination of the accused's account in the bank strongly points to the conclusion that that was so. If it was not so, and if there really was any expectation or likelihood that payments would have been made into the bank after the 19th to enable the complainant's cheque to be met, then that could only be made plain by evidence within the knowledge of the accused themselves which they ought to have produced. Stress has also been laid upon the balance shown in the accused's account on 19th and 20th September, and on preceding days, which balances apparently included a large amount on account of outstandings. Here again in the absence of any evidence produced by the accused it is impossible for us to know whether these outstandings, which are described as sums lent on "chithis" were or were not recoverable either about 20th September or at all. All that we know is that the actual cash balance was what I have stated it to be, that no recoveries on account of outstandings were in fact made, and that no attempt was made to recover outstandings.

We consider that it is a fair conclusion on the above facts that at any rate accused 2 and 3, who were present when the cheque for Rs. 2,000 was drawn, had no expectation that it would be met if presented on the 20th, and in fact knew that it would not be met.

The question then arises whether all the accused have been properly convicted of the offence. It has been pointed out that accused 1 was not present on the 19th when the cheque for Rs. 1,500 was obtained and the cheque for Rs. 2,000 given; also that accused 2, though he was present on the 19th, did not sign the cheque and had in fact no authority to do so. The learned Magistrate has found that all the accused were partners in the firm of Keshavji Madhavji. He has relied mainly on the evidence of the complainant, who, having had many dealings with the accused, ought to be in a position to know, and also upon a document Ex. H, which is a form of application for opening a current account in the Central Bank of India. The application has to be signed by "partners, directors, agents, etc.," and accused 1 and 3 signed the application under that description. I think that there may perhaps be some doubt as to whether all three of the accused are legally partners in the firm, but it is obvious that that is not a matter of much importance. The fact that they were all partners would not in itself render them all liable on this criminal charge. The fact that they may not be partners in the legal sense will not absolve them from the charge, if the evidence shows that they were all concerned together in the commission of the offence. The trial Magistrate has found, and we agree with him, that the evidence does make this perfectly clear. The complainant has stated that when accused 1 came to him on the 18th he promised to repay the sum of Rs. 500, which he borrowed, on the following day.

The visit of accused 2 and 3 on the 19th was clearly in continuation of the same transaction. The accused required the money to meet the cheque of Rs. 7,000, and the cheque for Rs. 2,000, which they gave on the 19th included the Rs. 500, borrowed by accused 1 the day before and Rs. 1,500, which they took for payment into their banking account. It is obvious that accused 1, who is admittedly a partner in the firm and according to his own allegation the sole partner, must have been aware of the circumstances of the transaction. Accused 1 in his statement says that accused 2 and 3 were his servants and not his partners but that they were doing business on his behalf. He alleges that he knew nothing about the facts of the case but that I think under the circumstances it is impossible to believe. Accused 2 in his statement says that he was working as a broker for accused 1 at the time in question. He goes on to say, however, that the transaction complained of took place between the complainant's firm and "ours," that is "our firm," in the ordinary course of business. As for accused 3, he admittedly has authority to sign cheques on behalf of the firm and it was he who drew and signed the cheque, with which we are concerned. We think there can be no doubt that the three accused acted in concert throughout this transaction and that the dishonest intention arising from the knowledge that the cheque would not and could not be paid on 20th September must be imputed to all of them alike. For these reasons we confirm the conviction and sentence in the case of all the three accused and dismiss the appeal.

Criminal P. C., S. 421—Sessions Judge or Magistrate should, except in exceptional cases give reasons for summary dismissal of appeal.

It is true that where an appeal is summarily dismissed under S. 421, it is not necessary to deliver a formal judgment in accordance with the provisions of S. 367. But a Sessions Judge or Magistrate, whose orders are subject to revision by the High Court, ought, save in very exceptional cases, to give some reasons for his decision which will show that he had really considered the points raised by the appellant and the appeal actually is without foundation. 2 P. H. L. Nandkeolyar—for Petitioners.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Joint Magistrate of Bhagalpur, summarily dismissing the petitioners' appeal from a conviction under S. 504, Criminal P. C., without recording any reason for his order. The explanation of the learned Joint Magistrate is that when an appeal is summarily dismissed under S. 421, Criminal P. C. it is not necessary to deliver a formal judgment in accordance with the provisions of S. 367. This is true, but the learned Joint Magistrate should have remembered that, as was pointed out in Gurubari Behera v. Emperor (1), a Magistrate who summarily dismisses an appeal under S. 421 without giving reasons runs the risk of having the case remanded for a further hearing, if the High Court in revision is not satisfied that he had properly applied his mind to the case. A Sessions Judge or Magistrate, whose orders are subject to revision by the High Court, ought, save in very exceptional cases, to give some reasons for his decision which will show that he had really considered the points raised by the appellant and that the appeal actually is without foundation. If the appellate Court decides after hearing the appellant's pleader that there is no merit in the appeal, the position amounts to this, that the Court feels able to pronounce judgment at once without calling upon the other side for a reply; and when the Court is thus able immediately to pronounce judgment, the reasons for the decision should be given, just as they would be given if on the hearing of the appeal after admission, the Court should find it unnecessary to call upon the Public Prosecutor to reply to the arguments adduced on behalf of the appellant. This is the manner in which Sessions Judges ordinarily apply the provisions of S. 421 to appeals which are presented in Court by a pleader; and it is only in very exceptional cases that an order summarily dismissing an appeal without giving reasons can be justified.

The appeal with which I am here concerned necessarily involves the consideration of conflicting evidence and I am not satisfied that the learned Joint Magistrate has really applied his mind to the question of whether on a consideration of the evidence as a whole the conviction was justified. The order of the lower appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the appeal is remanded to the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur for re-hearing, either by himself or by any other Magistrate specially empowered under S. 407 (2), Criminal P. C.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 295 to 297 of 1929, Decided on 18th February 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 162—Mere fact that statement of witness before police does not in Magistrate's opinion contradict his evidence is no reason for refusing to grant copy of statement.

The copy of statement of a witness before police can only be refused, if the statement or statements contained therein are not relevant or their disclosure is not essential in the interests of justice or expedient to the public interests. The mere fact that the statement of the witness before the police does not in the opinion of the trying Magistrate contradict the evidence of the witness in the Court is no reason for refusing to grant the copy: *A. Hatim B. Tyelji and D. N. O. Sullivan—for Applicants.

Partabrai D. Pawani — for the Crown.

Wild, A. J. C.—These are revision applications by the four petitioners who were convicted with five others by the City Magistrate of Karachi of offences under Ss. 147, 324, 326 and Ss. 324 and 326 read with S. 149, I. P. C., and were sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment and to detention in a reformatory school. In appeal the co-accused of the petitioners were acquitted by the learned Judicial Commissioner and the petitioners whose appeals were dismissed come to us in revision.

One of the grounds of these applications is that the learned City Magistrate wrongly refused to give counsel a copy of the statement of the witness Parshotam made before the police under S. 161, Criminal P. C., and as it involves a question of importance we have taken time to consider it. The reason why the learned City Magistrate refused to grant the copy appears from the note made by him on the deposition of the witness Parshotam Ex. 11 and is to the following effect:

"Note.—The witness's statement to the police examined by the Court was under S. 162, Criminal P. C. As I find that there is nothing in it contradictory to the evidence given in Court the request of the accused's counsel for a copy is refused as inadmissible."

Now, as the only use to which an accused can put a statement of a witness made to the police is to contradict such witness it would at first sight seem that if there is in fact no contradiction between the statement of the witness in Court and his previous statement before the police it would be reasonable for the Magistrate to refuse to grant a copy of the statement before the police. The wording, however, of S. 162, Criminal P. C., does not bear out this view. Proviso 1, sub-S. (1), S. 162, says that the Court shall on a request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof in order that any part of such statement if duly proved may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by S. 145, Evidence Act 1872. It is clear from the proviso 1 that on a request at the proper time the Court must refer to the previous statement of the witness, and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof. This, however, is subject to proviso 2 which says that if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the enquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interest it shall record such opinion but not the reasons therefor and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused. From this it is evident that the copy can only be refused (1) if the statement or statements contained therein are not relevant or (2) their disclosure is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests. In this particular case the reason for the refusal to grant the copy is not that the statements contained therein are not relevant to the subject matter of the trial, nor was the copy refused because the disclosure of the statement would be inexpedient in the public interests. The mere fact, then, that the statement of the witness before the police does not in the opinion of the trying Magistrate contradict the evidence of the witness in Court is no reason for refusing to grant the copy. This view was also taken in the case of Chedi Prasad Singh v. Emperor (1) and Jhari Gope v. Emperor (2) and in the latter case the facts were exactly similar to the facts here, the application for a copy being refused because there was no discrepancy between the statement of the witness before the police and his statement in Court.

It is no doubt true that where there are as a matter of fact no discrepancies between the statements made by the witnesses in Court and their statements before the police the granting of copies of those latter statements will not be of any apparent use to the accused. We have, however, to construe the words of S. 162, Criminal P. C., as they stand and the wording of that section does not in our opinion permit the refusal of copies because there are no discrepancies.

We have been referred to certain other rulings, that is to say, Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (3), Emperor v. Usman Shaikh Umar (4) and Ramgulam Teli v. Emperor (5), but these refer rather to the time at which the accused can be granted copies of the statements before the police of the witness whom he wishes to contradict in cross-examination.

We hold then that the learned City Magistrate was wrong in refusing to grant a copy of the statement of the witness Parshotam before the police.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—I concur.

Section 162, Criminal P. C., before it was amended, made it obligatory on the trial Court to refer to the statement of a witness recorded by the police under the preceding section when such witness was called as a prosecution witness, but vested the Court with a discretion to decide whether the copy of such statement should be furnished to the accused or not.

The section has now made it obligatory on the Court not only to refer to such statement if so required, but also to grant its copy to the accused unless the Court is of opinion that any part thereof is: (a) not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or (b) that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests. In either of these events, the only jurisdiction vested in the Court is to exclude such portions from the copy to be supplied to the accused after recording its opinion in writing to that effect, but not the reasons therefor.

It is to be noted that both under the old and the amended section, the only use which the accused could make of the copy of the statement supplied to him would be for the purpose of contradicting the witness in the manner provided by S. 145, Evidence Act, after it had been duly proved. But in the section as amended the question whether the copy could be used for the purpose indicated above or not, appears not to have been left to the Court but to the accused and for obvious reasons.

In almost every case, a prosecution witness when examined in chief, amplifies or varies to a certain extent his previous statement, and it is always a difficult question to decide by a mere comparison of the two statements whether the omissions and additions or variations, if any, in the two statements were intentional or otherwise. On the one hand, there is no prejudice to the Crown if the previous statement of the witness which is identical with that given by him in the examination in chief and cannot, therefore, be made use of for the purpose indicated by S. 145, Evidence Act, is given to the accused; on the other hand, if the copy is refused, the accused has every right to complain that he has not been given a fair trial.

In dealing with the legality of the order complained of, the learned Judicial Commissioner has observed :

"It is argued that this procedure is not correct. In connexion with this point reference has been made to Ram Gulam Teli v. Emperor (5). It is to be noted that, as stated in that case, the previous rulings, namely Mudari Sikdar v. Emperor (3) Peramasami Rayudu, In re (6) and Sadat Mian v. Emperor (7), were not followed, the Patna ruling Saadat Mian v. Emperor (7) being directly contrary to the subsequent Patna ruling Ram Gulam v. Emperor (5) mentioned above. It appears that Ram Gulam v. Emperor (5) has been followed in the later Patna case this year. In view of these contrary rulings, and the point being not free from doubt, I am not disposed to hold that the learned City Magistrate was wrong on the point. Even, however, if it was not correct, still the procedure adopted is not such as to vitiate the trial, as it is evident that there were in fact no differences of any serious nature between Parshotam's statement to the police and his deposition before the Magistrate."

(7) A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 243=6 Pat. 329.

As pointed out by my learned brother, the conflicting rulings referred to above dealt rather with the time at which the accused could require the Court to refer to such statements for the purpose of granting copies to the accused and not to the grounds on which he could refuse them.

Such of the obiter dicta which might at first sight appear to support the contrary view do not seem to have been accepted in several later rulings.

The case of In re, Paramasami Rayudu v. Emperor A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 183 does not call for any specific comment as it appears to refer only to the stage at which a copy of the statement could not be claimed by the accused as of right and nothing more.

In Madari Sikdar v. Emperor A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 514, two points were decided, first, with regard to the effect of the amendment of S. 162, Criminal P. C. In dealing with that point it was said :

"The effect of the amendment is to annul the Judge's discretion, and to make it obligatory on him to give the accused copies of the statements subject only to the exclusion of irrelevant matters which the public interest requires should not be disclosed."

The second point was with regard to the stage at which the accused was entitled to make his request for copies. In dealing with that point, it was said that this must be after the witness had been called for the prosecution and not before the commencement of the preliminary inquiry. That was all that was required for the purposes of that case. But their Lordships went further and said :

"This decision, as also the wording of S. 145, Evidence Act, makes it clear that it is at the time of cross-examination and not before that the previous statement of a witness can be put to him. But the cross-examination must lay the foundation for the suggestion that the evidence given by the witness in Court is contradicted by his statement recorded under S. 161, Criminal P. C., and it is only then that the accused is entitled to ask the Judge to refer to the writing and grant him copies."

These observations have been the subject of adverse comment in subsequent cases, e. g., Usman Sheikh Umer v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1928 Bom. p. 23, at p. 25, Per Patkar, J., Ramgulam Teli v.

Emperor, A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 215, Per Ross, J., Jhari Gope v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 268, Per Courtney-Terrell, C.J. and Fazl Ali, J. In the recent case of Babarali Sardar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 182, while commenting on the above dictum, Rankin, C. J., said :

"If this case had turned upon the question whether the learned Judges, Chotzner and Duval, JJ., were right in the Calcutta case to which I have referred in saying that there must be a foundation laid by way of cross-examination showing that the statements are wanted to contradict the witnesses, I should have thought it necessary to refer this case to a Full Bench to have that question decided. As at present advised, I am not prepared to accept that as a possible interpretation of this section. I do not think that it was any part of the intention of the amended section that the Judge has to consider whether a foundation has been laid. In my judgment that part of that decision is open to criticism."

It is to be observed that in the case of Madari Sikdar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 514, their Lordships have not indicated how and in what manner the counsel for the accused was to lay the foundation for the suggestion that the evidence given by the witness in Court was contradicted by his previous statement made to the police, or how and in what manner, he was to get knowledge of the contents of the previous police statements before he could make such assertion.

Again, it is difficult to read into the section any words to that effect . . . If the object of the legislature in amending the section was to take away from the trying Magistrate his discretion to refuse the copies except on two specific grounds mentioned in the proviso, it would be going contrary to the intention of the legislature to impose this further condition that before a copy can be granted, the accused must satisfy the Court that he will be able to use the copy for the purpose indicated in S. 145, Evidence Act.

The last ruling referred to by the learned Judicial Commissioner is that of Saadat Mian v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 243. In that case, the Court was moved to quash the commitment made by the Magistrate on the ground of non-compliance with certain provisions of law inter alia the refusal by the Magistrate to postpone the case to allow the accused to cross examine prosecution witnesses after obtaining copies under S. 162 which application had, as a matter of fact, been granted and not refused. In the course of his judgment, Macpherson, J., said :

"In the first place, the question of furnishing to the accused a copy of the statement of a witness recorded by the police in the course of the investigation into an offence does not at all arise until the witness is called for the prosecution at the inquiry or trial in respect of the offence, and secondly the Court is not competent to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of such statement unless it contains something which constitutes a contradiction to a statement made by the witness in his deposition at such inquiry or trial. These two circumstances must co-exist before an accused is entitled under the proviso to S. 162 (1) to such a copy."

These observations go much further than those in Madari Sikdar's case (3) and do cover the present case. But there is nothing in the section to warrant such observations and a contrary view has been entertained in the rulings of the Patna High Court referred to above, particularly the case of Ramgulum Teli (5) in which the judgment of Ross, J., had the concurrence of the same learned Judge, Jwala Prasad, J., who formed a Bench with Macpherson, J., but had in that case said nothing on this point.

In addition to the cases already referred to above, reference might be made to Chedi Prasad Singh v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 325, where Sen, J., set aside an order passed by the trying Magistrate refusing to grant a copy of the previous statement of the witness on a similar ground, and the case of Sulaiman Mahomed Bholat v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 87, which also supports the same view.

With all respect to the learned Judicial Commissioner, I am therefore of opinion that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to refuse to grant the copy on the ground on which he has purported to do.

In view of the second reason given by the learned Judicial Commissioner, and the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (8), we have sent for the police papers and find that there are two statements of the witness Purshotamdas recorded by the police. The statement recorded by City Police Inspector Rimmer on 17th March 1929 describes him as Purshotamdas Bhagooram Kapur of Multan. The second statement recorded on the following day by Sub-Inspector, Surajbali describes him as Purshotamdas Binjhumam Multani. Both of them appear to be statements of the same person who was called as a witness. There is to a certain extent a variation of the story given by him in the two police statements, and a further variation in the statement given by him in Court, and I am not prepared to hold that the said variations are immaterial or that they could not have been used by the accused for the purpose of contradicting the witness or that the accused have not been prejudiced in their trial by not being provided with copies thereof.

R.M./R.K.

Order accordingly.

PERCIVAL, J. C., AND RUPCHAND, A.J.C.

Emperor

v.

Dipchand—Accused.

Criminal Appeal No. 180/6 of 1929,
Decided on 13th February 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 492—"In the absence of the Public Prosecutor" explained.

The words "in the absence of the Public Prosecutor" are very wide and include temporary absence of Public Prosecutor at the place and in the Court where the case is proceeding. [P 622 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 494—(Per Percival, J. C.)—Mere fact that Magistrate does not give reasons for withdrawal is not sufficient for setting aside order granting withdrawal—Per Rupchand, A. J. C. — Though S. 494 does not require Magistrate to state reasons granting withdrawal it is desirable that he should do so.

Per Percival, A. J. C.—It is not "obligatory" on the Court to record reasons for permitting a withdrawal. That is to say the mere fact that the Magistrate has not recorded reasons for withdrawal of itself is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the granting of application for withdrawal and the acquittal of the accused. [P 622 C 1]

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—There is nothing in S. 494 to require the Magistrate to record his reasons at the time of allowing the withdrawal of a case. But it is desirable that where a case is permitted to be withdrawn there should be some materials on the record of the case to satisfy the High Court that prima facie there was some good ground for the withdrawal of the case and that it was not left to the whim of the Public Prosecutor. Where the District Magistrate has been moved by an application from the accused to have the case withdrawn either the original application of the accused or an application from the Public Prosecutor stating briefly the reasons for withdrawal should be placed on the record or in any event the Court should in its own order give an indication as to the circumstances under which it grants its sanction. In the absence of such material on the record it is difficult for Government to decide if an appeal should be preferred or for the High Court to decide if the order sanctioning withdrawal is one which should not be interfered with.

* (c) Criminal P. C., Ss. 492 and 494—Case conducted almost to its finish by one Public Prosecutor—Then transfer of case to another place and no Public Prosecutor being available appointment of Sub-Inspector of Police to be Public Prosecutor by District Magistrate under S. 492—On application by accused District Magistrate orders the Sub-Inspector to withdraw case and the application of the Sub-Inspector to withdraw case was granted—Contention that District Magistrate alone had no power to withdraw case without consulting Public Prosecutor in charge of case from its commencement—Question raised is for executive authorities to decide and not legal.

A case was conducted almost to its finish from its commencement by one Public Prosecutor. Then the case was transferred to another place and there being no Public Prosecutor or his Assistants available at the time the District Magistrate appointed Sub-Inspector of Police under S. 492 to be Public Prosecutor. Subsequently on application by the accused the District Magistrate issued orders to the Public Prosecutor appointed under S. 492 to withdraw the case who in compliance with the orders applied for withdrawal and the application was granted. It was objected that the District Magistrate alone had no power to withdraw the case without consulting the Public Prosecutor in charge of the case from its commencement.

Held: that the question raised was rather a question for the consideration of the executive authorities than a legal question as the action of the District Magistrate was in compliance with Ss. 492 (2) and 494 though it is true that it is rather unusual for the District Magistrate to take action for the withdrawal without consulting the Public Prosecutor in charge of the case. [P 622 C:1]

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Patrabrai D. Punwani—for Opponent.

Percival, J. C.—This is an appeal by Government against the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate Kotri, granting permission to the withdrawal of a case against one Dipchand and accordingly acquitting the accused. For the purpose of this acquittal it is not necessary to go deeply into the facts of the case. We have to consider chiefly the question whether the application for withdrawal was legal and whether the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was correct.

The application for withdrawal of the case is as follows :

"In compliance with order No. S-168 dated 24th May 1929 of the District Magistrate, Karachi to have the case withdrawn it is prayed that the Court may kindly grant permission to withdraw the case and acquit the accused."

The learned Public Prosecutor contends on legal grounds that there are three defects in this order of the learned Magistrate. In the first place he argues that the District Magistrate had no power to withdraw the case, because under S. 494 it is only the Public Prosecutor who can withdraw a case with the consent of the Court under that section.

This however brings us to the question :

• Was the Sub-Inspector of Police who was appointed public prosecutor for this case properly so appointed? If he was properly appointed as Public Prosecutor then he had the power to apply to the Court under S. 494 for the withdrawal of the case and in that case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate could grant his consent accordingly. We come then to the second objection urged by the learned Public Prosecutor which is that the learned District Magistrate had no power to appoint a Sub-Inspector of police as Public Prosecutor under S. 492. Criminal P. C. S. 492 runs as follows :

The District Magistrate . . . may in the absence of the Public Prosecutor or where no Public Prosecutor has been appointed appoint any other person not being an officer of police below such rank as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf to be Public Prosecutor for the purpose of any case."

Now in this particular instance the case had been commenced in the Hyderabad District, and the learned Assistant Public Prosecutor, Hyderabad, was in charge of the case. Subsequently it was transferred to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kotri, because he happened to be the Magistrate who had begun the case at Hyderabad. When the case came on in Kotri the "Public Prosecutor" would be the Public Prosecutor of Karachi or one of his assistants. Now there was no such Public Prosecutor at Kotri available at the moment therefore the District Magistrate was legally justified under S. 492, in the absence of the Public Prosecutor in appointing some other person to be a Public Prosecutor for the conduct of the particular case. I am of opinion therefore, that there was nothing illegal in the order of the learned District Magistrate appointing the Sub-Inspector of Kotri to be the Public Prosecutor in this case nor in the Public Prosecutor so appointed applying to the Magistrate to withdraw the case.

And we come to the further question whether the District Magistrate alone has to decide whether an application for withdrawal should be made or whether the Public Prosecutor in charge of the case should have any voice in the matter. We are informed that in this particular instance the Assistant Public Prosecutor who had been in charge of the case was not consulted by the District Magistrate before the application for withdrawal of the case was made. This seems to be a question rather for the consideration of executive authorities than a legal question for consideration by this Court, as legally the action taken by the District Magistrate was in accordance with the provisions of S. 492 (2) and 494, Criminal P. C. It may be observed, however, that it is rather unusual for a District Magistrate to apply for the withdrawal of a case without consulting the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor in charge of the case.

There remains the third point that no reasons were given by the Magistrate for granting permission to withdrawal. In this connexion our attention has been drawn to Rajani Kanta v. Idris Thakur (1) in which it is stated that the reason for granting consent should be stated in order to enable the High Court in revision to determine the propriety of the exercise of discretion by the lower Court. On the other hand there are rulings to the contrary effect particularly 2 Patna 708 where it is stated that where the Court permits a prosecution to be withdrawn under S. 494, Criminal P. C., it is not necessary to record its reasons for permitting the withdrawal. It seems that an intermediary position between two somewhat conflicting views may be adopted and we may say it is not "obligatory" on the Court to record reasons for permitting a withdrawal. That is to say the mere fact that the Magistrate has not recorded reasons for withdrawal of itself is not a sufficient ground for setting aside the granting of application for withdrawal and the acquittal of the accused. In the circumstances of this case and having regard to the fact that there is nothing illegal in the procedure of the District Magistrate or the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kotri, I do not think that it is necessary for this Court to interfere and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—I concur. The Public Prosecutor has raised the following four points :

1. That the appointment of the Sub-Inspector of Police as Public Prosecutor was bad. 2. That the Sub-Inspector although appointed as Public Prosecutor by the District Magistrate had no power to withdraw the case. 3. That the order of the Magistrate permitting withdrawal is illegal as it gives no reasons. And Lastly (4) on the merits it is a fit case for this Court to interfere.

Now S. 492 of the Code apparently empowers the District Magistrate to appoint as Public Prosecutor any officer of the police not below such rank as the Local Government may prescribe in that behalf (a) in the absence of the Public Prosecutor and (b) where no Public Prosecutor has been appointed. I take it that the words "in the absence of the Public Prosecutor" are very wide and include temporary absence of the Public Prosecutor at the place and in the Court where the case is proceeding. S. 4, Cl. (t) describes the Public Prosecutor to mean any person appointed under S. 492 of the Code and therefore the Sub-Inspector was not only properly appointed as Public Prosecutor in the case but had power to withdraw it under the provisions of S. 494. There is also nothing in that section to require the Magistrate to record his reasons at the time of allowing the withdrawal of a case. It is no doubt desirable that where a case is permitted to be withdrawn there should be some materials on the record of the case to satisfy the High Court that prima facie there was some good ground for the withdrawal of the case and that it was not left to the whim of the Public Prosecutor. Where the District Magistrate has been moved by an application from the accused to have the case withdrawn either the original application of the accused or an application from the Public Prosecutor stating briefly the reasons for withdrawal should be placed on the record or in any event the Court should in its own order give an indication as to the circumstances under which it grants its sanction. In the absence of such material on the record it is difficult for Government to decide if an appeal should be preferred or for the High Court to decide if the order sanctioning withdrawal is one which should not be interfered with.

In this case it would appear that the application filed in Court by the Sub-Inspector acting as Public Prosecutor for permission to withdraw the case and the order passed thereon show that the Public Prosecutor had conveyed a mandate of the District Magistrate to the Court and the Court had given effect to it without applying its mind to the merits. The application and the order passed thereon are as under :

In compliance with order No. S. 168 dated 24th May 1929 of the District Magistrate, Karachi, to have the above case withdrawn, it is prayed that the Court may kindly grant permission to withdraw the case and acquit the accused.

Dated 25th May 1929 (Sd.) Illegible,
Sub-Inspector of Kotri.

ORDER

Permission for withdrawal granted.
Accused acquitted under S. 504, Criminal P. C.

D/- 25th May 1929 (Sd.) M. A. Hafiz, Sub Divisional Magistrate, Kotri.

In my opinion the Court was not only entitled to but should have insisted upon a better and more reasoned application for withdrawal of the case than the above.

The complaint made by the learned Public Prosecutor for Sind that in the circumstances of this case specially when it had been proceeded with almost to its finish the Assistant Public Prosecutor of Hyderabad who was in charge of the case from its commencement should have been consulted and instructed to do the needful is not unjustified but this is a matter relating to administration and one in which the Local Government may if it thinks fit issue instructions but I am afraid by itself this is not a ground upon which we could interfere.

Speaking for myself I should have been inclined to interfere but for two circumstances to which our attention has been drawn and which pertain to the last point in the case. We have been supplied with a true copy of the application made by the accused to the District Magistrate giving detailed reasons in which he moved the District Magistrate for withdrawal of the proceedings and in view of the facts stated therein, I am not prepared to hold that the order of the District Magistrate is so unreasonable as to merit an interference by this Court.

The other circumstance is the death of the principal offender namely the bailiff who is said to have allowed the present opponent who was co-accused in the case to abscond after his arrest. The bailiff is dead and so far as the present accused is concerned the case of the Crown is not absolutely clear. It is based upon an inference to be drawn from certain facts to be proved that the bailiff permitted the present accused to abscond after he had arrested him probably on receiving or in the hope of receiving an illegal gratification. But there is equally the other probability of the bailiff not having arrested him at all from a like motive.

Taking into consideration all the circumstances I agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner that interference should be declined.

ADDISON, J.

Sham Singh—Petitioner.

v.

Mt. Hakam Devi—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 1815 of 1929, Decided on 28th March 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 488 and 489—Application under S. 488—Court should dismiss application if parties compromise, leaving them to enforce compromise in civil Court—Such compromise is bar to application under S. 489.

Where, in an application under S. 488, the parties arrive at a compromise, the proper course for the Court is to dismiss the application leaving the parties to enforce the compromise in civil Courts. Such a compromise is a bar to an application under S. 489. An order of maintenance passed in accordance with a compromise cannot be enforced by a criminal: Court 42 P. R. 1888 and 89 P. R. 1905 Cr. Ref. to. [P-624 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 488—Party present in Court along with pleader—Ex parte order against him is not justified.

Where a party along with his pleader is present in the Court, an ex parte order against him without hearing him is not justified and should be set aside. [P 624 C 2]

Facts.—In November 1907 Mt. Hakam Devi applied to a 1st Class Magistrate Sheikh Rahim Bakhsh under S. 488, Criminal P. C., for maintenance against her husband Sham Singh. During the pendency of the application, parties compromised and Sham Singh agreed to pay Rs. 5 per mensem to the applicant irrespective of the fact whether she lived in his house or at her own parent's house. The Magistrate thereupon passed an order on 29th May 1908, fixing her monthly allowance at Rs. 5 under S. 488, Criminal P. C.

The present application heard by Lala Daulat Ram, Magistrate 1st Class, Gujranwala, was lodged by Mt. Hakam Devi on 19th January 1929, saying that she had received maintenance up to 7th April 1928 and praying that the amount due after that till 19th January 1929 be realized from the respondent Sham Singh. She also prayed that her father with whom she was living, having died since 1½ years, the rate of her monthly allowance Rs. 5 be increased to Rs. 15 per mensem. Notice was thereupon issued to respondent Sham Singh under S. 489, Criminal P. C. Sham Singh was not personally served for several hearings whereupon the Magistrate on 15th May 1929 passed an order of proceeding ex-parte against him. On a later hearings of the case on 12th June 1928 Sham Singh put in appearance along with his pleader, but the Magistrate being on leave that day, the case was postponed to 28th June 1929. On 28th June 1929, it appears that the Magistrate took up the case in the first portion of the day when Sham Singh respondent was not present, and passed an order that as there was great difference in prices of commodities between the years 1908 and 1929, the allowance of Rs. 5 per mensem should be increased to Rs. 10 per mensem from the date of the present application viz., 19th January 1929. That very day 28th June 1929, Sham Singh respondent put in an application saying that his defence should be heard and that he should not have been proceeded with ex parte. This application was, however, rejected. Sham Singh has now filed a revision to me against the order allowing Rs. 10 per mensem as maintenance to Mt. Hakam Devi.

Report.—The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds : I have heard pleaders for both the parties and find that the Magistrate's order dated 28th June 1929 must be set aside. It appears from the file of the Magistrate that Sham Singh respondent along with his pleader was present in Court on 12th June 1929. The fact of his being present on 28th June 1929, also is borne out by his application of that date on file. The ex parte order allowing Rs. 10 per mensem as maintenance to Mt. Hakam Kaur without hearing the respondent is therefore not justified.

Besides, I am of the opinion that the original order of Sheikh Rahim Bakhsh Magistrate, dated 29th May 1908, is not good in law. The parties having compromised at that time the Magistrate should have better dismissed the application under S. 488, Criminal P. C., and left the parties to enforce the compromise in the civil Courts. The very fact of the compromise made at that time is again a bar to the present application made by Mt. Hakam Kaur under S. 489, Criminal P. C., (vide Mt. Rahim Bibi v. Khair Din (1) and Rahem Ali v. Fateh Bibi (2), which lay down that an order of maintenance passed in accordance with a compromise cannot be enforced by criminal Courts.

It has been urged by Mt. Hakam Devi's pleader before me that the fact of her father's death since a year or so is good ground for increase of her maintenance. The terms of the compromise of 1908, however, are clear that Rs. 5 would be paid monthly whether she lived with the complainant or with her father. I, therefore, recommend that the order of the Magistrate dated 28th June 1929 increasing the allowance to Rs. 10 per mensem be set aside and that the applicant Mt. Hakam Devi be directed to seek her remedy in civil Courts.

Order.—For reasons given by the learned District Magistrate, I set aside the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, dated 28th June 1929, increasing the allowance.

Criminal Misc. Appln. No. 167 of 1929, Decided on 5th March 1930, under S. 99-B of Criminal P. C.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 99-D —Government should begin — But both parties heard—Onus is immaterial.

It is manifestly most convenient that Government Advocate should begin and state the case in support of the Local Government. But where both parties have been heard fully the question of onus is of very little or no practical importance; A. I. R. 1925 All. 195, Rel. on. [P 626 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 99-A — Document though advertisement can be forfeited under S. 99-A—However advertisement of forthcoming book unless seditious by itself cannot be forfeited because it is intimately associated with seditious book.

The mere fact that a document is only an advertisement of a forthcoming book is not sufficient to protect it from forfeiture under S. 99-A and in considering whether it is seditious or not the advertisement must be considered on its merits and not in the light of the forthcoming book. The intention of an advertisement of a forthcoming book is clearly primarily merely to further the sale of the book. It is a step in preparation in furtherance of the sale of the book which is to appear in the future and although it may be very intimately connected with the book and though it may be considered desirable to forfeit all the documents connected with and intimately associated with a book that has been found to be seditious there is no provision in the law either under S. 99-A or 124-A Penal Code to forfeit the advertisement for such reason alone. [P 626 C 2, P 627 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 99-D—Two reasonable views—Benefit must be given to applicant.

Where a document admits of two reasonably possible views the applicant must have the benefit of that which is most favourable to him. [P 627 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 124-A — "Duty of historian."

It is the duty of a historian to make an endeavour to be impartial and not to make a presentation only of the evil deeds of those with whom he is dealing. [P 627 C 2, P 628 C 1]

(e) Penal Code S. 124-A—Book is to be judged as a whole.

The book must be judged as a whole with its introduction and acknowledgment or dedication. [P 627 C 2]

(f) Criminal P. C., S. 99-F—Practice referred to is practice in miscellaneous civil proceedings.

The proceedings under S. 99-F are sui generis but the particular exclusion by S. 99-F of the practice in suits and the very provisions for an order for the payment of costs suggest that regard is intended to be had to the practice in civil miscellaneous proceedings. It is therefore reasonable that the cost of the other side so far as it may be found to have been reasonably incurred should be paid by the person to whose action the incurring of those costs was due. [P 630 C 1, 2]

K. N. Katju, R. S. Pandit, Ajodhya Prasad and Kanhailal—for Applicant.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Boys, J. — This is an application under S. 99-B, Criminal P. C., by which the applicant takes objection to orders of the Local Government under S. 99A, Criminal P. C., declaring every copy of a book and of the advertisement thereof forfeited to His Majesty.

The book is entitled "Bharat men Angarezi Rajya." The author is one Sriyut Sundar Lal, B. A., ex-editor of the "Karmayogi" and the "Bhavishya." The book is written in Hindi. R. Saigal is the printer and publisher, and it was published at the Fine Art Printing Cottage, 28, Elgin Road, Allahabad. In the advertisement of the book it is described as a :

"compilation from the English books "Rise of Christian Power in India," "The consolidation of the Christian Power in India," and "Ruin of Indian Trade and Industries" of the well-known historian Major Baman Das Basu, I. M. S., and from other authentic historical works."

The applicant before us is the printer and publisher R. Saigal, whose case has been put before us by Dr. Katju. The author Sundar Lal, has, so far as we are informed, taken no objection to the orders of Government passed under S. 99-A, and has not appeared before us in any way, or made any representation to us personally or through counsel.

The following facts are undisputed before us. The first advertisement of of the book in question appeared in the November issue of the year 1928 of the "Chand" magazine. The advertisement appears to have been of a two-fold nature: a brief one page advertisement such as is common in regard to many books, and a large fuller advertisement extending to a number of pages and containing a synopsis of many but not all of the chapters in the book.

On 10th December 1928, this November issue of the "Chand" was declared under S. 99-A, Criminal P. C. to be forfeited, but there was no particular reference to the advertisements with which we are now concerned.

On 18th March 1929, the book was published and the publisher proceeded to issue copies. On 19th March 1929, a police officer called at the office of the publisher and informed him that the Superintendent of Police desired to see him. On 20th March 1929 at this interview the Superintendent of Police informed the publisher that the advertisement of the book had been proscribed. He also warned the publisher that he would proceed to the publication of the book itself at his own risk. The publisher then informed the Superintendent of Police that the book had already been published two days previously.

Two days later, on 22nd March 1929, an officer of the Criminal Investigation Department informed the publisher that the book had been proscribed. The notifications proscribing the advertisement and the book are dated respectively 15th March 1929, and 22nd March 1929, and both appeared in the Gazette of 23rd March 1929.

It is against these notifications that the present application is directed.

At the commencement of the hearing before us the questions on whom the onus of proof lies and who has the right to begin were incidentally touched upon but no adequate reason was suggested why we should not follow the procedure adopted in Emperor v. Baijnath Kedia (1), and we found ourselves in complete agreement with the proposition there stated that the question of onus of proof is, after both parties have been fully heard, of very little or no practical importance and further we think that it is manifestly most convenient that the Government Advocate should begin and state the case in support of the Local Government's orders.

To deal first with the order of forfeiture in regard to the advertisement. Every document of this description must be dealt with on its own merits. We have carefully examined every word of the lengthy synopsis of the book contained in the advertisement. A summary is made of a number of chapters. The advertisement is silent as to some others. Taking isolated phrases, it is possible to pick out some that standing by themselves might be read as having a bearing on the present British rule, but taking the advertisement as a whole we think that even those phrases must be read as bearing only on the undesirable feature of the administration by the East India Company. We shall hold later in regard to the book itself that there are in it passim passages having reference to the Government prevailing at the present day. But none of those passages appear in the abstract made for the purpose of advertisement and more particularly, we find in the advertisement no reference to the ideas which are given special prominence in the concluding chapter of the book. We do not think therefore that taking the advertisement strictly by itself as it existed at the time the order of forfeiture was passed, there is sufficient material in that advertisement to form the basis of an order of forfeiture under S. 99-A, Criminal P. C. Again we must emphasise, as indeed must be obvious, that we are speaking of this particular advertisement alone. It of course far from follows that the mere fact that the document is only an advertisement of a forthcoming book is sufficient to protect it from forfeiture under S. 99-A, Criminal P. C.

It has been suggested for the Local Government that the advertisement must be read in the light of the subsequent book. It is manifest that in some cases while a document may not strictly speaking by itself disclose seditious intent, it may be read in the light of other documents whether prior or subsequent in date and the seditious nature of the document in question may be apparent from those other documents. An illustration of this is to be found in the case of Queen Empress v. Balgandhar Tilak (2). Where an article has appeared in a paper the intention and the effect of that article may be gathered not only from the article itself but from other articles connected therewith appearing prior or subsequent to the date of the article in question. But manifestly the case of an advertisement may be quite different. The intention of an advertisement of a forthcoming book is clearly primarily merely to further the sale of the book. It is a step in preparation in furtherance of the sale of the book which is to appear in the future. But it is not possible to read provision for this into S. 124-A, I. P. C., or S. 99-A, Criminal P. C. It is of course possible to contend that the advertisement is very intimately connected with the book and it might reasonably be considered desirable to make provision for declaring forfeited all documents connected and intimately associated with a book that has been found to be seditious but there is no such provision in the law which this Court have to administer.

(2) [1898] 22 Bom. 112.

We therefore hold that the contents of the advertisement did not themselves afford sufficient basis for the order of forfeiture and it is hereby set aside.

Before leaving this we are constrained to add that we think that the advertisement itself and standing by itself was very near the border line. Two views of it were reasonably possible but two views being reasonably possible, the applicant must have the benefit of that which is most favourable to him.

We now come to consideration of the book itself. A passing complaint was made by Dr. Katju suggesting that the Government had not given the book due consideration before it was prescribed. We have ourselves given it the very fullest consideration as must be manifest from the fact that the arguments and the placing of the book before us have occupied this Court for over seven days. We have had before us and counsel have also had before them full translation made of the whole book by Government and those translations have been accepted as fair by both the counsel before us, though, as was inevitable here and there, reference has been necessary to the original and one of us familiar with Hindi has followed the text of the original book while the translated extracts were being read. Dr. Katju has in his painstaking argument been handicapped to this extent that he has not had the assistance of the author. We have already noted that it is the publisher who has made application to this Court. We are assured that he has no interest other than financial in this book at all. We have no explanation before us of why the author has treated with indifference the prescription of his book. But the fact remains that he has not made any attempt to justify it. Dr. Katju has urged that the book must be judged as a whole with its introduction and acknowledgment or dedication and we agree with him. In the case of a lengthy book such as this extending to nearly 1,700 pages of print it might be unfair, generally speaking, to pick out a sentence which might have found its way into the book by inadvertence and condemn the whole book on account thereof. We have therefore considered the whole book with its introduction and acknowledgment or dedication and drawn our conclusions from its general trend and not only from isolated passages.

It is contended for the applicant that the book was written and published in furtherance of the interest of vernacular education. If this were the sole motive there can be no doubt that it would be a laudable object and the last thing that anybody would desire would be to place obstruction in the way of that purpose, but whether or no that may have been one of the objects we are concerned with the means by which it was proposed to attain that object and the question whether there was or was not another illegal purpose as well.

It has been contended that the fact that the book was published at a price of Rs. 16 is an indication that no seditious purpose was intended; that a book at such a price could not possibly be intended to reach the multitude. There is no force in this contention. It is part of the applicant's case that 2,000 copies of the book have been printed at very great expense and it is impossible to suppose that this was done except in the hope of reaching a very wide market whether through individuals or through libraries.

It has been contended that it is not usual for historians to be impartial. It may be conceded that most students of history have formed some opinion of the circumstances with which and of the characters with whom they deal and such partiality is obviously not in itself criminal or even culpable but there is manifestly a vast difference between this and the deliberate setting out of only one side of the case. It is at least the duty of a historian to make an endeayour to be impartial and not to make a presentation only of the evil deeds of those with whom he is dealing. In the book before us even institutions like those of railways are set out as merely unmitigated engines of oppression of the Indian and the country of India. Even the Penal Code is described as follows :

"The object of this law (the Penal Code) was to impoverish Indians, to demoralise them, to create in them the habit of dishonesty and litigation and to ruin them utterly."

It would serve no useful purpose and merely prolong this judgment to wholly unnecessary lengths were we to endeavour to reproduce in detail the passages to which we have been referred throughout this book and the arguments in reference to these passages. It is not necessary or desirable for us to do more than to state our definite and clear conclusions. We are fully satisfied :

(a) that the book that we have to consider can in no sense be regarded as merely "history" of the times with which it deals.

(b) That the book is not merely a compilation from other books but contains numerous passages which state the author's own views and his own ideas of the purpose to which Indians of the present day should direct themselves and of the means by which that purpose, the destruction of British rule in India, should be carried out. We may add that even if it was a mere compilation in the strictest sense of the term that would not be an adequate answer to the present charge.

(c) That there is passim propaganda directed to show that the evil state of affairs existing during the days of the East India Company continues to the present day. In the acknowledgment at the commencement of the first volume we find the phrase :

"In the introduction I think it necessary to present before the reader an account of the invasions of India before British advent, specially of the condition of India at the time of the coming of the British so that it may be easy for them to apprise correctly the beneficial or harmful consequences of British rule over their country," and again,

"It is to be hoped that this humble effort may help some fellow countrymen to ponder seriously over the deplorable condition of the country and its real remedies."

In the Introduction we find :

"On the basis of these statements by supporters of the British rule and by concealing from us the real form of the British rule we are assured that the British administration is a very great blessing for India and that all our future progress and peace in the country depends upon the continuance of British rule."

And again :

"We should also like fully to examine. . . . what were the causes and methods which led to the establishment of British rule in India, what were its effects on India and what are the means by which it may be hoped to secure deliverance from it in future."

In Chap. 35 :

"It has, however, always been seen that the proportion in which the rights and aspirations of the people in England have increased the fetters to subject India have tightened. It is also natural, because the interest of the rulers and the ruled always clash under an alien Government. Prosperity of England lies in the impoverishment of India and the awakening of the latter means danger to the former. The more the rights of the people of England will increase the more will the number of those who practically rule over India multiply and the more will increase the dependence and indigence of the country."

In Chap 51 of the book, in speaking of the proclamation of 1st November 1858 the author says :

"Since then the British rulers in India have in practice never cared a bit for the pledges contained in it."

In his concluding remarks he says :

"The detailed history of the 70 years following the rebellion is outside the scope of this book but the tale is the same."

The tale to which reference is made is explained at p. 1655 of the book :

"Another question which arises is what would have happened if the rebellion of the year 1857 had not at all taken place. An account of the company's administration and of the means employed and the acts done by it from 1757 to 1857 has been given in this book. It is impossible and useless to repeat that tale of woe."

We invited Dr. Katju to tell us, in reference to his defence that Major Basu's books were the foundation of the present book, whether there was any idea of a tale of woe continuing to the present time in Major Basu's books and he was unable to say that any such could be found. The quotations that we have given, and these might be multiplied, are ample to show that the book is in no sense merely a history, though of course, it contains historical facts, but it teems with propaganda directed to the elimination of British rule.

(d) That the intention of this book was and the effect of it is and must be to excite disaffection towards the present Government. Even if the book was limited to a criticism of the East India Company it would not necessarily follow that it was not a book calculated to create disaffection towards the present Government but in view of the actual nature of the book that is not a proposition which it is necessary now for us to consider further.

(e) That in the great majority of the cases in which we have been invited to examine the authorities on which particular statements are alleged to be based and in which we have succeeded in tracing the alleged authority we have found that authority more or less misquoted, always in the direction of exaggeration or embroidery of the evidence and conclusion stated by the author in the direction of increasing the gravity of the charges made, or the clearness of the evidence by which it is endeavoured to support those charges.

(f) That generally speaking there is nothing but black in the picture painted of any Englishman or any British measure and nothing but white in the picture of anybody else. This is in truth admitted by Dr. Katju to be a fact and his only answer on behalf of his client is that the present book is based on those of Major Basu. In this connexion too we have the picture in the introduction of a "Peaceful invasion by Mahomedans of India and the statement that they only furthered their own interests and those of Islam by peaceful persuasion," the intention manifestly being to predispose Mahomedans to the more ready acceptance of the teaching in the rest of the book. Further it is to be noted that where anything is actually said in criticism of other than Englishmen it is only with the object of having a peg on which to hang immediately a more severe criticism of Englishmen any institutions established by Englishmen.

(g) That there is no force in the argument that all that is aimed at by this book is furtherance of the idea of replacing the present form of Government by Dominion Status. This argument put forward by Dr. Katju at a late stage of the case after it had been brought home to him by repeated reference to passages in the book that his original contention that the book was only a history of the East India Company was wholly untenable. Even if this were the object of the book, it might still be directed against the Government established by law, it is necessary to enter into this, for there is not, in fact, throughout the book a hint of the idea of Dominion Status or a hint that the author only desired to displace the present form of Government by Dominion Status. One conclusion and one only is possible from the very full consideration that we have had to give during these seven days to the book that the author aimed at the entire severance of the British connexion with India, and at bringing into contempt and hatred the Government established by law in British India.

Finally we have to consider the question of costs. This is of considerable importance to both parties for owing to the necessity of translating a very lengthy book the expenses incurred have been considerable, amounting to no less than Rs. 3,000 and this apart altogether from the question of the fees paid by either side. In view of our finding that the order relating to the advertisement must be set aside and the order relating to book maintained we have no difficulty whatever in holding that it will be reasonable to order that nine-tenths of the costs incurred by Government who have been successful as regards the book should be payable by the other side, but in the comparatively small matter of the advertisement the Government should bear its own costs, that is, the remaining tenth. The question, however, on what basis we should determine the amount of the costs is not so easy of solution. In the present Criminal Procedure Code it is laid down in S. 99-F that "every High Court shall, as soon as conveniently may be, frame rules to regulate the procedure in the case of such applications, the amount of the costs thereof and the execution of orders passed thereon, and until such rules are framed the practice of such Courts in proceedings other than suits and appeals shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to such applications."

The present application was filed on 10th May 1929. At that date no rules had been framed under S. 99-F, Criminal P. C. Similar provision to that which we have quoted was formerly contained in the Press Act. The rules framed as under that Act, however, are no longer in force and no steps were taken immediately to frame any rules under S. 99-F. The rules framed under the Press Act were revived in the shape of rules under S. 99-F in December 1929. Even those rules we notice do not make any reference to exhibits filed on behalf of the opposite party but only to exhibits attached to the petition or filed by the applicant. We have, however, to consider what was the situation at the time the present application was filed and in accordance with S. 99-F the petitioner should have been guided by the "practice of the Court in proceedings other than suits and appeals." The proceedings under S. 99-F are sui generis but the particular exclusion by S. 99-F of the practice in "suits" and the very provision for an order for the payment of costs suggest that regard is intended to be had to the practice in miscellaneous civil proceedings.

As to what that practice is neither side gave us any assistance. The language of the Court is English and wherever there is any relevant provision made it is always to the effect that the person filing an exhibit must cause to be translated by a competent translator of this Court all such exhibits as he may desire to file.

Now in the matter of this petition the petitioner was directly alleging that there was nothing in his book which was seditious and, strictly speaking it was incumbent on the petitioner to file with his petition a copy of the book and a translation thereof. He did not do so. The translation in fact was made by the opposite party, the Local Government. It has been admitted on the part of the applicant that it is a fair translation. It is not a case where it would have sufficed to translate a few selected passages; the whole book had to be considered. If neither side had had a translation made we should undoubtedly have had to postpone the case until a translation had been made.

After the translation had been made by the Local Government at its expense both sides took advantage of it to read whole chapters to us.

The broad facts stand out, therefore, that the petitioner ought to have the translation made and that it was made and made satisfactorily, by the Local Government. Under circumstances we think that there can be no doubt that the only equitable course is to direct that the Local Government be recouped for such expenses as they have properly incurred, in the proportion that we have already named. The only material question then remaining is whether the sum of Rs. 3,000 stated by the Local Government to be the cost of translating the book is excessive or not. That figure is supported by an affidavit. No materials are given us by the applicant, after three days to consider the matter, to show that the sum of Rs. 3,000 is excessive. Left without any assistance we have endeavoured to ascertain for ourselves what would be the appropriate figure. So far as we have been able to ascertain Rs. 3,000 is just about the sum that either party would have paid if, in accordance with the principle we have mentioned, the book had been translated by a qualified High Court translator. We have so far referred to the cost of translation but the figure named by the Local Government includes also the cost of typing of five copies running to something over 1,200 pages for each copy and there is further the typing of some 300 pages of selections from the book. The expense was incurred because the applicant took no steps to have the translation made and we have had no materials given to us to find it excessive. Even on the basis of broad principle alone it appears to us reasonable that the costs of the other side so far as they may be found to have been reasonably incurred should be paid by the person to whose action the incurring of those costs was due.

On the question of legal fees we are given no reason for departing from the practice hitherto of allowing the fees of the Government Advocate at the rate of Rs. 200 per diem for the seven and half days, namely, Rs. 1,500.

In conclusion we set aside the order declaring the forfeiture of the advertisement, we maintain the order declaring the forfeiture of the book and we direct that the petitioner do pay to the Local Government nine-tenths of the sum of Rs. 3,000 expenses of translation etc. and nine-tenths of Rs. 1,500 fees of the Government Advocate, i. e., a total of Rs 4,050.

Criminal Revn. No. 805 of 1929, Decided on 5th February 1930, from order of Temporary Addl. Sess. Judge, Meerut, D/- 30th August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 195 (3)—Determination of superior Court is not confined to decrees which are appealable.

The determination of the superior Court, is not confined to the decrees which are appealable. What is stated is that a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decrees. [P 631 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a civil revision, so the only question which may arise is that of jurisdiction. On facts the decision of the Additional District Judge of Meerut is binding.

An Assistant Collector of the First Class granted sanction for the prosecution of Hafiz Abdul Hai under certain sections of the Penal Code. He appealed under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., and filed the appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge of Meerut sitting at Muzaffarnagar. That Judge allowed the appeal, and hence the complainant has come here in revision. Two points are raised to prove want of jurisdiction of the lower appellate Court:

1. That in a case like the present no appeal lay under S. 476-B; and 2. That the Additional District Judge of Meerut sitting at Muzaffarnagar had no jurisdiction to receive the appeal.

A third point was raised that the transfer to the Court of the Temporary Additional Judge was invalid. This argument may be easily disposed of. If the appeal was validly filed in the Court of the Additional District Judge, the District Judge of Meerut had authority under S. 24, Civil P. C., to transfer the appeal to the Court of the Temporary Additional District Judge.

An appeal is allowed under S. 476-B in every case in which a civil, revenue or criminal Court has made a complaint against any person. When such a right is given it must be presumed that the Court exercising such right is properly indicated in the provisions of S. 195 (3), Criminal P. C. According to those provisions, where appeals lie to a civil and also to a revenue Court, such Courts shall be deemed to be subordinate to the civil or revenue Court according to the nature of the case or proceeding in connexion with which the offence is alleged to have been committed. In the present case the suit was one for recovery of revenue under the Tenancy Act, and as appeals from decrees in such suits lie to the civil Court the Assistant Collector would be deemed to be subordinate to the civil Court for the purposes of this particular case. That was allowed by the applicant's counsel. His objection was that the suit was one in which no appeal lay to any Court, the valuation of the suit being less than Rs. 200. The determination of the superior Court, however, is not confined to the decrees which are appealable. What is stated is that a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decrees. If this Court passed any appealable decrees in matters relating to the recovery of arrears of revenue, appeals from such decrees would lie to the civil Court, and therefore, the Court under S. 476-B would be subordinate to the civil Court when a complaint is filed in any suit of this nature whether a decree therefrom be appealable or not. I feel no difficulty in interpreting the words of Cl. (3), S. 195 which must be construed in a way to permit appeals in every case under S. 476-B.

It was pointed out that the provisions of S. 21 (3), Bengal N. W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act, (No. 12 of 1867), refer specifically to appeals from Subordinate Judges and Munsiffs, and, therefore, the District Judge cannot assign the receiving and hearing of revenue appeals to an Additional District Judge. This may be conceded so far as the provisions of S. 21 of the Act, are concerned. There is, however, another provision contained in S. 8 of the same Act, to the effect that Additional Judges appointed to any district shall discharge any of the functions of the District Judge which the District Judge may assign to them, and, in the discharge of those functions, they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge. The function of receiving and hearing revenue appeals has been assigned by the District Judge to the Additional District Judge of Muzaffarnagar with respect to all revenue appeals of the Muzaffarnagar District. I am, therefore, of opinion that the appeal was rightly filed in the Court of the Additional District Judge and it was not necessary that it should have been filed in the Court of the District Judge of Meerut and specifically transferred to the Court of the Additional District Judge. I dismiss this application.

Emperor

Criminal Appeal No. 541 of 1929, and Referred Trial No. 153 of 1929, Decided on 9th December 1929, against judgment of Sess. Judge, Tinnevely Division.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 157—First information report—Statements are admissible only for corroborating or contradicting witness and not as substantive evidence—Criminal P. C., S. 154.

Statements in first information report can be used for the purpose of corroborating or contradicting a witness but are inadmissible for the purpose of proving that the facts alleged therein are correct: 17 C.W.N. 1213; A.I.R. 1925 All. 308 and A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 17, Foll. [P 633 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Circumstantial evidence must be conclusive.

In criminal cases based only on circumstantial evidence that evidence should be so strong as to point very clearly to the guilt of the accused. [P 633 C 2]

K. N. Ganapathi for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Beasley, C. J.—The appellant was convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Tinnevely of the murder of his father Thandava Thevan and sentenced to death.

Thandava Thevan was undoubtedly murdered on the night of 2nd June last. He was stabbed on the chest and died of that stab. He was aged 55 years. The accused, aged 24, is his only son. The deceased had a second wife, P. W. 2, who is the stepmother of the accused. Both the accused and his father owned a bandy and earned their livelihood by letting it on hire and the motive for the murder is alleged by the prosecution to have been a quarrel between Thandava Thevan and his son on this night with regard to the collection of money due from persons who had hired the bandy. As a result of this quarrel it is alleged that the accused stabbed his father and ran away. He surrendered himself to the Magistrate of Srivaikuntam on 14th June.

The evidence against the accused is purely circumstantial. There are no eyewitnesses to the occurrence. The evidence against him is that of P. W.'s 2 and 3 coupled with his absconding from the village.

P. W. 2's evidence is that after she had served the evening meal to the deceased and the accused in the house which they all three occupied and the deceased and the accused had gone outside the house on to the pial, she bolted the door and remained inside. Some time later she heard the father and son quarrelling with each other about the collection of bandy hire. The deceased was accusing the accused of not accounting for the money collected by him from persons who had hired the bandy and pointed out the difficulty this occasioned in his maintaining the family. The accused retorted that he was not bound to account to him for the money whereupon the deceased said that the accused should not touch the bandy from the next day, that he would have no food at his house and that he must earn his own living. Then, according to her evidence at the Sessions trial, there was a lull lasting about a nalgai. At the end of that time she heard the cry of the deceased 'I have been stabbed.' She lighted a lamp, went outside and there found the deceased lying on the ground holding his side where the wound was and she supported him inside the house. Her foot, according to her, struck against a knife and its sheath on the floor. This knife and sheath, however, have not been proved to belong to the accused. Hearing the cries people came to the spot, amongst them being P. W.'s 3 and 4 and two others who did not give evidence at the sessions trial and some women.

P. W. 3 lives in a house just to the south of the deceased only a few feet away, a lane separating the northern side of his house from that of the deceased. His evidence is that he saw the deceased and the accused sitting on the pials outside the house, the deceased sitting on the eastern pial and the accused on the western. He went inside his house and later on, having occasion to go outside, he heard the discussion spoken to by P. W. 2 going on between the deceased and his son. He says he recognized their voices. Then he went ~~inside~~ and slept and after an interval which he states to be three naligais he woke up on hearing a cry "My son has stabbed," opened the door and came out and there saw the deceased lying wounded on the ground. P. W. 2 carried the deceased inside the house and put him on a cot.

Another witness P. W. 4 went to the scene of the occurrence on hearing cries. He immediately went to the village Magistrate to make a report. He reached the village Magistrate at about 2 A. M. and the village Magistrate took a statement from him, Ex. B, and then proceeded to the house of the deceased where he took a statement from P. W. 2. The statements of P. Ws. 2 and 4 are incorporated in the first information report.

That is the whole of the evidence in the case and we have got to consider whether, it being purely circumstantial evidence, it is sufficient to say that it proves the case against the accused beyond all reasonable doubt. The first point to be considered is, is it true that there was this dispute between the deceased and the accused on the pial that night? With regard to this, we have the evidence of P. W.'s 2 and 3 and we are satisfied that the evidence of P. W. 2 on this point is to be accepted and also that of P. W. 3. The next thing to be considered is—and it is the most important matter—whether there was any interval of time between the quarrel and the stabbing and if so what that interval was. P. W. 2 puts it at one naligai and P. W. 3 on the other hand puts it at 3 naligais. Even if it was one naligai, it is sufficiently long interval and the murder obviously could not have been in the heat of the moment. If the accused was the murderer, then he must have sat for at least a naligai thinking about the matter, giving himself time to cool down or have gone away from the house and returned. But at the same time that interval of time does make it possible—we do not say probable—that some one else may have come to the spot and have committed the murder. If, on the other hand, the stabbing had followed the quarrel immediately, that, together with the absence from the village of the accused pointing to flight, would in our view, establish the case beyond all reasonable doubt. The circumstantial evidence would then be very strong indeed. It has been contended before us that P. W. 2 was trying to lighten the case against the accused at the Sessions trial and was giving incorrect evidence when she put this interval of one naligai between the dispute and the stabbing and the learned Sessions Judge has taken that view of her evidence. We have been asked to contrast that statement with the statement which was taken from her by the village Magistrate, Ex. E. After stating that the deceased told the accused that he should earn his living himself she stated in Ex. E that "at the time she heard the cry of, "he has stabbed," that she at once lighted the lamp from inside the house and came out with it."

That statement obviously means that the stabbing immediately followed the quarrel and, if we are entitled to treat that statement in the first information report as evidence upon this point of P. W. 2, then it is evidence of the very greatest importance. But the question is, are we entitled to make use of that evidence at all as substantive evidence? In our view, statements in the first information report can only be used for the purpose of contradicting or corroborating a witness and for no other purpose. If a witness in the Sessions trial makes a statement different to that attributed to the witness in the first information report, that discredits the evidence of the witness to that extent in the Sessions Court but does not make the statement in the first information report the evidence upon that matter in the case. We have been referred to three cases upon this point. The first is Autar Singh v. Emperor (1). On a difference of opinion between two Judges on this precise point, it was decided that the first information, although a document of great importance which is in practice always and very rightly produced and proved in criminal trials, is not a piece of substantive evidence and it can be used only as a previous statement admissible to corroborate or contradict the author of it. In Emperor v. Chittar Singh (2), it was held that a report of the commission of an offence made at a thana or even the deposition of a witness previously made would be admissible for the purpose of corroborating a witness or of throwing doubt on his statement in Court but would be inadmissible for the purpose of proving that the facts stated in it are correct. In Azimaddy v. Emperor (3), at p. 258 of 44 C. L. J., it was observed that first informations do not prove themselves but have to be tendered under one or other of the provisions of the Evidence Act. The usual course is for the prosecution to call the informant and the first information is to be tendered as corroboration under S. 157, Evidence Act. In this view, with which we agree, there is no evidence that the stabbing took place immediately after the quarrel ended. On the contrary the only evidence is that it took place either one naligai afterwards as P. W. 2 says or three naligais afterwards as P. W. 3 says. With regard to the evidence of the latter, we think that his statement that he heard a cry of "My son has stabbed" is not to be accepted as in his previous statement he stated the cry to be "I have been stabbed."

The defence set up by the accused, of course, is not a very satisfactory one because he has pleaded that he was at a place some 40 miles away collecting outstandings having been sent there by his father. He summoned five witnesses at the Sessions trial but his pleader did not examine any of them. Previously these witnesses were summoned to support his defence of alibi but they did not go into the witness-box to do so. He, therefore, set up an alibi which has not been supported by any evidence.

This is a case of very grave suspicion but it still leaves a loophole and that is the loophole provided by the interval of time between the end of the quarrel and the stabbing. It is during that time that some one else might have murdered the deceased. In cases based only on circumstantial evidence, the circumstantial evidence should be so strong as to point very clearly to the guilt of the accused.

The appeal is allowed and the conviction and sentence are set aside and the accused is ordered to be set at liberty.

PEARSON AND PATTERSON, JJ.

Government of Bengal—Appellant.

v.

Santiram Mondal—Respondent.

Government Appeal No. 2 of 1929, Decided on 27th February 1930.

* (a) Evidence Act, S. 163—Statements during departmental enquiry—Notice by defence to Crown to produce such statements—Statements inspected and used for cross-examining witnesses—Statements are in exclusive possession of Crown—Crown is entitled to have whole of statements as evidence.

Application of S. 163 is not restricted to civil proceedings only. It is applicable also to criminal trials and even though the Crown is the prosecutor. [P 637 C 2]

Where, therefore, notice to produce statements made to a Magistrate during departmental enquiries is given to the Crown by the defence and such statements are produced, inspected and used for cross-examination of several witnesses, the Crown is entitled to have the whole of the statements as evidence. The Crown as prosecutor is not a different person from the Crown that recorded the statement and the statements cannot be said to be not in exclusive possession of the Crown. [P 637 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 74—Statements during departmental enquiries by Magistrate are not public documents—Evidence Act, S. 163.

Departmental enquiry by a Magistrate in his executive capacity is not judicial enquiry and statements recorded therein is not evidence taken on oath. Such statements, therefore, are not public documents, and S. 163 can be applied to such statements. [P 638 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Case depending not on probative value of circumstantial evidence but of probative value of testimony of witnesses—Judge while charging jury saying that circumstances must be entirely inconsistent with innocence—No further explanation by Judge—This amounts to misdirection.

The correct principles in criminal trials are that in a case dependent upon circumstantial evidence the incriminating fact must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. Where

(2) A.I.R. 1925 All. 803=47 All. 280.

(3) A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 17=54 Cal. 287.

therefore, the Judge in a case depending not on the probative value of the circumstantial evidence but of the weighing of direct testimony of witnesses while charging the jury says "it should be established by the prosecutor beyond reasonable doubt that the circumstances are not merely consistent with the guilt of the accused, but entirely inconsistent with his innocence" without explaining to the jurors in the light of the principle above enunciated, it amounts to misdirection: 17 C. W. N. 379, Expl.; 80 C. W. N. 278, Rel. on.

[P 638 O 2]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Person prosecuted for giving false evidence—Case not depending on expert opinion—Judge directing that truth of the accused's statement must be impossible without explaining how far it affects his case—It amounts to misdirection.

In a case depending upon expert opinion no doubt the true rule is that no man can be convicted of giving false evidence except on proof of facts which if accepted as true show not merely that it is incredible but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be proved. But where in a case, not dependent upon expert opinion, but of a different nature the Judge enunciated the above rule without explaining to the jury wherein and how far it can be said to apply to the evidence in the case before them there is misdirection to the jury: 11 W. R. Cr. 25, Expl.

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 423 (1) (a) — Trial by jury — Appellate Court having all materials before it can deal the case itself — It is not necessary to send it for retrial.

There is nothing in the language of the Code to differentiate the way in which the powers of the appellate Courts are to be exercised, according as it is a jury trial or not. The language is wide enough and comprehensive enough to enable the Court to deal with the matter itself on an appeal even in a jury trial. No doubt the action which the appellate Court should take depends upon the circumstances of the particular case but when all the materials are before the appellate Court and the case has prolonged for nearly two years and the verdict of the jury is erroneous owing to the misdirection by the presiding Judge it is in the interests of justice that the appellate Court should deal with the matter itself: 21 Cal. 955 and 25 Cal. 230, Ref.; 25 Cal. 711, Rel. on. [P 641 O 2]

Mritunjoy Chatterjee and Bhola Nath Roy—for Accused.

N. Sirkar, S. K. Sen and D. N. Bhat-tacharjya—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Government against an order of acquittal passed on the unanimous verdict of a jury on charges under Ss. 194, 193 and 211, I. P. C.

To understand the question of law which has been raised, the facts out of which the appeal arises may be stated as follows. On 5th March 1928, a number of men employed in the Railway workshops at Lilooah under Mr. W. C.

Mould, Deputy Chief Mechanical Engineer E. I. Ry., went on strike. On 8th March the workshops were closed down. On 28th March the Agent E. I. Ry. received a deputation of strikers, but their demands were refused. In the afternoon a large number of strikers proceeded to Bamangachi, between Howrah and Lilooah, and the result of their attitude was that the police were obliged to disperse them by force. Rifle fire was opened and the result is said to have been that one person was killed, one died in hospital and two others were wounded: more, according to the assertion of the accused. After the dispersal, the District Magistrate Mr. G. S. Dutt was informed of the occurrence by Mr. Jones A. S. P., and came to Bamangachi, where he made enquiries and examined Mr. Jones, the accused Santiram Mondal and others. On 2nd April 1928 the accused lodged a complaint before a Magistrate of Howrah charging Mr. Mould and Mr. Jones, together with two other railway officials, Messrs. Withinslaw and Hitchcock, and Major Hewett, Officer in Charge of the E.I.R. Auxiliary Force, with offences under Ss. 147, 148, 149, 302, 304, 325 and 326, I. P. C., that is to say, putting it comprehensively, rioting and murder. The complaint contained the allegation, among others, that after Mr. Sturgis, Mr. Within Shaw, Major Hewett and Mr. Jones had taken over a rifle each from some of the Gurkha guards:

"Mr. Mould came running from the direction of the loco quarters and snatching off a gun from a Gurkha guard fired it without any previous warning at the strikers. One man was hit and fell down by the side of the road. Then Withinslaw, Hewett and Mr. Jones began firing at random. I saw seven or eight men lying on the ground wounded bleeding and insensible."

This complaint of Santiram Mandal was taken up by the District Magistrate, and on 9th May 1928 was dismissed by him under S. 203, Criminal P. C., after a judicial enquiry in the course of which Santiram was examined on oath. In the meantime, by 2nd April 1928, the District Magistrate, in the course of his departmental enquiry started on 28th March, had recorded the statements of Captain Christie of the Eastern Frontier Rifles, Mr. Jones, Santiram Mondal, Messrs. Vonnables, Hannay, Mould, Severs and others.

Following on the dismissal of that complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C., Mr. Mould moved the District Magistrate under S. 476, Criminal P. C., praying that a complaint should be filed against Santiram Mondal charging him with offences under Ss. 211 and 193, I. P. C. The accused filed a petition in answer, showing cause. The complaint was made on 14th June 1928, and the accused was committed to the Sessions. He was tried by the Sessions Judge and a mixed jury of five persons, who on 23rd March 1929 found the accused not guilty and he was acquitted.

The case for the prosecution was that the allegations of Santiram Mandal against Mr. Mould and the others in his complaint and in his evidence were intentionally false, that Mr. Mould had not been at Bamangachi on 28th March at all nor participated in the incidents there, and that no firing had taken place except by the Gurkhas under orders of Captain Christie. In support of this various witnesses were examined, including most of those who had made statements before Mr. G. S. Dutt in the course of his departmental enquiry from 28th March to 2nd April.

On the question of law the main point argued before us relates to the procedure adopted at the Sessions trial with regard to these statements and the way they have been dealt with. Briefly stated, the matter stands thus. On behalf of the accused at the trial, notice was given to the Crown to produce them. They were called for, produced, and inspected: not only so, but the statements themselves were placed in the hands of the prosecution witnesses by the defence and they were cross-examined upon them. Nevertheless the Judge refused to admit them on the record with the exception of only a portion of Captain Christie's statement, and they were accordingly not before the jury.

The learned Judge in his charge to the jury, however, refers to these statements in what is said to be an objectionable manner. Take for instance the cross-examination of Mr. Venables, where a passage from the previous statement was put to him as being inconsistent with his evidence.

"Q. Did you in the departmental enquiry tell Mr. Dutt, that you were busy with a few constables in keeping the mob out from the compound?"

A. No, I did not.

Q. I put it to you that on the other hand you told Mr. Dutt this.

"I was all the time fully employed in trying to keep the workers inside the loco shed pacified and at work."

A. I did.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact to Mr. Dutt you did not say a single word about the firing.

A. No.

Q. I put it to you again that having been reminded of that, you will still swear that you were not in the loco shed and were engaged with constables on the compound.

A. Yes. I was not in the loco shed all the time."

This is referred to by the learned Judge in his charge in this manner:

"It has been brought to the notice of the jury by the defence that in his earlier statement before Mr. Dutt this witness stated that he was all the time fully employed in trying to keep the strikers inside the loco shed pacified and at work, and it is argued that his present version of keeping back the crowd from the compound was not mentioned before Mr. Venables explains that he was not in the loco shed all the time. Jury to consider."

The jury having been told to consider were, however, deprived of the assistance of the complete statement itself. The complete statement which has been placed before us shows the matter in another light, and the quotation referred to by the Judge may well be said to give a wrong impression, standing by itself, in forming their judgment. Similarly in regard to a witness named Gordon, who speaks to a meeting with Mr. Mould at Howrah, he is also cross-examined on his previous statement, and as to this, though the whole statement was not before the jury, the Judge tells the jury:

"The story of Mr. Gordon going to platform-1 was not given to the District Magistrate Mr. Dutt at the initial stage."

Then much was also made by the defence of an answer recorded in the re-examination of this witness, (a slip, according to the prosecution), which might suggest that on 28th the witness and Mr. Mould had travelled on the train only as far as Bamangachi. The whole earlier statement would have shown that the previous story was, and that it corroborated the evidence of this witness on the point. Then again another witness named Dunsdon, giving evidence as to a meeting with Mr. Mould at Howrah on 28th was cross-examined upon his statement to Mr. Dutt, in the following terms.

"Q. Did you then to Mr. Dutt say that you met Mr. Mould at Howrah station at 4-15 p.m.

A. It is extremely improbable that I said that I had met Mr. Mould at 4-15.

Q. Do you see that recorded in fact? (witness looks into the record and says).

A. Yes, I see it recorded.

Q. You signed that statement?

A. I signed it without reading it.

Q. Do you attach any value to your signature?

A. Yes.

Q. As Superintendent of way and works do you sign documents without knowing what you are signing?

A. No.

Q. Can you on that statement point out anything which you might describe as inaccurate?

A. No, as far as I can see, the rest is all correct. I notice at the conclusion of the statement it is recorded that the times I have mentioned are very approximate.

Q. Therefore you might have mentioned the time as 4-15 approximately.

A. I should say it was a mistake in recording."

The learned Judge deals with it in his charge thus:

"In this Court Mr. Dunsdon has said that he met Mr. Mould on platform No. 6 at about 5-15 p.m. In the departmental enquiry he said before Mr. Dutt that he met Mr. Mould at 4-15. It is argued by the prosecution that this might be a mistake on the part of the recording Magistrate as this timing does not fit in with other timings given by the witness in the same statement before Mr. Dutt Mr. Dunsdon in other portions of his statement before Mr. Dutt said that when going up to Bally in a train he passed through Bamangachi at about 4-10 p.m. and when he was returning by the train to Howrah he passed Bamangachi again at 5 p.m. It is argued by the defence that the witness was giving various stories and therefore got confused over the timings. Jury to decide what view they will take."

Obviously if the whole statement had been before the jury they would have been in a position to say for themselves whether the mistake was one of recording or not and how if at all it affects the credibility of the witnesses' story and the whole case. We have had the statement laid before us, and it is quite obvious from the other facts and times mentioned therein, that the witness is right in saying it is a mistake in recording. The jury could have seen that for themselves, had the statement not been kept from them.

As regards the efforts made by the prosecution to have these statements exhibited, these have not been denied, and they appear again and again in the Sessions record, usually after the statement had been put into the hand of witness 1 and questions asked upon it in cross examination. A petition was submitted by the prosecution for the admission of these statements, on which the learned Judge passed an order dated 11th March 1929. From what is there stated it appears that the contention was that the defence was bound to tender the documents under S. 163, Evidence Act, upon which the learned Judge remarks:

"No case law in support of this proposition in a criminal trial in which the Crown is the prosecutor is placed before me or can be found in any of the commentaries. I hold that S. 163, Evidence Act has no application to the present case."

The learned Judge adds that it was not argued that the statements should be admitted under S. 74, Evidence Act, and he holds that these cannot be admitted in evidence as public documents. The opinion of the learned Judge touching the effect of S. 163, Evidence Act seems to be based upon the idea that the section can have no applicability to criminal trials, at any rate where the Crown is the prosecutor. There is, however, nothing to support this view, and no such limitation is to be found in the wording of the section itself. In the argument before us no such contention was sought to be upheld. The contention before us has been that S. 163 does not apply, having regard to the nature of the documents in question, though it is admitted that the other conditions specified in the section have been fulfilled. It is conceded that notice to produce was given to the Crown, that the defence called for the documents, and they were thereupon produced and inspected, and, it may be added, they were mostly used for cross examining the several witnesses. It is, however, said that the section does not apply to this kind of document but that it necessarily contemplates only that class of document to which the party calling for it would have no access unless his opponent produces it, which is inaccessible because in the exclusive possession of the other party. Then it is argued, these were not in the exclusive possession of the other side, because such statements, which were recorded departmentally by a public officer in his executive capacity, cannot be said to be in the exclusive possession of the prosecution. This is tantamount to saying that the Crown as prosecutor is a different person from the Crown that had recorded the statements, and there is no substance in such contention. The Crown undoubtedly has exclusive possession of such a document, whether it be in one department or another. We are of opinion that it was not a judicial enquiry, nor was the evidence given upon oath, and it seems to us that no question arises of these statements being public documents, but that they were documents in which S. 163, Evidence Act, could properly be applied, and that the defence were bound to put them in. The further contention is that if they are to be admitted, they cannot be put in or at any rate used without proof. But the section itself says that the party calling for it is bound to give it as evidence if required to do so, and that certainly means that it goes in as a record of the particular proceeding and that it can be looked at to see what it includes or omits. Moreover the writing of the statements and the signature by the Magistrate have been proved. It is not a sufficient answer to say that in certain cases the witnesses were asked certain questions based upon these statements when re-examined by the prosecution, and that therefore the prosecution could have got in the whole of the statements in that way as evidence. They were entitled to have the statements themselves in evidence, they made every effort to do so, and they could not foresee the manner in which the learned Judge would place the matter before the jury. Next, two further passages are objected to by the Crown as being misdirections in the charge. In dealing with the charge under S. 211 the Judge says:

"It should be established by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt that the circumstances are not merely consistent with the guilt of the accused but entirely inconsistent with his innocence."

In point of fact this passage is to be found in a judgment of Mookerjee, J., in Ram Prasad v. Emperor (1), in deciding a case where two Judges of the Criminal Bench had differed, arriving at different conclusions on a view of the facts in the case, particularly the effect of an entry in an account book. Mookerjee, J. says that the vital point in the case was whether the petitioner was deprived of a sum of Rs. 101 to which the entry in question related, and he came to the conclusion that the entry was not suspicious and that there was no reasonable ground for the theory that certain words had been added to the entry to corroborate the charge of theft. Having found that to be so it was unnecessary to do more than give effect to that finding: it would seem therefore that there is good ground for the contention of the Advocate-General that the passage objected to is obiter. The objection is to the words "entirely inconsistent" and we think that there was no need to have formulated the proposition in that way or to go beyond what was laid down in the Full Bench case Hurjee Mull v. Imam Ali (2), which laid down the test in other terms, that in a case dependent upon circumstantial evidence the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. It would perhaps not have mattered if the learned Sessions Judge in the present case had placed the passage in question before the jury and then proceeded to explain it to them further in the light of the principle enunciated in Hurjee Mull's case; but he has not done so. He might also have pointed out to the jury while dealing with this subject that it was not so much in the present case a question of the probative value of circumstantial evidence, but of the weighing of direct testimony of witnesses. Standing as it does, in the way in which the learned Judge has made use of it, it seems to us to amount to a misdirection.

The other passage is one taken from the case of Queen v. Ahmad Ali (3), where it is said that the:

"true rule is that no man can be convicted of giving false evidence except on proof of facts which if accepted as true show not merely that it is incredible but that it is impossible that the statements of the party accused made on oath can be true."

That passage again must be taken, in all fairness, with reference to the nature of the particular facts with which it dealt, and it will be observed that the main point in that case was whether a doctor in giving expert evidence of his opinion, might or or might not be mistaken :

"The evidence of the medical man (at p. 27) or other skilled witness, however eminent, as to what he thinks may or may not have taken place under a particular combination of circumstances, however confidently he may speak, is ordinarily a mere matter of opinion. Human judgment is fallible. Human knowledge is limited and imperfect," and so on. Here again we think the passage objected to must be taken as a misdirection, not from anything wrong in itself, but from the use made of it by the learned Judge, without explaining to the jury wherein and how far it could be said to apply to the evidence in the present case, which is of a different nature and not dependent upon expert opinion at all.

Clearly the matters above referred to are misdirections upon essential points arising in the case, and as will hereafter appear from a consideration of the evidence, we think that the verdict is erroneous owing to such misdirections, and that such misdirections have in fact occasioned a failure of justice: also that if the rejected evidence had been received it ought to have varied the decision, the verdict of the jury and the order of acquittal based thereon should therefore in our opinion be reversed.

The charges which the accused had to meet were under Ss. 211, 193 and 194, I. P. C. Of these the Advocate-General does not press the charges under S. 194. The charge under S. 211 is :

"that you on or about the 2nd day of April 1928 at Howrah, with intent to cause injury to Mr. W. C. Mould filed a complaint under Ss. 147, 149, 302, 304, 325 and 326, I.P.C., before Mr. B. N. Mukherji, Deputy Magistrate, charging the said Mr. W. C. Mould with having committed the offence of rioting with murder etc. knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for such complaint."

The charges under S. 193 as to giving false evidence related to (1) a statement before the Deputy Magistrate on 3rd April 1928 in support of the accused's complaint :

"Then Mr. Mould came running from the Loco, snatched up a gun from a Gurkha and shot a man who was standing under a banian tree on the side of the road and the man dropped down and did not move again";

(2) a statement on or about the 7th April 1928 in the enquiry before the District Magistrate Mr. Dutt :

"I saw Messrs. Mould, Hewett, Withinshaw and Jones take a rifle each from the hand of the Gurkha Military Police riflemen";

(3) a statement on or about the 14th April 1928 in the course of deposition at the enquiry by the District Magistrate Mr. G. S. Dutt :

"I said that Mr. Mould fired the very first shot and that the subsequent shots were fired by the other Europeans named by me."

Before going into the evidence, it is convenient to notice that at the scene of the occurrence, the railway runs in general direction of north and south while the bridge carrying the road way over it runs east and west. The bridge has an eastern approach from the Grand Trunk Road, while the western approach slopes down from the bridge into what is called the old Benares Road, having the loco shed immediately to the north, and a little further on, to the south, a walled enclosure called a graveyard, a latrine, and beyond that again a masjid with a banian tree. (The judgment then discussed evidence and proceeded). To summarise the evidence; the evidence of Captain Christie, Mr. Jones and Mr. Hannay, definitely states that the firing was done by the Indian rifle-men and not by Europeans. There is no half way house between this evidence being either true, or on the other hand calculated and deliberate perjury with a view to crush the accused. If false, it involves the formation of a conspiracy between all these persons: and it involves particularly the suggestion that Captain Christie had the readiness and presence of mind to concoct a false story straight away, and get it supported. His statement in Court as to the details of the occurrence is substantially and solidly supported in the essential points by the statement made to the Magistrate, Mr. Dutt, immediately after the occurrence and recorded by him on that very evening of the 28th March at which time it does not appear that the question of Mr. Mould's participation in the affair had become of importance though it does appear later, and it is obvious that the conspiracy must have already taken shape by the 2nd April by which time Messrs. Hannay, Christie, Venables, Mould, Dunsdon, Gordon and Jones had all given statements substantially in accord with their present testimony.

On the question of the absence of Mr. Mould from Bamangachi, the names of the various witnesses and the evidence they gave have already been referred to, and it is to be noticed especially that the definite suggestion throughout has been that all these witnesses, not excluding Captain Christie and Mr. Hannay, are conspiring to perjure themselves with the object of keeping Mr. Mould out of it. That appears from what was put to Mr. Hannay in cross-examination, that he had himself removed Mr. Mould in his car; as also from the suggestion that it was the railway officials who did the firing, including Mr. Mould. The facts themselves really lie within a small compass. On the one side, repeated statements by the accused that Mr. Mould and others fired and killed; and against that a solid body of evidence to show that the firing was done only by the Gurkhas and not by any Europeans, including Mr. Mould who was not there.

Santiram's statement.

It will be convenient here to mention the different statements of the accused.

The first is his statement in the departmental enquiry by Mr. Dutt made on 29th March 1928. He deals first of all with the disturbance on the eastern approach, when he says Mr. Sturgis "snatched a rifle from a Gurkha. So did Mr. Withinshaw and Major Hewett and Mr. Jones." He then says that Mr. Sturgis turned back with the other Europeans, who went towards the western side of the bridge. He then goes on to say :

"I followed Mr. Sturgis up to the lamp post No. 219/7 on the (western approach). I then saw Mr. Mould, Mr. Hannay, Mr. Collett and other Sahibs came rushing from the loco yard on the north of the bridge western approach on to the west end of the approach."

Then he says the police and the Gurkha choukidars began to use their lathis and the crowd began throwing stones. He says, immediately that happened, rifle fire was opened. Shots were fired over the brick wall at the men standing behind the brick wall. Then comes the most important statement for the present case, his first recorded statement of the part taken by Mr. Mould and others :

"Mr. Mould, Mr. Jones, Mr. Withinshaw and Major Hewett rushed behind the crowd into the maidan beyond the public latrine with rifle in hand, and began to shoot people indiscriminately with their rifles at random. Altogether 14 or 15 shots were fired." Then Mr. Withinshaw came back from the maidan beyond the public latrine with a wound on his eye. I was standing all the time near Mr. Sturgis half way up the western approach of the bridge."

Let it be noted that here the place of firing is put in the maidan behind the crowd, indiscriminate shooting, and 14 or 15 shots fired.

Next in order comes the petition of complaint filed by the accused on 2nd April 1928. Here he says that after the affair on the eastern side, Mr. Sturgis, Mr. Withinshaw, Major Hewett and Mr. Jones ran across with rifles back to the western side, and he himself ran after them. Then he speaks of the fight between the crowd and the police with lathis, and then says that while all this was going on Mr. Mould came running from the loco quarters and :

"snatching off a gun from a Gurkha Guard, fired it without any previous warning at the strikers. One man was hit and fell down by the side of the road. Then Withinshaw, Hewett and Mr. Jones began firing at random. I saw seven or eight men lying on the ground wounded, bleeding and insensible."

This statement differs materially from the other, in that it is now suggested that Mr. Mould took his rifle from a guard, that Mr. Mould is credible with one shot which hit a man, while the others fired indiscriminately. There is no mention of the shooting on the maidan from behind the crowd, and the indication is rather that the firing was somewhere from the western approach, seeing that Mr. Mould and the others had got their rifles from the Gurkhas.

The next statement of the accused is his statement on solemn affirmation made on 3rd April when examined in support of his complaint. This is the statement containing the passage forming the charge under S. 193, that Mr. Mould came running from the loco quarters, seized a gun from a Gurkha, and shot a man standing under a banian tree at the side of the road, and the man dropped down and did not move again: then that Withinshaw, Jones and Hewett began to shoot at random and about 7 or 8 men were wounded. This again differs from the earliest statement very much as the last one did. Mr. Mould is credited with shooting a particular man instead of firing indiscriminately, and there is no suggestion of the shooting from the maidan behind the crowd: rather it is suggested from the statement that he followed Mr. Sturgis that the shooting was from the western approach.

The next statement is one before the Magistrate on 7th April and contains the statement forming the subject matter of the second charge. Here he states definitely for the first time that the Military Police did not fire a single shot: he still says he was near a particular lamp post on the western bridge approach near Mr. Sturgis when the firing took place. It is important to bear this in mind on the question of the possibility of bonafide mistake. He adds that 35 men were wounded and two died, in addition to three carried away by the Gurkhas and he clearly remembers seeing eight men hit with bullets. Then later he says that he saw Mould, Hewett, Withinshaw and Jones take a rifle each from the hands of the Gurkhas, and adds that Captain Christie was not there at the time of the occurrence, but arrived afterwards.

The fifth and final statement we have been referred to is Ex. B the petition by which he showed cause in the proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C., and which he puts forward as representing his case when in the Sessions trial whether he had anything to say. This also is important on the question of bonafide mistake, because it contains no suggestion of that kind, but on the other hand maintains the attitude of justification by the accused as a person present at the spot who saw Mr. Mould doing the acts in person. For instance, it states that Mr. Mould should consider himself fortunate to escape trial for murder: that he instituted no false complaint, and that to the best of his observation, knowledge and belief he saw Mr. Mould take the part ascribed to him: and that attitude of justification is maintained throughout the remainder of the petition.

In his argument for the defence in this Court based upon the whole of the evidence after it had been placed before us, Mr. Chatterji has not attempted to substantiate any such conspiracy (as referred to above) on the part of the prosecution witnesses. He recognizes that if the evidence of the prosecution witnesses in its essential points is accepted, as we do accept it, then Santiram's statements could not have been true. He does not say that Mr. Mould or any prosecution witness has perjured himself or deposed falsely, but he says that he can suggest good reasons from the evidence why the jury and the Court could and should come to the conclusion that, at the worst, having regard to the circumstances attending the events of 28th March the statements of witnesses and Santiram's statements, the benefit of reasonable doubt should be given to the accused: or, as he subsequently put it, that from all the facts it cannot be said to be unreasonable for the jury or for the Court to say that it would not be quite safe to convict a man on these charges. Or, he says, the jury may have given effect to what they thought was a bona fide mistake on the part of the accused in the confusion and excitement of the moment, whereby he may have been led to confuse his impressions with direct knowledge. At any rate it is suggested that it would be not unreasonable for the Court or the jury to say that it was not satisfied that the prosecution had proved affirmatively that Mr. Mould could not have been present at the scene of the occurrence, or that the accused could not be under the honest but mistaken impression that Mr. Mould was there.

Some of the circumstances so relied upon have already been indicated in dealing with the evidence of the witnesses. It is, therefore, for instance, admitted that some European officers were at the scene of the occurrence, some of whom saw Santiram, and some of whom he must have seen. Then it is said that with reference to the evidence of Mr. Mould's movements on 28th, there is no corroboration of his statements as to his lunch at the Club; no one else speaks of it. Also there is no corroboration of the statement that he went to the Chief Mechanical Engineer's office after lunch. Then as regards the period after 3.30 it is said there was no necessity for his return to Head Office, and curious that if he did so, he should meet Mr. Hannay by chance and be told to go to Mr. Gumbrill, and that then he should have been directed into Mr. Sewer's room on the way. The interview with Mr. Gumbrill is one of comparatively late introduction in the case, and it is in evidence that this is the only draft notice or proclamation with which either Mr. Mould or Mr. Gumbrill ever had to do. Then as regards the Howrah meetings, it is said that Mr. Mould had information of the disturbances (though not of the shooting) before he left, and though not strictly responsible for anything at Bamangachi because his place was at Lillooah, still he would naturally be anxious to avert any clash or catastrophe and give his assistance, besides having a natural human interest in the matter. Then it is said that it is unlikely that Mr. Mould should be in a position to remember the details of all his movements on the 28th, there are certain discrepancies in his long cross-examination, and he is not altogether candid in what he says about whom he asked to give evidence for him. Then again it is admitted that Mr. Sturgis in the affair on the eastern slope had taken over a rifle from one of the riflemen. The accused had started his accusations as soon as the District Magistrate arrived, and some of the persons mentioned have not been called as witnesses.

In considering and weighing the value of these suggestions as bearing upon the case, we cannot be blind to the fact that the essential facts of the prosecution case have been established by a compact and weighty body of testimony in regard to the events which took place at the scene of the occurrence itself. That testimony is clear that Mr. Mould was not there, that he did not participate in the firing, that the firing was done by the riflemen alone, and not by any European at all. It is corroborated in its essential details by the statements recorded by Mr. Dutt immediately after the occurrence in the case of the most important witnesses. The accused's case has been, not that there was room for a bona fide mistake on his part, but that as an eye witness on the spot he saw Mr. Mould, and saw him and the others fire, though no other witness has suggested any such thing. To say that the prosecution story has been displaced and proved to be untrue would be idle : and no such contention is put forward before us. To say that the facts or inferences above referred to so weaken the prosecution case that any question of reasonable doubt could arise in the minds of the jury or of the Court is in our opinion an untenable position. We have considered the matter with the most anxious care. If we accept the evidence of the 'prosecution witnesses in the main essentials of the case as we do, that evidence is so overwhelming and so conclusive that there is no room for saying that the other facts relied on might have impaired or do impair the prosecution case to such an extent as to make it not unreasonable for the jury or for the Court to hold that there was a doubt and that it was not a case for conviction. Still less is there any foundation for suggesting that there is room to imagine that there was any case of honest mistake or bona fide confusion : that has never been the defence case, and there is no reasonable foundation for it in the record.

As already stated we have reversed the verdict of the jury and the order of acquittal based thereon. The question then is whether we should order a retrial, or whether we should proceed to dispose of the matter ourselves. For the defence it is argued that the alternative powers given to the Court for dealing with the case on appeal under S. 423 (1) (a), Criminal P. C., show that those powers are intended to be exercised according to the different circumstances prevailing in each case. In the present case it is said that, if certain evidence did not go to jury which should have gone, the proper course would be to send the case back to the jury for their verdict on the case with the additional evidence before them. Thus it is said that an order for new trial is the course which was followed in Wafadar Khan v. Queen Empress (4) and in Ali Fakir v. Queen Empress (5). On the other hand it is to be observed that there is nothing in the language of the Code to differentiate the way in which the powers of the Court are to be exercised according as it is a jury trial or not : the language is wide enough and comprehensive enough to enable the Court to deal with the matter itself on an appeal, though in a jury trial. If as we hold there has been misdirection, and the Court is of opinion that the verdict of the jury is erroneous owing to that misdirection, and that it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, there is no reason why in a proper case the Court may not assume to deal with the whole case itself, under the powers and duty conferred upon it by law : see Taju Paramanik v. Queen Empress (6). No doubt the action which the Court will be inclined to take will depend upon the circumstances of the particular case. To deal with the whole case itself, it would no doubt require to have all the materials before it, as we have in the present case. In the present case, also, it is nearly two years since the events out of which case arises, and in all the circumstances we consider it to be in the best interests of justice to deal with the matter ourselves. For the reasons stated above we find the accused guilty of the offences under Ss. 211 and 193 under which he has been charged and sentence him to 5 years' R. I. under S. 211, I. P. C. and three years under each of the charges under S. 193, I. P. C., all the sentences to run concurrently. The charges under S. 194 are not pressed : the accused is accordingly acquitted of those charges.

Misc. Criminal Revn. No. 247 of 1929, Decided on 6th December 1929, against order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rajshahye, D/- 21st October 1929.

Practice—Criminal Trial—Trying Magistrate should not make any suggestion or representation in his explanation submitted to High Court—Criminal P. C., S. 438.

The trying Magistrate is not entitled to make any suggestion or representation in the explanation which he may submit to the High Court of anything which is not founded on the record before him. The Magistrate is not the prosecutor. He must hold the scales evenly.

S. K. Sen and Indu Prokash Chatterji —for Petitioner.

Anil Chandra Rai Choudhari—for the Crown.

Judgment.—We have examined the record in this case and perused the explanation submitted by the Magistrate. It appears that a warrant for the arrest of this accused was applied for on 10th October 1926, and that he was arrested on 12th October 1929. There is, therefore, no ground whatsoever for the suggestion made by the trying Magistrate in his explanation that this accused was absconding. In our opinion, such a suggestion ought never to have been made. Further, there is no warrant whatsoever for the Magistrate suggesting in his explanation that this accused's brother is a zamindar's Naisab at Kabilpur and is already trying to secure false evidence of alibi on behalf of the accused. The trying Magistrate ought to have remembered that he is not entitled to make any suggestion or representation in the explanation which he may submit in any case to the High Court of anything which is not founded on the record before him. The Magistrate is not the prosecutor. He must hold the scales evenly and a suggestion of the description referred to above to a very large extent prejudices his position as Magistrate. In this case, we direct that the accused be forthwith released on bail. The amount of bail should be determined by the Magistrate and it would be such as, in the opinion of the Magistrate would be sufficient to secure his attendance in the proceedings which may follow.

Criminal Jury Ref. No. 85 of 1929, Decided on 17th March 1930, under S. 307, Criminal P. C., by Addl. Sess. Judge, Hoogly.

Penal Code, S. 302.—Possession of stolen goods recently after murder is material evidence to support conviction.

The possession of stolen goods recently after the loss of them may be indicative not merely of the offence of larceny or of receiving with guilty knowledge but of any other more aggravated crime which has been connected with the theft; this particular fact of presumption forms also a material element of evidence in case of murder.

The presumption is particularly applicable where there is satisfactory proof in case of a murder of a woman that the stolen articles were habitually worn by the deceased and that she was actually seen wearing it on the evening before the murder : 17 C. Judgment.—This is a reference under S. 307, Criminal P. C., by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hooghly in a case where the accused was acquitted by the unanimous verdict of the jury upon charges under S. 302 and S. 392 read with S. 397, I. P. C., in connexion with the death of Gyanodamoyee Dassi.

According to the evidence for the prosecution one Kali Charan Ghose had a house at Moheshpur where he resided along with his mother Gyanodamoyee, the deceased, and the accused Chintamani who was their servant. The house consisted of two rooms and verandah; in one room Kali used to sleep, in the other his mother. There was also a corrugated iron cowshed, in part of which the accused used to sleep and a thatched cowshed and cookshed. On 24th April 1929, Kali with a neighbour Dulal Ghose went to the house of one Sarat Ghose in another village for a marriage ceremony and stayed the night, leaving his mother and the accused at home. On the following day Kali went to his father-in-law's house whither his wife had gone for her confinement, and stayed there for that night. On the morning of 26th he returned home and after making enquiries and finding the verandah doors locked, he sent a lad Amulya to obtain entrance to the verandah from the stairs leading to the roof. The dead body of Gyanodamoyee was then found in the verandah with most terrible injuries on her head and body, and blood stained katari near by.

The drain from the verandah had been blocked up by clothes from inside, and there were some cow dung cakes outside. The accused was not forthcoming, and certain properties were found to be missing. The chaukidar Rasu Keora was sent for and despatched to the thana 10 miles away with the first information which was recorded at 7 p. m., and would have been recorded earlier but for the fact that the Sub-Inspector in charge was not available at the time. The first information included statement that the deceased had a gold necklace on her neck, and a silver chain on her waist, which the thief had taken away, and it was also stated that the perpetrator was the Ooriya servant. On 27th about 3 a. m. the Sub-Inspector went to the scene of occurrence and among other things obtained a list of the missing articles, which besides cash and certain dhoties were described as "Bichha har (necklace) of sovereign gold weighing 2½ tolas" value Rs. 50, and "Bichha waist chain of silver weighing 5 tolas Rs. 2/8." On 28th April, a telegram was sent by the Polba police to the police at Cuttack in the following terms :

"Daroga Manga Cuttack arrest murderer for gain Chintamani Sahu son of Nitai, Moyra village Tulsipur search his house stolen properties gold ghassa har silver gote churipar cloths cash Rs. 250 letter follows."

On that there is an endorsement of S. I. Town 10-15 p. m. :

"I don't know who "Daroga Manga" is. This refers to a murder case. Take action to-night according to this telegram. Confirmation of telegram will probably be received tomorrow."

The result of this was that on 1st May 1929, the head-constable of the Mohanga Thana (P. W. 14) went to the house of the accused and arrested him. He was accompanied by Bowri Bandhu Naik and Ananta Shau, both of whom have given evidence. One of the accused's boxes was opened by a key from the accused's possession and in it was bound a gold chain, said to be Ex. 1, since identified as the bichha har of the deceased. On this occasion, however, the head-constable says that he did not seize it, partly because the accused said it was brass and he had bought it in Calcutta for keeping his keys, and partly because the telegram referred not to a bichha har but to a ghassa har. It was not until 2nd June 1929 that a further search was made by this witness of accused's house in the presence of Bhagaban Sarman a Lakhinda Das and the chain was then taken not from the box but from the neck of the accused's wife. It was forwarded to the police at Chinsurah and on 3rd July the investigating officer said that he came to know the har had come, and he had a test identification. Meantime on 13th May the investigating officer had come to know of accused's arrival at Hooghly and on 17th May his statement had been recorded by the Magistrate. The accused's original statement says that two men whom he names gave him Rs. 5 and coerced him into leaving for his native village: but in his statements in Court he simply pleads his innocence.

Admittedly the case against the accused must depend on the circumstantial evidence, and the question for consideration is whether the facts proved are incompatible with his innocence and not capable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt.

It has been proved by the witnesses Dulal Ghose, Charubala Dasi, Hari Dasi, and Jogal Ghose that deceased was alive up to about 11 p. m. on the evening before the discovery of the murder, and that the accused was living there up till then. There is also his statement which shows he was there. There is evidence that he was missing on the morning of 26th, and that he arrived at Cuttack two or three days afterwards. Then came the search on 1st May above referred to.

Then as regards the katari, it is identified by Kali Charan as the one belonging to the house, and the evidence is that it was kept in the corrugated iron shed along with other implements in the custody of the accused. It is also referred to by the investigating officer, and he says he saw implements of agriculture in the tinroofed cowshed.

Mention must also be made of the two cloths found in the machan, which are identified by Kali Charan as belonging to the accused, one of which as well as the katari was stained with human blood, according to the report of the Chemical Examiner.

Two witnesses, Dulal Ghose and Hari Dassi depose to the fact that on the evening before the occurrence the accused had made enquiries from Dulal as to when Kali Charan would return home.

Charubala Dassi has stated that the milk from the cows was kept in a sika in the verandah, and that she milked Kali Charan's cow the previous evening: while from the evidence of Monmotha Nath Ghose it appears that after the discovery of the murder the sika was in the cookshed. Too much must not be made of this because it was there also on the previous day, and it seems it would be left there if the verandah was not accessible.

Then as to the important questions of the necklace. It was mentioned in the first information as a gold chain, and the chowkidar who gave the first information says he was informed it was a bichha har. It also appears as such in the list furnished on 27th April of the missing article, and the investigating officer says he was told about it when he went to the spot. The head-constable who searched the accused's house had explained why he did not seize it in the first instance, and his story and explanation are substantially supported by the witnesses Bowri Bhandu and Ananto Shau who were present on that occasion. The witness Hari Dassi and Charubala Dassi say that the deceased always wore a chain for some time previously and that they saw her with it on upon the night of 25th; and they identify it. Kali also identifies it as the chain belonging to his mother. Then there is the evidence of the goldsmith who produces his book to show that the bichha har was ordered for the deceased by her uncle in Aswin 1332, as well as other articles on other occasions. He identifies the one in question, and his workman who actually made it does the same, though he admits there is no private mark on it: but he says he can recognize it from the style and the workmanship. Dulal Ghose also stated the deceased used to wear a gold chain on her neck. It has been argued for the defence that the identity of the har found with accused has not been established with that of the deceased.

It is pointed out that in the first instance it was considered to be brass, and it is not explained how the second search originated; while no attempt was made to conceal it between the first and the second searches. The delay in its arrival at Hooghly on 24th June is also pointed at as showing the possibility of substitution, and the weight in this malkhana register is somewhat different from that given by the goldsmith. Then P. W. 6 admits that she was shown the har by the Daroga before the test identification. The wife of the accused when examined says that when accused came he brought cloth and a chain, and after the search she says she kept the chain round her neck by request of her husband's brother; she adds-that the jamadar asked her where the chain was; that he left previously and she then gave him the chain from her neck. She identified the chain in the Magistrate's Court, and though she does not identify it in her statement before the sessions, she does not repudiate it. Accused's brother also testifies that the har on the first occasion was like the har in question (Ex. 1) and that on the second occasion the accused's wife gave this har (Ex. 1) to the jamadar. Taking all these facts together we think that there can be no doubt upon the evidence that the necklace worn by the deceased was the one found in possession of the accused on 1st May and seized by the police on 2nd June and produced in Court as Ex. 1.

Next it is contended for the accused, that if the chain found with him was the biokha har of the deceased, the presumption arising from his possession not otherwise explained, does not go beyond a presumption against him as receiver of stolen property. Two cases were cited, namely, Sogaimuthu v. Emperor (1) where it was said that when the unexplained possession of stolen property is the only circumstance appearing in evidence against an accused charged with murder and theft, the accused cannot be convicted unless the Court is satisfied that possession of the property could not have been transferred from the deceased to the accused except by the former being murdered. But it was also recognized in that case that if there is other evidence to connect the accused with the death a jury might find upon circumstantial evidence that he was the murderer. The other case of Gauns v. Emperor (2) is merely an instance where circumstantial evidence, including the unexplained possession of jewellery belonging to deceased was held not sufficient to warrant a conclusion that the accused had committed the murder. The learned Judge in his charge has rightly referred to the principle cited in Emperor v. Neamatulla (3) that the possession of stolen goods recently after the loss of them may be indicative not merely of the offence of larceny, or of receiving with guilty knowledge, but of any other more aggravated crime which has been connected with theft; this particular fact of presumption commonly forms also a material element of evidence in cases of murder, which special application of it has often been emphatically recognized. The presumption would be particularly applicable where, as in the present case, there is satisfactory proof that the necklace was habitually worn by the deceased and that she was actually seen to be wearing it on the evening before the murder.

Upon a consideration of the whole of the evidence above referred to and after giving due weight thereto and to the opinion of the learned Judge we accept the reference, set aside the verdict of the jury and find the accused guilty of the offences charged. In the circumstances of the present case we think we may recognize the verdict of the jury to the extent of refraining from the sentence of the extreme penalty, and accordingly we sentence the accused to transportation for life under S. 302, I. P. C. No separate sentence is necessary upon the other charges.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 28 of 1930, Decided on 17th March 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—High Court will not go into merits when it had no jurisdiction to revise order—Railways Act, S. 113 (4).

Per Percival, J. C.—A person travelled without a ticket but with guard's permission. He was asked to pay extra charge which he refused. Application to a Magistrate under S. 113 (4), Railways Act, was rejected. It was contended that though High Court were to hold that revision was incompetent still it should go into the merits of the Magistrate's order.

Held : that High Court could not go into the merits of the order when it had no jurisdiction to revise that order : 5 S. L. R. 54, Dist.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the order of the City Magistrate, Hyderabad, rejecting an application under S. 113 (4), Act 9 of 1890, for the recovery of 8 annas from Gobindram, passenger as an extra charge claimed from him under Cl. 3 (a), S. 113 of the Act for travelling without a ticket, after notifying the fact that he had no ticket to the railway servant on duty with the train. Although the amount involved was 8 annas only, this application is made on behalf of the railway on the ground that the view taken by the learned Magistrate is likely to affect the railway administration prejudicially.

A preliminary objection is taken that no revision to this Court lies; and reliance is placed by Mr. Motiram for the opponent on the following cases namely:

Usifally Lukmanji v. Emperor (1) (Port Trust case), Karachi Municipality v. Jafferji Tayabji (2) (Municipal case), Imperator v. Jaro (3), Emperor v. Ghulam Kalir (4), *Bhanal Khan v. v. Emperor (12) and Arthur Grey v. Empress (13). (Chief Court of the Punjab of 6th June 1891) the last five cases being all railway cases.

We have carefully considered the above cases, especially those cited by Mr. Elphinstone, but do not find that they show that a revision application lies to this Court. In some of them the question of jurisdiction was not contested. Moreover in Queen Empress v. Ram Pal (10) for instance, the question was whether a person could be sentenced to imprisonment in default of payment of excess charge, and whether an order to that effect by a Magistrate was illegal.

On the other hand in Usifally Lukmanji v. Emperor (1) and Karachi Municipality v. Jafferji Tayabji (2) the question of jurisdiction was expressly considered, and it was held that no revision lay. The former was in connexion with S. 84, Karachi Port Trust Act, 1886, and the latter in connexion with S. 86, Bombay District Municipal Act 1901. But the wording of these two sections, especially that of the Port Trust Act, is very similar to the wording of S. 113 (4), Railways Act, so far as the question of the recovery of money is concerned. Following these two rulings, therefore, especially Karachi Municipality v. Jafferji Tayabji (2), we hold that no revision lies to this Court.

It is argued further on behalf of the applicant that even if this application is dismissed, still this Court should express its view on the question whether the learned Magistrate was justified in going into the merits of the excess charge or should merely have passed an order in accordance with the requisition of the railway; and in this connexion reliance is placed on Imperator v. Jaro (3). A reference to the judgment in that case, however, shows that it was an exceptional case. It seems to us that it would lead to greater difficulties in the long run if we were to hold that this Court has no jurisdiction and at the same time to go into the merits of the Magistrate's order. Without, therefore, going into the merits of that order we dismiss the application on the ground that no revision lies.

Haveliwala, A. J. C.—In this case Mr. Gobindram Jaichandra, a member of the Bar, on 22nd March 1929 travelled from Shahdarpur to Hyderabad without a ticket but took Guard's permission while entering the train. On his arrival at the destination he was asked to pay Rs. 2-3-0 the single second class fare and annas 8 as the extra charge. He offered to pay the fare but refused to pay the extra charge. The applicant then applied to the City Magistrate, Hyderabad under S. 113 (4), Railways Act 9 of 1890, for the recovery of the extra charge. The Magistrate held that Mr. Gobindram was not liable to pay the extra charge and dismissed the application.

The applicant now applies to this Court to revise the order of the Magistrate under S. 439, Criminal P. C. A preliminary objection has been raised by Mr. Motiram on behalf of the opponent that no revision lies and this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this application under S. 439, Criminal P. C., on the ground that the proceedings before the Magistrate were not criminal proceedings in a criminal Court and the Magistrate's action was a mere ministerial and administrative action and, therefore, not subject to revision by this Court. The question then, is, are the proceedings before a Magistrate under S. 113 (4), Act 9 of 1890, proceedings before a Magistrate in a criminal Court within the scope of the Criminal Procedure Code and as such, subject to revision by this Court? The point is rather important both from the public and the railway point of view and it is not covered directly by any authority.

Mr. Elphinstone has cited several rulings including Station Master, Ranghat v. Kabul Sheikh (11), Queen Empress v. Ram Pal (10), Bhimji N. Dalal v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. (9), but in none of these cases a point of jurisdiction was raised, and argued and these cases do not help us much in deciding this point before us. On the other hand, Mr. Motiram has cited a number of cases bearing more or less on the question of the recovery of money under similar circumstances though, under different Acts:

Usifally Lukmanji v. Emperor (1), Karachi Municipality v. Jafferji Tayabji (2), Emperor v. Ma Kale Ma (3), Queen

Empress v. Kutrappe (7), Queen Empress v. Subramama Ayyar (8). In Usifally Lukmanji v. Emperor (1), a distinct point of jurisdiction was raised and considered. Here a notice of demand of money due to the municipality was served on one Jafferji under S. 82, District Municipal Act. The Magistrate took action under S. 86 of the Act. The Court held that the Magistrate was merely an appellate authority having jurisdiction given by the Act to deal with question of a civil liability. He was not acting as an inferior criminal Court and his order, therefore, could not be revised. Then again in Usifally Lukmanji v. Emperor (1), a sum of Rs. 68-12-0 was due to the Port Trust by one Issafally. As Issafally did not pay the amount the Port Trust applied under S. 84 to the Magistrate to recover the said amount. The Magistrate ordered the amount to be recovered as a fine under S. 386, Criminal P. C. Issafally then applied to the High Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction. The Court held that under Karachi Port Trust Act, the order of the Magistrate was merely the consequential and executive order passed for the purpose of carrying out the effective order of the Port Trust, directing the applicant to pay a certain sum of money. The Court observed:

"But as regards the order which we are now asked to revise, our opinion is that it is not a judicial order but merely an executive order; and as such cannot, although for convenience, it has been given the form of a final order in proceedings between the parties, be treated as if it were an order in a judicial proceeding and subject to revision."

Now the wording of S. 113, Railways Act, is very similar to the wordings of the District Municipal Act and the Port Trust Act so far as the recovery of money is concerned. A close reading of the two rulings quoted above, leaves no doubt in my mind that the order of the Magistrate under S. 113 (4), Railways Act is merely an administrative or a ministerial order, the proceedings before him are not criminal proceedings in a criminal Court within the scope of the Criminal Procedure Code and not subject to revision by this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C. The objection, therefore, is upheld and the application is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal Nos. 267 to 278 of 1929, Decided on 14th February 1930, from decision of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad.

(a) Penal Code, Ss. 366 and 420—Conspiracy to bring girl to sell her alleging that she was relation of one of conspirators—Girl not kidnapped from lawful guardianship—Offence committed is one under Ss. 420 and 511 read with S. 120-B and not under S. 366 read with S. 120-B.

Where there is conspiracy between certain persons that a girl should be brought to Sind and sold there to some person who might be willing to buy her and that to such person it should be stated that the girl was a relation of one of the party of the conspirators and it is not proved that the girl was kidnapped from lawful guardianship the offence committed falls under Ss. 420 and 511 read with S. 120-B rather than under S. 366 read with S. 120-B.

(b) Penal Code, S. 361—It is not enough to show that mother of girl requested alleged guardian to take her under protection—He must be shown to have accepted the trust.

To bring a case within the purview of the expression "lawfully entrusted" in explanation to S. 361 it must be clearly shown that not only the mother of the girl requested the alleged guardian to take the girl under his protection but that he accepted the trust: 8 Cal. 971, Ref.

Revachand V. Thadhani—for Appellants.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J. C.—This is an appeal against the conviction by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad, who convicted the 12 appellants, accused 1 and 2 under S. 366, and others under that section read with S. 120-B. The accused were all sentenced to three year's rigorous imprisonment except that accused 9 who was a woman was sentenced to 12 month's rigorous imprisonment. Mr. Rewachand appears for accused 3, 4 and 7, and he has argued the case on behalf of these appellants, though some of his arguments are applicable also to the other appellants, who have appealed from jail.

The first point that he raised is that the girl Mani who is said to have been abducted from Ahmedabad to Mirpurkhas in Sind, was a waif and not in possession of any guardian. The evidence shows that after the death of her father and mother she had lived with her brother who died 12 months before the alleged kidnapping, and the evidence of Rewo, the Patel of the village, is that she used to come to his house and have food there. He says that the mother of the girl had committed the girl to his charge when she died; but it appears that was some time ago, before the girl stayed with her brother, and so the actually taking charge of the girl by Rewo is not proved.

There is evidence, in addition to the evidence of Rewo, that of the girl herself, Mani, and of Madhavadas (Ex. 9) that Rewo did look after the girl. It is doubtful, however, whether he can be held to have been a lawful guardian for the purpose of S. 361, I. P. C. If it is held that it is not proved that the girl was kidnapped from lawful guardianship the question will still arise whether the accused could not be convicted under Ss. 420 and 511 read with S. 120-B, with which offences the accused had also been charged in this case. The conviction was for the more serious offence namely under S. 366 read with S. 120-B but the facts of the case contained the ingredients of the less serious offence namely that under Ss. 420 and 511, with S. 120-B.

The next point in the case is whether the joint trial of all the accused was legal. Now the facts of the case briefly are, according to the prosecution story, that there was a conspiracy between certain persons at Ahmedabad and certain persons at Mirpurkhas, and the connecting link between the two parties of persons was Manilal, accused 7. Even if there is a doubt about the conviction under S. 366, I am of opinion that there is sufficient evidence to show that there was a conspiracy between the two parties, namely Ahmedabad party and Mirpurkhas party, the conspiracy being that the girl should be brought to Sind and sold there to some person who might be willing to buy her and that to such person it should be stated that the girl was a relation of one of the party of the conspirators.

It has been suggested that there were two separate conspiracies one at Ahmedabad and one at Mirpurkhas. But it seems to me it can be held that there was one conspiracy only, namely, that, the girl should be secured with the intention of her being sold in Sind. As indicated above, it is the prosecution story that Manilal was the connecting link between the parties, as there were persons in Mirpurkhas, who were arranging about the sale in Sind. But, besides the evidence of the girl herself, Mani, there is an important document, which is a connecting link between the parties, namely Ex. 27, which was sent by Manilal with the accused 8 to Ahmedabad. In that letter Manilal says:

You will kindly give the bearer Sartanji, the fan with silver balls and packets of medicine." the letter being addressed to Jeewabhai Hussain of Ahmedabad.

It is contended on behalf of accused 7 that that was a genuine letter and that he was really sending for a fan and medicines; but the point has been dealt with fully by the learned Additional Sessions Judge in his judgment; and I think that, taking into consideration all the facts of the case in connexion with the document, one cannot come to any other conclusion than that the words "fan and medicine" were really sham and were intended to refer to the girl. As pointed out in the judgment accused 8 did not bring any fan or medicine, but instead he brought the girl.

I think, therefore, that it is clearly proved in this case that there was a conspiracy in Ahmedabad and in Mirpurkhas and its neighbourhood to decoy the girl and cheat the intending purchasers by passing her off as a person connected with the party of the conspirators.

As mentioned above, Mr. Rewachand appears for accused 7, 3 and 4. As regards accused 7 it appears to me clearly proved that he was one of the conspirators. As indicated above, he had connexion with the Ahmedabad conspirators and the girl when received was taken to his garden in Mirpurkhas. In fact so far from holding that he was not one of the conspirators, it appears to me that he may be regarded as the leading man amongst the conspirators. It cannot, therefore, be held that he is not guilty.

sists chiefly of the evidence of the girl herself Mani. In this connexion it may be mentioned that the girl herself has disappeared, and it has not been possible to cross-examine her, though she had been offered for cross-examination before the Committing Magistrate. That is a point of course that can be argued in favour of the accused. But in this particular case her evidence appears to be reliable, and in various particulars it is confirmed by the rest of the evidence.

As regards accused 3 and 4 the girl states that they visited the house of accused 1, where the girl was originally detained for 8 days; that they went with the other conspirators to the house of accused 5 Gouri Shanker, that they used to visit Gouri Shanker when the girl was there and that they went to see her off at the station. In addition to the evidence mentioned above, there is the fact that on Ex. 20, which was a deed between accused 2 and 5 regarding the disposal of the girl, there is the attesting signature of Mahomed. Accused 4 contends that he did not sign that document, and his name is really Mohomed-ali. There is, however, at any rate the fact that one Mahomed attested that document.

I am of opinion therefore that accused 3, 4 and 7 were members of the conspiracy.

Regarding the remaining accused, who have appealed from jail it is necessary only to briefly state the evidence against them, as they appear to be also concerned in the conspiracy.

Accused 1 was the person at whose house the girl was kept.

Accused 2 was the person who passed the document Ex. 20 to accused 5.

Accused 5 was the person in whose house the girl was confined and he also passed the document to accused 8.

Accused 6 and 8 were the persons who took the girl to Mirpurkhas.

Then the remaining accused were concerned in the attempt to dispose of the girl at Mirpurkhas. The evidence is to the effect that accused 9 passed herself off as the mother of the girl, and that accused 10 was engaged in trying to dispose of the girl, and that accused 11 and 12 also supported accused 9 in her false statements regarding the relationship of certain members of the party to the girl.

These persons were also conspirators in connexion with the disposal of the girl.

As indicated above, it appears to me that the case falls rather under S. 420/511, read with S. 120-B, than under S. 366 read with S. 120-B. I am of opinion, however, that it is not necessary to reduce the sentences on this account. The maximum sentence under S. 420 is seven years, and in view of the alteration in the conviction the maximum sentence permissible would be one of three and half years; and in this case the sentence of three years has been passed in respect of all the accused except accused 9 who is a woman, and in respect of whom a sentence of 12 months' rigorous imprisonment has been passed.

I would therefore alter the convictions to convictions under Ss. 420/511 read with S. 120-B, but confirm the sentences passed by the Additional Sessions Judge.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—The 12 appellants were charged for two offences, first conspiracy to kidnap Mani, a minor girl aged about 13 years, from the village of Hasole, four miles from Ahmedabad, with intent that she may be compelled to marry against her will, and secondly conspiracy to cheat Santumal and Lahorimal to the extent of Rs. 1,200 in respect of the said girl. Appellant 7 was also charged with the offence of concealing the said girl knowing that she had been abducted. The learned Additional Sessions Judge found them guilty of all the offences and passed sentences against all the appellants on the first charge. He did not consider it necessary to record a separate conviction and sentence in respect of the second charge. He has, however, recorded a separate conviction and passed a separate sentence against No. 7 in respect of the third charge but ordered both sentences to run concurrently.

The learned pleader for the accused has argued that Mani was an orphan and a waif and that the prosecution had failed to prove that she was under the lawful guardianship of any one at the time she is said to have been kidnapped. In my opinion there is a good deal to be said in favour of that view. Rewo in whose care she is said to have been entrusted by her mother at the time of her death proved hostile to the Crown while giving evidence before the Sessions Court, and it was only he was confronted with the previous statement made by him before the Committing Magistrate that he admitted that the girl had been entrusted to his care. The learned Public Prosecutor does not seem to have pushed this point further by bringing out clearly on the record that not only the mother of Mani had requested Rewo to take the girl under his protection but that Rewo had accepted the trust so as to bring the case within the purview of the expression "lawfully entrusted" in the explanation to S. 361 of the Code: see Empress v. Pamantile (1). Even the exact words used by Rewo in his deposition before the Committing Magistrate have not been placed on the record, and it is difficult to know how the girl is said to have been lawfully entrusted to him. There is also evidence to prove that at the time of the death of Mani's mother, Mani had a brother who lived up to the age of 20 years. It would therefore have required serious consideration whether under the circumstance there was any occasion for Mani's mother to entrust Mani to the care of a stranger. But it is not necessary for me to consider this point further as, in my opinion, the only substantial charge in respect of which the accused should have been jointly tried and convicted was the second charge.

The object of a conspiracy in which this and several other hands operating in Sind join is to decoy and transfer marriageable girls from outside Sind to the villages in Sind where there is great scarcity of girls and to make money by selling such girls to intending husbands on the pretext that the girls offered in marriage are related to one or other of the co-conspirators. The whole object of the conspiracy is to make money by deceit and this nefarious traffic is carried on not only in respect of minor girls but also in respect of grown up girls. In such cases two separate charges, one of conspiracy to kidnap a minor girl and the other to cheat by attempting to dispose of the kidnapped girl for sale unnecessarily lays open the prosecution to an attack on the ground that the co-conspirators in each of the two conspiracies not being identical and the two conspiracies being presumably the result of two separate agreements or transactions the trial of the accused is defective. (After examining the evidence, the judgment proceeded) The charge of conspiracy to cheat is therefore sufficiently made but against all the accused.

It is no doubt true that this charge is not so specific as it ought to have been. A conspiracy presupposes an agreement, and in a conspiracy of this nature the agreement is not to cheat any parotitular person or persons but one of the public who might fall into the clutches of the conspirators. But as pointed out in Kishinchand v. Emperor (2) recital of specific offences committed in pursuance of the conspiracy are at most a surplussage and may be ignored. The accused knew exactly what was the case which they had to meet and have in no way been prejudiced, by the frame of the charge. I would, therefore, convict the accused of the charge of conspiracy to cheat. At the same time I wish to point out the desirability of a definite and separate charge for conspiracy being framed in such cases in conformity with the section and the observations made in Kishinchand v. Emperor (2).

The learned Sessions Judge has not passed a separate sentence in respect of this charge but I agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner that all the accused should be convicted under S. 120-B read with Ss. 420/511 in respect of this charge and that they should undergo the same sentence which was awarded to them by the lower Court under the first charge.

I accordingly concur that the conviction in the case of each accused should be altered to one under this section, namely, S. 120 B read with Ss. 420/511 I. P. C. and that the same sentences be maintained. With regard to the conviction and sentence on accused 7 on the third charge, it will stand and this sentence will run concurrently.

In the end we wish to observe that special credit is due to Jethmal, Head Constable of Mirpurkas for making a thorough and careful investigation resulting in conviction of this gang.

R.M./R.K.

Order accordingly.

V. L. Ethiraj and A. S. Sivakaminathan—for Petitioner.

K. S. Vasudevan—for the Crown.

Order—This is a petition to revise the conviction of the petitioner for defamation of the complainant recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Vizagapatam in C. C. 33 of 1928 and upheld by the learned Sessions Judge of Vizagapatam on 16th November 1928.

Objection is taken to the legality of the conviction on the ground that the proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate were vitiated by one of two alternative grounds: (a) that there was no complaint before the Magistrate on which he could take cognizance of the case and that the Magistrate, though informed of this defect at the very outset and objection was taken to his proceeding further with the case, brushed aside and took cognizance of the case i. e. issued process against the accused; (b) if the proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate be regarded as a continuation of those which were started by a previous complaint instituted by the complainant, the said complaint had been transferred by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate himself to the Sheris-tadar, First Class Magistrate of Vizagapatam and was pending before him and had not been withdrawn from that file to the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

To appreciate these objections it is necessary to state that the proceedings against this petitioner originally started upon a complaint filed before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 21st December 1927. This complaint was transferred to the Court of the Huzur Sheristadar First Class Magistrate of Vizagapatam and was filed there on 27th December 1927. As shown the order in C. C. 1 of 1928 of that Magistrate that complaint embraced two distinct matters (1) theft or robbery on 14th December 1927 by the present petitioner and others of a brass vessel and a cloth and (2) defamation of the complainant by this petitioner on and after 18th December 1927, by the pasting of defamatory leaflets and handbills. At the trial of this complaint the present petitioner took objection to the trial of both matters going on together as they constituted distinct offences. On this, the complainant's vakil in the words of the order in C. C. 1 of 1928 dropped that portion of the complaint which relates to the offence of defamation punishable under S. 500, I. P. C. The trial proceeded on the charge of theft and ended in a discharge dated 25th February 1898. Thereupon on 17th April 1928, Mr. Narasimha Rao, pleader for the complainant, put in a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate accusing the former vakil who had conducted the complainant's case in the Huzur Sheristadar Magistrate's Court of having improperly added a charge of robbery into the complaint and of having dropped the charge of defamation, stating that the same complaint is still pending and that therefore no new complaint is necessary and praying for process on the charge of defamation. The complainant did not sign this petition nor was she examined on oath. But the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 18th April 1928 passed this order "Take on file under S. 500 I. P. C." and posted the case to the 2nd May 1928. On that day the accused through his vakil put in a long petition pointing out the irregularity, that there was no complaint and that there was no case and that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed. The pleader Mr. Narayana Rao for the complainant answered these objections and as far as can be gathered, the petitioner's objections were overruled and the trial proceeded and ended in a conviction under S. 500 and a sentence of a fine of Rs. 100.

From the above facts it is quite clear that treated as a new case started before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate there was in C. C. 33 of 1928 no complaint nor was the complainant examined on oath. This is certainly a grave irregularity. Whether it might have been cured or not by acquiescence, there was certainly no acquiescence. This was immediately pointed out but was brushed aside. I can therefore see no ground for saying that this objection was waived or acquiesced in. This would in itself be a sufficiently grave irregularity to vitiate the subsequent proceedings.

The only way in which that objection could be met is by supposing that there was originally a complaint including the charge of defamation, namely, the one made on 21st December 1927. But this supposition only involves a still greater error because in that case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to proceed with that complaint because it was transferred to the Huzur Sheristadar, First Class Magistrate and had not been recalled. Several decisions have been cited to me to show that once a case is transferred by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate or District Magistrate to another, a Subordinate Magistrate, he cannot proceed with that case without withdrawing or transferring it back again. It is only necessary to refer to Radha Bullar Roy v. Benode Behari Chatterjee (1) and Ajab Lal v. Emperor (2). That proposition appears to me not to require any authority for its support and it has not been stated by the Public Prosecutor that there was any order by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate withdrawing the complaint from the Sheristadar Magistrate to himself. It was suggested by the learned Public Prosecutor that that also was a curable defect and must be held to have been cured in this case because that objection was not taken in that form in the Courts below. In the first place I am not at all sure, because no authority has been cited for that proposition, that it is a curable defect. If a Magistrate having no jurisdiction to try a case does so, his proceedings are void (See 530, Cl. p) and a Magistrate trying a case which has not been taken cognizance of by him or has not been sent to him in the proper way or withdrawn by him in the proper way has certainly no jurisdiction to try it. Then assuming it was curable there is nothing in the case to show that it was cured or was acquiesced in. On the contrary at the earliest possible moment the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was informed of the defect that there was no complaint in the case. That was quite sufficient to put the Court and the opposite party upon notice of the objection which went to the root of the case. It could only have been met by the answer that there was a previous complaint in the case which itself would have been met by the still more fatal objection that that complaint was pending in another Court. It seems to me that the prosecution in this case is on the horns of a dilemma as has been stated above and the learned Public Prosecutor has not satisfied me how he can escape from the one or the other horn of this dilemma. The proceedings in the lower Courts must therefore be set aside as without jurisdiction. The complaint was started by a private party and it is not therefore right that I should not allow her after all this time, further opportunity to prove her case, if she desires it, to the satisfaction of the Magistrate. The records will be sent back to the Huzur Sheristadar first Class Magistrate before whom the first complaint is pending for disposal according to law. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

(1) [1903] 30 Cal. 449. *

(2) [1905] 32 Cal. 753=9 C. W. O. 810.

Billu and another—Appellants.

Emperor

Criminal Revn. Appl. No. 301 of 1930,
Decided on 19th March 1930

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Confession excluded by trial Magistrate wrongly or rightly under S. 24, cannot be relied on in revision.—Criminal P. C., S. 439.

Where confession of an accused has been excluded by the trial Magistrate under S. 24, it cannot be taken into consideration in revision even though such confession may be excluded wrongly. [P 655 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 411—Accused knowing where stolen property was buried and producing it but falsely stating that they did it under instructions from police who themselves had buried it—Their knowledge is not innocent—Such production warrants conviction under S. 411.

Whether the fact of the accused pointing out stolen property is or is not evidence of possession is a question of fact. [P 655 C 2]

Where the accused know that a considerable amount of stolen property is buried in the ground and concealed from the public view in a certain field and produce the same but falsely state that they had pointed out the property on the instructions to do so by the police who had themselves buried the property there, their knowledge cannot be held to be innocent knowledge and such production is sufficient for conviction under S. 411 : 5 S. L. R. 257, Rel. on ; 3 S. L. R. 186, Considered. [P 655 C 2 ; 653 C 1]

Nihchaldas C. Vazirani—for Appellant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, who maintained the conviction passed by the First Class Magistrate, Shahbunder on the two applicants, Billu and Hassan but reduced the sentence in the case of each of the accused from two years' to nine months' rigorous imprisonment. We had issued notice in this case because the procedure of the lower Courts has raised some difficulty. In the first Court the learned Magistrate excluded a confession made by the accused to one Tolaram, on the ground that the confession was inadmissible in evidence because it fell within the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act, but at the same time he referred to the confession as one of the reasons for upholding the conviction. In the appellate Court the learned Additional Sessions Judge held that the confession had been wrongly excluded and he convicted the accused on the confession together with the production of the property to the extent of Rs. 673 odd by the two accused ; but he further observed :

"Mera production of property from another man's field is not sufficient to warrant a conviction under S. 411, I. P. C. according to the ruling in Queen Empress v. Gorinda (1)."

(1) [1895] 17 All. 576—(1835) A. W. N. 226;

Now in regard to the exclusion of confession I am of opinion that confession cannot be taken into consideration in this revision application because whether the learned Magistrate excluded it rightly or wrongly it was in fact excluded, therefore, the accused do not deal with the confession or explain what was the effect of it. In fact the learned Public Prosecutor observes that, if in the opinion of this Court the rest of the evidence is not sufficient for maintaining the conviction, then he does not ask this Court to rely upon the confession, but suggests that there should be a retrial in order that the Magistrate may again consider whether the confession should rightly be excluded or not. I am, however, of opinion that even if the confession is excluded still the conviction can properly be maintained on the strength of the production of the stolen property by the two accused. The evidence regarding the production of property is described in the judgment of the first Court, which shows that a large amount of stolen property was produced by each of the accused; moreover the accused in turn showed a place in the river where a box which was part of stolen property was found by the diver. The latter piece of evidence in fact tells only against Hassan, because he was the first person who showed the place in question. As against Billu this evidence should in my opinion be excluded because he showed the place only after it had been already shown by Hassan. But as regards the production of rest of property as stated in the judgment of the first Court:

"the accused Hassan first took the mashirs to a pit and took out from underneath the pit a bag wrapped in the silken shirt containing notes, cash and change valued at Rs. 327-15-9. The shirt and the bag were recognized by the complainant. Then Billu took them to another pit. He took out from underneath the pit a green turban in which a small cloth bag was wrapped containing rupees, notes and change worth in all Rs. 347-0-0. The turban and bag were recognized by the complainant."

It is mentioned in the evidence that this pit though it was in the field of one Ali Mahomed was underneath a bush and the property was buried and concealed in the pit. There is no doubt from the evidence that a considerable amount of stolen property was buried in the ground and concealed from public view in a certain field and that it was produced by the two accused.

Now it is argued by the learned pleader for the applicants that the evidence regarding the production of property is not sufficient for a conviction under S. 411 and certain rulings have been cited in support of this view. I am of opinion, however, that undue distinction is made in certain rulings between the production of property in one's own field and the production thereof in another man's field provided of course the property is buried in the ground to such an extent as it cannot be seen by outside persons. It seems to me after considering the various rulings that the most appropriate ruling out of those included in the S.L.R. in the case reported as Emperor v. Photo (2), of which the latter part of the head-note runs as follows:

"Whether the fact of the accused pointing out stolen property is or is not evidence of possession is a question of fact."

Moreover in the course of the judgment it is stated as follows:

"It is argued that mere production does not raise a presumption of guilt. This, however, is merely a question of fact. Does the production or the pointing out indicate that accused was in possession or that he had innocent knowledge that the articles had been left there by someone else? The latter inference is negated by the fact that the accused falsely denied having pointed out the property."

In the present case the defence taken up by the accused was that the police had buried the property there and had then taken them to the place and made them to produce the property. He also said that he had paid Rs. 600 only to the Sub-Inspector. Now this portion of the evidence had been disbelieved by both the Courts, the Additional Sessions Judge observing that the defence story is most absurd; and I see no reason why we should believe it. If, however, it is disbelieved we arrive to the position that the accused knew that the stolen property was buried there, that they produced the same and that they have made a false statement regarding the manner in which the property was buried and how they came to know of it. In Emperor v. Photo (2), the wording used was:

"The latter inference is negated by the fact that accused falsely denied having pointed out the property."

(2) [1912] 5 S. L. R. 257=15 I. O. 801=13 Cr. L. J. 529.

In the present case the accused did not falsely deny that they pointed out the property but they falsely stated that they had pointed out the property on the instructions to do so by the police who had themselves buried the property there. That is to say, they made a false statement regarding the pointing out of the property and there was nothing in their statements which supports the view that :

"they had innocent knowledge that the articles had been left there by someone else."

It may be noted that the defence of the two accused was throughout the same. Following therefore the latest ruling in the S. L. R. namely 5 S. L. R. 257, I am of opinion that the conviction should be confirmed.

Out of the Sind cases a reference is made by the learned pleader for the applicant to Emperor v. Umar (3). That however, was previous to Emperor v. Photo (2). Moreover the ruling is simply, as the head-note shows :

"the mere fact that the accused knew where the stolen property was concealed did not establish that they were in possession of the same."

It will be observed that the wording is "the mere fact that the accused knew" but the question is whether the inference in any particular case is that there was "innocent knowledge" or whether the inference is that the property had been placed there by the accused themselves. Emperor v. Photo (2) therefore explains and amplifies the ruling in Emperor v. Umar (3). It shows that the correct inference to draw from the production of stolen property depends upon the facts of each particular case. In accordance therefore with the ruling in Emperor v. Photo (2), the convictions and sentences are confirmed, the revision application is dismissed.

BAGULEY, J.

Maung Ko—Applicant.

v.

Maung Set—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 103-B of 1929, Decided on 21st August 1929, from order of First Addl. Special Power Magistrate, Mandalay, D/- 22nd March 1929.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 203, 200 and 202—Magistrate examining complainant and then dismissing complaint under S. 203 on result of previously made police enquiry—His order dismissing complaint is against procedure and cannot be sustained.

Under the Criminal P. C., unless the Magistrate dismisses complaint at once after perusing the complaint itself and the examination of the complainant made on oath, he is bound either to issue process against the accused or else to hold an enquiry himself under S. 202 or direct an enquiry to be held under the section. When a Magistrate examines the complainant and then dismisses the complaint under S. 203 on the result of a previously made police enquiry, the order dismissing is incorrect as there is no provision in the Code for this being done. [P 657 C 2]

Sanyal—for Applicant.

Basu—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The applicant Maung Ko filed a complaint before the First Additional Magistrate, Mandalay, charging the respondent with the dacoity. The Magistrate examined him on oath, having done so instead of proceeding along recognised lines, he recorded a diary order. "Inform D. S. P. and call for police papers. For further orders on 19th March." On 19th March he noted that he had received the police papers but had not gone through them and the case was put off to 22nd March. On 22nd March he passed orders, professing to act under S. 203, Criminal P. C. The applicant then applied in revision to the District Magistrate against the order of dismissal. The diary order signed by some officer for the District Magistrate runs: "Call for proceedings and put up on 27th June 1929." Apparently it was not put up on that date but on the next day 28th June 1929 the District Magistrate recorded a diary order.

"I too have seen the police papers. I consider the action taken by the First Additional Magistrate to be correct. The application for an order for further enquiry under S. 486, Criminal P. C., is summarily dismissed."

Apparently neither the applicant nor his advocate was given an opportunity of being heard. Against this order the applicant now comes to this Court in revision.

The Criminal Procedure Code is quite clear with regard to what has to be done when a complaint is filed before a Magistrate under S. 200. The first thing the Magistrate has to do is to examine the complainant on oath and the substance of the examination must be reduced into writing and it must be signed by the complainant and also by the Magistrate. This was done in the present case. S. 200 would not apply to this case. The next section is 202. This authorises a Magistrate after the complainant has been examined, to postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against and either enquire into the case himself or direct enquiry or an investigation by any Magistrate Subordinate to him, or by a police officer, or by such person as he thinks fit. The Magistrate in this case did not take any action under S. 202. The next step is under S. 203, the Magistrate may dismiss the complaint after considering the statement on oath, if any, of the complainant and the result of the investigation on enquiry if any under S. 202, if there is in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding. It appears therefore that a complaint can be dismissed under S. 203, if the Magistrate is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding, after considering the statement on oath of the complainant and the result of the investigation or enquiry, if any under section 202. As I have said no action was taken under S. 202, and therefore, the Magistrate had only the complaint and the statement of the complainant on oath to consider. So far as I can discover there is no provision in the Code which authorizes a Magistrate to send for the result of a previously made enquiry and dismiss complaint on that. There is a case quoted in "Sohni's" Code of Criminal Procedure, to which I am unable to refer, which is summed up as follows:

The reasons for dismissing a complaint should be based on inferences of fact arising from or disclosed by

- (1) The complaint,
- (2) The sworn statement of the complainant and,
- (3) The investigation, if any, made under S. 202.

This provides a wide field; anything outside it is extra judicial and must be discarded.

The same rule is laid down in Dr. H. P. Sandyal v. Kungeshwar Misra (1) and in Umar Ali v. Safer Ali (2). It is laid down:

"He is bound to examine the complainant and then can either issue summons to the accused or order an enquiry under S. 202, or dismiss the complaint under S. 203."

In the present case, the Magistrate examined the complainant and then dismissed the complaint professedly under S. 203, on the result of a previously made police enquiry. There is no provision for this being done. So far as I am aware, under the Criminal P. C., unless he dismissed the complaint at once after perusing the complaint itself and the examination of the complainant made on oath, he was bound either to issue process against the accused or else to hold an enquiry himself under S. 202, or direct an enquiry to be held under the section. I therefore, set aside the order of discharge passed by the First Additional Magistrate, and direct that the complaint be properly dealt with on the lines laid down in the code by such other special power Magistrate as the District Magistrate may transfer the case to for disposal.

Capital Sentence Case No. 6 of 1929 and appeal No. 918 of 1929, Decided on 11th March 1930.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 114 Illus. (b)—Case against accused depending upon whether approver's story is corroborated in material particulars—Most careful investigation is required with regard to identity of accused person.

Where the case against accused depends on the view taken as to the corroboration of the approver's story in material particulars, and whether it is such, taken along with the other facts and circumstances, that it can be relied upon as bringing home the guilt for the crime, the corroboration of the approver's story requires most careful investigation upon the question of the identity of the accused persons as participators in the occurrence.

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 297 and 298—Simple language should be used by Judge while charging jury—If opinion is expressed by him jurors should be made aware that they are sole judges of facts.

The duty of a Judge is to help the jury to arrive at a proper verdict of the facts, and with that in view it is far better to use the plainest and simplest language in his charge. Also if he does express his opinion on the facts he should do it in such a way as makes it quite clear to the jurors that he is not in any way seeking to usurp their functions or to interfere in matters the decision of which is exclusively within the competence of the jury itself.

Khundkar and Anil Chandra Roy Chaudhuri—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference under S. 374, Criminal P. C., in the case of accused 2, Monohar Mandal and Kalicharan Mandal; the former was charged with the offence of murder of one Ratikanta Biswas under S. 302, I. P. C., and Kali Charan under S. 302/114, I. P. C. The jury found unanimously that both Monohar and Kalicharan instigated the murder and were present at the place of occurrence: a majority of 5 found that Monohar actually shot at and committed the murder of Ratikanta while the minority of 4 gave him the benefit of the doubt as to whether he actually fired the shot which caused the death. The occurrence took place after nightfall somewhere about 8 or 8 30 p. m. on 11th May 1929. For the details the prosecution must needs depend on the statement of the approver one Santosh Bain who was present.

According to Santosh, Monohar had approached him in Magh with information that Kalicharan was offering 60 for obtaining a gun and Rs. 140 for the murder of Ratikanta. Accordingly one Harekrishna of Bhalua was approached but he declined to make over his gun and a similar attempt from one Sukhlal came to nothing. Then the approver goes on to say that in Falgun he accompanied Monohar to the house of one Ram of Barakhalsi, and from him stole a gun which they proceeded to conceal in a hay stack of one Hiralal Bairagi. Monohar then gave Santosh 6/. Thereafter powder was purchased and three lead bullets prepared by Monohar. Then one day they set off to effect their purpose but on the way Monohar thought the gun was overloaded and the head of the ramrod broke off in the barrel, so it had to be fired off to clear it, and the result was a crack in the stock. Nothing was done on that occasion and the gun was hidden in the old place. Then Monohar made two more bullets and put a new head on the ramrod. On two other occasions they set out with the gun powder and bullets but nothing came of it.

Then on Saturday the day of the occurrence Santosh says he was summoned by Monohar and found Kalicharan there. A little after sunset they two went to Hiralal's bari, got the gun and set out. they crossed the Khal by a bamboo bridge and met Kalicharan near the house of one Nim Chand. Monohar loaded the gun, while Santosh spent 3 or 4 matches trying to light a cigarette. Then the three of them went to Ratikanta's bari near by. Ratikanta was at the time busying himself about the needs of his guest in the outer house. Then Ratikanta returned and sat on the floor of his hut with his feet on the verandah. He began to smoke and a lamp was near by. Then the three advanced to the cover of a ruined hut with a mat screen distant only 5 or 6 cubits from where Ratikanta was. Then Monohar fired the gun and shot Ratikanta who died practically at once. The three then fled. Kalicharan going off towards his house, while Manohar and Santosh taking the gun swam over the khal and hid the gun in the stack of one Harobola and also buried the powder flask in Santosh's bari. The neighbours collected on the spot and the first information was given at the thana, 2 miles away, at 10 p. m. that evening by a man named Mandar Tarafdar. The case against the accused depends on the view taken as to the corroboration of the approver's story in material particulars and whether it is such taken along with the other facts and circumstances that it can be relied upon as bringing home the guilt for the crime to the two accused persons.

As regards some particulars there is undoubtedly corroboration. The gun and powder flask were produced following the statement of Santosh. There is a crack in the stock which had become larger, according to the owner, since the gun left his possession. There was the new ramrod head. The bullets were recovered in and just outside the hut, and the gun expert says they must have been fired from a close range of about six yards from a single barrelled gun. We have also the F. I. R. dated 5th March 1929, given by Ramcharan Mandal about the theft of his gun: some pieces of lead discovered in Monohar's house; and some matches picked up where Santosh said he had lighted a cigarette.

It is upon the question of the identity of the accused persons as participators in the occurrence that the corroboration of the approver's story requires most careful investigation. In one matter regarding dates there are certain inconsistencies or contradictions in his statements (Here the judgment discussed evidence and then proceeded) As presented to us in the argument, the case against the accused really turns upon whether there should be considered to be sufficient corroboration of the approver upon the question of identity of the accused, and upon a careful weighing of the matters above mentioned we are of opinion that the proof is not sufficient to exclude a reasonable doubt. Both the accused are acquitted and we direct that they be forthwith set at liberty.

We cannot leave this case without pointing out to the learned Judge that in some particulars his charge has laid itself open to attack in this Court. It has been described to us as dogmatic, as couched in highflown language and as calculated to prevent the jurors from performing their duty as Judges of fact. In certain passages it reads more like a judgment than a charge, and in others appears to be a downright imposing of the Judge's opinion upon the mind of the jurors. For instance upon the question of the variations in the evidence as to the time when the attempt to bring in Harekristo was first made a difference of two months the learned Judge says:

"It serves to demonstrate how confused persons of the rank and status of Santosh and Harekristo may be in respect of time."

Again, some point was made by the defence that the two mistresses of Monohar and Santosh were not called as witnesses: the learned Judge in dealing with this does not refer to the presumption that the jury might draw if witnesses were not called who ought to have been called, but puts it to the jury in this way:

"If it is true that the former were the mistresses of Santosh and Monohar and that Hiralal tolerated the visitations at his house the presumption surely is that they would be hostile to the prosecution and not likely to support any case tending to cause restriction of the liberty of the two persons."

Then again there are portions of the charge where the language is, to say the least, imaginative and fanciful. That appears in the opening portion of the charge and in charging the jury as to the benefit of the doubt, the learned Judge concludes his remarks by saying:

"You will notice the use of the term, . . . 'reasonable.' It is possible, gentlemen, to doubt anything, the revolution of the earth around the sun or on its own axis, that life itself is nothing more than a vain chimera or that a deity exists, but the doubt contemplated in this principle of law is one that is reasonable, that is, where definite choice after due meditation is not possible, the doubt which is akin to the conclusion arrived at in a syllogistic dilemma"

That is more likely to confuse the jury than to assist them, even if it was properly translated to them. The learned Judge should bear in mind that his duty is to help the jury to arrive at a proper verdict of the facts, and that with that in view it is far better to use the plainest and simplest language; also that if he does express his opinion on the facts he should do it in such a way as to make it quite clear to the jurors that he is not in any way seeking to usurp their functions or to interfere in matters the decision of which is exclusively within the competence of the jury itself. The reference is, accordingly, rejected and the appeal allowed,

SUHRWARDY AND GRAHAM, JJ.

Prahlad Barman and others — Petitioners.

V.

Emperor — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1267 of 1928, Decided on 25th March 1929.

Penal Code, S. 498—Legal proof of marriage is necessary to support conviction—it must be shown that marriage other than that under general law could be effected in particular way.

Among Hindus there are forms of marriage called customary marriages which are in the nature of exceptions to the recognized forms of marriages. There must be satisfactory and sufficient evidence on record that a marriage other than that under the general law may be effected in a particular way.

A complaint under S. 498 was made by a low caste Hindu. He alleged that he had married the woman enticed away in 'nika' form. The only evidence of marriage that was adduced was that the complainant put vermilion on the forehead of the woman and that there was a feast of the caste people.

Held, that the evidence of marriage was legally insufficient for a conviction, under S. 498. [P 660 C 1]

Girija Prosanna Santhal and Bijutt Bhusan Santhal—for Petitioners.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule has been issued on the ground that the evidence is legally insufficient for a conviction under S. 498, I. P. C. The complainant belongs to a low caste Hindu sect known as Rajbangshi. His case is that he had married the woman said to have been enticed away in the form which is known among them as nika marriage, that is, marriage with a widow. The point that has been urged before us is that there is not sufficient evidence on the record of legal marriage. It is not necessary to consider the circumstances under which the witnesses for the prosecution were not cross-examined by the defence because on the evidence as it stands, the marriage between the complainant and the woman has not been proved. The only evidence of marriage that has been adduced in this case is that the complainant put vermilion on the forehead of the woman and that there was a feast of the caste people. There is no evidence that any mantra was recited or whether there was any priest who officiated and solemnized the marriage. According to the Hindu Law certain ceremonies have been laid down as necessary for a valid marriage. There is no evidence that any such ceremony was observed on the occasion of this marriage of the complainant with the woman. But among the Hindus there are forms of marriages called customary marriages which are in the nature of exceptions to the recognized forms of marriage. They deviate a great deal from the orthodox style; but as it is observed in Sir Gooroo Das Banerjee's Tagore Law Lectures (The Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, Edn. 3, p. 236) the customary rites must be strictly proved; in other words there must be satisfactory and sufficient evidence on the record that a marriage other than that solemnized under the general law may be effected in a particular way. There is no evidence in this case that among the caste to which the complainant belongs it is enough for a valid marriage to put vermilion on the forehead of the wife and give a feast to the people. The fact that the woman lived with the complainant for a long time and bore children is not evidence of a valid marriage. In this view I hold that the evidence of marriage in this case is insufficient for the purpose of S. 498, I. P. C. We accordingly set aside the conviction of and the sentence passed on the petitioners and direct that they be discharged from their bail bond.

Graham, J.—The rule was issued to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioners under S. 498, I. P. C. should not be set aside on the ground that the evidence is legally insufficient for a conviction under that section.

The main contention is that there is no proof of a valid and legal marriage, and that therefore the conviction cannot be supported. It is well settled that in cases, where marriage is an ingredient of an offence, the fact of marriage must be strictly proved. Is there any such proof here? The evidence on the point is given by the complainant and two witnesses and is to the effect that the marriage, a nika marriage was solemnized by applying 'vermilion' to the forehead of the bride followed by a feast. It is also said a barber was present.

The two witnesses referred to above were not cross-examined, so that their evidence is un rebutted. But is it sufficient? It seems probable that the fact of the marriage was not seriously disputed at the trial, but the prosecution was nevertheless bound to prove that a valid marriage had taken place. No doubt among the poor and ignorant classes the same importance is not attached to forms and ceremonies as among the upper classes. But it is also to be borne in mind that loose unions without any sort of marriage at all are not uncommon among the lower orders. It is essential in such cases that the fact of marriage be proved, and I am not prepared to hold that the meagre and unsatisfactory evidence which has been adduced in this case was sufficient to discharge the onus of proof. The barber referred to as having been present at the marriage was not called as a witness, and no explanation of this omission has been given. Some evidence too might have been given to establish that the marriages of this particular class of people are validly performed in the manner described by the complainant and his two witnesses. No such evidence is forthcoming.

I agree therefore that the rule should be made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

defence of insanity upon arguments merely derived from the character of the crime.

Similarly in Reg v. Stokes (35) Rolfe, B., said that it would be a most dangerous doctrine to lay down that because a man committed a desperate offence, with the chance of instant death and the certainty of future punishment before him, he was therefore insane, as if the perpetration of crimes was to be excused by their atrocity.

The Indian Courts have also held that it is an established rule of law that the mere absence of motive for the perpetration of crime is not sufficient in itself to raise an inference of the existence of a powerful and irresistible influence of homicidal tendency (36), nor is the enormity, extreme moral perversion or apparent purposelessness of the crime itself, without any further evidence, sufficient to establish the plea of insanity (37), for, our not knowing the motive does not prove that there was no motive (38 & 39).

But the absence of all motive for a crime, when corroborated by independent evidence of the prisoner's previous insanity, is not without weight (40). So where he entertained delusions as to dangers which threatened his wife (41), and where the evidence showed that the prisoner was known as mad Nga Pyan, that immediately before he committed the offence he was noticed by persons to be in one of his mad fits, that he was under a delusion that the Phongy whom he attacked was keeping his sisters and daughters in the monastery and that the act was utterly unprovoked and motiveless (42), it was held that the facts proved unsoundness of mind which prevented the accused persons from knowing the nature of their acts, and that S. 84 applied.

Similarly where there was evidence that the father and grandfather of the accused had been, at one time or another, insane, that before the murder committed by the accused, she was subject to occasional fits of insanity, that shortly after the murder and for several months subsequently she was insane and when there was no motive for murder, it was held that she was not accountable for her action. Half-witted attempt made by her to conceal the murder was not held sufficient to show that she was sane when she committed the crime (43); but [see (44)] where it was held that though the accused was of unsound mind at the time he committed the murder he knew perfectly well that he was doing a wrong thing. It is submitted that this view seems to be incorrect and vague.

In a case where similar circumstances as those in (41) and (42) above were proved to exist, but where the accused confessed the crime to the village Magistrate and answered the questions put to him rationally, but before the committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge he denied that he had killed the child, it was held that he was not proved to have been by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was contrary to law; and the conviction was upheld, (45). So also in (46).

DRUNKENNESS AND DRUG HABIT

Sections 85 and 86, I. P. C., lay down the rule of law applicable to persons under the influence of intoxication, and are outside the scope of the present article; but there are some cases which fall within the purview of S. 84 as well and deserve to be considered. It is a firmly established principle of law that voluntary drunkenness and drug taking is never an excuse for crime, and the fact that a man was drunk at the time of committing an offence, makes no difference, per se, to the question of his criminal liability; but involuntary drunkenness, as a ground of exemption, is treated in just the same way as insanity, the accused being liable to show that he was so drunk that he did not know (1) the nature of the act, (2) that it was wrong, or (3) that it was contrary to law (47).

If voluntary drunkenness causes a disease which produces incapacity to know the nature of the act committed or that it is wrong or contrary to law, then the case is covered by S. 84, I. P. C. (48); the reason being that a person who is of unsound mind should be judged by the ordinary rules in regard to insanity, no matter whether the insanity arose from disease of the brain or from persistent indulgence in intoxicating drugs or liquor (49).

BURDEN OF PROOF AND EVIDENCE

The law provides that where a person is accused of an offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions, is upon him and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances (50). In the undermon-tioned American case (51) it was laid down that the presumption of law that every one is sane merely authorises the jury to assume at the outset that the accused is criminally responsible for his acts, but the accused is entitled to be acquitted of the charge if, upon all the evidence, there is reasonable doubt whether he was capable in law of committing crime.

In a very important recent Allahabad case (52) it has been held that the rule of law that the accused must prove that he comes within the exception does not mean that he must lead evidence; and where it is apparent from the evidence on the record whether produced by the prosecution or by the defence that the general exception would apply, the presumption is removed and it is open to the Court to consider whether the accused comes within the exception. In (53) Sadasiva Aiyar expressed the opinion that homicidal mania need have no motive to perpetrate the crime, and the chief evidence of the existence of insanity appears to be in the act itself. But see (9), (10), (11), (12) and (13), p. 15.

The evidence relating to the mental condition of the accused must be given in open Court—a mere written certificate of a Medical Officer that a prisoner is of unsound mind, is not sufficient evidence of the prisoner's insanity. The Medical Officer should be called as a witness, and personally and carefully examined (54); but he should give opinion as to the state of mind, not as to the responsibility of the prisoner, the latter should be left to the jury under the direction of the Judge (55).

Where an accused person is supposed to be insane, a medical man, who has been present in Court and heard the evidence, may be asked, as a matter of science, whether the facts stated by the witnesses, supposing them to be true, show a state of mind incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong (56).

PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE

A perusal of the Indian Case law (57) shows that although the Courts have always required a strict proof of the existence of insanity exempting an accused person from punishment, yet they have also held that mental derangement falling short of unsoundness of mind contemplated by S. 84, Penal Code, is an extenuating circumstance affecting the sentence. In such cases it has been the usual practice of the High Courts to send up the records to the Local Government for necessary action under S. 401, Criminal P. C.

Youth by itself (59), mental weakness caused by disease (59) and insobriety caused by excessive drinking (60), have also been held to be extenuating circumstances requiring consideration; but a deaf and mute person will not be excused simply because of his inability to hear and speak, if his mind is sound, for want of speech and hearing do not imply want of capacity either in the understanding or memory, but only a difficulty in the means of communicating knowledge (61). In this case the view of the Punjab Chief Court (62) that a deaf and mute person who is unable to understand the proceedings in Court should be dealt with as a lunatic, was dissented from.

The procedure to be followed in cases where there is reason to believe that the accused, when he is produced or brought before the Court for trial, is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, has been prescribed by Chap. 34, Criminal P. C., Ss. 464-75. A person acquitted of the offence alleged to have been committed by him, on the ground of insanity is to be detained in safe custody and his case is required to be reported to the Local Government for action (63). Such a person, if declared fit may be released by the Local Government (64) or delivered to the care of a relation or friend on good and sufficient security (65).

When an issue is raised as to the soundness of mind of an accused person, the Court is bound to enquire it before it begins to record evidence, whether the accused is or is not incapacitated by unsoundness of mind from making his defence. If it fails to do so, the subsequent enquiry about soundness or unsoundness of mind does not cure the defect. The question, whether an accused person is entitled to an acquittal, under the general exception of insanity as defined by S. 84, can only arise when the procedure laid down by Ss. 464-65, Criminal P. C., was fully followed (66).

Object of Cross-examination

"The object of cross-examination," says Johnson, K. C., "from a litigious stand point, not from the high moral ground of getting at the real truth and exposing falsehood and all that, but from the purely litigious, professional stand point, may be stated as follows: First, it is to get something, no matter how small, to help your own case. If you fear further examination is dangerous and absolutely fruitless, far better leave it alone, far better to stop the witness if you feel that what you are getting is not, as a fact aiding or assisting your client in the litigation. Another object is when you cannot get that which helps your client, try to get something to weaken "your opponent," but that is got by a different process entirely; and the third is to endeavour, if you can, to separate the truth from the falsehood, more particularly if the truth told by your opposing witnesses would be of assistance to your case; for no cross-examiner is a common prosecutor to discover wrong doing. Now, how should we best attain this object; in what way are we going to further the interests of cross-examination? In order to give an answer to that it will be necessary to consider, that evidence is not facts, but is the impression of facts, and the result of certain facts or certain things which have happened. Now, the object of cross-examination is to reform these impressions, to minimise them, to explain them, to question them if you will, to doubt them if you will. But the facts themselves are something quite apart from the evidence. There are no facts in evidence at all, because evidence is merely and mainly a record of facts expressed through the witness-box. In law and in the trial of a case, facts are the result of evidence and are found independently of witnesses or anybody else; that is, the Judge or the jury has the mental impressions given by the witness of what he saw or heard and given to the best of his ability. The tribunal then finds the facts upon these impressions conveyed through the witness-box. Now, it is important that these impressions should be watched closely in the trial of every case, and the impression of every witness in regard to the way in which he records and expresses his facts. These impressions, in the aggregate, enable, as I said, the tribunal to get at the facts and it is the duty of the cross-examiner, it is, indeed largely the only object of the cross-examiner, to ascertain just what the condition was, and how it was affected by the surrounding circumstances.

I can give you an example. A great many years ago when I was much younger at the Bar than I am to-day and it illustrates my point, perhaps better than anything I can say, there was a case tried before the late Mac Dougal, J. The man was charged with burglary. Now here were the facts presented by the witnesses: A man was seen coming from the back door of a place in Toronto late at night within the burglarising hours; his identification, there was not much question about that; his manner and conduct were such as to cause comment by the officers who took him in charge; he was evidently in great haste to escape from the house; he was arrested, unable to give any satisfactory account of himself at the moment, and some tool or other was found in his coat pocket and the man was arrested, charged with burglary, the case of the Crown apparently absolutely complete. Now that man might have been convicted and might have served his term; a perfectly plain case, but it developed on the cross-examination of certain witnesses for the Crown, and upon the evidence which was given for the defence that this was what happened: that this man was a friend of the servant of the house, that he had been in spending the evening, and by some accident or another he had left the door open, that he was a man of very excitable temperament and that he had, just before leaving, a row with this servant; he was running to catch a car because it was late at night, and he had to catch one before a certain time, that he was a machanic, and he had a certain implement, a wrench or something of that kind in his pocket at the time of his arrest.

In the witness-box the witnesses swear to damaging evidence and the outward facts seemed to be perfectly honest, but they were at the wrong angle; the witnesses had received these impressions through a wrong perspective, and, the result of it was, as I understand the case, that if it had not been for the righting of the evidence in that way or in some other way the man would have been convicted."

(Rangoon)

BAGULEY, J.

K. C. V. Reddy

v.

Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 1305 of 1929, Decided on 14th November 1929, from order of Dist. Magistrate Rangoon, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 59 of 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 195 and 476—Examination on oath of Income-tax Officer making complaint regarding false return is unnecessary.

When an Income-tax officer makes a complaint under S. 476, in respect of a false return his examination on oath as an ordinary complainant is unnecessary and is a mere superfluity. [P 662 O 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 476 and 476 (b)—Recording of finding under S. 476 is discretionary—Mere fact that complaint is made gives right of appeal under S. 476 (b).

It is discretionary with the Income-tax officer making a complaint in respect of false return to record a finding that he is of opinion that an offence referred to in S. 195 is committed. Under S. 476 (b), the mere fact that a complaint has been filed opens the way to an appeal. An appeal can be filed as soon as the complaint is made and the appeal would be not against the finding but against the filing of the complaint. [P 663 O 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 537—Charge vague—But accused and his counsel knowing real nature of charge and no failure of justice—Vagueness of charge is cured by S. 537—Criminal Trial.

When the charge is on the face of it meaningless and ununderstandable, but where the accused and his counsel know the nature of the offence the accused is charged with, and no failure of justice has resulted the vagueness or incomprehensibility of the charge is cured by S. 537. [P 665 O 2, P 666 O 1]

Delanville and Gregory—for Appellant.

Gaunt (Offg. Govt. Advocate)—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant, K. C. V. Reddy, has been convicted under two charges under S. 193 I. P. C., and S. 177, I.P.C. On the first charge, he was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 16,000, and on the second charge he was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000, or in default two months' rigorous imprisonment, the sentences of imprisonment to run concurrently. Against this conviction he now appeals. The facts that gave rise to the prosecution are as follows: K. C. V. Reddy is the senior member of a partnership which for several years has held a contract for the supply of labour both to the Port Trust for wharf coolies and also to the British India Steam Navigation Company for the supply of coolies for working on their ships. For many years the Income-tax Department paid no attention to the accounts kept by the firm, but assessed them to income-tax arbitrarily, guessing the profits as being 10 per cent. of the total payments from these two bodies. For the year 1927-28, however, they appear to have wished to proceed on a more exact basis and they called upon the firm to furnish a return of income for the past twelve months in the usual form. A return was furnished in two portions because the constitution of the partnership had changed in the course of the year. The two returns together showed a loss for the year of between Rs. 25,000 and Rs. 26,000. The Income-tax Department were not satisfied with this return and called for the production of books. Some books were sent to the office and then in consequence of what came out in what have been referred to in this case as the Port Trust defamation cases, an enquiry was instituted by the Criminal Investigation Department with the result that many further books were seized. These books are now before the Court and no dispute has been made to the allegation that they are books kept up by the firm. In the end, the Income-tax Department decided that the business so far from being run at a loss, had been run at a very large profit and an arbitrary assessment was made by the Income-tax Department upon which the firm has been assessed to income-tax. In addition to this, the present appellant together with his other partners was prosecuted. At first there were four persons accused but in the course of the trial, proceedings against three of them were dropped or transferred to other cases and charges were framed against the present appellant alone.

In this appeal, questions of law have been raised and also questions of fact. I will first deal with the law points. The first objection on legal grounds can be easily dealt with. The appellant has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000, or in default two months' rigorous imp-rissonment under S. 177, I. P. C. S. 177, I. P. C., consists of two paragraphs and it is obvious that he has been convicted under para. 1. Under this paragraph only simple imprisonment may be imposed and the maximum sentence is six months. Consequently, the sentence of three month's rigorous imprisonment could at worst be only three months' simple imprisonment and the maximum substantive term of imprisonment under the paragraph being six months the maximum sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is six weeks. The Crown did not contest this portion of the appeal.

The next ground of appeal is that the procedure of the Income-tax Officer in filing the complaint was irregular and this irregularity completely vitiates the proceedings. Under S. 195, Criminal P. C., these offences could only be dealt with off the complaint of the public servant concerned and S. 476, Criminal P. C., prescribes how that complaint is to be initiated. It is not contested that the Income-tax Officer in an enquiry of this nature is acting as a revenue Court, and S. 476, omitting the unnecessary words, runs as follows :

"When any Revenue Court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into any offence referred to in S. 195, sub-S. (1), Cl. (b) or (c) which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court and shall forward the same to a Magistrate, etc."

In the present case, the Income-tax Officer concerned was Mr. F. C. Fischer. When he had satisfied himself that an offence or offences had been committed, he first of all, as was required by the Income-tax Act, communicated with the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax and received directions from him that the firm should be proceeded against under S. 52, Income-tax Act, that being the section which has to be called into play when anybody files a false return for income-tax purposes. Having got this direction, he filed a complaint direct to the District Magistrate, Bangalore, appeared before him and was examined on oath as an ordinary complainant. This examination on oath was unnecessary, because, when a public servant files a complaint under this section, it is not necessary that he should be examined on oath like an ordinary complainant, but this examination on oath being a mere superfluity it is impossible to hold that the appellant was in any way injuriously affected by it, and, therefore, this examination on oath may be disregarded. Complaint, however, is made that there is no finding recorded by the Income-tax Officer that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made and that there was no preliminary enquiry, and that by the absence of these two things the appellant has been injuriously affected. As regards the preliminary enquiry, it is obvious from the wording of S. 476 that no preliminary enquiry is necessary for the section itself refers to "such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary."

That other omission requires more consideration. It is argued that as there is no finding recorded that further enquiry is expedient in the interests of justice, the appellant was deprived of his right of appeal which he would get from S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. It is said that unless and until a finding has been recorded, he could not possibly file an appeal because there was nothing to appeal against. A close scrutiny of S. 476-B, however, does not appear to show that it is necessary for a finding to be recorded in writing in order that an appeal may be filed. S. 476-B, omitting the unnecessary words, states :

"Any person on whose application any revenue Court has refused to make a complaint under S. 476 or against whom such a complaint has been made, may appeal to a Court to which such former Court is subordinate, and the superior Court may thereupon direct the withdrawal of the complaint."

This does not say that an appeal has to be filed against the finding. The mere fact that a complaint has been made opens the way to an appeal under this section, and on the wording of S. 476-B it seems that the appeal could be filed as soon as the accused became aware of the fact that a complaint had been filed. Another point which has to be noticed is this, that S. 476, Criminal P. C., does not state that if the Court finds that further enquiry is expedient it shall record a finding that further enquiry is necessary in the interests of justice. The word used is "may." In Sohni's Criminal Procedure Code, an extract is given from the proceedings of the Select Committee which revised this section, and they draw attention to the fact that they have substituted the word "may" for "shall"; and when a "shall" is altered into a "may," the deduction which is usually made from this change is that whatever it was said shall be done before was compulsory, whereas the alteration of "shall" to "may" makes the action discretionary. If, however, there were any doubt in the matter one has to see whether by any chance the accused has been injuriously affected by the irregularity in the procedure. In this case, what is complained of is that the appellant owing to there being no finding recorded lost his right of appeal. As I have said, in my opinion he did not lose the right of appeal. He could have filed an appeal as soon as the complaint had been filed and his appeal would have been not against the finding but against the filing of the complaint. The Court to which he would have to appeal would be the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the revenue Court which filed the complaint. The Income-tax Officer when examining the return made for the purpose of income-tax was subordinate, in that appeals from his decisions would lie to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax. The Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax as it happened was the same officer who directed the Income-tax Officer to file the complaint, so that the appellant, had he lost a right of appeal, lost the right of appealing to the officer who was really directing his prosecution. It is somewhat strange that this should be the result of reading together the various Acts which appertain to this case, but that is the result. His appeal would lie to the same officer under whose orders the Income-tax tax Officer was acting when he filed the complaint. This right of appeal certainly appears to be of practically no value.

Only one case has been quoted to me on that point on behalf of the appellant Kalisadhan Addya v. Nani Lal Harra (1), but this does not appear to me to be directly to the point, and I do not think it necessary to deal with the various rulings put forward on behalf of the Crown, as the point appears to me to be sufficiently clear in this particular instance. I am unable to agree that the appellant has been in any way injuriously affected by the failure to record a finding to the effect that it was expedient in the interests of justice that further enquiry should be made and I must hold this law point against the appellant.

The next point is with regard to the charge. This case, as I have said, started with four accused persons, all the four partners of the firm. It was begun before Mr. Collis, then District Magistrate, Rangoon. He recorded a certain amount of evidence and then he was succeeded in his office by Mr. Martin, who recorded the rest of the examination-in-chief and examined the accused. Then he framed charges against the present appellant on 19th August 1929. The case came up for hearing again on 22nd August but on that date Mr. Martin was already under orders to make over charge of his post and he took no further action. The case was called the next day when it was dealt with by Mr. Collis, who had again become District Magistrate, Rangoon. He notes that a de novo trial was not claimed. He then proceeded with the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses. He further examined the accused, heard the defence witnesses, and, after hearing counsel on both sides, passed orders. The actual wording of the charge framed is as follows:

(I only quote the first head of the charge because the appellant has been acquitted on the second head and there is no complaint of any ambiguity about the third head.)

"That you, K. C. V. Reddy, in August 1928, fabricated false evidence for the purpose of being used in a judicial proceeding, to wit, income-tax return of K. C. V. Reddy & Co. for the year 1927-1928.

The wording of this charge is most unfortunate, because when closely examined, it does not seem to mean anything at all. The charge literally is one of fabricating false evidence to be used in a judicial proceeding, to wit, in the income-tax return. An income-tax return is not a judicial proceeding and therefore on the face of it the charge is more or less meaningless. If the idea was that the false evidence referred to was the income-tax return itself, then the first head of the charge overlaps the third head of the charge, because the third head deals with the making of a false return for the purpose of income-tax and again there would be no point in the first head of the charge. One would naturally have expected counsel for the accused when this charge was framed to have objected and said at once that his client was being charged with something entirely meaningless. No objection was raised at this time. It may have been that the charge had not been carefully studied at the moment it was framed. This, as I have said, was on 19th August. By the time 22nd August came when appellant's counsel should have been ready to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, he certainly should have studied the charge to see exactly the points which he had to bring out in cross-examination. Apparently he did not do so. Had he done so, it was his duty to object on the next day when a new Magistrate took up the case again. If the objection had been made and disallowed, he could at once have claimed a de novo trial, and a de novo trial would have rendered necessary the framing of a new charge, and the new Magistrate most probably would have preferred to frame a charge in his own words which would have been more comprehensible. Again no objection of this kind was raised, but the appellant's counsel cross-examined Mr. Fischer with a view to elucidating exactly what the charge was based upon and he got this information from Mr. Fischer. The case went on further and it was not until appellant's counsel was actually addressing the Court at the close of the case that he professed his inability to understand the charge and urged that his client did not know what charge he was meeting. I am told by the Bar that when at this late stage he raised the objection he was told that he must be held to know perfectly well what the whole case was about and that S. 537, Criminal P. C., would cure any defect in the charge. S. 537 provides that "no finding, sentence or order . . . shall be reserved on appeal" on account of :

"any error, omission or irregularity in the . . . charge . . . unless such error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice."

It is perfectly clear and must have been known to all the parties concerned in the trial of this case that the appellant was being charged with making a false income-tax return and with fabricating false evidence for the purpose of being used in a judicial proceeding, namely, the enquiry by the Income-tax Officer into this income-tax return. As I have said, the documents before the Court were the income-tax return itself and the books kept by the firm. The business of this firm was a large one. The total receipts from the Port Commissioners and British India Steam Navigation Company were in the neighbourhood of six lakhs of rupees per annum and naturally a business of this kind requires a considerable amount of account keeping. The income-tax return was based presumably on the ordinary ledgers and cash books. These ledgers and cash books have not been mentioned before me, but what have been dealt with at considerable length are the books from which the ledgers and cash books were compiled. (The judgment then dealt with Exs F. and G. marked as "wharf coolies payments books Exs. J., the Daily Labour Register Ex. S. series, small blank note books containing names of ships, maistries' names, hours of work etc and Ex. T. the books with counter-rolls and proceeded.)"

The allegation made on behalf of the Crown is that the firm was engaged in swelling their expenses for income-tax purposes in order to show a reduced profit or as it happens in this particular case, an absolute loss instead of profit. They say that the procedure was that the books showed payments to maistries for work which they never performed and the maistries themselves were dummies. One witness Velegala Veera Reddy (P. W. 14) gives a whole series of names which he says were dummies, many of them are not maistries at all. The allegation is that when the Daily Labour Register had been entered up with the names of maistries actually employed ; some of these dummies were added to the names of the maistries who actually worked and corresponding charges were placed in the book. The Coolies Payments book was written up from the Daily Labour Register and consequently these dummy names would appear again in the Coolies Payments book. The sums entered against the dummy names would be added into the total expenses and from there would find their way into the main books of account of the firm. To account for these dummy names in the Daily Labour Register, false books of the Ex. S series were made up, and to correspond with them a false series of the Ex. T books were also made. In all 40 Ex S books have been produced, of which 39 are said to be false, S-to S-39, and one only Ex S 40 genuine, Exs- S 39 S 40 overlap as regards dates and show some striking divergencies, there being more names of maistries employed in S. 39 than there are in Ex S-40, and Ex. S-40 is said to be the true book. In the genuine Ex. T book, all of them have the counterfoils written through a carbon sheet, while on the other hand the false Ex. T books are all written directly in pencil and have no serial numbers; whereas all the carbon Ex. T books have serial numbers. It is said by one of the witnesses that this was done to save time in writing up the false Ex. T books, and the absence of any serial number is also striking. It would be of importance for the genuine Ex. T books to have serial numbers entered because then at the fortnightly settlement when any maistry came for payment with his bundle of foils they could be quickly checked against the corresponding counterfoils remaining in the books, which would no doubt be preserved in the office for purposes of checking.

It will thus be seen that supposing the Daily Labour Register had been doctored in this manner and corresponding series of Ex S books and Ex. T counterfoil books had been prepared to support it, the next step would be to transfer the dummy names to the wharf coolies payment book. This would be all right so far as genuine maistries were concerned. They would get their money and duly sign or put their thumb marks on the corresponding receipt stamp. But for the dummy maistries, there would be no one to sign a receipt. The allegation is that various odd men were picked up to come and put their thumb marks in acknowledgment of receipt of the money.

Having set out the facts in this manner all of which were before the Court and had been made clear at latest by the time the prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined, it is perfectly certain that the appellant or at any rate his counsel must have known exactly what offence he was being charged with. In fact, when Mr. Fischer was recalled for cross-examination after the framing of the charge for the last time, the question was put to him to which he gave the following answer :

"Another book I would rely on is the thumb impression books (Exs. F, G and J.) They are important. The case is based on these and the Ex. S series. I do not know who put the thumb impressions. . . ."

With that answer given to him on 4th September the appellant's counsel must have known that his client was being charged with producing a false income-tax return and fabricating false evidence to support that return which would have to be used at the judicial proceeding, namely, the enquiry by the Income-tax Officer into the income-tax return of K. C. V. Reddy & Co. I am unable to accept the contention that the defence were wandering in a fog all the way through the case. Even when arguing this appeal, learned counsel suggested that his client even then did not know what the charge meant, and it was not until he was replying to the reply of the Assistant Government Advocate that he then put forward the theory that the word "in" occurring in the phrase "to wit, in the income-tax return" was a typo error due to the Magistrate beginning to write the word "income-tax" before the word "the.". It seems to me quite possible that Mr. Martin when framing this charge had not got a thorough grip of the case, and it was contended that if this Magistrate thought one thing and the accused thought another he was liable to suffer an injustice. But this really in my opinion is not to the point. The actual trial of the present appellant must be held to have begun with the framing of the charge. Up to that point there were four accused in the dock and the investigation was to a certain extent preliminary. It was after the framing of the charge that the real trial began with a further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, and whatever may have been in Mr. Martin's brain at the time he framed the charge, what really matters is what Mr. Collins thought the charge meant when he dealt with it. If he was thinking of the charge on the same lines as the accused was and has convicted him of an offence on which he was actually engaged in defending himself, there can be no plea of a failure of justice, and S. 537, Criminal P. C., will cure the vagueness or incomprehensibility of the charge. As soon as Mr. Fischer had been recalled for further cross-examination and had told the appellant's counsel exactly the books on which a charge was based, the appellant had no further grounds for pleading that he did not know what charge he was called upon to meet. It would, I must say, have been much better if Mr. Collis, when his attention was drawn to the wording of the charge in the appellant's counsel's final speech, had re-drafted that charge to make it apply exactly to the facts of the case. He could have done so then as the trial was not complete and it would have been better to have done that than to have adopted the slightly strained interpretation that he has placed upon it in his judgment, in which he regards the income-tax return itself as being a summary of the fabricated accounts and therefore fabricated.

It would have been much better to have cleared the air by pointing out that the income-tax return was not evidence but was simply the basis on which the judicial proceeding was founded and that the evidence which the accused was charged with having fabricated was the actual books produced to support that income-tax return at the judicial proceeding held by the Income-tax Officer. As I have said, the appellant's counsel was very late in raising the objection which should have been raised directly the charge was framed by Mr. Martin or which should have been raised when Mr. Collis took charge of the case again, and if that objection had been unsuccessful, he still had the remedy of a de novo trial. Instead of that, he preferred to hold his peace and then try and score a technical success at the last moment. It is true that counsel for an accused has no duty except to his client, but even a prosecution is entitled to fair play and to produce this point at the very last moment in the hope that it might be overruled and thereby the accused might get a technical victory in his appeal is not in my opinion treating the prosecution fairly (After discussing evidence, his Lordship proceeded). The appellant puts up no active defence. His one plea is that he knew nothing of what was going on; that throughout practically the whole of 1927-28 the business was in the hands of his partners; that in the middle of 1928 he was busy with his litigations, which apparently consisted of the Port Trust Defamation cases and the Port Trust Bribery enquiry; and that he signed some papers blank and knew nothing about the rest. In fact he says he was a mere nominal figure-head and a dummy. He blames impartially his partners and his clerks. He does not profess to name anybody in particular. He just says it must have been one or the other. It will be noted, however, that the first question put to him in his examination was:

"It is said that you are the principal partner of K. C. V. Reddy & Co., Labour Contractors" and his answer was "Yes, I am the first partner."

It is in evidence that he is the man who has worked up the business to its present position. He was originally the chief member of the partnership. The contracts were obtained by him. His name is the only one to appear in the firm name, and although there is an arrangement of dividing up the profits of the partnership in certain fractions, he, as the leader of the partnership gets a special payment of Rs. 250 a month. It is true that although the deed of partnership says he gets this as Managing Partner the payment was continued to him even when he was away in India and it appears to have been to a certain extent in the nature of a payment for the goodwill of the use of his name. A man does not get Rs. 250 a month for the use of his name unless he is either a really leading man in his particular line of business or else he has a title or some dignity which the remaining partners of the firm think will bring lustre and profit to the firm. The appellant does not come under the second category, therefore he must come under the first. Except when he was in India he was never anything in the nature of a sleeping partner like one of the men originally accused with him, who was proved to be illiterate and fully occupied with a business of his own at a mill on the other side of the river. The appellant was undoubtedly a working partner. As regards his allegation that the clerks wrote these things down, with his implication that they must thereby have swindled him and his other partners, I need only mention that the total which appears in these dummy names is very considerable indeed. In fact it is worked out at something like 30 per cent. of the gross receipts of the business. A businessman who has worked himself up in the business on a large scale may perhaps, when his head is full of big schemes lose his grip on the details and thereby allow his clerks to swindle him with regard to a few petty sums, but no man who has carried on business and made a big success of it has ever done so while allowing his clerks to swindle him out of 30 per cent. of his gross receipts, the suggestion that his fellow partners were swindling him seems quite unacceptable. The present working partner appears to be Dana Reddy and if he were the man who was engaged in feathering his own nest out of the firm's money it would seem exceedingly unnecessary for him to do what he appears from the evidence to have done, and that is to double cross his partners and try and get this contract for himself. There is evidence that Dhana Reddy went behind his partners and tried to get the contract for himself. Why should he do so, if he were absorbing all the profits of the business and a bit more?

If the books are true and the labour contracting business resulted in a loss of Rs. 25,000 or so in a year, it would be a cause of wonderment as to why there has been such competition to get the contract and why the present appellant the moment his contract with the Port Commissioners had come to an end did not close down. As it is, he says that the contract has been extended six months at a time and surely he would not have taken an extension of a losing business merely to oblige the Port Commissioners.

Another argument which was put forward for the appellant is that he really had no further interest in this business, because he was so heavily indebted to the other partners that all his share of the profits would be taken by them to pay his debts. Undoubtedly the man is in debts. There is one letter on the record showing that he signed promissory notes to the extent of more than a quarter of a lakh in July 1928 and until those had been paid off there is little doubt that he did not stand to get any cash profit out of the firm. Still he was interested in getting these debts paid off and there can be no doubt whatsoever that he was interested to show that as much profit as possible was being made out of the business in order that he should get his liabilities discharged as quickly as possible.

*With regard to the actual signing of the income-tax return he says he signed it without looking at it. Had this been the case, he cannot be said to have signed it, believing it on any substantial ground to be true, and a man who signs a document which is false and which he does not believe to be true is as liable as though he had made a deliberately false statement. This when he is bound by law to say the truth.

Another point raised was that the appellant could not be found guilty of fabrication of false evidence, because there is no proof, in fact no serious suggestion, that he actually wrote up any of the books or registers that are the subject matter of the trial. That he did not do so is quite clear but this is one of the cases to which the maxim "Qui facit per alium facit per se" applies. So far as the Cooly Payments Book and the Daily Labour Register are concerned it is more a matter of making the books false, than of making false book. There is little or no evidence as to whose hand wrote the books, and there were many people who put their thumb marks to the cooly payments book, and many of these latter put their marks bonafide in acknowledgment of actual sums of money actually paid to them, and yet they were engaged in helping to make a false book. These books were made false owing to a system which was applied to them. I doubt that it was the brain of the appellant that devised that system, but it would never have been applied without his direct approval and orders, and for that reason I would hold that it was the appellant, possibly alone, possibly with the aid and connivance of his partners and others, who caused the books to become false books and therefore, as a principal party fabricated false evidence.

To sum up, we have here in the appellant a man who in the past has been the successful head of a big business. He sends in a demonstrably false return of income to the Income-tax Office. He does not say that he had any reason to suppose it was true when he signed it. He says he signed it blindly. He was bound to furnish information on the subject to a public servant as such. The information which he furnished showed that the business was running at a loss, whereas it was undoubtedly running at a profit. Had he merely given a wrong figure for the profit it might have been argued successfully that he had not got all the books before him at the time he signed it but he had reasonable grounds for thinking that the profit was what he stated. As it was, when the return was put up to him showing a loss of a quarter of a lakh, he must have had reason to believe it to be false because he had been enjoying profits from that business. Then we have, with regard to the first charge, the fact that when this income-tax return was put in there was in the office a complete set of books which were false in material particulars and which must have been deliberately manufactured to dovetail into each other. He says he knew nothing about this. He trusted the cashier and the cashier must have let him down. He says that none of the partners ever checked the books. This is not the way, particularly in this country, in which successful businesses are built up and it is against human nature and particularly against the nature of this particular class of Indian. These books were evidence intended to be used to support the false income-tax return and therefore I hold that the appellant was correctly convicted under S. 193, I. P. C., and under S. 177, I. P. C.

I was particularly addressed on the question of sentence. The learned Magistrate in addition to imprisonment sentenced the appellant to a fine of Rs. 16,000. The sum is a somewhat peculiar one and no reasons were given as to how it was arrived at. In a connected case, however, the same Magistrate gave his reasons as to why he fixed on that sum. It was that in his opinion the correct assessment which the income-tax authorities might have put upon the appellant was Rs. 16,000 and as they were entitled under the Income-tax Act as a penalty to exact double the assessment, he fined the appellant the amount which the Income-tax Department might have mulcted him as a penal assessment. I am not altogether in favour of the criminal Courts being used to assist in the collection of revenue. If the income-tax authorities had wanted a penal assessment, they could have done it themselves and I think in a case of this nature the Courts might well confine themselves to inflicting a penalty of imprisonment, if they think that is necessary, together with making the accused contribute reasonably towards the costs of his own prosecution. In this country there is no power to direct that an accused be made to pay the costs of the prosecution and so the Courts must make an estimate themselves. In this matter I understand that the fees of the Government Advocate were paid by the Department. The actual costs of the trial, the witnesses' expenses, investigation by the Criminal Investigation Department, etc., were, I presume, paid by the Local Government.

I therefore confirm the convictions and direct that the appellant do suffer on the first charge three months' rigorous imprisonment and pay a fine of Rs. 10,000 or in default a further nine months' rigorous imprisonment, and on the second charge I direct that he suffer three months' simple imprisonment, the substantive sentences to run concurrently. I inflict no fine with regard to the second charge. Of the fine, if realized, half will be paid to the Income-tax Department as compensation towards their share of the costs of the prosecution.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 46 of 1930, Decided on 2nd April 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Meerut. D/- 6th January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 179 and 181 (2) — Provisions of Chap. 15-A are not independent of each other and S. 179 applies to cases of breach of trust and cheating.

The provisions under Chap. 15-A are not separately independent of one another so that if one provision applied, the other would not so apply; and consequently merely because there are certain provisions with regard to places of inquiry, in a case of criminal breach of trust under S. 181 (2) it does not follow that S. 179 would not apply to that enquiry. S. 179 does cover that offence as also cheating under S. 408, Penal Code: 19 All. 111, Rel. on.; 32 All. 397; 33 All. 29; A. I. R. 1924 All. 77, Ref.; 34 All. 487, Dist. [P 669 C 2]

Judgment.—One Mr. Rashid Ahmad filed a complaint in the Court of a Magistrate of the district of Meerut against Mr. Rich, Manager of the French Motor Car Company, Delhi, for an offence under S. 408, Penal Code. On behalf of the defendant the question of jurisdiction was raised and both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have decided it in favour of the complainant. What was complained of was this. The complainant had negotiations with the defendant for the purchase of a lorry of which the body was afterwards made at Meerut. The entire lorry with the body was delivered to the complainant at Meerut when he made over to the driver of the lorry for Mr. Rich a cheque for a sum to cover the price of chassis and insurance not only for the chassis but for the body as well. When the lorry happened to be burnt it was discovered that the body costing Rs. 500 had not been insured by the defendant who was alleged on these allegations to have committed a breach of trust with respect to the money which he received through his driver at Meerut by a cheque. The cheque was drawn on the Dehra Dun branch of the Imperial Bank and was cashed at Delhi.

The learned Judge has held that the Meerut Court had jurisdiction both under S. 179 and S. 181 (2), Criminal P. C. S. 179 runs as follows:

"When a person is accused of a commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done or any such consequence has ensued."

The learned Judge has argued that the thing was done in Delhi by Mr. Rich in omitting to insure the body of the lorry, though, according to the allegation of the complainant, he had received money for such insurance also. The doing of the thing brought into play the jurisdiction of the Delhi Court, but the consequence which was the loss by the omission of insurance to the complainant was suffered by the complainant in Meerut, and, therefore, the jurisdiction of the Meerut Court did arise. To meet this contention the applicant Mr. Rich's learned counsel quoted the ruling in the case of Girdhar Das v. Emperor (1), by a single Judge of this Court. Personally I am not clear whether the learned Judge desired to rule that the provisions of S. 179 would not apply to a case of criminal breach of trust because there were certain other provisions under S. 181(2) which would apply to criminal breach of trust. I do not remember it to have been held in any case that the provisions under Chap. 15, are all separately independent of one another, and if one of the provisions apply another would not. It is apparent that if such was the desire of the learned Judge to make a pronouncement, he has made that pronouncement in conflict with a continuous opinion of this Court ever since 1896. The first case to which my attention has been drawn is that of Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (2). An employee of a company, the office of which was at Cawnpore, was charged with the offence punishable under S. 408, I. P. C. The complainant alleged that B being in charge on behalf of the company, at a place in Bengal, of certain goods belonging to the company and being ordered to return the same goods to Cawnpore, never did so, and failed to account for the goods or their value, to the loss of the company. On this allegation the learned Chief Justice held that the Court at Cawnpore had jurisdiction to inquire into the charge, because the consequence of B's acts, namely, the loss to the company, occurred in Cawnpore. Reference is given in the judgment to the provisions of S. 179, Criminal P. C.

(1) A.I.R. 1924 All. 77.

(2) [1896] 19 All. 111=(1896) A.W.N. 121.

The next is that of 1910 : Emperor v. Mahadeo (3). The case of O'Brien was followed by a learned Judge of this Court. These two cases were followed by another learned Judge in Langridye v. Atkins (4). Another ruling of 1912 quoted by the learned counsel for the applicant is distinguishable: Ganeshi Lal v. Nand Kishore (5). In this case the complainant firm had a branch shop at Gauriganj and the criminal breach of trust was committed at Gauriganj. For this reason a learned Judge held that the direct consequence happened in Gauriganj where the complainant firm had a shop, and the subsequent consequence of a loss at Cawnpore should not be taken into account to give the Cawnpore Courts jurisdiction. In this case the learned Judge specifically relied on the provisions of S. 179, Criminal P. C., but he did not think that in that particular case the direct consequence of loss ensued at Cawnpore. He was of opinion that the consequence ensued at Gauriganj where the complainant had a shop and a subsequent consequence of loss to the main firm would not give jurisdiction to the Courts where the main firm was situated. So far without any reference to the provisions of S. 181 (2) I hold that the Meerut Court had jurisdiction in accordance with the provisions of S. 179, Criminal P. C. Coming to S. 181, the learned Judge was correct in pointing out that jurisdiction must follow the complaint and not the final decision.

In the present case the allegation is that part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received in Meerut. It was argued that the cheque was not payable in Meerut ; nor was it cashied at Meerut. The cheque, however, was property as understood in S. 408. According to the definition, moveable property is intended to include corporeal property of every description (S. 22, I. P. C). Under both sections, therefore, the criminal Courts at Meerut had jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence under S. 408. The complaint is filed under that section. It is not very clear from what point of time a charge of cheating was started. As to cheating also the provisions of S. 179 would cover the offence and give the Court at Meerut jurisdiction.

I dismiss this application. The stay order shall be discharged.

BOYS AND YOUNG, JJ.

Ramnath—Appellant.

v.

Emperor

Criminal Appeal No. 273 of 1929, Decided on 11th June 1929, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Allahabad, D/- 15th February 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 465—Demeanour of accused raising suspicion as to sanity and capability to make defence—Court must come to definite finding on point—Absence vitiates conviction and sentence.

Where there is something in the demeanour of the accused which would raise or raised doubt in the minds of Judge, jury or assessors or both, the Court cannot proceed with the trial unless the Court comes to a decision and is satisfied that the accused is not of unsound mind and consequently not incapable of making his defence under S. 465. The absence of any proper trial and finding as to the question of accused's capacity to make his defence vitiates conviction and sentence.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Boys, J.—Ramnath, the appellant, was put on his trial on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C., of having murdered his wife on 26th August 1928. We have read the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and the material evidence and, as the learned Additional Sessions Judge says in his judgment, the facts are not in dispute. We need not therefore recapitulate them further than is necessary for the purposes of the present judgment. On 28th July 1928, Ramnath made a confession which was recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C.

(3) [1910] 32 All. 397=6 I.C. 563=7 A.L.J. 819.

(4) [1913] 35 All. 29=17 I.C. 792=10 A.L.J. 431.

(5) [1912] 34 All. 487=15 I.C. 319=10 A.L.J. 45.

It is only necessary to read that statement to appreciate that Ramnath was at that time either wandering in his mind or shamming. The committing Magistrate, however, who heard the witnesses and who again had of course to take the statement of Ramnath, recording it under S. 364, expressed in his commitment order the view that whether or no Ramnath was at the time of committing the offence of unsound mind, he was at the time of the inquiry before the committing Magistrate capable of making his defence. He found as follows :

"From the statement of this very witness (Bachchoo) it appears that there is a history of accused having gone mad at one time some two years ago. He is, however, quite fit to make his defence, gave quite rational replies to all questions put to him by the Court at the inquiry."

. The case apparently came before the Additional Sessions Judge and the assessors for the first time on 13th October 1928. The learned Additional Sessions Judge on that date took the statement of Dr. Gade, an Assistant Civil Surgeon, who furnished a certificate (Ex. K) to the effect that in his opinion the accused was not insane. Dr. Gade further stated on oath that he had had the accused under observation for three days from 10th October to 12th October, that Ramnath answered questions rationally, looked sane and slept well and showed no signs of insanity. He stated that he thought that Ramnath could understand the nature of the proceedings and that if the three days' observation had indicated any suggestion of insanity he would have kept the man under observation longer. Ramnath was also examined by the Court and he made a statement which again clearly indicated that his mind was wandering or that he was pretending. All three assessors thought, on hearing the doctor's statement and the evidence of an uncle of the accused and what the accused had to say, that the latter was "sanki," which the learned Judge says was stated to mean "a state of mind when a man ceases to act like a responsible agent." We think that both the Judges and the assessors were right, on the materials at any rate that they then had before them, in not being satisfied that the accused was capable of defending himself. The learned Judge said that he thought that it was desirable that Ramnath should be kept under observation in a hospital for at least three weeks before he could be certified to be in a fit state of mind to stand his trial. The case was adjourned until 12th January 1929, but owing to the absence of two out of the three assessors had to be adjourned again to 6th February. The order-sheet shows that in the interval an Assistant Civil Surgeon had certified that he could find no reason for holding the accused to be insane. This is disclosed further by a certificate of the doctor of 30th November 1928. It was upon receipt of this certificate by the learned Judge that on 12th December he fixed a date for the trial.

So far there is, in our view, no fault to be found with the proceedings. S. 465 requires that the question of whether the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence should be tried by the Court with the aid of assessors, and should be deemed to be part of his trial before the Court. We are satisfied that the learned Judge was himself of opinion, on seeing the second certificate by an Assistant Civil Surgeon given after observation for a considerable period, that the accused was not then of unsound mind and was capable of making his defence ; but we are unable to find any trace of any proceeding by which the Judge put to the assessors, or in any other way with their aid tried, the question of the accused's capacity to make his defence, and came to any decision with the aid of the assessors on that point. We conclude that the Judge was personally himself satisfied for otherwise we could not understand how he could have proceeded with the trial. But we find in his judgment in the case the following phrase :

"From his appearance in Court also one got the impression that he was an insane person, but whose insanity normally ran in a subdued course making it easy for people to believe that there was nothing seriously wrong with him."

This would suggest that actually in Court there was something in the demeanour of the accused which raised doubts in the Judge's mind.

The absence of any proper trial and finding as to the question of the accused's capacity to make his defence might well have resulted in our having to set aside the conviction and sentence and direct a retrial of the accused at Sessions. But in this particular case, for the reasons which we shall now give, we are satisfied that this is not necessary.

The evidence, in our view, indubitably establishes that the accused was entitled to the benefit of S. 84, I. P. C. It is unnecessary to recapitulate the facts which are all set out in the judgment of the learned Judge. He himself appears to have wavered in regard to the question of the state of mind of the accused at the time he committed the act. After quoting S. 84 he says :

"I have set out all the facts of his mental history from which it may be inferred whether the accused was not in possession of his sense of responsibility in spite of his insanity at the time when he committed the murder. I find it difficult to answer that question and from the case law it appears that unless one can answer that question in the affirmative there should be a conviction for the offence."

All the assessors were of the opinion that the accused was not guilty. The learned Additional Sessions Judge's doubts may, we think, fairly be expressed as follows :

"I am satisfied that the accused was of unsound mind at the time he committed the act, I am not satisfied that he was by reason of that unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law."

In other words, he was satisfied that the accused was "medically" insane and insane in the ordinary vulgar acceptance of the term, but he was not satisfied that the accused was "legally" insane. If we are putting his view correctly, he was right. On the other hand, we are satisfied ourselves, on the history of this man and the circumstances on the material date when he killed his wife, that he was not at the time capable of knowing that what he was doing was wrong and contrary to law. We, therefore, allowing the appeal hold that Ramnath did kill his wife, but is entitled to the benefit of S. 84, I. P. C.

We, therefore, direct that he be detained in his present place of detention, which we are informed is the Central Jail at Naini in the district of Allahabad, until orders have been passed on his case by the Local Government, and we direct that a copy of this order be sent forthwith to the Local Government. We further direct that a copy also be sent immediately to the Superintendent of the Central Jail at Naini with the request that he will take such steps as may be necessary in view of the possibility of a recurrence of violence on the part of Ramnath.

DALAL, J.

Daya Ram—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ravn. No. 577 of 1929, Decided on 5th December 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Agra, D/ 9th August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 147—"Application."

Section 147 applies to disputes as regards entry into a temple or mosque and it would so apply whether the right claimed is an easement or otherwise: A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 497, Dist. [P 674 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 147—Samadhs of Radhaswami sect in U. P.—Entry in compound of samadhs is covered by words "right to use of any land."

The shrines of the followers of the Radhaswami sect known as samadhs are of as great religious sanctity to the followers of that sect as a temple and entry in the compound of the samadh would be covered by the words "right to use of any land" [P 674 C 2]

* (c) Criminal P. C., S. 147—"Three months."

Three months are not the three months prior to order, but three months next before the institution of the inquiry. [P 675 C 1]

K. N. Katju, Kumuda Prasad and M. L. Chaturvedi—for Applicant.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Tej Bahadur Sapru, Harnandan Prasad, K. Varma, Laddi Prasad Sinha and Ravi Nandan Prasad—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—Dr. Katju who argued this application for revision desired to impress the Court by stating that members of both sections of the Radhaswami sect were mostly LL. Bs. and not likely to cause a breach of the peace. He has been kind enough to furnish this Court with a typed copy of all the relevant papers which has been a great help and saved a considerable amount of time. On the very first page there is a letter of the then District Magistrate Mr. Dreyfus, dated 12th June 1927, in which he speaks of a complaint by members of the faction whom Dr. Katju represents that they were pummelled and pushed by LL. B's. of the opposite faction. The whole typed record is full of indication as to a fear of a breach of the peace, if no orders were passed to restrict the two parties and it is therefore idle to argue here that there was no possibility of a breach of the peace. The heading of the very order objected to shows Emperor v. Nehal Chand, that proceedings were started on the complaint of Dr. Katju's party, and that it was not the other party which first sought the protection of a criminal Court. The order complained of is by the District Magistrate of Agra, dated 22nd June 1929, and the typed book gives in serial order the various proceedings which followed the letter of the District Magistrate of 12th June 1927 referred to by me above. I consider the present order of 22nd June 1929, to be merely in continuation of the proceedings instituted in 1927. It is not necessary to go into details as to the dispute between the two factions but some summary of the dispute is necessary. There was no schism in the Radhaswami sect till the death of the Guru Maharaj Sahab in 1907. He was an accountant deeply versed in finance before it was discovered that he was an emanation of God.

He, therefore, took the very wise step of establishing a trust in 1904, and putting all the properties of the brotherhood in charge of the trust. Of the two present factions the Swamibagh faction and the Dayalbagh faction, this trust has been captured by the Swamibagh faction and that faction is in charge of the properties. The dispute arose after the death of Maharaj Sahab as he had indicated his sister as the next emanation, but on his death some of his followers did not accept that indication, but seceded and discovered the emanation in a gentleman of the name of Mr. Kamata Prasad Sinha, known after his recognition as Sarkar Sahab. The trust being captured by the Swamibagh section, the other section of the Dayalbagh found difficulty in worshipping at the shrines of their religion, two of them being at Agra, known as the samadhs, and a dispute arose as to the right of the Dayalbagh section to enter these samadhs for the purposes of worship.

It appears that in 1927, the Dayalbagh people insisted on entering which led to the complaint to the District Magistrate by members of the Swamibagh section against the rough behaviour of members of the Dayalbagh section. At that time an appeal had been pending in this Court from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Benares in a suit filed for a declaration by an official of the Swamibagh section, and it was desired by that section that the trust may be declared a private trust and not a public one and that the men of the opposite faction may be debarred from the use of the properties belonging to the trust. That suit failed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and the appeal was dismissed by this Court on 12th June 1929. As the dispute was brought to the District Magistrate in 1927, proceedings continued and various orders were passed restricting the Dayalbagh section from the free use of the two samadhs at Agra. Finally on 11th June 1929, the two parties came to a settlement and agreed to abide by the judgment of the High Court. The judgment of the High Court was delivered on 12th June and the District Magistrate's order complained of was passed on 22nd June. He removed all the restrictions placed on the Dayalbagh section as to the use of the samadhs. Dr. Katju frankly admitted that no objection can be raised to that portion of the order. If according to him the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to interfere necessarily, it will follow that the District Magistrate will have no jurisdiction to place any restrictions on the use of the samadhs by the Dayalbagh section and he could not complain of the removal of these restrictions. After removing these restrictions the order goes on:

"provided only that they shall not hold any ceremonies or worship on such day or days as may be reasonably required by the Swamibagh branch for similar ceremonies for their party."

(This proviso is against the Dayalbagh party and the applicant here would naturally not object to it). The objectionable portion so far as the applicant is concerned now follows:

"The Swamibagh branch are hereby directed that they shall freely permit to the Dayalbagh branch opportunities for such worship etc., so far as may be equal in number and convenience with the opportunities which they reserve for themselves."

The view of the learned Sessions Judge that the District Magistrate had passed this order in his executive capacity, a capacity not known to me or to the law, was not supported by counsel on either side here. What was definitely argued before me was on the side of the applicant that the order did not fall within the provisions of S. 147, Criminal P. C. and on the opposite side that the order was covered by the provisions of that section. I have held that there is a danger of a breach of the peace. The application of the provisions of S. 147 can only be doubted if the question of entry into a place required by any religion were not subject to action under S. 147, Criminal P. C. There was a conflict of opinion between the Madras and Calcutta High Courts: see Kader Batcha v. Kader Bakha (1) in opposition to Guiram Ghosal v. Lal Behari Das (2). This conflict was, however, set at rest by Act No. 18 of 1923 amending the Criminal Procedure Code wherein the view of the Madras High Court was adopted. Originally the words were :

"a right of use of any land or water including any right of way or other easement over the same."

These words indicated to the Calcutta High Court certain rights which were confined to rights of easement and similar rights. In the amended section, the wider view of the Madras High Court was adopted and it was specifically noted that the provisions of that section would apply whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise.

Dr. Katju the editor of a commentary on the Criminal Procedure Code knew of this amendment and so he quoted a Calcutta case subsequent to the year 1923. Surendra Nath Banerji v. Shashi Bhushan Sarkar (3). In that case the learned Judge who delivered the judgment of the Bench specifically noted that there was no dispute then as to the right of a user of any land or entry into any building, but the dispute related only to the performance of pooja of an idol. Argument was addressed to the Bench there that the ruling in Guiram

Ghosal v. Lal Behari Das (2) was no longer operative after the amendment of the Code in 1923. But that argument was not examined for the reason that the dispute before the Bench was in a very narrow compass as to the right to perform pooja and not as to the right of entry into any temple or mosque. After the amendment of the Code no doubt remained as to the provisions of that section attaching to disputes as regards the entry into a temple or mosque. In the present case a samadh is of as great religious sanctity to the followers of the Radhaswami as a temple and the entry in the compound of the samadh would be covered by the words "right of use of any land."

Dr. Katju next pointed out that there had been no proper enquiry as directed in the section, that no order was recorded, and no written statements from the two parties called for. Again reference should be made to the typed copy of the relevant papers, in which such a declaration by a Magistrate will be found and such request to the parties to enter into written statements (notice issued under S. 147, Criminal P. C. on 15th November 1927). The proceedings were suspended under a compromise by both parties, which was accepted by the District Magistrate that the parties would abide by the decision of the High Court here. This compromise has given rise to the argument of Dr. Katju that a District Magistrate is not entitled to interpret a judgment of this Court in criminal proceedings. The Magistrate has, however, to decide the question of the right of the Dayalbagh party according to Cl. (2), S. 147. That clause runs as follows:

"If it appears to such Magistrate that such right exists, he may make an order prohibiting any interference with the exercise of such right."

It is difficult to understand how a Magistrate can adjudicate upon the existence or non-existence of a right without interpreting the judgments of a civil Court. In the present case Dr. Sapru has referred on behalf of the respondent to the last sentence of the judgment of this Court:

"We find also that the defendants are entitled to have an interest in the alleged trust and in the trust properties."

Clearly therefore, the judgment gave evidence of the existence of the right of the Dayalbagh section to use all the properties of the trust and it was admitted that these samadhs in Agra are properties of the trust.

(1) [1908] 29 Mad. 237.

(2) [1910] 87 Cal. 578=11 C. L. J. 292=6 I. C. 132=14 C. W. N. 611.

(3) A. L. R. 1926 Cal. 437=52 Cal. 959.

Finally Dr. Katju referred to the proviso and pointed out that the District Magistrate overlooked the necessity of the party, in whose favour the order was made, exercising such right within three months. Three months, however, are not the three months prior to the order, but three months next before the institution of the enquiry. The enquiry was instituted in June 1927, and from the fact of the Dayalbagh party exercising the right which gave rise to the complaint to the District Magistrate. On the part of the Swamibagh section, I am satisfied that the right of entry was exercised by the Dayalbagh party within three months of 12th June 1927. I dismiss this application. The stay order is withdrawn.

BROADWAY, AND QADIR, JJ.

Indar Singh—Convict—Appellant.

2v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 219 of 1930, Decided on 8th April 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 4th February 1930.

Penal Code S. 302—Accused striking deceased with hatchet with knowledge of what he was doing and dangerous nature of his act is guilty under S. 302—But where attack by him is result of foul language used by deceased, death sentence should not be imposed, transportation for life is sufficient.

Where the accused knew what he was doing when he struck the deceased on the head with a hatchet and also knew that his act was imminently dangerous to life, he can be rightly convicted under S. 302.

But where there is no premeditation nor any enmity between the accused and the deceased or his relation and the attack on the deceased is the result of foul language used by him, the extreme penalty of law is not called for and sentence of transportation for life is sufficient to meet the case. [P 676 C 2]

Din Dayal Khanna—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—Indar Singh son of Ishar, a Waraich Jat of Mauza Hegar in the Kila Didar Singh thana of the Gujranwala District, has been found guilty of the murder of a young man named Abdulla or Dulla on the 16th November 1929, and under S. 302, I. P. C. has been sentenced to death. He has appealed and the case is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C.

The facts are set out at considerable length in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and it is therefore not necessary for me to detail them at any length. Briefly, Indar Singh, the appellant, is one of the lambardars of the village. His uncle Fateh Muhammad is his sarbrah. It appears that this Fateh Muhammad joined the Islamic fold some twelve or fourteen years ago and married a Sansi woman of the name of Mt. Hussainan. This Mt. Hussainan had three sons and a daughter by her Sansi husband Hira. Fateh Muhammad took the entire family to live with him and his three stepsons assisted him materially in the cultivation of his land. Of these three sons the deceased Abdulla was one.

The family of the appellant are co-sharers in a well, known as Jharanwala Nau well, which is situated at a little distance from the village abadi. Each of the co-sharers is entitled to a certain definite period for working that well for the purpose of irrigation. According to Fateh Muhammad and the deceased's brother Nawab, the appellant had not paid his share of the costs of the new gear of this particular well. On 16th November 1929 while the deceased Abdulla was working the well the appellant is said to have gone there, towards evening with his cattle and to have demanded the use of the well. Abdulla refused to allow Indar Singh to use it saying that he would not give up the well till the return of his chacha, i.e. Fateh Muhammad. An altercation ensued and both parties are said to have used vile language making improper and indecent references to their female relations. This altercation was heard and partly witnessed by two witnesses Virsa Singh lambardar and Muhammad Hussain alias Hussain Bakhsh who happened to be returning to their village from Kila Didar Singh. Virsa Singh endeavoured to get the dispute settled but finding that impossible told the young men to do as they wished. Thereupon Abdulla seated himself on the gaddi in order to work the well. On this the appellant struck him a violent blow on the head with the hatchet which he had in his hand following it up with a second blow also on the head which, however, struck the deceased with the blunt side. After this the appellant ran away.

Nawab, the deceased's brother, who was working in the fields close by arrived on the spot, as did Hazur Singh and an Indian Christian named Raja. The deceased was taken in unconscious condition to the village and from there taken to the hospital at Kilu Didar Singh. While he was still unconscious the Sub-Assistant Surgeon, one Ganga Ram, sent a ruqa to the police station informing them of the arrival of the deceased and that ruqa forms the first information report. Apparently the Sub-Inspector was not in the thana at that late hour of the night and nothing was done till the following morning when he proceeded to the hospital and there prepared the naqsha mazrubi. As the deceased's head was bandaged the Sub-Inspector concluded that he had received only one injury and recorded that fact. He then proceeded to the village where he made an enquiry. On 18th November 1929 the deceased succumbed to his injuries without having recovered consciousness. The fact was notified to the police and a constable went to the hospital and prepared the necessary inquest report.

The appellant has led a certain number of witnesses in support of his assertion that he was absent from the village on the 16th November 1929 and was as a matter of fact at a village five kos away named Dohla Chatha. The learned Sessions Judge has analysed the evidence of the defence witnesses and has, in my judgment, very properly held their testimony to be utterly worthless. It is obvious that these witnesses are doing what they could to assist a friend of theirs in trouble and that they are speaking falsely. The case therefore rests entirely on the statements of Virsa Singh and his companion Muhammad Hussain.

The appellant has failed to bring out or even to allege, any enmity between himself and these two witnesses. The story they tell appears to me to be a straightforward and truthful one. Their presence there is supported by the testimony of P. W. 6 Hazur Singh who had obviously resiled from the statement he made to the committing Magistrate and has endeavoured to assist the appellant at the trial. Even in his statement at the trial, however, he has admitted that Virsa Singh and Muhammad Hussain were present when he arrived on the spot. In these circumstances I have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors in holding that the story for the prosecution is substantially true and that Dulla met with his death at the hands of the appellant Indar Singh.

There remains the question of the offence committed by him. It has been urged that the conviction under S. 302, I. P. C. is not warranted. In my judgment there can be no doubt that the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is correct. That the appellant knew what he was doing when he struck the deceased on the head with his hatchet can, I think, be accepted without any hesitation. That he knew that his act was imminently dangerous to life is also clear. He followed up the first blow by a second one which, according to the medical evidence, was also delivered with considerable force. I think, therefore, that Indar Singh has rightly been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C. At the same time I do not think that the extreme penalty is called for. There does not appear to have been any previous enmity between Indar Singh and the deceased, or Indar Singh and his uncle Fateh Muhammad. The story that Indar Singh had not contributed anything towards the expenses incurred some two years ago in connexion with this well I am not prepared to accept. According to Virsa Singh, Abdulla's refusal to give up the use of the well was accompanied by foul vituperations and in these circumstances it is not surprising that when two hot-blooded youths have a quarrel in which both use foul language unfortunate results follow. There being no premeditation and no previous enmity, I consider that the sentence of transportation for life will meet the case. I would, therefore, reduce the sentence accordingly.

TAPP, J.

Jagir Singh and another—Accused—Petitioners.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 28 of 1930, Decided on 22nd March 1930, for transfer of case from Court of Addl. Dist.
Mag., Lahore, to some other Court.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 117 (3)—Bail.

The provisions of Ch. 39 relating to bail do not apply to an order made under S. 117 (3).

[P 677 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 117 (3) and 498—
S. 117 (3) is intended to prevent breach of peace—High Court cannot therefore under
S. 498 reduce security order to be furnished although it can consider whether interim security is not too high.

Section 117 (3) has apparently been introduced for the purpose of preventing a breach of peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or in the interest of public safety pending an enquiry under Ss. 108, 109 and 110. It is not therefore open to the High Court under provisions of S. 498 to reduce the security which the Magistrate orders to be furnished.

But there is nothing to prevent the High Court in exercise of its inherent powers from considering whether the interim security which is ordered to be furnished is not too high.
The order of the High Court reducing interim security does not, however, fetter the discretion of the Magistrate as to the amount of security which may ultimately be demanded.

[P 677 C 2; P 678 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 526—Nothing to indicate that inquiry was not fair beyond mere fact that proceedings were hurried —Transfer cannot be granted.

Where, beyond the mere fact that the proceedings against the petitioners were hurried, there is nothing to indicate that the inquiry had not been fair and impartial, and the petitioners remain unrepresented through no fault of the Magistrate, an application under
S. 526 for transfer of cases cannot be granted.

[P 678 C 1]

Bishan Nath—for Petitioners.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioners Jagir
Singh and Dewan Chand are being proceeded against under S. 108, Criminal P. C. in respect of certain speeches and poems alleged to be seditious and inflammatory and said to have been delivered and recited by them at a gathering at village Jaman on 26th January 1930. The Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, on receipt of a police report ascribing the above acts to the petitioners proceeded to the Barqi police station, within the limits of which Jaman is situate, on 1st February and on the petitioners being produced before him in custody he made an order under

S. 112 of the Code calling on them to show cause why they should not execute bonds in Rs. 10,000 each with two sureties of Rs. 5,000 each to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. After this order had been read out and explained to the petitioners the learned Additional District Magistrate recorded the evidence of eight witnesses who were produced on behalf of the prosecution, examined the two petitioners and adjourned the further hearing for the defence evidence to 5th February. In his order under S. 112, the learned Additional District Magistrate further directed under sub-S. (3), S. 117, that the petitioners should furnish interim security to the same amount as mentioned above.

Two petitions have been preferred on behalf of the petitioners by Mr. Bishan Nath; one under S. 498, Criminal P. C. for reduction of the amount of the interim security and the other under S. 526 for transfer of the proceedings to some other Court.
Now the provisions of Chap. 39, of the Code relating to bail will not apply to an order made under sub-S. (3), S. 117 and this is conceded by the learned counsel for the petitioners. Sub-section (3) was introduced into the Code by the amending Act of 1923 and has apparently been introduced for the purpose of preventing a breach of the peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or in the interests of public safety pending an enquiry under Ss. 108, 109 and 110.
Consequently it follows in my judgment that under the provisions of S. 498 it is not open to this Court to reduce the amount of security which the Additional District Magistrate has called upon the petitioners to furnish. At the same time there is nothing to prevent this Court in the exercise of its inherent powers in considering whether the interim security which the petitioners have been called on to furnish is not too high.

In my opinion the amount might well be reduced and any reduction so made will not in any way affect the amount of security which the petitioners may be finally required to furnish and which of course will be subject to the maximum amount entered in the order under S. 112. I would, therefore, order that the interim security which the petitioners have been called on to furnish be reduced from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 5,000 each with two sureties of Rs. 2,500 each. I would again emphasize that this order shall in no way be deemed to fetter the discretion of the Magistrate in regard to the amount of security which may be ultimately demanded from the petitioners subject to the maximum referred to.

As regards the application for transfer I am not impressed with the grounds urged on behalf of the petitioners and set forth in the application. Beyond the fact that the proceedings against the petitioners were hurried there is nothing in my opinion to indicate that the enquiry so far has not been fair and impartial. It is true that the petitioners were not represented by counsel but in this respect no blame can attach to the learned Magistrate as from one of the affidavits on the record it appears that Mr. Bishan Nath was engaged on 31st January to represent the petitioners but owing to some misunderstanding as to the Magistrate who would hold the enquiry and as to the place of the enquiry the learned counsel did not, or was unable to, attend. The chief cause of complaint is that the petitioners, who did not cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses, have under the law no right to recall them for cross-examination. Mr. Bishan Nath states that if the petitioners are afforded an opportunity of recalling for cross-examination all or any of the prosecution witnesses whom they may wish to cross-examine he will be quite satisfied. The learned counsel for the Crown indeed suggested that this course might be adopted and I would, therefore, while dismissing the application for transfer, direct that the prosecution witnesses or such of them as the petitioners require to be called be recalled for cross-examination and the enquiry then proceeded with as early as possible.

Mamun—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1079 of 1929,
Decided on 2nd January 1930.

Evidence Act, S. 27—Statement by accused that he buried body of person murdered at place pointed out by him is admissible only for S. 201, I. P. C.

A statement made by the accused to the police that he had buried the body of the murdered person at the place pointed out by him is clearly admissible in evidence under S. 27 only for the purposes of S. 201, I. P. C. but not for convicting him of murder: A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 844, Expt. [P 679 C 2]

Muhammad Tufail—for Appellant.

Muhammad Munir—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Mamun a Jat of Sher Baga in the Gujranwala district and one Shamun of the same village were sent up for trial under S. 302, I. P. C. for causing the death of Sillu a Baloch in or about the middle of April 1929.

Two of the assessors were of opinion that both the above persons were guilty of murder while the other two considered that the appellant Mamun alone was guilty of the offence.

The learned Sessions Judge disagreeing with two of the assessors found Shamun not guilty, acquitted him and holding in disagreement with all the assessors, that the evidence, which was purely circumstantial, did not establish the guilt of the appellant Mamun in respect of the murder of Sillu, acquitted him of that charge, convicted him of an offence under S. 201, I. P. C. and sentenced him to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment.

The case for the prosecution was that owing to the existence of a liaison between Mt. Roshan, wife of the deceased and the appellant Mamun, Sillu proposed moving to Chah Balochwala a village some 5 or 6 miles from Sher Baga. It was alleged that the appellant coming to learn of the intention of the deceased, he and Shamun enticed the deceased from his house one night on pretence of showing him a camel. They are then said to have strangled him and buried his dead body in a jungle. This was about the middle of April and Sillu was not seen alive after this

His absence was brought to light by Ali P. W. 3, a fellow Baloch who on arriving at Sher Baga from Manawala in the Sheikhpura District learnt of Sillu's disappearance. Accordingly on 10th May 1929 Ali sent a telegram to the Superintendent of Police at Gujranwala accusing the appellant Mamun and his brother one Ghulam of having murdered Sillu. This telegram was forwarded to Sub-Inspector Mohammed Nawaz Khan in charge of the Police Station at Pindi Bhattian on 14th May. The Sub-Inspector being ill sent Head-Constable Ghulam Muhammad to Sher Baga to make an enquiry into the disappearance of Sillu. The Head Constable continued his enquiries till 19th May but failed to obtain any clue with regard to the disappearance of Sillu. Thereupon the Sub-Inspector took up the investigation himself and on the same day, that is 19th May, after recording a statement of Mt. Roshan he questioned the appellant Mamun and Shamun. The appellant is alleged to have told the Sub-Inspector that he had buried the dead body of Sillu in the jungle and leading the investigating party to a jungle pointed out a place as that where he had buried the body. On this spot being dug up to a depth of some 3 or 4 feet a human body was seen. Permission was then obtained for the exhumation of the body and on 21st May this was done in the presence of Dr. Mohammad Abdullah, Assistant Surgeon, Hafizabad, the Sub-Inspector, Nur Mohammad Zaildar P. W. 4, Fateh Mohammad P. W. 5, Sher Mohammad P. W. 6, Pir Mohammad P. W. 7, Mt. Roshan, wife of the deceased, and Ali P. W. 3.

The evidence of the Assistant Surgeon shows that though the body was decomposed it was well preserved and identifiable and it was identified as that of Sillu by Mt. Roshan, Ali, Pir Mohammad and others. The Sub-Inspector and Pir Mohammad supported the medical evidence as to the body being in an identifiable condition but Nur Mohammad, Fateh Mohammad and Sher Mohammad endeavoured to controvert this testimony. Nur Mohammad, however, on being afforded a locus penitentiae admitted that the body was identifiable. The learned Sessions Judge has rightly rejected the evidence of Fateh Mohamed, Sher Mohamed and the first statement of Nur Mohamed as to the body not being recognizable for there is no doubt that these witnesses are interested in the appellant and tried to help him, by throwing a doubt on the condition of the body and thus tending to discredit the evidence of the witnesses who identified the body as being that of Sillu. In my opinion it has been conclusively established that the disinterred body was capable of identification and was identified as being that of the deceased, as on this point the evidence of the doctor, the Sub-Inspector and the other witnesses supported as it is by the inquest report Ex. P/K prepared at the time by the Sub-Inspector is more than sufficient.

The post-mortem examination disclosed a whitish mark, well preserved, round the neck becoming less marked at its back. The muscles underneath were found contused and the cricoid cartilage fractured. In the centre of the skull there was a fractured hole of the size of a four anna silver piece just touching the membranes covering the brain. In the opinion of the doctor the cause of death was strangulation. Now the evidence in the case has indubitably established that Sillu was murdered and while it has not been found possible to connect the appellant with the commission of this crime, he having reason to believe that murder had been committed has been found guilty of having caused evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear with this intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. His conviction depends entirely on the evidence as to his having stated that he had buried the body of Sillu in a particular place and pointed out the spot to the investigating party. It was urged by the learned counsel for the defence that the statement of the appellant as to his having buried the body of Sillu was inadmissible in evidence and he cited the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Sukhan v. Emperor (1). In my opinion the evidence as to the appellant having stated that he had buried the body of Sillu at the place pointed out by him is clearly admissible under the provisions of § 27. Evidence

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 344=10 Lah. 255 (F.B.).

Act and its admission did not conflict with the principles laid down in the ruling cited. The appellant was suspected or accused of having murdered the deceased and his statement that he had buried the body of Sillu at the place pointed out by him was in no sense incriminating as regards the murder of Sillu. In the case cited above the incriminating statement was :

"I had removed the karas and pushed the boy into the well and had pledged the karas with Allah Din."

It was held by the Full Bench that the statement by the accused that he had pledged with Allah Din the karas subsequently recovered from the latter was admissible under S. 27 but that the rest of the incriminating statement could not be received in evidence. In the present case if the appellant had stated that he had murdered Sillu and buried his dead body in the place pointed out by him there on the authority of the ruling I should have had to exclude that portion of the statement as to his having murdered Sillu but not the rest which is on a par with the statement in the reported case as to the accused having pledged the karas with one Allah Din. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence as to the appellant having pointed the place wherefrom the dead body of Sillu was recovered and the first part of his statement as to his having buried the body there affords ample and sufficient proof of knowledge on his part as to Sillu having been murdered, and as to his having caused the disappearance of the corpus delicti with the intention of screening the offender, may be himself, or some other person from punishment. For the above reason I hold that the appellant has been rightly convicted and affirming his conviction and sentence which I do not consider severe, I dismiss the appeal.

Gian Singh and others—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 671 of 1929, Decided on 23rd December 1929, from an order of 1st Class Magistrate, Gujranwala, D/- 6th June 1929.

Penal Code, S. 304-149—One member of unlawful assembly was Sikh wearing kirpan which he unsheathed and gave fatal blow to victim—Other members are not constructively liable for causing death.

The mere fact that a member of an unlawful assembly which assailed its victim, was Sikh wearing kirpan, unsheathing which he dealt the fatal blow to the victim is not sufficient to hold the other members of the assembly constructively liable for causing of death simply because he was wearing a kirpan. [P 681 C2]

Bhagat Ram Puri—for Appellants.

Muhammad Munir—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Six persons, viz., Kala Singh, his father Gian Singh, Hayat, Jalal, Mahana of Killa Rai Singh and Shamun of Bhaike Jung in the Gujranwala District were sent up for trial under Cl. (2), S. 304/149, I. P. C., for having on 30th October 1928, along with Jaswant Singh (discharged) and Sohan Singh (absconding) formed an unlawful assembly and caused the death of one Ganda Singh.

Jalal was acquitted while the other five were convicted under S. 304, Cl. (2) read with S. 149, I. P. C. and each sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. They were also found guilty of causing simple hurt to one Pira, a companion of Ganda Singh, convicted of an offence under S. 323, I. P. C., and each sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment to run concurrently with the sentence of five years.

Mahana and Jalal were also found to have caused simple hurt to two other companions of Ganda Singh, viz., Mutalli and Kartar Singh shortly after, and each being convicted of an offence under S. 323, I. P. C., was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment the sentence in the case of Mahana to be consecutive.

Against these convictions and sentences Kala Singh, Gian Singh, Hayat, Mahana and Shamun have appealed.

through Mr. B. B. Puri and Jalal from jail.

The case for the prosecution briefly is that, on the morning in question, Pira, Mutalli, Ganda Singh and Kartar Singh were following the tracks of certain persons suspected of having stolen the melons of Ranjha, an uncle of Pira. Ganda Singh was on horse-back while the other three were mounted on a camel. On the party arriving near the dera of Hayat appellant outside Kila Rai Singh, the deceased Ganda Singh commenced to sing a ballad alleged to have been indecent and to which Shamun appellant appears to have taken exception. An altercation arose between Ganda Singh and Shamun and the latter then called out to Hayat, Jalal and Mahana who were ploughing close by. These four persons arming themselves with lathis prepared to assail Ganda Singh. Meanwhile Pira getting down from the camel joined Ganda Singh and mounting behind him they both rode away in the direction of Kila Rai Singh followed apparently by Hayat, Jalal, Shamun and Mahana. The cries and shouts of these four appellants brought Gian Singh, Kala Singh, Sohan Singh and a fourth Sikh out of the village and they barred the way of Ganda Singh and Pira. These eight persons then assailed and beat Ganda Singh and Pira, Sohan Singh the alleged absconder was wearing a kirpan some 3 feet long and unsheathing this is alleged to have used it with fatal effect on Ganda Singh. Kartar Singh and Mutalli were not assailed then as they dismounting from the camel retreated to Kotli Mansu where they took refuge in the house of one Sohna. They were, however, followed and beaten there according to the finding of the Magistrate by Jalal and Mahana.

The medical evidence shows that Ganda Singh bore two incised wounds one of which on the head caused a complete fracture of the skull resulting in death a few days later. He also bore 8 other contusions and bruises on his body and one of the former resulted in a fracture of the ulna bone.

Pira sustained 19 contusions and bruises all simple, Kartar Singh 15 bruises and contusions, and Mutalli 8 similar injuries all simple in both cases.

While the evidence is conflicting as to whether Ganda Singh and Pira were assailed and injured simultaneously by all the appellants and the others or whether they were first beaten by Hayat, Mahana and Shamun who were then joined by Gian Singh, Kala Singh and Sohan Singh, there is no room for doubt that Ganda Singh and Pira were assaulted and beaten by all the appellants except Jalal outside Kila Rai Singh and that Kartar Singh and Mutalli were later beaten by Mahana and Jalal in Kotli Mansu. Indeed the matter was not contested by Mr. B. R. Puri, who frankly admitted that the defence version of the affair as to Ganda Singh and his companions having been caught breaking into the house of Hayat and committing theft was false. The point which was, however, pressed and calls for consideration is whether all the appellants except Jalal can be held constructively liable for causing the death of Ganda Singh which according to the evidence was said to be due to the act of Sohan Singh alone.

Now while the appellants and one other person undoubtedly constituted an unlawful assembly whose common object was to beat Ganda Singh and his companions, I do not think it is possible to hold that the appellants except Jalal knew that one of the members of the assembly would be likely to commit the offence of culpable homicide, simply because he was wearing a kirpan, a weapon which now a-days is carried by most Sikhs as an emblem of their religion and not for purposes of offence or defence. If Sohan Singh had rushed out with an unsheathed kirpan and joined the other members of the assembly, it might perhaps be possible to impute the required knowledge to the appellants but not otherwise in the circumstances according to my judgment.

For the above reasons I would hold that the appellants Gian Singh, Kala Singh, Hayat, Mahana and Shamun cannot be held liable for causing the death of Ganda Singh and accepting the appeal as regards their conviction under S. 304-II, I set this aside and acquit them.

They have, however, been rightly convicted of causing hurt to Pira and the appellants Mahana and Jalal, of further causing hurt to Kartar Singh and Mutalli. I accordingly affirm the convictions under S. 323, I. P. C., in respect of both occurrences and in view of the fact that they have now done more than six months of their imprisonment I would reduce the sentences to the period undergone in the case of all the appellants including Mahana and direct that they be set at liberty. The appeals against the convictions under S. 323, I. P. C., are accepted to the above extent.

JAI LAL AND CURRIE, JJ.

Jog Raj—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 31 of 1930, Decided on 18th March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Attock, D/- 12th November 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 26—S. 26 makes no difference between oral and written confession.

Section 26 as it stands makes no distinction between an oral and written confession but embodies a substantive rule of law. [P 684 C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 164 and 533—Compliance by Magistrate with S. 164 but failure to append necessary certificate required by S. 164—S. 533 comes into operation and record becomes admissible on proof of compliance with provisions of S. 164—Criminal P. C., S. 533.

When the Magistrate has complied with the provisions of S. 164, but has failed to append to the record the necessary certificate required by S. 164 S. 533 comes into operation and on proof by the Magistrate that he had complied with the provisions of S. 164, the record becomes admissible. S. 533 is by its terms confined to confessions or statements recorded under S. 164 or S. 364. After the Magistrate has been examined and the Court is satisfied that the statement was duly made it is the record of such a statement that has been made admissible by S. 533 and not the evidence of the Magistrate about the terms of the statement. (Case Law discussed). [P 686 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 533—Operation of saving clause in S. 533 is to cure want of proper certificate by Magistrate—Oral testimony of Magistrate becomes admissible, in case of Criminal P. C., S. 164.

The words "notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act, 1872, S. 91" indicate that a confession must in every case be recorded in the first instance; but S. 533 is by its terms confined to confessions or statements recorded under S. 164 or S. 364 of the Code. Moreover, the words "notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act, 1872, S. 91" so far as they apply to S. 164 really are intended to make the oral testimony of the Magistrate admissible to prove the fact that notwithstanding the absence of a certificate that he complied with the provisions of that section, he did as a matter of fact comply with such provision. The operation of this saving clause is therefore intended to cure the defect of want of proper certificate by the Magistrate. [P 687 C 1]

* (d) Evidence Act, S. 26—Confession by accused in presence of Magistrate—Accused not produced before Magistrate to record his admission—Confession when not reduced to writing can be proved by oral testimony of Magistrate—Criminal P. C., S. 164

A confession or an incriminating statement made in the presence of a Magistrate by an accused person while in police custody who is not produced before the Magistrate with a view to record his confession can be proved by oral testimony of the Magistrate when it has not been reduced to writing. In absence of any provision of law making it obligatory on the part of a Magistrate to record a confession it is not a matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. [P 687 C 1]

* (e) Evidence Act, S. 26—S. 26 does not make admission dependent upon knowledge of accused as to identity of Magistrate.

Section 26 does not make the admissibility of the confession dependent upon the knowledge of the accused as to the identity of the Magistrate, the main consideration being the presence of the Magistrate and the making of the confession in his presence. [P 687 C 2]

(f) Penal Code, S. 302—Intention to assault with stabbing weapon—Accused having grudge against deceased—He is guilty of murder.

It must be assumed that a person who goes armed with a stabbing weapon to assault another person against whom he has a previous grudge and actually strikes that person at a vital part of his body and causes his death, intends to cause such bodily injury as is imminently dangerous to life and such person must be held guilty of murder. [P 687 C 2]

Kishan Dayal—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Jai Lal, J.—On 3rd June 1929, Azim Dhobi of village Kisran in the District of Attock died in consequence of an incised penetrating wound of the abdomen 2-1/4 "by 1" caused with a knife. The appellant Jog Raj, a Mehra of the same village, has been found guilty of having caused this injury and under S. 302, I. P. C. has been sentenced to transportation for life. He has appealed to this Court through Mr. Kishan Dayal, advocate who has addressed us on his behalf at length.

The prosecution case is that Mt. Garo mother of the convict, was enticed by Fazal Karim, brother of Azim, whom she married subsequently. In consequence of this, Jog Raj entertained a grudge against this person. On 3rd June 1929, at about midday he went to the house of Fazal Karim where the latter's mother Mt. Mehr Behari was grinding salt and the other members of the family including Fazal Karim, his brothers Abdul Karim and Azim deceased were sleeping in another room. The accused was seen by Mt. Mehr Bhari standing outside the door of her house. He threw two stones at her and she made a noise which woke her three sons who came out of the house and saw Jog Raj standing in the street in front of their house with a stone in one hand and a knife in the other. Abdul Karim and Azim had sticks in their hands while Fazal Karim was empty handed. The accused threw a stone at the head of Abdul Karim and rushed at Fazal Karim flourishing his knife. Fazal Karim stepped aside and the blow of the knife fell on Azim, causing him the injury described above. On hearing the noise caused by this incident, Ahmad and Jiwan who reside in neighbouring houses, came and Ahmad caught hold of the accused who was then chastised for his conduct. In the meantime, it was noticed that Azim had received a grievous injury and those present turned their attention to him. The accused, therefore, ran away and went straight to Sant Singh, a retired Inspector of Police, who is a resident of village Kisan, and informed him that he had been beaten by the dhobi brothers. Soon after information was conveyed to Sant Singh that Azim had been seriously injured by Jog Raj. He, therefore, went to the house of the deceased and after seeing his condition had the accused arrested. Information was lodged at the police station and on the arrival of the head constable Jog Raj was handed over to him.

The above story is deposed to by Mt. Mehr Bhari, Fazal Karim and Abdul Karim. Further Ahmad and Jiwan both have stated that on hearing the noise they went to the house of Azim and saw the accused hitting Abdul Karim on the head with a stone. He then rushed at Fazal Karim with his knife but the latter stepped aside and Azim who was waving his stick at the accused was stabbed in the abdomen and fell down with his intestines protruding.

The story told by all these witnesses throughout is consistent with the exception that at an earlier stage some of them had stated that Azim had actually hit the accused with a stick before he was injured with the knife.

The accused on the other hand stated at the trial that he had gone to fetch fuel and was returning to his house when he was stopped by the deceased, his brothers, and their parents and was assaulted by them, that Fazal Karim stabbed him on his arm with a knife and was going to repeat the assault with the knife when he swerved aside and Azim was injured with the blow of the knife which Fazal Karim had aimed at him, that is, the accused. He produced no evidence in support of this version, but reliance is placed on his behalf on the statement of the Sub-Assistant Surgeon Mul Raj, who examined his injuries on 4th June and found a superficial incised wound 1-1/2 ' x 1/12" on the back and lower third of the right forearm, in addition to other slight injuries when according to the prosecution witnesses were admittedly, caused to him after he had stabbed Azim. It is, however, denied by these witnesses that any incised injury was caused to the accused and it appears that on the previous day when the head constable examined his injuries the incised wound mentioned above did not exist; therefore, having regard to its trivial nature, the suggestion of the prosecution, that this injury was self-inflicted, is probably correct.

The prosecution version is further sought to be supported by the confession made by the accused in the presence of Raja, Gulab Khan, Magistrate of the First Class. It appears that the accused was produced before this Magistrate for a remand soon after his arrest. The Magistrate was at that time at the Recreation Ground attached to a Club of which he was a member and the Public Prosecutor, Qazi Muhammad Shafi, advocate and Lala Kunwar Bhan another Magistrate were also present on that occasion. The accused was in the custody of the police and was brought before the Magistrate in handcuffs. The Public Prosecutor happened to ask the accused what he had been doing and the accused stated that he had killed the paramour of his mother. This incident is deposed to by the Magistrate Raja Gulab Khan and Qazi Muhammad Shafi, advocate and their statements receive corroboration from the statement of Lala Kunwar Bhan made before the committing Magistrate and transferred to the Sessions Judge's record under S. 33, Evidence Act. There can be no doubt that such a confession was made by the convict.

But the learned counsel contends that this confession is inadmissible in evidence and the case has been argued before us on this question with great ability by counsel on both sides. On behalf of the accused it is contended that the only section under which a confession made by an accused person can be recorded and proved at his trial, if made before the commencement of the trial or enquiry is a confession which is duly recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C., and that the law prohibits the reception of oral evidence as to any confession made by an accused person while in police custody whether such confession is made before a Magistrate or otherwise.

On behalf of the prosecution on the other hand it is urged that S. 164, Criminal P. C., is an enabling section and it is at the discretion of the Magistrate to record a confession or not, and that if a Magistrate chooses not to record the confession it is open to the prosecution to prove it if it is made before the Magistrate, by his oral testimony.

In order to understand the respective cases advanced on both sides, it is necessary to mention some statutory provisions of the law. The general rule embodied in S. 21, Evidence Act, is that any admission which includes a confession, made by a person is legal evidence against him. Certain exceptions, however, are enacted to this general provision. Among them is S. 26, Evidence Act, which provides that no confession made by any person whilst he was in the custody of a police officer unless it be made in the immediate presence of the Magistrate shall be proved against such person. So far as S. 26, therefore, is concerned it enacts an exception to the general rule and I must confine this exception to the express provisions of the section. The section as it stands makes no distinction between an oral and a written confession, but embodies a rule of substantive law and it is to be seen, therefore, whether there is any rule of procedure, which makes it incumbent on a Magistrate to make a record of a confession in every case when one is made before him by an accused person. The appellant's counsel contends that S. 164, Criminal P. C., lays down such a rule. That section provides that a Magistrate may record inter alia the statement or confession of an accused person made to him during investigation or thereafter but before the commencement of the trial or enquiry held with a view to commit the accused to take his trial in the Sessions Court. The section further provides that in recording the confession the Magistrate shall comply with certain conditions mentioned therein with a view to satisfy himself as to the voluntary nature of the confession and also shall append to such record a certificate in the prescribed form. It is urged that the expression "may record" in the section really is tantamount to "shall record," in other words, that it is incumbent on the Magistrate always to reduce a confession made before him to writing, and reliance is placed in support of this on the judgment of Shah, J., in Emperor v. Maruti Santu More (1).

The view taken by the learned Judge in that case fully supports the contention of the learned counsel. But it is to be observed that his opinion was not shared by the other learned Judge, Hayward, J., who sat with him. The following quotation from the judgment of Shah, J., indicates the view that the learned Judge took of the scope of S. 164, Criminal P. C. :

Taking the provisions of the section as a whole it seems to me that though the Magistrate has the power to refuse to record it if he is not satisfied that it is voluntarily made, he has no such option where he is satisfied that it is voluntarily made. The expression "may record" appears to have been used as the Magistrate has to ascertain whether the confession is voluntarily made. The section is no doubt permissive in that sense. But it is obligatory in the sense that it must be recorded if it is found to be voluntarily made. It is hardly consistent with the purpose and terms of this section to hold that the Magistrate has the option of refusing to record it, even when he is satisfied that it is voluntarily made, if it is to be proved as a confession later on."

In that case also the accused was sent to a Magistrate for a remand and the Magistrate put some questions to him to ascertain if he had been ill-treated or tortured by the police and also with regard to some property which was referred to in the report of the Sub-Inspector of Police, and in reply to one of these questions the accused made a statement which was sought to be proved against him at his trial. The statement not having been reduced to writing Shah, J., held that the same could not be proved against the accused. In taking the view mentioned above he dissented from two judgments of the Chief Court of the Punjab, that is, Shere Singh v. Empress (2) and Buta v. Empress (3) and Hayward, J., on the other hand, held that oral statements made during investigations had nowhere expressly been required to be reduced to writing and that the Magistrates had been given the permission to record such statements in writing by S. 164, Criminal P.C.

Reliance is also placed on Emperor v. Gulabu (4) in which it was held that a confession of an accused person made to a Magistrate holding an enquiry must under the law be reduced to writing and consequently under S. 91, Evidence Act, no evidence can be given of such a confession unless it is recorded. In that case it appears that the Magistrate was holding a preliminary enquiry into the case (it was not a judicial enquiry such as precedes a commitment for trial to the Sessions Court, but was supplementary to the investigation by the police) and during such an enquiry the accused made a statement which was not reduced to writing, but was sought to be proved against him by the oral testimony of the Magistrate.

In Nathu v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1929 All. 855), the statement in question was made by the accused to a Deputy Magistrate who was then on leave, and not having been reduced to writing it was held that it was not admissible against the accused. Queen Empress v. Bhairab Chunder Chuckerbutty (5) and the Queen v. Domun Kahar (6), are also cited on behalf of the appellant.

The learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer on the other hand referred to Tangedupalle Pedda Obigadu v. Em- peror (7), in which most of the cases relied upon by the appellant's counsel were discussed and dissented from. The learned Judges in that case held that under S. 164, Criminal P. C., it is not obligatory on a Magistrate holding an investigation or preliminary enquiry under S. 159 of the Code to record in writing a confession made to him by an accused person and that such confession may be proved by the oral testimony of the Magistrate. In Shere Singh v. Empress (2), it was held that where a confession is recorded by a Magistrate but the document containing it cannot be proved for any reason, oral evidence of the confession by the Magistrate is admissible against the accused and the document can be used by the Magistrate for the purpose of refreshing his memory. In Buta v. Empress (3), it was held that an extra judicial confession to a Magistrate is not a matter required by law to be reduced to writing but is merely a matter which a Magistrate is authorised to reduce to writing and in this respect differs from an examination of the accused persons under S. 364, Criminal P. C., which is a matter required by law to be reduced to writing. Similarly in Feroz v. Emperor (8), it was held that an oral confession by an accused person, not being open to any exception under Ss. 24, 25 or 26, Evidence Act, is, as an admission by an accused person, a relevant fact and may be proved at his trial under S. 21 and, therefore, that such a confession made to a Magistrate is relevant and may be proved by the oral evidence of the Magistrate. This view further receives support from Faiz Ullah v. Emperor (9), judgment of a Division Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

From what I have stated above, it will be observed that so far as this province is concerned it has consistently been held that a confession made before a Magistrate by an accused person while in police custody but not recorded by him can be proved against the accused by the oral testimony of the Magistrate, though there is some difference of opinion even in this province whether a confession which has actually been recorded under S. 164 can be proved by the oral testimony of the Magistrate if the record thereof is not admissible for want of compliance with the formalities required by law. Reference as to this may be made to Shere Singh v. Empress (3) already cited and to Khemar v. Emperor (10) and Partap Singh v. Emperor (11); at the same time it must be conceded that the question of exclusion of the oral testimony of the Magistrate as to the terms of the confession does not appear to have been directly involved in the two cases last mentioned.

Now, the cases cited above refer to the following circumstances:

(a) Where a confession has been recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C.; but the Magistrate though he complied with the procedure laid down in that section omitted to append the necessary certificate to the record; (b) Where the Magistrate in the above case not only failed to record the necessary certificate but as a fact failed to observe the procedure laid down in S. 164 and thus failed to satisfy himself that the confession was voluntarily made; (c) where the accused was produced before the Magistrate for the purpose of recording his confession under S. 164 and confession was actually made before the Magistrate after he had satisfied himself that it was voluntarily made but no record of the terms of the confession was made; (d) Where the accused is produced before a Magistrate for some other purpose, e. g., for a remand, as in this case, and voluntarily makes a confession of his guilt.

The present is a case which falls in the category of (d), and, therefore, it is not really necessary to decide what would be the proper course to adopt in (a), (b) and (c) if the confession is sought to be proved by the oral testimony of the Magistrate. But some of the cases cited above have made no distinction between the four instances given by me above. The Bombay and the Allahabad High Courts seem to lay down that whenever an accused person in police custody makes a confession before a Magistrate it must be reduced to writing under S. 164, Criminal P. C., which applies to all such confessions and that failure of the Magistrate to record the confession disentitles the prosecution to prove it by the oral testimony of the Magistrate. The Madras High Court and the Chief Court of the Punjab have taken just the opposite view. But I do not feel called upon in the present case to express any opinion which of these two views is correct i. e., whether a Magistrate is bound to record a confession under S. 164, or not when an accused person is produced before him for the purpose of recording a confession. The later view taken in this Court appears to be that when a confession has been recorded but without due compliance with the provisions of S. 164, Criminal P. C., the record thereof must be excluded and no oral evidence can be given to prove such a confession, but this question does not arise in this case. The case, however, is different when the Magistrate has complied with the provisions of S. 164 but has failed to append to the record the necessary certificate required by that section. In such a case S. 533, Criminal P. C., comes into operation and on proof by the Magistrate that he had complied with the provisions of S. 164, the record becomes admissible.

The only question that I have to decide is whether a confession or an incriminating statement made in the presence of a Magistrate by an accused person when in police custody who is not produced before the Magistrate with a view to record his confession can be proved by the oral testimony of the Magistrate when such confession has not been reduced to writing. In the present case it is admitted that no such record was made.

In support of his contention that the oral testimony of the Magistrate is inadmissible, in this case, the appellant's counsel cited S. 91, Evidence Act and S. 533, Criminal P. C. S. 91, Evidence Act, provides inter alia that in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such matter except the document itself. S. 533, Criminal P. C., provides that:

"If any Court, before which a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded or purporting to be recorded under S. 164, or S. 564 is tendered or has been received in evidence, finds that any of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act 1872, S. 91, such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits."

(10) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 815=6 Lah. 58.

(11) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 605=6 Lah. 415.

It is contended that the use of the words, "notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act 1872, S. 91" indicates that a confession must in every case be recorded in the first instance; but S. 533 is by its terms confined to confessions or statements recorded under S. 164 or S. 364 of the Code. Moreover, the words "notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act 1872, S. 91" so far as they apply to S. 164 really are intended to make the oral testimony of the Magistrate admissible to prove the fact that, notwithstanding the absence of a certificate that he complied with the provisions of that section, he did as a matter of fact comply with such provision. The operation of this saving clause is, therefore, intended to cure the defect of want of proper certificate by the Magistrate. It is to be noted that after the Magistrate has been examined and the Court is satisfied that the statement was duly made it is the record of such a statement that has been made admissible by S. 533 and not the evidence of the Magistrate about the terms of statement. These two sections, therefore, do not help the appellants as they do not, read together, affect a confession which has not been recorded.

Section 164 in my opinion does not govern the present case, as the accused was not produced before the Magistrate for the purpose mentioned therein, nor does S. 364 of the Code governs the case as it is confined to cases where evidence has been produced against the accused and the Magistrate examines him with a view to enable him to explain anything which has appeared against him in such evidence. In the absence of any provision of the law making it obligatory on a Magistrate to record a confession, as in the present case, I must hold that it is not a matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. I would, therefore, hold that the terms of the confession made by the accused in the presence of the Magistrate in the present case could be proved by the testimony of the Magistrate.

Nor do I think that as was contended on behalf of the appellant; it makes any difference that the accused did not know that he was making the incriminating statement in the presence of a Magistrate; in other words, that he did not know that the person before whom he was produced was a Magistrate, because S. 26, Evidence Act, does not make the admissibility of the confession dependent upon the knowledge of the accused as to the identity of the Magistrate, the main consideration being the presence of the Magistrate and the making of the confession in his presence. But I am not prepared to hold that the accused was not aware of the presence of the Magistrate.

The oral testimony of the eyewitnesses mentioned above and the confession of the accused leave, in my opinion, no doubt that he caused the death of Azim by stabbing him in the abdomen with a knife which he carried with him for the purpose of assaulting his enemies. It must be assumed that a person who goes armed with a stabbing weapon to assault another person against whom he has a previous grudge and actually strikes that person at a vital part of his body and causes his death, intends to cause such bodily injury as is imminently dangerous to life and must be held guilty of murder.

I would, therefore, uphold the conviction of Jog Raj for the murder of Azim and would dismiss his appeal.

Currie, J.—I agree.

Abdul Shakur—Petitioner.

v.

Mahadev Parshad and another—Respondents.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 701 of 1929, Decided on 29th March 1930, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Ambala, D/- 23rd February 1929.

* Criminal P. C., S. 439 — Suit for possession of house dismissed—Plaintiff subsequently presenting application that defendant having disappeared his moveables should be taken into possession by police—Order by Magistrate accordingly—Subsequent application by defendant to set aside previous order dismissed — Both orders held to be passed in executive capacity under Police Act and High Court held to have no jurisdiction to reverse them — Government of India Act S. 107 held to have no application — Police Act, S. 25 — Government of India Act, S. 107.

A suit for possession of a house was dismissed on a finding that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties. Subsequently the plaintiffs in the suit presented an application to a Magistrate First Class, that the defendant S who was again alleged to be a tenant had disappeared and his whereabouts were not known and his moveables were lying in the house. A prayer was made that the police be directed to take over the possession of the property after breaking the lock of the house. The Magistrate on 26th November 1928 passed the following order : "The application be sent to the Sub-Inspector of Police Ambala with the remark that the house should be got opened in the presence of respectable persons of the Mohalla and that on receiving cartage from the applicant goods be made over to the Sheriff of the Court."

The goods were made over to the Sheriff in pursuance of the order. In December 1928 S presented an application praying that the order passed on the previous occasion be set aside. The Magistrate dismissed the petition on 19th January 1929.

Held : that the first order passed by the Magistrate on 26th November 1928 was passed by him as an executive officer purporting to act under the Police Act and not as a Court of law or as a Magistrate acting in judicial capacity. The second order of 19th January 1929 was merely consequential on the first order and stood or fell therewith. The question of the power of the Magistrate to pass such an order was one to be dealt with by his superiors on the executive side and the High Court had no jurisdiction to reverse the said orders under the provisions of the Criminal P. O.

Order of Reference.

Jai Lal, J. — The facts of this case are peculiar. Apparently there was a dispute about some immovable property between the parties and in a suit No. 138 of 1926/27 Firm Harji Mal Mithan Deo Parshad v. Abdulla and Shakur it was held that the relation-ship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties and on that finding the suit for possession of the house was dismissed.

It appears that subsequent to the dismissal of the suit the respondents, who were plaintiffs in the suit mentioned above, presented an application to the Magistrate First Class Ambala Cantonment alleging that Abdul Shakur the defendant in that suit, who was again alleged to be the tenant of the applicant had disappeared and his whereabouts were not known, and that his moveable property was lying in the house. A prayer was made that the police be directed to take over possession of the moveable property after breaking the lock of the house. The Magistrate, on 26th November 1928, passed the following order :

"The application be sent to the Sub-Inspector Police of Ambala, with the remark that the house should be got opened in the presence of respectable persons of the Mohalla and that on receiving cartage from the applicant goods be made over to the Sheriff of the Court."

It appears that in pursuance of this order, the Sub-Inspector opened the house and made over the goods of the petitioner Abdul Shakur to the Sheriff of the Court. The petitioner, on 1st December 1928, presented an application to the Magistrate, praying that the order passed on the previous occasion be set aside and that possession of the house be given back to him. The Magistrate dismissed the petition on 19th January 1929. Thereupon a petition for revision of this last order was presented to the District Magistrate but was rejected by him on 23rd February 1929. It is to be noted that no application for revision of the original order, directing the Sub-Inspector of Police to open the house and to hand over the property of the petitioner to the Sheriff of the Court, was presented to the District Magistrate.

The petitioner has now presented this petition for revision in this Court and it is directed against both the orders of the Magistrate. An important question that arises in this case is whether this Court has jurisdiction to entertain the petition or in other words whether the order of the Magistrate, which is sought to be revised, was passed by him in his judicial capacity or in his executive capacity. If it was passed in his judicial capacity then I have no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction and, under the circumstances of the case, the order should be set aside. The respondents' counsel contends that the application for revision should not be entertained by this Court because the petitioner has subsequently instituted a suit against the respondents for recovery of possession of the house, but in the peculiar circumstances of this case, I do not think this objection should prevent this Court from entertaining the petition.

It is quite clear that the respondents dishonestly moved the Magistrate to practically eject the petitioner from the house after he had failed in this attempt in the civil Court and it will under the circumstances, be unfair to drive the petitioner to the civil Court to obtain relief by a suit if it can be granted to him in these proceedings.

Mr. Sundar Das, counsel for the respondents, contends that the order of the Magistrate was passed under S. 25, Police Act, 1861. That section provides that :

"it shall be the duty of every police officer to take charge of all unclaimed property, and to furnish an inventory thereof to the Magistrate of the district and that he shall be guided as to the disposal of the property by such orders as he shall receive from the Magistrate of the district."

The order in the present case was not passed by the District Magistrate but by a Magistrate of the First Class, arrogated to himself the powers of a District Magistrate, powers which are of an executive nature, it is no concern of this Court. There is no other provision of the law under which the Magistrate could proceed in the present case and it is contended that he exercised his powers as a Magistrate and, unless it can be shown that he acted expressly under the provisions of some law which confers power on him so to act and such powers are expressly defined to be executive powers, this Court would have jurisdiction over the actions of the Magistrate. In other words when a Magistrate takes any action in his capacity as a Magistrate, it is contended on behalf of the petitioner that, he is amenable and subject to the supervision of this Court, and this Court has the power to revise his orders. The question, in my opinion, is of interest and presents some difficulty and is, therefore, fit to go before a Division Bench for decision. I accordingly refer the following question to a Division Bench.

"Whether this Court has jurisdiction to revise the orders of the Magistrate, First Class, Ambala Cantonment, passed on 26th November 1928, and 19th January 1929, whether under the Criminal Procedure Code, or under S. 107 Government of India Act ?"

Currie, J.—The circumstances leading to this application have been fully stated in the order referring the question to Division Bench. The question :

"Whether this Court has jurisdiction to revise the orders of the Magistrate First Class, Ambala Cantonment passed on 26th November 1928, and 19th January 1929, whether under the Criminal Procedure Code, or under S. 107, Government of India Act."

If the orders passed by the Magistrate, First Class, Ambala Cantonment, were passed by him in the capacity of a judicial officer sitting as a Court, this Court would admittedly have jurisdiction to revise those orders. The point for determination therefore is whether the said orders were passed by Mr. Keelan as a Magistrate in his judicial capacity or as contended by the respondents in his executive capacity under S. 25, Police Act. In the first application presented on 25th November 1928 by the firm Harji Mal Mahan Deo Parshad no specific reference to the provisions of any law is made; the petition is headed bakhiamat shaeif sahib bahadur Magistrate darja aval camp Ambala and the prayer is that orders hasab qaida marwaja kufal makan mazkur khalwaya jakar jo asbab baramad howe woh mal khana sarkari men rakhwa diya jawe might be passed. This petition recited that the house was the property of the applicants and that the goods in the house belonged to Abdul Shakur. The order of the Magistrate passed on 26th November 1928, was to the effect :

"that the application be sent to the Sub-Inspector, Ambala, with the remark that the house should be got opened in the presence of respectable persons of the mohalla and that on receiving cartage from the applicant goods be made over to the Sheriff of the Court."

This was accordingly done.

On the 1st December Abdul Shakur presented a petition to the Magistrate asking for return of possession. This petition was dismissed by Mr. Keelan on 19th January 1929. It was noted that no law had been cited under which he could restore possession and that the copy of the judgment in the civil suit did not show the petitioner as owner. Mr. Keelan then signed himself Magistrate, First Class. The mere fact that he signed as "Magistrate First Class" does not necessarily imply that he was acting as a Court of law.

The next step was an application for revision presented before the District Magistrate which was, however, dismissed on 23rd February 1929. This application had sought merely to have Mr. Keelan's second order revised and had not attacked his first order.

In the course of the proceedings before the District Magistrate Mr. Keelan was asked under what provisions of law he had acted, and he replied that he has acted in accordance with the usual practice, and that his action was under S. 25, Police Act. Now, S. 25, Police Act runs ;

"It shall be the duty of every police officer to take charge of all unclaimed property and to furnish an inventory thereof to the Magistrate of the district."

"The police-officers shall be guided as to the disposal of such property by such orders as they shall receive from the Magistrate of the district."

From this it will be seen that what is contemplated is that a police officer shall take charge of all unclaimed property and shall furnish an inventory to the Magistrate of the district, and take his orders for disposal thereof. That is to say the initiative is to be ordinarily with the police. "Property" is defined in S. (1) as including any moveable property, money or valuable security and clearly the provisions of S. 25, Police Act, would not apply to to immovable property. In this connexion it should be noted that the Magistrate's order of the 26th November contains no reference to the possession of the house being handed over, though it directs the house to be opened and gives directions concerning the goods to be found therein.

Now, Mr. Keelan is clearly not the Magistrate of the District. It appears that he is the Magistrate in charge of Ambala Cantonment. There is nothing on the record to show whether the Magistrate of the district has formally delegated any powers under S. 25, Police Act, to Mr. Keelan, though it appears that as a matter of practice he does exercise such powers.

Various cases have been cited at the Bar dealing with the question of the jurisdiction of a High Court to revise orders. 4 P. R. 1908 Cr. was cited to show that the orders of an officer who claimed to be acting as Collector and head of the excise administration of the district could be revised. That case, however, is distinguishable from the present case. It was there held that the officer in question could only pass the order directing the police to make further enquiries in his capacity as District Magistrate and could not have ordered the police to make investigation in his capacity as Collector."

Reference was made to Panchavan Banerji v. Upendra Nath (1) and Crawford Bayley Co. In the Petition of (2) regarding the powers of a High Court under S. 561-A, Criminal P. C. The Allahabad case related to the power of a High Court to order certain remarks made in the judgment of the Sessions Judge to be expunged from the record, and there can be no doubt that in the case the Sessions Judge was sitting as a Court subordinate to the High Court. In Crawford Bayley Co. In the Petition of (2) the High Court held that they had power to interfere with the order of the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, refusing to allow his legal advisers to interview an accused person remanded to police custody, when the accused had already been brought before a Magistrate for remand. There could be no doubt that the matter came within the criminal jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court. Neither of these rulings is, therefore, applicable to the present case. Reference was also made to an English case Ex parte Bradlaugh (3) but the circumstances there were not analogous to the present case.

The rulings, Queen Empress v. Munda Shetti (4) and Nataraja Aiyar, In re (5) have been cited with reference to the remarks contained therein on the tests to be applied for the determination of whether an order is a judicial order or an executive one. In Nataraja Aiyar, In re (5), at p. 85, the learned Judge remarked :

(1) A. I. R. 1927 All. 198=49 All. 254.

(2) A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 551=50 Bom 741.

(3) [1876] 3 Q. B. D. 549.

(4) [1901] 24 Mad. 121.

(5) [1912] 86 Mad. 72=27 M. L. J. 893=16 I. C. 755=(1912) M. W. N. 1012.

"In Bex v. Woodhouse (6) the test adopted appears to be whether there was a lis before the officer."

and this test was applied.

Now, in the present case, it cannot be said, in my opinion, that there was any lis before Mr. Keelan. There was no question of deciding the rights of any party on the petition decided by the order 26th November 1928. That order merely directed the police to open the house, take charge of certain goods which were said to be unclaimed and deposit them with the Sheriff. Eventually the goods were made over to Abdul Shakur by an order dated 13th December 1928. There can thus in my opinion be no doubt that the first order passed by Mr. Keelan on 26th November 1928 was passed by him as an executive officer purporting to act under the Police Act and not as a Court of law or as a Magistrate acting in a judicial capacity. The second order of the 19th January 1929 is merely consequential on the first order and stands or falls therewith. In my opinion the question of the power of Mr. Keelan to pass such an order is one to be dealt with by his superiors on the executive side. I therefore hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to reverse the said orders under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. In view of the finding that Mr. Keelan was not acting as a Court of law S. 107, Government of India Act would in my opinion have no application.

I would therefore dismiss the application.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 63 of 1930,
Decided on 5th April 1930.

Criminal trial—Evidence—Mere fact that another view of case may be taken does not justify retrial.

Where the trial Magistrate after coming to the conclusion that the prosecution story is doubtful, discharges the accused, the mere circumstance that another view may be taken of the case than that which the trial Magistrate takes would not justify a retrial. [P 692 C 1]

Din Muhammad and Nazir Ahmad—for Petitioner.

M. Sleem—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The complainant instituted a criminal complaint under S. 406, I. P. C., against her half sister on the ground that she had misappropriated certain jewels entrusted to her. The complaint was sent to a Second Class Magistrate who after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution discharged the accused. A revision petition was preferred in the Court of the District Magistrate and it was heard by the Additional District Magistrate. He considered that there should be a retrial although the record of the evidence was complete. He accordingly accepted the petition and set aside the order of the Second Class Magistrate discharging the accused and sent the complaint to a First Class Magistrate for disposal. To set aside this order the accused has moved this Court.

It is apparent that the Magistrate is inexperienced and that he permitted too lengthy a cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses on matters some of which were of doubtful relevancy. It is also the case that some of his criticism of the evidence is petty but on the whole he came to the conclusion that the story was a doubtful one which he could not accept. He accordingly on that finding rightly discharged the accused.

The reasons given by the learned Additional District Magistrate for sending the complaint back for trial are not sound. He has stated that if there was evidence that ornaments were made over and that there was a promise to return them then obviously there was a prima facie case and the respondent had to clear herself. The Magistrate, it seemed to him, in holding that there was no prima facie case did so without there being any evidence of rebuttal. This statement of law is undoubtedly wrong. It was for the Magistrate to reject the prosecution evidence if he did not believe it without any rebuttal. The mere fact that a certain number of prosecution witnesses are examined does not mean that they must be believed or that any rebuttal is necessary. Again, the learned Additional District Magistrate said that even if the entrusting of the jewels was doubtful and enquiry would be necessary and as the lower Court admitted that there was some doubt he considered that it was his bounden duty to go ahead with the enquiry. This again is a wrong principle of law. All the evidence had been heard, and the Magistrate considered that in spite of that evidence, the case remained doubtful. He therefore acted quite properly on his finding in discharging the accused and giving her the benefit of the doubt.

I was asked, however, to maintain the order of the Additional District Magistrate though the reasons given by him were not sound. I have given the case careful consideration and I am not prepared to do so. In my judgment this is a case for the civil Courts and it cannot be said that the judgment of the trial Magistrate was perverse or foolish. It may be that another view may be taken of the case than that which the Magistrate took; but that circumstance alone would not justify a retrial. I therefore accept this petition and setting aside the order of the Additional District Magistrate dated 11th December 1929, restore the order of the trial Magistrate dated 19th August 1929, discharging the accused.

CURRIE, J.

Mangloo—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 183 of 1930, Decided on 11th April 1930, against order of First Class Magistrate, Rohtak, D/- 22nd January 1930.

Penal Code, Ss. 75, 369 and 392—Charges framed against accused under S. 392 and not specifically under S. 75 though he admits previous convictions—Subsequent conviction under S. 369 without amendment of original charge—S. 238, Criminal P. C., is inapplicable offence under S. 369 being not minor in relation to S. 392—Conviction under S. 379-75 is also impossible there being no specific charge under S. 75—Criminal P. C., S. 238 (2).

Where the Magistrate frames a charge against an accused under S. 392 and does not charge him specifically under S. 75, though he admits previous convictions, but eventually holding the offence to fall more properly under S. 369 convicts the accused under S. 369 without amending the original charge, S. 238 (2),

Criminal P. C., cannot be applied as an offence under S. 369 can scarcely be held to be a minor offence in relation to S. 392, the circumstances attending the two kinds of offences having considerable elements of difference between them. The accused cannot also be convicted under S. 379-75 in such a case, there being no formal charge under S. 75. [P 692 C 2]

Khurshid-Zaman—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The present appeal is from jail and it is not necessary to go into the facts of the case at length. It is obvious that the conviction in its present form cannot stand.

The prosecution story was that the appellant enticed two small boys into the jungle and removed from their persons certain ornaments and was subsequently captured with these ornaments in his possession. The case was sent up for trial under S. 392, I. P. C., and the Magistrate framed a charge under that section. Though the appellant was a previous convict and though the previous convictions were put to him and admitted by him, he was not, as far as I can see specifically charged under S. 75, I. P. C. Eventually the Magistrate held that the offence, as made out by the evidence, more properly fell under S. 369, I. P. C., and accordingly convicted the appellant under that section without any amendment of the original charge. Mr. Khurshid Zaman appearing for the Crown admits that this procedure was irregular. In my opinion, S. 238 (2), Criminal P. C., cannot be applied as an offence under S. 369, I. P. C., can scarcely be held to be a minor offence in relation to S. 392, I. P. C., the circumstances attending the two kinds of offences having considerable elements of difference between them. Mr. Khurshid Zaman suggested that another method of dealing with the offence would be to convict under S. 379/75, I. P. C., but this is impossible, as the Magistrate has not framed any formal charge under S. 75, I. P. C. The only course, therefore, open to me is to set aside the conviction and remand the case for retrial. The appellant to remain in judicial lock-up pending retrial.

(a) Criminal P.C., Ss. 256 and 537—Omission to record reasons under S. 256 for questioning accused forthwith after framing charge is irregularity covered by S. 537 unless failure of justice is caused.

Omission to record reasons under S. 256, for questioning the accused forthwith after the framing of the charge, as to whether he wishes to recall any of the prosecution witnesses for further examination amounts to no more than an irregularity in procedure covered by S. 537, and would not be a ground for setting aside the conviction unless it has occasioned a failure of justice : *A. T. N. Walavalkar—for Petitioner.

A. A. Adarkar—for Opposite Party.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—There is a society in Bombay called the Nutan Marathi Hitavardhak Sangha. At a meeting of the society on 14th October 1928, there was a dispute between the President, S. D. Tandulkar, and the present petitioner V. N. Devli, who claims to be a member of the society but whose membership is disputed. Each of the parties filed a criminal complaint against the other. The President's complaint against the petitioner for offences under Ss. 447, 504 and 506 I. P. C., was filed on 19th October 1928, and was heard and decided on 13th November 1929. The witnesses for the prosecution were examined and cross-examined ; the accused (that is, the petitioner) was examined by the Court at some length under S. 342, Criminal P.C., then the charge was framed; the accused was asked if he wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses further and he said he did not ; and lastly some defence witnesses, who were present in Court, were examined. The accused was represented by a pleader. It does not appear that further time for the defence was asked for, or that any objection was then raised to the case being disposed of in one sitting.

But S. 256, Criminal P.C., as recently amended, appears to be intended to provide that there shall ordinarily be at least two hearings (of a warrant case). The accused is to be asked at the next hearing whether he wishes to recall any of the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination. If the Magistrate thinks proper to put this question forthwith he is required to record his reasons for so doing. In the present case the Magistrate omitted to record his reasons. This is the first ground on which this Court is asked to revise the order of conviction of the petitioner. Reliance is placed on the decision of the High Court in Emperor v. Lakshman (1).

In the second place it is contended that the examination of the accused under S. 342 ought to have been taken after the charge was framed, and that the omission to examine the accused again under that section is an irregularity which vitiates the trial. For that proposition reliance is placed on Emperor v. Genu Gopal (2).

I do not think there is any substance in either of these contentions. It goes without saying, of course, that the provisions of the Code are meant to be strictly obeyed, and if they are disobeyed, and the disobedience results in any kind of injustice that will be a good ground for interference in revision. But S. 537 expressly provides that there shall be no interference in appeal or revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity which has not occasioned a failure of justice. In Emperor v. Lakshman (1) the failure of justice was patent. The accused in that case has been called upon to state forthwith if they wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. They applied for time as their pleader was absent. The Magistrate refused to grant them any time, and he also refused their request to be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses at the next hearing. That was very different from a mere omission to record reasons. The accused were denied a privilege to which under the law they were clearly entitled. This case cannot, I think, be regarded as an authority for the proposition that any breach of the provisions of S. 256 necessarily involves the quashing of the proceedings. No doubt Mirza, J., says at p. 598 : "The provisions of S. 256 appear to us to be peremptory". But the learned Judges who constituted the Bench were apparently in agreement, and Patkar, J., says at p. 600 :

"It would depend on the facts of each case whether the contravention of S. 256, Criminal P. C., amounts to a mere irregularity of procedure or to an illegality vitiating the trial."

That is in accordance with the view of the other High Courts : Emperor v. Ohhajju (3) and Mt. Ghasiti v. Emperor (4). In Emperor v. Khushal (5) our own High Court held that there is no universal rule that disobedience even of a mandatory provision of the Code has the consequence of nullification of all proceedings, irrespective of the question of prejudice. There is a ruling of the Rangoon High Court to the same effect in Nga Hla U v. Emperor (6). The Privy Council ruling in Subrahmanya Ayyar v. Emperor (7) applies only to the breach of a mandatory provision as to the mode of trial. There had been an illegal joinder of charges in that case. S. 256 does not deal with the mode of trial, but with the order of proceedings : see Emperor v. Ohhajju (3), already cited, and Emperor v. Bechu Chaube (8).

I do not see any reason to suppose that the accused in the case before us was prejudiced in any way by the Magistrate asking him forthwith if he wished to cross-examine further, or by the Magistrate's omission to record his reasons for this procedure. Apparently, if he had recorded his reasons, it would only have been necessary for him to say that the case was a simple and rather trivial one, that all the necessary evidence was available, and that nobody objected to the case being disposed of at once. It has been suggested to us that if there had been an adjournment the accused might perhaps have summoned some additional witnesses. But if he really wanted any more witnesses there was nothing to prevent him asking the Magistrate to summon them.

As to the objection in connexion with S. 342, it is true that in Emperor v. Genu Gopal (2) Patkar, J., appears to have expressed the opinion that the proper stage for the compulsory examination of the accused under S. 342, is after the framing of the charge. But that expression of opinion was not necessary for the decision of the case. The examination of the accused had been merely perfunctory ; they had not been given a proper opportunity of explaining the evidence against them. That circumstance in itself was sufficient to vitiate the trial. But Wild, J., held that, if the questions put to the accused had been such as to enable them to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against them, there would have been no contravention either of the spirit or letter of S. 342. The facts there were similar to those of the present case, that is to say, the accused had been examined before the framing of the charge and there had been no further examination or cross-examination of prosecution witnesses. With great respect I prefer the view taken by Wild, J. Provided that the accused are examined after the evidence for the prosecution is completely closed, and before they are called on for their defence, I do not think it makes any difference whether the examination takes place before or after the framing of the charge. The provisions of the Code are sufficiently rigid already. It would be a mistake, in my opinion, to make them more rigid than they are by judicial interpretation. So far as my experience goes the general practice has always been that the detailed examination of the accused is taken before the charge. That some examination of the accused is intended to be made at that stage appears to be indicated by the language of S. 254, "when such evidence and examination have been taken and made." If, after the framing of the charge, further evidence for the prosecution is put in, whether by the examination of additional witnesses or by further cross-examination of those already examined, then S. 342 requires that there shall be a further examination of the accused, to give an opportunity for explaining that additional evidence. But if there has been a proper examination of the accused before the charge, and the prosecution case remains as it was without any addition, S. 342, I should say, does not require anything further. It is always open to the accused to make a further statement when called upon to plead under S. 255.

Even on the other view, that the accused in this case ought to have been examined again after the charge, the error or irregularity would certainly be curable under S. 537 : Emperor v. Bechu (8), Nga Hla U v. Emperor (6), Mohiuddin v. Emperor (9). But I do not think there was any error or irregularity.

I would discharge the Rule.

Mirza, J. — The facts of the case which have given rise to this revision application are set out in detail in the judgment of my learned brother. The only two grounds urged on behalf of the applicant are : (1) that the Magistrate committed an illegality in proceeding forthwith with the trial after the charge had been framed without giving any reason in writing, a procedure which is in contravention of S. 256, Criminal P. C., and (2) the Magistrate committed an illegality in not questioning the accused generally on the case after the charge had been framed, failure to do which, it is contended, amounts to a contravention of the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C.

In support of the first contention, reliance is placed upon a ruling of this Court in Emperor v. Lakshman (1), where the conviction was set aside because the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C., had not been followed in the trial. I was a party to that decision. The facts of that case, however, can be distinguished from the present case. In that case it clearly appears that the failure by the Magistrate to comply with the provisions of S. 256, had resulted in a prejudice to the accused. The accused's pleader was absent relying on the usual practice of the Court in such matters to adjourn the case after the charge is framed. The accused had applied for an adjournment and the Magistrate had refused the application. The accused were unable to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in the absence of their pleader. In the present case it has not been shown that any prejudice has resulted to the applicant owing to the Magistrate proceeding with the case forthwith after framing the charge. The applicant was represented by a pleader who raised no objection to the procedure followed by the Magistrate. The applicant did not apply to the Magistrate for an adjournment on the ground that he wanted to summon more witnesses to give evidence on his behalf or any other ground. It is not every failure to comply with provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, which, although peremptory in form, would vitiate a trial apart from its being shown that such failure has prejudiced the case of the accused. S. 537, Criminal P. C., seems to me to be comprehensive enough to cover a case like the present where although an error or irregularity is shown to have taken place in the procedure followed by the Magistrate yet it does not appear that such error or irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice.

In Emperor v. Chhajju (3) Kendall, J., was of opinion that the provisions in S. 256, Criminal P. C., were not provisions relating to the mode of trial and that failure to follow those provisions would strictly amount to no more than an irregularity in procedure, and would not be a ground for setting aside the conviction, unless the irregularity had occasioned a failure of justice. The facts of the case in Emperor v. Chhajju (3) were similar to those with which we have here to deal. The Magistrate had not recorded reasons for proceeding with the trial forthwith after the charge had been framed. The learned Judge remarks (p. 318):

"It appears to be clear enough that the accused did not wish to re-summon any witness, for, when they were represented by counsel on 19th May the witnesses were not re-summoned as I have no doubt they would have been, had any application been made on behalf of the accused. There has been no failure of justice on account of the irregularity."

In Mt. Ghasiti v. Emperor (4). Shadi Lal, C. J., has held that provided there has been no consequent failure of justice, the Magistrate's omission to record his reasons for requiring the accused, at the same hearing as that at which the charge was framed, to state whether they wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, would not render the trial illegal. He has further held that the provision contained in S. 256, Criminal P. C. is not mandatory, but merely directory. In that case it was found that the omission by the Magistrate to record the reasons had not caused any prejudice to the accused and the irregularity in the procedure was considered to be cured under S. 537 Criminal P. C.

It is clear in my judgment that no prejudice having resulted to the applicant by the failure of the Magistrate to comply with the provisions of S. 256, the objection taken under the first head fails.

On the second point, namely, the illegality or irregularity alleged to have taken place in not complying with the provisions of S. 342, the applicant has relied upon certain observations of Patkar J. in Emperor v. Genu Gopal (2). In dealing with the latter part of S. 342, the learned Judge has remarked that the stage for calling upon the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him would be reached when after the charge is framed the accused either declines to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, or when he expresses a wish to cross-examine the witnesses the cross-examination and re-examination are finished, and the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution taken. But that expression of opinion was not necessary for the decision of the case and was not shared by Wild, J. who delivered a separate but concurring judgment. Wild J., remarks (p. 1143):

"... if the learned Magistrate had questioned the applicants generally on the case on 1st November for the purpose of enabling them to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against them, his failure to question them again after their refusal to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses would not have been contrary to the provisions of S. 342."

The Magistrate in that case had questioned the accused before framing the charge. With great respect I follow the view expressed by Wild, J. on this point in preference to that expressed by Patkar J. The latter part of S. 342, Cl. (1), lays down that the Court shall question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. It would be permissible under this section, in my opinion, for such examination of the accused to be after the witnesses for the prosecution are examined but before the charge is framed and the accused called on for his defence. The Magistrate, in my opinion, has not committed any irregularity in recording the accused's statement before framing the charge. I may state here that the applicant's petition did not set out ground 2 in clear or explicit terms. Ground 2 taken in the petition which relates to this point only states: "The statement of the accused has not been properly recorded". We have, however, heard arguments on the point and are satisfied that there has been no illegality or irregularity in the procedure under this head which can be said to vitiate the trial.

I agree that the Rule should be discharged.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

Emperor

v.

Shivputrayya Baslingaya — Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 11 of 1930, Decided on 25th February 1930, made by Addl. Sess. Judge, Belgaum.

* (a) Evidence Act, S. 114, Illus. (a)—Accused showing place where stolen property is concealed does not by itself raise presumption of his having committed theft or dacoity or receiving stolen property but if such property was produced from his house unless he can account for his possession there is such presumption.

The mere fact that an accused person points out the place in which stolen property is concealed does not give rise to any presumption under S. 114, or justify his conviction of the offence of receiving stolen property, still less of the offence of theft or dacoity. But if such property is produced from the house of the accused person a presumption would arise under S. 114, Illus. (a), that the accused was either the thief or had received the goods knowing them to be stolen unless he can account for his possession of the stolen articles: 17 ALL. 570, Ref. [P 700 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 27—Court's duty in applying S. 27.

Per Broomfield, J.—In order to apply S. 27 it is necessary to know exactly what the statements relied upon are; because they are admissible only so far as they lead to the discovery of some fact and no further: 11 B. H. C. R. 242, Rel. on. [P 700 C 1]

Mirza, J.—This is a reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Belgaum, under S. 307, Criminal P. C., in a case he tried with a jury in which the accused were charged with having committed offences under Ss. 457 and 395, I. P. C. The jury returned an unanimous verdict of not guilty. The Sessions Judge differing from that verdict has made this reference and is of opinion that the accused could be convicted of offences under those sections.

The case for the prosecution rests upon the identification of accused 1, 3, 4 and 5 and upon the production of part of the stolen property by accused 1 to 4 jointly and by accused 2 from his own house.

There can be no doubt that an offence of house-breaking and theft was committed in the house of the complainant Adivappa on the night of 11th September 1929. At that time the only occupant of the house was Adivappa's daughter-in-law Basavanewa. The evidence of Basavanewa is that on that night her husband was absent from the house and as she was the only inmate, she had closed all doors and had gone to sleep, that she had got up owing to a noise proceeding from the kitchen and had lighted her lamp. The persons who had made an entry into the house came up, blew out the lamp, and thereafter effected an entry into the God room of the house from which they removed a tin-box containing certain articles of value. According to her, she saw and identified accused 1, 3 and 4 who were previously known to her and she also saw a dark tall man whom she subsequently identified as accused 5. Accused 2 was not mentioned by her as having been among the persons who had entered the house this night. The robbers chained up the door of the house from outside when they left it. The infirmity in this evidence is that the next morning when the house was opened from outside by a passer by, a woman, also of the name Basavanewa, in consequence of the witness Basavanewa calling out to her for help, Basavanewa gave out that thieves had entered her house and had chained the door from outside after having stolen property from the house, but she did not mention the names of accused 1, 3 and 4 as having been among the dacoits. At 7 a. m. in the morning her father-in-law Adivappa returned from his field and coming to the house was informed by Basavanewa of what had occurred. On this occasion the evidence of both Adivappa and Basavanewa is that Basavanewa told Adivappa the names of accused 1, 3 and 4 and stated also that there was a dark tall man whom she could identify if she again saw him.

At about nine o'clock the same morning Adivappa gave the first information to the police patil but the information was in general terms and he did not disclose the names of accused 1, 3 and 4 to the patil. At this time a police jamadar Jangumiya was staying in the village in the house of the police patil in connexion with the Ganapati festival.

Jangumiya assisted the police patil in the investigations which were started immediately after Adivappa had given the information to the police patil. Certain panchas were summoned and a panchnama of the house was made in the presence of Jangumiya and the police patil. Adivappa was present at the time the panchnama was made. Even then the names of the dacoits were not disclosed. The Police Sub-Inspector arrived in the village at 4 or 4-30 p. m. of the same day, 12th September. It was after the arrival of the Police Sub-Inspector that the names of accused 1, 3 and 4 were disclosed to him by Basavanewa and the complainant as persons who had taken part in the dacoity. The Sub-Inspector of Police gave instructions to the police patil to keep a watch on these three accused. The police patil did so and as the result of his following the three accused to a public meeting, which was held that night at 11 p. m. in the village, gathered certain information which he communicated to the Sub-Inspector of Police on the following day, 13th September. The Police Sub-Inspector sent for accused 1 to 4 and in consequence of certain information he got from them they were taken to certain fields which did not belong to them where they individually and by turns pointed out places from which some of the stolen articles were recovered. The evidence does not show what statements each of the four accused made in consequence of which the discovery of the stolen articles was made. Later in the afternoon of the same day in consequence of information given by accused 1 to 4 accused 5 was arrested, and an identification parade was held at which Basavanewa identified him as the fourth person who had entered her house and taken part in the dacoity on the night of 11th September.

In order to convict the accused of offences of house-breaking and theft it would be necessary in the first place to believe the evidence of Basavanewa as to her identification of accused 1, 3, 4 and 5. It is clear the offence was committed during the night. Basavanewa was asleep at the time when the dacoits entered the house. Having been awakened by the noise she lighted the lamp, but the lamp was blown out soon after it was lighted. She has stated that some of the accused came up to her. But she has also stated that after the lamp was blown out she was unable to see or identify the persons who were standing near her. She has also stated that some of the persons present threatened her not to raise an alarm. Had this evidence of Basavanewa received support from the first information given the next morning to the police patil we might have regarded it with some confidence. The explanation given by Adivappa that he suppressed this information from the complaint he lodged with the police patil because he was afraid the police patil might shield the culprits and help them to do away with the stolen property is not one which we could easily accept. If the jury disbelieved this part of the evidence of Basavanewa and Adivappa we would not be able to say that they were not justified in doing so or that they acted in a perverse manner.

The learned Government Pleader has urged that the evidence of Basavanewa and Adivappa regarding the identification of accused 1, 3 and 4 has received sufficient corroboration with reference to the stolen articles that were produced by them. The evidence with regard to the production of the stolen articles by accused 1, 3 and 4 does not show that the articles were produced from their possession. All that it amounts to is that those accused along with accused 2 pointed out places where the stolen articles were concealed. The only value that could be attached to the discovery of these articles would depend upon any relevant statements the accused may have made which led to the discovery. It is not shown from the evidence what statement each of the accused made which led to the discovery of the articles. Under these circumstances we cannot say that the jury was wrong in not attaching importance to the discovery of the articles made in consequence of the accused 1 to 4 having pointed out the places where the articles lay hidden. Where the articles are not shown to have been in the possession of the accused no presumption would arise that they had come by it by means of an offence. The prosecution have not succeeded, in our opinion, in proving that the accused admitted or were otherwise proved to have been in possession of the stolen articles at any time.

With regard to the case of accused 5 it depends solely upon his identification by the witness Basavanewa. It has not been shown that he was in possession of any stolen article or pointed out any. We cannot say that the jury were wrong or perverse in not relying upon the evidence of Basavanewa against accused 5. We are not prepared to take a different view from the one taken by the jury in his case.

With regard to the case of accused 1, 3, 4 and 5 we are of opinion that the verdict of the jury is proper.

With regard to the case of accused 2, Basavanewa has not identified him as one who entered the house. The theory of the prosecution is that accused 2 must have been outside the house guarding the entrance and facilitating the commission of the offence by the other accused. The evidence against accused 2 is that he produced from his house articles Exs. E and F, which are proved to have been part of the stolen property. As these articles were produced from the house of accused 2, by accused 2 himself, it is satisfactorily proved in our opinion that he must be deemed to have been in possession of them. A presumption would arise under S. 114, Illus. (a), Evidence Act, that accused 2 was either the thief or had received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession of the stolen articles. The dacoity was committed on the night of 11th September and the discovery of the stolen articles in the possession of accused 2 was made on 13th September. Accused 2 in his statement simply denied that the articles found in his house were in his possession and gave no explanation as to how they came to be in his house which would be consistent with his innocence. The learned Judge does not seem to have placed this aspect of the case against accused 2 before the jury. It is possible that if the jury had been properly directed on this point they might have convicted accused 2 of an offence in the alternative of either having committed dacoity or of having committed the offence of dishonestly receiving stolen property. The evidence against accused 2 would justify us in holding that he is guilty of this alternative offence. We convict accused 2 of an offence in the alternative under Ss. 395 and 411 and sentence him to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

The Registrar, appellate side, should provide each accused who has been acquitted and discharged with single third class railway fare by a passenger train from Bombay to Kambar Ganvi railway station, M. & S. M. Railway, near Dharwar, and to pay to each such accused six annas for three days' expenses in advance.

Broomfield, J.—I agree with my learned brother that it is impossible to place much reliance on the evidence of the girl Basavanewa as to her identification of accused 1, 3 and 4 in view of the fact that the names of these accused were not communicated until the arrival of the Sub-Inspector. The mention of the names of alleged offenders in the first information is always and quite properly relied upon by the prosecution as affording strong corroboration of evidence of identification. But conversely when the names are not mentioned at the earliest opportunity it must necessarily follow that the evidence of identification is rendered more or less suspicious, unless some satisfactory explanation is forthcoming of the failure to mention the names. In this case the explanation given by Adivappa, the complainant, is that he was afraid that the police patil might be desirous of shielding the accused. This story, however, is not in the least probable. Although there appears to be some relationship between the patil and accused 2 he is not in any way connected with the other accused, and accused 2 happens to be just the one whom Basavanewa does not claim to have identified. Further it appears that the police patil so far from shielding the accused took a very active part in working up the case. As far as I can see there is no reason whatever why the complainant should not have mentioned the names of the accused if he had really known them, particularly in view of the fact that the police patil was accompanied by a police head constable, Jangumiya, who, for some reason which is not very apparent, has not been examined as a witness for the prosecution.

In the case of accused 5 there is no evidence at all except the fact that Basavanewa picked him out in an identification parade held on 13th September. When she made her statement to the Police Sub-Inspector at 4 o'clock on the 12th she is said to have stated that one of the dacoits whose name she did not know was a tall dark man. We have seen accused 5 as well as the rest of the accused in Court, and it does not appear to us that he is markedly distinguished from the others either in respect of his complexion or his height. I think it would be unsafe to convict accused 5 merely on the strength of this identification by the girl.

There remains, therefore, only the evidence relating to the property. Now it appears to be a fact that accused 1, 2, 3 and 4 pointed out certain places in fields not belonging to them in which some of the property stolen in the dacoity was concealed. It is important to note that the fields where the property was found do not belong to these accused. The property was not, therefore, in their possession, and the position in that respect has not been properly explained to the jury by the learned Judge in his charge. What he says about this production of property is:

"If an accused is in possession of stolen property, he must explain how he came to be in possession of the property or he is presumed to be a thief or receiver of the stolen property (S. 114, illus. (a))."

If the jury, instead of acquitting accused 1, 3 and 4, had convicted them, relying upon this presumption in the Evidence Act, and the matter had come before us, it would have been necessary to consider whether there had not been a misdirection. The mere fact that an accused person points out the place in which stolen property is concealed does not give rise to any presumption under S. 114, or justify his conviction of the offence of receiving stolen property, still less of the offence of theft or dacoity. In that connexion I may refer to Queen-Empress v. Gobinda (1). To justify the finding that the accused 1, 3 and 4 had been in possession of the property which they pointed out, it would be necessary further to rely on certain statements alleged to have been made by these accused to the police. A number of statements have been placed upon the record in the body of the various panchnamas made which are obviously irrelevant and should never have been admitted at all. There are certain other statements of the accused deposed to by witnesses which might conceivably be admissible under the terms of S. 27, Evidence Act. But in order to apply that section it is necessary to know exactly what the statements were; because they are admissible only so far as they lead to the discovery of some fact and no further. That is a proposition which has been frequently laid down by the Courts. I need only refer to the case of Reg. v. Jora Hāsji (2). Here the evidence which has been given as to the statements made by the accused is in this form. Ex. 21, the police patil, says that the Sub-Inspector came and questioned the accused. They gave some information and offered to point out the place where the property had been hidden. The Sub-Inspector, Ex. 25, says similarly:

"Accused 1 to 4 came. I questioned them. They gave me information and offered to point out the places where the stolen property had been concealed."

He then goes on to say that each accused independently pointed out the same place. The panch witness Gangappa Ex. 15 says:

"The first four accused led us to the places where they said they had secreted the ornaments. They took us to a place near the patil's tank. There was near by a prickly pear hedge. They could not be seen from outside. All the accused pointed out the same place as the one where they had secreted the stolen jewellery."

Then again later on:

"Accused 1 and 2 offered to show us another place near Nichanki where they said they had concealed the tin box (Art. 1). They took us to a hedge of prickly pear in a field belonging to the patil."

Again in cross-examination this witness says:

"Accused 1 was questioned by us as to the place where the stolen articles were hid."

The statements of the accused being deposed to as having been jointly made in this manner, it is not clear whose statement led to the discovery of the property. When a fact is discovered in consequence of information given by one accused, and other accused persons also give the same information, it is not legitimate to say that the fact is discovered within the meaning of S. 27 from the information given by all of them: see Queen-Empress v. Bashya (3) and Queen-Empress v. Ram Churn Cheng (4). Further, owing to the form in which these statements of the accused have been deposed to, it is not even possible to say that the statement which actually led to the discovery of the property was an incriminating statement at all. In that connexion I may refer again to the judgment of West, J., in Reg. v. Jora Hāsji (2), where the learned Judge says (p. 244):

"For instance, a man says: 'You will find a stick at such and such a place. I killed Rama with it.' A policeman, in such a case, may be allowed to say he went to the place indicated, and found the stick; but any statement as to the confession of murder would be inadmissible."

For anything we know to the contrary, the statements made by the accused in this case may have been "you will find the property at such and such a place" and they may then have gone on to make further statements incriminating themselves, which however, would not in that case be legally admissible in evidence. I agree with my learned brother in holding that in the case of accused 1, 3 and 4 the fact that they pointed out the places where the stolen property was concealed would not justify their conviction of the offence charged or any offence, once it has been held that the evidence of identification is not reliable. The case of accused 2, however, stands on a different footing altogether. It is proved by evidence which there seems to be no reason to distrust that certain gold ornaments, which are identified as forming part of the stolen property, and one of which was mentioned and described in the list of property given by the complainant immediately after the offence was discovered, were produced by this accused from his house. From that circumstance the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a), Evidence Act, properly arises, and I agree with my learned brother that this accused ought to be convicted in the alternative of dacoity or of receiving stolen property, and I further agree that under the circumstances the sentence which ought to be imposed is one of eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

Per Curiam.—The remaining accused, accused 1, 3, 4 and 5 are acquitted and discharged and ordered to be set at liberty.

Kanhaiya—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 979 of 1929, Decided on 6th February 1930, against order of Addl. Sess Judge, Moradabad, D/- 22nd June 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Acquittal on charge under trial—Court finding accused guilty of another offence but being unable to convict putting him on another trial—Opinion of Court in prior trial cannot be allowed any weight in subsequent trial.

Where a person is acquitted of the offence of which he is charged but the Court finds him guilty of another offence and puts him on trial for that other offence, as it could not convict him of that offence in that trial, the opinion of that Court in prior trial cannot be allowed any weight in the subsequent trial. [P 701 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 236—S. 236 applies only in case of doubt.

Section 236 is only applicable where there is doubt as to which of several offences had been committed. [P 702 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 114—Person carrying in his cart dacoity, one of, whom being injured and having blood-stains on clothes soon after dacoity—Unless he explains circumstances presumption is that he knew of part taken by those person in dacoity and that one injured was injured in dacoity.

Where a man is found taking along in a cart persons one of whom has blood-stained clothes and a broken head, and these persons are subsequently found to have taken part in a dacoity recently before being taken away in the cart, the burden lies upon the person so found in the circumstances to disclose what he knows about the circumstances in which he was found. Failure to discharge the burden will lead the Court to the irresistible conclusion that he must have known that those persons had taken part in the dacoity and that one of them was injured in that dacoity. [P 702 C 1]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Boys, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the Local Government. A dacoity was committed on 25th October 1928, as a result of which 7 men were put on trial on charges of dacoity and convicted and they have been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. The present accused Kanhaiya, against whose acquittal the Local Government have appealed in this case, was put on trial in the prior case on a charge of abetment and acquitted. The learned Judge was of opinion that the charge of abetment must fail, that charge being founded on evidence of acts prior to the dacoity. He was of opinion, however, that Kanhaiya was undoubtedly guilty of the charge of harbouring, but held, and we think, in view of the facts, rightly, that he could not in that trial convict Kanhaiya under S. 216-A, I. P. C. Subsequently Kanhaiya has been put on trial under S. 216-A, has been acquitted, and the Local Government have appealed. There can, of course, be no question but that the opinion of the learned Judge who tried the original case cannot be allowed any weight on the merits of the present case. We have only had to refer to it because counsel for Kanhaiya in the present case was anxious that the judgment in the first case should be considered in support of his argument that the second trial was illegal. On the merits we have no hesitation in saying that the learned Government Advocate on behalf of the Local Government has made out his case. The facts are that Kanhaiya was caught on the road very shortly after the dacoity driving a bullock-cart in which were two men, one of whom was sitting, the other lying down, the latter with blood-stained clothes and a broken head. While the Sub-Inspector and his syce, who had stopped the cart, were engaged in arresting the two men in the cart, Kanhaiya succeeded in releasing the bullocks and himself bolting. The bullocks also disappeared. Another man, who was walking alongside the cart, similarly bolted and we hear nothing further of him. Subsequently the ownership of the cart was traced to Kanhaiya and his uncles, and the bullocks which had been in the cart were found at Kanhaiya's house, and Kanhaiya has been identified. The mukhia of his village further gives evidence that Kanhaiya was making false statements as to an alleged theft of his cart and bullock clearly in order to account for how his cart could have been found on the highroad. It is not necessary to detail this evidence more precisely, for in fact it is so clear that counsel for Kanhaiya has been unable to challenge it in this Court and has felt constrained to accept the facts alleged by the prosecution. On the merits the only argument that was possible before us as to whether Kanhaiya had knowledge or not that the two men he was taking along in the cart had committed a dacoity. We should have mentioned that these two men were among the dacoits subsequently convicted. When we find a man driving a cart along the road containing two persons, one of whom has blood-stained clothes and a broken head, and that those two persons are persons who have in fact recently taken part in a dacoity, it is manifest that the burden lies heavily upon that person to disclose what he knows about the circumstances in which he was found. Kanhaiya, instead of saying anything whatever to excuse himself, if anything could be said, bolted and even up to the last has not attempted to explain how he was there with the cart, but has simply contented himself with denying everything. The conclusion is irresistible that Kanhaiya must have known that the two men had been taking part in the dacoity and that one of them had been injured in that dacoity. The only other point urged is that the second trial was barred by the terms of S. 403, and an endeavour is made to bring this case within the terms of S. 236, Criminal P. C. Whatever the true interpretation of S. 236 may be, whether it applies only to cases where all the facts are known and only the application of the law is doubtful, or whether it applies only to cases where, while some of the necessary facts can be proved, pointing to one or another of several offences alternatively, one or more facts cannot be proved, which, if proved, would make it clear which of the offences had been committed, or whether it applies to both types of case, it is not necessary for us in this case to determine. It is clear on the words of the section itself that it is only applicable where there is a doubt as to which offence has been committed. Here counsel for the appellant is constrained to admit that in the previous trial there was no question of any doubt at all as to which of several offences had been committed. The Judge was clear that the offence of abetment had not been established. He was equally clear that the offence of harbouring had been established, and if there had been any provision of the law permitting him to alter the charge or to add a charge at the last moment, he would have done so. There was no question whatever of doubt whether on the law or on the facts, as to which offence had been committed. No other section but S. 236 could possibly, in the circumstances of the present case, bring it within S. 403, Criminal P. C. That failing there was nothing illegal in the present trial. We allow the appeal and convict Kanhaiya under S. 216-A, I. P. C. and sentence him to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Criminal Miso. Case No. 96 of 1930,
Decided on 20th March 1930.

(a) Allahabad High Court Rules, Chap. 1, R. 1 (14)—Single Judge has jurisdiction to dispose of an application for notice to printer and publisher of newspaper to show cause why they should not be convicted for contempt of Court and if such application come through jail authorities Judge can dispose it of in chambers.

Under Chap. 1, R. 1 (14), sub-Cl. (b), a single Judge has jurisdiction to dispose of an application praying for a notice to be issued to printer or publisher of a newspaper to show cause why they should not be convicted for contempt of Court, when there is no rule expressly requiring it to be made by a Bench of two or more Judges. Further when such an application is sent through the Superintendent of Jail the Judge can dispose of the matter in chambers without fixing any date for its hearing.

(b) Penal Code, S. 228—Test to see whether publication comes within scope, is, whether publication is likely to interfere with due course of justice.

If the scope of the inquiry or defence is very wide, it cannot be expected that, while the trial is going on, public criticism on all the subjects mentioned above should be entirely withheld. General comment on these various matters or historical events, so long as they do not directly refer to the part played by the accused, cannot be seriously objected to. Such criticism would not be a comment on pending proceedings at all nor would the publications of such comments ordinarily tend to interfere with the course of justice. The test to be applied is whether the publication is likely to prejudice mankind in favour of or against a party before the case is finally heard or whether it is likely to interfere with the due course of justice.

(c) Penal Code, S. 228—Matter relating to antecedent character of accused particularly if suggesting similar offence is contempt.

Matter published in a newspaper relating to the past life of an accused or to his antecedent character, particularly if it suggests an offence similar to that which he is charged, is contempt of Court as it must tend to interfere with the fair trial of that charge.

(d) Penal Code, S. 228—Contempt is matter of substance and not technicality and Court may not interfere if comments are not likely to prejudice fair trial.

The contempt of Court is not a matter of mere form or technicality but of substance, and the jurisdiction to punish for contempt has to be very carefully and cautiously exercised. It is well settled that when the offence is technical or of a slight or trivial nature the Court may condone it. Even if the observation on the subject matter of a proceeding may be likely to interfere with the course of justice and may technically amount to contempt, the Court may not interfere, if it is not satisfied that such comments were calculated to prejudice the fair trial; In re, New Gold Coast Exploration, (1901) 1 Oh. 860. Ref.

[P 704 C 2, P 705 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an application by six of the accused in the Meerut Conspiracy Case drawing the attention of the High Court to the issue of the Times of India dated 25th February 1930, pp. 11 and 17 and praying that a notice be issued to the Editor and the Printer and Publisher, of the said newspaper to show cause why they should not be convicted for contempt of Court.

If I had thought it a fit case for issuing notice to show cause, I would have directed this matter to be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for the constitution of a Bench of three Judges, as has been done in the past in regard to contempt of Court cases. But as I do not propose to take such a step, I think I have jurisdiction as a single Judge under Chap. 1, R. 1 (14) sub-Cl. (b), High Courts Rules, to dispose of this application when there is no rule expressly requiring it to be made by a Bench of two or more Judges. Also as the application has been sent through the Superintendent of Jail I can acceding to the practice of this Court dispose of the matter in chambers without fixing any date for its hearing. The inherent jurisdiction formerly exercised is now expressly conferred by the Contempt of Courts Act 12 of 1926.

The issue referred to above reproduced a note issued by the Government of Bombay on the labour position in Bombay City. Objection is taken by the applicants not to any comments made by the Editor on that note but on three specific passages in the note itself which has been printed in extenso in the paper. The accused persons are being tried for an offence under S. 121-A, I. P. C., and their grievance is that the publication of this note is likely to prejudice their trial. In para. 6 of their application it is admitted that the subject matter in the trial embraces many subjects and the movements in which the accused took part have become part of history, and:

"It is impossible for anybody to write about or comment on any labour or allied subjects without in some manner or other, directly or indirectly referring to the issues in this case;"

and that:

"the case of the petitioners covers the origin and growth of modern capital going back for centuries, revolutions in all parts of the world, social science, the whole field of sociology and state, the constitutions of several modern forms of state and several countries, including all the historical development of India and its offshoots for the last ten years."

If the scope of the inquiry or defence is so wide, it cannot be expected that, while the trial is going on, public criticism on all the subjects mentioned above should be entirely withheld. General comment on these various matters or historical events, so long as they do not directly refer to the part played by the accused, cannot be seriously objected to. Such criticism would not be a comment on pending proceedings at all nor would the publications of such comments ordinarily tend to interfere with the course of justice. The test to be applied is whether the publication is likely to prejudice mankind in favour of or against a party before the case is finally heard or whether it is likely to interfere with the due course of justice. Passage marked A-3 deals with the infusion of communism into the labour movement. No doubt the note refers to the starting of a paper called the "Kranti" (revolution), of which one of the accused is stated in the application to have been the Editor, refers to the formation of a new Girni Kamgar Union, of which some of the accused are stated in the application to have been office bearer and also refers to efforts to bring about strikes with the object of destroying capital and establishing a labour raj; but it does not otherwise refer directly to the accused or any specific activities of theirs which would have a bearing on their alleged offence under S. 121-A. The passage refers to the position in general and is by no means a comment on the pending proceedings or any writing likely to influence the result of that trial. I, therefore, do not think that this amounted to a contempt of the Subordinate Sessions Court.

Paragraph marked A-2 is as follows:

"It is unfortunate that certain individuals are fastening upon the workers, deluding them with promises incapable of fulfilment and endeavouring to use cloak of trade unionism as a mark for revolution. Such exploitation is disastrous to the working classes themselves and the Government desire to do everything possible to check it."

If the context of the note had shown definitely that any of the accused in the conspiracy trial are meant by the words "certain individuals" who are aiming at revolution, it would undoubtedly be a writing prejudicing the public against the accused concerned during the pendency of the proceedings and its publication would have amounted to a contempt. But even when the whole note is read, it remains doubtful whether the individuals referred to therein are necessarily the accused in the Meerut trial. They are certainly not mentioned by name at or about the place where this passage occurs. It would not be fair to connect this passage with the passage at another place in this long note to be mentioned hereafter. On the whole, I think that this is an ambiguous expression of opinion which cannot be considered to relate necessarily to any of the accused in the Meerut trial. It is, therefore, unnecessary to take cognizance of it.

The passage marked A-1 is slightly more definite and is in the following words:

"The abstention of the Bombay Textile Labour Union threw into the relief the activities of the Girni Kamgar Union, more particularly as several of the leaders of that union had been arrested in connexion with the Meerut case. While the public itself felt that the communal riots in the early part of the year had been fomented by the activities of those same leaders in stirring up animosity against the Pathans who helped to break the oil workers' strike."

The reference in the note to the leaders of the union who were arrested in connexion with the Meerut case as having fomented the riots was not proper, as the Meerut case is still proceeding. It unquestionably implies the suggestion that these persons have fomented the communal riots. Matter published in a newspaper relating to the past life of an accused or to his antecedent character, particularly if it suggests an offence similar to that which he is charged, is contempt of Court as it must tend to interfere with the fair trial of that charge. Publishing such matters in reference to the parties of a pending prosecution is likely to exercise a prejudice against them in the minds of the public, and it is incumbent on Courts of justice to preserve the minds of the public from being prejudiced against the accused before the trial is concluded. The reproduction of this passage therefore, amounts to a contempt of Court.

But the contempt of Court is not a matter of mere form or technicality but substance, and the jurisdiction to punish for contempt has to be very carefully and cautiously exercised. It is well settled that when the offence is technical or of a slight or trivial nature the Court may condone it. Even if the observations on the subject matter of a proceeding may be likely to interfere with the course of justice and may technically amount to contempt, the Court may not interfere, if it is not satisfied that such comments were calculated to prejudice the fair trial. In In re, Clemens, Jessel, M. R. remarked :

"In my opinion although as I say there is here that which is technically a contempt, and may be such a contempt as to be of a serious nature, I cannot think there is any such interference or any such fear of any such interference with the due conduct of this action, or any such prejudice to the defendant who is applying here as to justify the Court in interfering by this summary and arbitrary process: In re, New Gold Exploration Co. (1)."

There is no affidavit in support of the application, but as I do not propose to issue any notice to show cause, I do not think it necessary to call for affidavits. The proprietors might or might not have been actually aware of the publication of the note, but the Editor and the Printer and Publisher must be presumed to have knowledge of it. The note, however, is not any editorial comment, but is apparently a faithful and bona fide reproduction of a communication issued by the Government of Bombay. There is no reason to imagine that in reproducing it the Editor and the Printer and Publisher of the Times of India had themselves any intention of prejudicing the trial. Such communications are usually printed and published in the ordinary course of business. There cannot be any reasonable apprehension that the Sessions Judge in trying the case or the assessors would be in any way prejudiced by what the Government of Bombay has thought or what the Times of India has published. Nor is there any reasonable apprehension that witnesses who have to depose as to facts would be influenced by the opinions held by others. It is not suggested in the petition that the Editor and the Printer and Publisher of the Times of India themselves were actuated by any malicious motives against the accused in reproducing it.

Having regard to all these circumstances, I do not think that this is a fit case in which notice to show cause should be issued; but at the same time it is necessary that the Editor and the Printer and Publisher should be warned so as not to comment in future on the proceedings of the criminal trial or the antecedent history or character of the accused in any way likely to prejudice the minds of the public in favour of or against the prosecution or any of the accused.

In case either the editor or the printer and publisher named in the application desire to dispute their connexion with the said paper or challenge my conclusion, it would be open to them to apply for a re-hearing, as I am disposing of this matter only ex parte.

I accordingly order that only the warning referred to above should be sent to them by the Registrar.

Criminal Appeals No. 1374 and 1375 of 1929, Decided on 27th November 1929.

Evidence Act, S. 25—Police Officer acting also as Magistrate — Confession to him is illegal.

An Assistant Superintendent having all the powers of a District Superintendent of Police cannot cease to be a police officer simply because he is also a Magistrate and is acting in that capacity and therefore confession made to him is inadmissible in evidence: 7 *Bur. Tun Byu—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The two appellants, Jas Bahadur Thapa and Jasimaya, have been sentenced to death for the murder of one Surjiman Lama. The evidence against the appellants consisted in part of direct evidence and in part of a retracted confession of the appellant Jas Bahadur Thapa. This confession was admitted apparently without question in the Sessions Court but it is now urged that it was inadmissible. The confession was made to U Tun Pe, who is described in the record as the Superintendent to the Pakokku Hill Tracts. It appears from the Civil List U Tun Pe's correct designation is Assistant Superintendent, that he exercises the powers of Additional District Magistrate and that he is also an Assistant Commandant of Military

Police. The contention is that at the time of the recording of the confession U Tun Pe was a police officer and that the confession was therefore inadmissible under the provisions of S. 25, Evidence Act. In the committal proceedings U Tun Pe himself stated that he was District Superintendent of the Pakokku Hill Tracts Police. No evidence on this point was taken in the Sessions Court, but in a Police Department Notification No. 196, dated 22nd October 1912, appearing at Part 1 of the Burma Gazette at p. 756 for the year 1912 the Assistant Commandant of the Military Police in the Pakokku Hill Tracts was empowered with all the powers of a District Superintendent of Police under the Police Act, 1861. We have not been able to find any precise definition of the words "police officer." In the case of The Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), a confession was made to a Deputy Commissioner of Police who was also a Magistrate and Justice of the Peace and who took the confession in his magisterial capacity. It was argued in that case that the term "police officer" did not include a Deputy Commissioner of Police, but this objection was overruled. On p. 215 of the judgment Garth, C. J., remarks :

"in construing S. 25, Evidence Act of 1872, I consider that the term 'police officer' should be read not in any strict technical sense, but according to its more comprehensive and popular meaning. In common parlance and amongst the generality of people, the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Police are understood to be officers of police, or in other words 'police officers,' quite as much as the more ordinary members of the force; and, although in the case of a gentleman in Mr. Lambert's position, there would not be, of course, the same danger of a confession being extorted from a prisoner by any undue means, there is no doubt that Mr. Lambert's official character, and the very place where he sits as Deputy Commissioner, is not without its terrors in the eyes of an accused person; and I think it better in construing a section such as S. 25, which was intended as a wholesome protection to the accused, to construe it in its widest and most popular signification."

It was held that, although the officer recording the confession in that case was also a Magistrate, nevertheless a confession made to him was inadmissible. No other official report of any case directly bearing on this point has been cited to us. According to the unofficial report, in the case of Nwe Ka & 2

v. Emperor (2), the question whether a confession made to a Magistrate who was also a police officer was admissible in evidence was considered, but no definite decision on that point was arrived at. It would not seem to have been disputed in that case that the District Superintendent of Police was a police officer within the meaning of S. 25. That the term "police officer" is not ordinarily confined only to subordinate officers in the police force is clear from the provisions of S. 14 (4), Criminal P. C., which says :

"No power shall be conferred under this section to any police officer below the grade of Assistant District Superintendent."

We do not think it could be disputed that a District Superintendent of Police is ordinarily regarded as a police officer and that a confession made to him in the ordinary way would be barred under the provisions of the Evidence Act. From the Police Department Notification we have referred to it is clear that U Tun Pe had all the powers of a District Superintendent of Police and he must, therefore, be held to have been a police officer at the time he recorded the confession. That being so we are of opinion that the objection raised in this case by the appellants must be upheld. S. 25 is very explicit in its terms and lays down definitely that no confession made to a police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. In the case of prohibition against admission of a confession made while in custody of a police officer under S. 26 there is a special exception if that confession is made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate; but there is no such exception in the provisions of S. 25. In the case of The Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1), which we have already referred to, Pontifex, J., remarks at p. 218 of the judgment :

"There are cases in which a person holding high judicial office has control over and is the nominal head of the police in his district" and he indicates that in such a case he would hold that a confession made to such an officer could be admitted. But a District Superintendent of Police is clearly more than a nominal head of the Police in the district. He is the actual head of the Police and he cannot cease to be a police officer simply because he is also a Magistrate and is acting in that capacity. We are confirmed in this view by the provisions of S. 164, Criminal P. C., which lays down that :

(1) [1876] 1 Cal. 207.

"Any Presidency Magistrate may if he is not a police officer record any statement or confession made to him."

The section, therefore, clearly contemplates the possibility of an officer holding the dual position of police officer and Magistrate, and the powers of recording confessions are in no case given to such officer. We are of opinion, therefore, that the confession in this case was made to a police officer within the meaning of S. 25, Evidence Act, and that it was therefore inadmissible in evidence. (Here their Lordships discussed the evidence of two boys and concluded as follows). The result is that we allow these appeals, set aside the convictions of the two appellants and direct that they be acquitted and released so far as this case is concerned.

Criminal Appeal No. 858 of 1929, Decided on 2nd April 1930.

* Criminal P. C. S. 300—Jury retiring to consider verdict—All jurors must be in retiring room together during whole time

When the jurymen are not able to come to a decision or agree upon a verdict before the trial then the law requires that they should retire to consider their verdict and they should all be in their retiring room together during the whole of the time between the moment of their retirement and the moment when their verdict is taken by the presiding Judge: R. v. O'Connell 1, Cox. C. O. 410, Rel. on.

The jury who were nine in number retired to consider their verdict. At 4 p. m. five of the jurors came out and sat in Court. The remaining four stayed in the retiring room till 4-30 p. m. and then came out and sat in Court, when the presiding Judge proceeded to take the verdict of the jury.

Held: that the accused had not the benefit of the joint consideration and consultation of all the jurymen before the verdict was returned and hence the verdict should be set aside.

*Mrityunjoy Chatterjee—*for Appellants.

*Prafulla Chakravorthy—*for the Crown.

C. C. Ghose, J.—In this case, the only point that has been argued on behalf of the appellants is that the jury did not after the delivery of the Judge's charge to the jury, sit together in their retiring room during the whole of the time taken for their deliberations and that, therefore, the accused have been deprived of the benefit of the joint deliberation of the jury before their verdict was taken. Now, the undisputed facts are as follows: The learned Judge concluded his charge to the jury at about 3-30 p. m. on 16th September 1929. The jury who were nine in number then retired to consider their verdict. At about 4 p. m., five of the jurors came out and sat in Court. The rest of the jury i. e., the remaining four jurors stayed in the retiring room till 4-30 p. m. and then came out and sat in Court. The learned Judge then proceeded to take the verdict of the jury. The case was under Ss. 302, 302/149 and 120-B, I. P. C. What happened after the jury had re-assembled together appears from the following :

"Verdict of the jury"

"Q.—Are you unanimous?"

"A.—No."

"Q.—What is the majority verdict? Eight of us find all the accused guilty under S. 302, I. P. C., second part read with S. 149, I. P. C."

"We are all unanimous that the accused are not guilty under S. 120-B, I. P. C., and that they are not guilty under Ss. 302 and 302/149, I. P. C."

(Sd.) K. K. Dutta, Sessions Judge,
16-9-29"

The learned Judge convicted all the accused, who were 15 in number under Ss. 304, I. P. C., part. 2, read with S. 149, I. P. C., and sentenced the accused other than three to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years and as regards three of the accused to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year. Mr. Chatterjee argues that the appellants were entitled to have the benefit of the joint consideration and consultation of all the jurymen before the verdict was returned and that in the events that happened his clients have not had that benefit. He argues further that if what happened in Court is allowed the raison d'être of a trial by jury will have disappeared.

The learned advocate, who appears for the Crown, does not challenge any of the facts set out above. Indeed, they cannot be challenged because it appears that the accused put in a petition before the learned Sessions Judge then and there drawing attention to what had happened. In these circumstances, we have had to consider whether the verdict of the jury can be allowed to stand. It is elementary that after the conclusion of a trial the jury are not allowed to separate until they have considered and returned their verdict. The trial was by a jury composed of nine persons and unless and until it is shown that all the jurors have taken part throughout in deliberating upon what their verdict should be the assent of all the jurors to a verdict pronounced by the foreman cannot be conclusively presumed. In this case, it may be said that the verdict was delivered by the foreman in the presence and hearing of all the jurors but that is not enough. If the jurymen were not able to come to a decision or agree upon a verdict before retiring then the law requires that they should retire to consider their verdict and it follows that they should all be in their retiring room together during the whole of the time between the moment of their retirement and the moment when their verdict is taken by the learned presiding Judge. In England it has been held from very ancient times that the jury, when once enclosed for deliberation cannot separate without the special permission of the Court: see in this connexion Archbold's Criminal Pleadings Edn. 26, v. 210 and the case of R. v. O'Connell (1). It is, quite true that in England it used to be the rule that the jury were not even allowed to go to their homes until the verdict was delivered if the deliberation should have extended over two days. The law has been amended in this particular in England. But it has never been held that during the process of their deliberation they can go about in any manner they like. It is obvious that the rule against separation of the jury has a great deal of common sense in it and, in our opinion it should be strictly adhered to. In this view of the matter, much as we regret the result the verdict of the jury and with it the conviction and sentence must be set aside and the matter must go back for retrial according to law.

Guha, J.—I agree.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

* Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 147 of 1930, Decided on 28th March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Shahpur, D/- 11th January 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 514—Bail bond for appearance of accused person forfeited—Sureties alleging that they were not allowed to control movement of accused person should be given opportunity of proving their allegation it being mitigating circumstance.

Where the bail bond given for the appearance of a person accused who was to remain in hospital is forfeited and the sureties allege that they were not allowed to exercise any control over the movements of the accused person, there being a police guard at the hospital, the sureties should be given opportunity to prove their allegations for if they were really interfered in their control over the movements of the accused person, the circumstance might at any rate, be taken into account in mitigation of the penalty.

S. L. Puri—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a petition for revision of an order forfeiting a bail bond of Rs. 5,000 which had been given for the appearance of a person who was accused of murder. The bail had been granted subject to the condition that the accused person, who was ill, should remain in the hospital. It was alleged by the sureties that the police guard had been placed at the hospital and the sureties were not allowed to exercise any control over the movements of the accused. The learned Sessions Judge held that the sureties should have brought this to the notice of the Court and as they did not do so the bail bond was forfeited. In my opinion the sureties should have been given an opportunity to prove their allegations for if they were really interfered with in their control over the movements of the accused person, the circumstance might, at any rate, be taken into account in mitigation of the penalty.

I, therefore, accept this petition and setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge remand the case for re-decision in the light of the above remarks.

Criminal Misc. Cases Nos. 6 to 9 of 1930, Decided on 7th February 1930, for transfer of appeal pending in the Court of Sess. Judge, Gaya, to some other Court.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Mere fact that in another case Judge came to particular conclusion on certain evidence is not sufficient ground for transfer.

While it is sound doctrine that a reasonable apprehension in the mind of an accused that he will not have a fair trial is a sufficient ground for transfer, yet in applying the doctrine regard must be had to the circumstances in each case, and the mere fact that in another case, on other evidence the Judge has come to a particular conclusion is not in itself a sufficient ground for transfer : 81 Cal. 715 ; 36 Cal. 903, Foll. [P 710 C 1]

W. H. Akbari and K. P. Sukul—for Petitioners.

Shiveshwar Dayal—for the Crown.

Macpherson, J.—These four applications in revision are analogous and have been heard together.

The petitioners have been convicted under S. 193, I. P. C., in the following circumstances. There was a case of rioting in 1927 in which Audh Singh said to be the gomasta of Bandhuganj was an absconder. On his arrest he was tried at a supplementary trial in April 1929. The witnesses to the occurrence stated that Audh Singh, gomasta of Bandhuganj, had given orders to assault, but that he was not the Audh Singh in dock, who, therefore, had to be discharged as no one identified him. The witnesses were placed on trial for perjury and were tried before three different Magistrates. One Magistrate acquitted the accused on the cases before him, another convicted the several accused whom he tried and on appeal the convictions were upheld by the Sessions Judge of Gaya, while the present petitioners came before a third Magistrate, and they having been convicted, have preferred appeals which are at present pending before the same Sessions Judge. The petitioners now apply under S. 526 (1), Criminal P. C., for transfer of their appeals from the file of the Sessions Judge of Gaya to some other Sessions Court for trial.

1930 Cr. C. 89b/4, 90 & 91a/4

It is explicitly not contended that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had before the Sessions Judge. What is expressly relied on is not Cl. (a), S. 526 (1) but Cl. (e) on the plea that an order of transfer "is expedient for the ends of justice." It is, however, pointed out that the witnesses against petitioners are much if not quite the same as in the cases in which he has already upheld convictions in appeal, and it is urged that in view of the conclusions already arrived at by him in appeal on the evidence of the witnesses, the present petitioners are under a reasonable apprehension that they may not have a fair trial. This plea really falls under Cl. (a) and this is manifestly inconsistent with the suggestion that the application is made under Cl. (e) only. Now the judgments in appeal were delivered on 12th December 1929 and the petitioners were convicted on 13th January 1930. It therefore became important to consider whether the Magistrate, who convicted the petitioners, had in his mind the appellate judgment delivered nearly a month before.

A perusal of both judgments, however, fails to elicit any indications that the Magistrate in any measure went outside his own record or had in contemplation either the appellate judgment in the second batch or the judgment of acquittal in the first batch. Then it is difficult to see how Cl. (e) can apply. It may be taken for granted that the learned Sessions Judge does not feel himself in any difficulty; otherwise he would have moved this Court to transfer the appeals from his file. That is one ground for considering that Cl. (e) does not apply. The precedents are also against the contentions of Mr. Akbari. It was held in Joharuddin Sarkar v. Emperor (1) that the fact that the presiding officer had tried and convicted one set of accused did not disqualify him from conducting the supplementary trial when another batch of accused was put on trial on identically the same set of circumstances. It is urged by Mr. Akbari that in a supplementary trial other matters have to be considered besides those which arose for decision in the original trial. But the chief new point would be whether the individual accused were participants in the riot assuming that the riot was proved in the supplementary trial. In the appeals of each of the petitioners the new question will similarly be assuming that it is proved that the Audh Singh in the dock was the Audh Singh who had given orders to assault whether the petitioner had the knowledge and intention requisite to bring him within S. 193. There does not appear to be any difference in principle between the two cases.

It was held in Rajani Kanta Dutta v. Emperor (2) that while it is sound doctrine that a reasonable apprehension in the mind of an accused that he will not have a fair trial is a sufficient ground for transfer, yet in applying the doctrine regard must be had to the circumstances in each case, and the mere fact that in another case, on other evidence, the Judge has come to a particular conclusion is not in itself a sufficient ground for transfer. There the Sessions Judge had actually dealt in his judgment in the original trial specifically with the offence in respect of which the petitioner before the Court was charged at the supplementary trial and had expressed an opinion unfavourable to the petitioner. On the other hand, so far as the petitioners are concerned, no opinion whatever has been expressed by the Sessions Judge in regard to any of them. In the earlier appeals he confined himself strictly to the record in respect of the particular appellant before him. The case of the petitioners does not come within the provisions of S. 526 (1). I cannot better set out the position than in the words of the learned Judges in the case last cited :

"We feel confident that the learned Sessions Judge, in dealing with the case now under consideration, will not allow his mind to be in any way influenced by any evidence that was adduced before him in the previous case or any opinion which he then formed on that evidence, and that he will deal with the case without any kind of bias by reason of his decision in the former case."

There being no reason for the transfer of the appeals of the petitioners, these Rules are discharged.

V.B./R.K. Rule discharged.

SCROOPE AND DHAVLE, JJ.
Nanhu Mahton—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 43 of 1930 and Death Ref. No. 7 of 1930, Decided on 10th April 1930, from decision of Sess. Judge, Manbhum (Sambhalpore), D/- 6th February 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 288—Deposition before committing Magistrate contradicting evidence before Sessions—Former statement cannot be put in under S. 288 without putting to witness—Evidence Act, S. 145.

No doubt when depositions before the committing Magistrate are admitted in the Sessions Court under S. 288 they are on the same footing with any other evidence in the case. But S. 145, Evidence Act governs the position in so far as these statements are used for contradicting the witness either mainly or incidentally. Depositions, therefore, taken in the committing Magistrate's Court which contradict the evidence given in the Sessions Court cannot, however, be put in without putting them to the witness: A. I., R. 1922 Pat. 40; 7 All. 862 Appr.; 28 All. 683, Expl. and not Appl.; 4 C. W. N. 49, Diss. from. Other case law Referred. [P 711 C 1, P 716 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Witnesses implicating accused only when faced with necessity of exculpating themselves—Evidence is open to suspicion.

Where the witnesses in a murder case implicate the accused only when they are faced with the necessity of exculpating themselves their evidence is open to grave suspicion and no sufficient weight should be attached to such evidence. [P 712 C 2]

J. Chatterji—for Appellant.

Sultan Ahmad—for the Crown.

Scroope, J.—This is a reference under S. 374, Criminal P. C., in respect of one Nanhu Mahton who has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of Manbhum-Sambalpur in disagreement with the assessors for the murder of one Khudu Mahaton of village Merenda in Jhalda, P. S.

The prosecution case is that on the night of 26th October last Khudu Mahato with his relatives Balaram Mahato, Sonaram Mahato, Jugal Mahato and Baneshwar Mahato spent the night in the Kishumghutu jungle in order to watch their lac trees and that while sleeping side by side that night under a palas tree Khudu's companions were awakened by his groans and actually saw the accused Nanhu withdrawing his arm from Khudu's head Khudu expired almost instantaneously and Nanhu ran off. This is the story told by these four witnesses and it has been accepted by the learned Sessions Judge. It is necessary to state, however, that Jugul (P. W. 2) in the Sessions Court whilst corroborating his companions on other points states that he was not able to recognise the assailant whereas before the committing Magistrate he said definitely that Nanhu was the assailant. Somewhat similar is the evidence of another witness Kinu Mahato (P. W. 13) in the Sessions Court. He stated that he saw a man like the accused proceeding eastward with a weapon in his hand (that would be before the murder) whereas before the committing Magistrate he definitely identified this man as Nanhu. The learned Sessions Judge relied on the depositions of these two witnesses as given in the first Court in preference to the evidence in the Sessions Court, although the former were not put to the witnesses in the Sessions Court and the learned advocate for the appellant urges that these first statements should not have been admitted in evidence under S. 288, Criminal P. C., as they were not put to the witnesses in the Sessions Court. He relies on the following dictum in Lachmi Lal v. Emperor (1).

"To put in such evidence is permissible but it has been repeatedly laid down and it is now settled law that such statements should not be put in without the attention of the witness being drawn to the portion of the statement which it is desired to use."

Of much the same effect are the decisions in Queen Empress v. Dan Sahai (2) Bajrangi Lal v. The Empress (3) and Emperor v. Zawar Rahman (4). The learned Government Advocate, however disputes the correctness of the view taken in Lachman Lal v. Emperor (1) and argues that Queen Empress v. Dan Sahai (2) on which it is presumably based has been subsequently overruled by Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (5) and a series of cases in which it has been held that statements admitted under S. 288, Criminal P. C., are on the same footing as evidence taken in the actual Sessions trial: for instance, Queen Empress v. Doraswami Ayyar (6), Em- peror v. Maruti Joti Shindi B G. P (7) Somadu v. Emperor (8) and Abdul ani. v. Emperor (9). It must, however, be borne in mind that the question here is whether depositions taken in the committing Magistrate's Court which contradict the evidence given in the Sessions Court can be put in under S. 288, Criminal P. C., without putting them to the witnesses, and none of the cases cited by the learned Government Advocate deal with that point specifically except perhaps the case of Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (5). In that case the Lordships of the Allahabad High Court dissented from the following general dictum of Straight, J. :

"Section 288, Criminal P. C. was never intended to be used so as to enable a Court trying a cause to take a witness's deposition bodily from the committing Magistrate's record and to treat it as evidence before the Court itself."

Straight, J., however, qualified this dictum as follows at any rate :

"At any rate a Judge is bound to put to the witnesses whom he proposes to contradict by their statements made before the committing Magistrate the whole or such portions of their depositions as he intends to rely upon in his decisions so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth."

and Banerji, J., who was one of the Judges in that case while dissenting from the general proposition refers with approval to the qualifying words of Straight, J. Aikman, J., who was the other Judge in that case does not deal with the question as to how far admissibility is affected by failure to put the depositions to the witnesses. He discussed only the general proposition and held that once these statements are admitted they are on the same footing with all other evidence in the case. The whole point here is whether such a statement can be admitted without being put to the witness. There is no doubt, having regard to the state of the authorities that once they are admitted they are on the same footing with any other evidence in the case for the language of S. 288, Criminal P. C. is quite clear now. (Since the amendment of 1923) but S. 145, Evidence Act must govern the position in so far as these statements are used for contradicting the witnesses. The learned Government Advocate, however argues that he does not wish to contradict the depositions of these witnesses given in the Sessions Court by means of the depositions in the first Court; he wants the latter to be taken simply as substantive evidence in the case along with the other evidence but this in my opinion is begging the question. I do not see how the prosecution can place on the record two contradictory statements from the same witness and rely on one as substantive evidence without contradicting the other and I do not see that the purpose for which the original statement in the committing Court is brought on the record makes any difference if that is the incidental result. In other words my opinion is that S. 145, Evidence Act, operates even if contradiction is not the main purpose of bringing the first deposition on the record but is only incidental thereto. On the whole, therefore, I am not prepared to say that the decision relied by the learned advocate for the appellant Lachman Lall v. Emperor (1) is bad law or Queen Empress v. Dan Sahai (2) either in so far as it lays down that depositions given in the lower Court which contradict the statements in the Sessions Court should be put to the witnesses before they are admitted under S. 288: see also Woodroffe in his Criminal Procedure Code, p. 334:

"The Judge is bound to put to the witnesses whom he proposes to contradict by their former statements before the committing Magistrate the whole or such portions of their depositions as he intends to rely upon in his decisions, so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth."

I have dealt with this point at some length, because Sir Sultan Ahmad pressed his point of view against the decision in Lachman Lall v. Emperor (1) with considerable force and has asked us for a considered ruling on this question. The question is really, however, academic, here, because assuming that these earlier statements are admissible they do not strengthen the rest of the evidence on the record which to my mind is thoroughly unreliable throughout. Though these four witnesses would have us believe that they saw the accused Nanhu withdrawing his axe from the head of Khudu yet none of them mentioned the name of the assailant to the villagers on the morning of the occurrence. The murdered man's mother Mundria Mahatani states that she heard about her son's death on the following morning from Baneshwar. Baneshwar did not then name the accused, his explanation was that he apprehended that he might be implicated. When the writer head-constable visited the village on the afternoon of the 27th, he being, in charge of the thana as the Sub-Inspector was away, he saw these witnesses but none of them gave the name of the assailant. The witnesses say that they were afraid to do so. This could only have been either fear of the accused or fear of being implicated. There was no reason to fear the accused, the police had taken the matter up and these four witnesses could not have been so terror-stricken. As to fear of being implicated I do not see how a disclosure of the name of Nanhu could have made the case any blacker against the witnesses; in fact rather the contrary suspicion was very black against them already, because apparently they did not deny to the writer head-constable that they had been sleeping with the deceased man on the night of the murder in the Kisumghutu jungle. They were so much under suspicion that on the arrival of the Sub-Inspector in the village on the 28th he searched their houses and discovered on the person of Baburam a gilaf or a quilt and in the house of Lakshman Manato, father of the accused, a kantha on both of which there were red stains. It was then that the witnesses spoke out. The learned Sessions Judge puts it as follows:

"The recovery of the said two articles evidently led the above four witnesses to believe that the Sub-Inspector of Police succeeded in finding out the real truth and it seems to me that though in their anxiety to screen the accused they had so long minced matters, they at last under the circumstances stated above thought it prudential for their own safety to give out the real truth and that accordingly they admitted the same to the investigating police officer."

It does not affect the value of their evidence that the stains subsequently found were not those of human blood. The point is that the witnesses only implicated the accused when they were faced with the necessity of exculpating themselves, and therefore their evidence is open to grave suspicion. The learned Sessions Judge has not attached at all sufficient weight to this fact. The excuse of fear is the stock one put forward for failure to speak out the truth at once in this type of case, but here it is more suspicious than ever owing to the fact that the witnesses were under the gravest necessity of fixing the guilt on to somebody in order to save their own necks.

Their evidence also is inherently improbable. The medical evidence shows that the deceased had one wound, a gaping incised wound $8\frac{1}{2}$ " x $1\frac{3}{16}$ " on the left side of the head cutting completely through the skull and the brain substance. If the witnesses are to be believed Nanhu must have crept up stealthily in the night when the watchers were sleeping and must have then inflicted this fatal wound. The doctor was not examined on the point but it seems to me most unlikely that the accused could have groaned after such a wound and it could have been delivered and the weapon withdrawn after delivery in a fraction of time. The witnesses were all sleeping yet. Nanhu was long enough there to allow them to recognize him. It was in the middle of the night, according to the calendar the moon would not have risen on the night in question until about 1 a. m. The witnesses got over the difficulty of darkness by saying that the moon was then in the east; they were all sleeping under a large palas tree. I do not believe that even assuming the truth of the basis of their story that Khudu was murdered while sleeping with the witnesses there was any recognition at all of the assailant. It is perfectly obvious that the circumstances were all against recognition as the light of the moon would have been of very little assistance to bring about the complete recognition by a man just awakening from sleep. There is another stock story introduced into the case, namely, the discovery of the tabla. According to the Sub-Inspector Golam Mustafa he examined the accused Nanhu Mahaton after 4 p. m. whereupon he led him and about 25 or 30 villagers to a bari land just to the north of the house of one Bidhu Mahatani and dug up from the depth of 9 or 10 inches a tabla or small axe. Assuming that the accused did produce the tabla in the manner described by the Sub-Inspector I do not think much weight attaches to it. It is quite probable that as Baburam was implicating Nanhu, Nanhu should have tried to implicate Baburam by burying a tabla and then producing it for the police and its discovery is just as consistent with incriminating evidence against Baburam as it is with incriminating evidence against Nanhu. Bidhu Mahatani, to the immediate north of whose house lies the bari land from which the tabla was produced, states that on the day after the murder she saw the accused Nanhu near her bari land carrying an axe which was partially concealed by some thorny plants. The suggestion is that this must have been when he was on his way to bury the axe; this is an incredible story. It is contrary to common sense that the man who commits a murder would try to dispose of the weapon in this fashion in broad day light.

This witness is the woman in the case, the allegation being that Nanhu is carrying on an intrigue with her which had annoyed some of the Mahatos, that there was a panchayat at the instance of Khudu, the deceased, that both Nanhu and Bidhu were fined for misbehaviour, and that as a result of the grudge he bore on this account, Nanhu murdered Khudu. The woman is obviously afraid of being implicated in the murder and hence she could easily be got to fill in any necessary details that will serve to clinch the case finally against Nanhu. That aspect of her evidence has been overlooked by the learned Sessions Judge when he regards her as proving beyond any reasonable doubt that the accused had hidden the tabla after the murder. It is noticeable that the accused was not under arrest when he produced the tabla and was only arrested later in the day. This makes me think that the accused may have been tricked into disclosing a tabla under the impression that it would be used against the other Mahato notably Baburam, instead of against himself. Baburam states that it was only after the production of the tabla that he told the Sub-Inspector that he had seen the accused pulling out the tabla from the head of Khudu and running away then towards the nala. Sonaram contradicts him on that point. The latter also states in cross-examination that the Sub-Inspector had threatened to send up Baburam, and Jugal states that the daroga also threatened to challan him. Be that as it may, it is quite clear that the eye-witnesses spoke under extreme pressure and to save themselves. Kinu Mahato another witness relied on by the learned Sessions Judge, so far as his statement in the lower Court is concerned, is also trying to prove the case to the hilt when he states that at about midnight on Saturday he had seen the accused passing through the jungle with a tabla in his hand. He was one of the villagers who was under suspicion in respect of this murder. The learned Sessions Judge was also much impressed by the fact that human hair was detected on the tabla by the Chemical Examiner. The Sub-Inspector of Police and two Poddar witnesses examined the weapon with the help of a magnifying glass after its discovery and they say that they noticed some hair adhering thereto.

It passes my comprehension how any hair could have adhered to the axe after it had been buried and then dug up, or, at any rate be visible by the aid of any microscope likely to be available to a Sub-Inspector of Police. Obviously any human hair that may possibly have adhered to the weapon would have been completely obliterated by the earth that became attached to the tabla consequent upon its being buried. Frankly I do not believe the evidence on this point; if in reality, human hair was found on the tabla it was put there by somebody in order to create evidence. A tabla is a most ordinary weapon for the Manbhum peasant and I do not believe Raghu Mahato either when he states that he saw the accused purchase it about eight months prior to this occurrence. The point that the wound 8½ inches long tallied with the circumference of the blade of the tabla also 8½ inches long weighed with the learned Sessions Judge, as if a wound inflicted by a smart blow of a hatchet would exactly coincide in length with the size of the hatchet. Quite the contrary is usually the case; a splitting wound of this nature would ordinarily exceed it in length. This ends practically all the evidence and it does not convince me in the slightest degree; most of it is childishly unconvincing; the Mahato witnesses are deposing with a reckless disregard of truth in order to save themselves; there should have been no conviction in this case. I would therefore set aside the conviction and sentence of death passed by the learned Sessions Judge and acquit the appellant. He should be released at once.

Dhavlé, J.—I agree. The Government Advocate has frankly conceded that the case must fail if the four eye-witnesses are disbelieved. Considering the conditions of time, I doubt very much whether they could really have seen the offender at all; and their repeated failure to name him, which has not been satisfactorily explained, does not make it at all easy to believe them, to say nothing of the fact that they seem to have named the appellant with the full consciousness that they had to save themselves. The production of the tabla is also extremely unconvincing as an incriminating circumstance against the appellant. It is, therefore, impossible on the evidence to uphold the conviction, quite apart from the way in which the depositions of Jugal and Kinu before the committing Magistrate were used by the learned Sessions Judge under S. 288, Criminal P. C. In this connexion there has been much discussion before us regarding the soundness of the dictum in Lachmi Lall v. Emperor (1), that though it is permissible under S. 288 to put in such depositions:

"it has been repeatedly laid down and it is now settled law that such statements should not be put in without the attention of the witness being drawn to the portion of the statement which it is desired to use."

The Government Advocate has strenuously contended that the law does not require this to be done. The learned advocate for the appellant has referred the dictum to the authority of Empress v. Dan Sahai (2) and Bajrangi Lall v. Empress (3). It does not seem to me that the decision in Bajrangi Lall v. Empress (3) has really any bearing on the precise point in question. In Dan Sahai's case (2), however, Straight, J., expressed himself about S. 288, Criminal P. C., in these words:

"That section was never intended to be used so as to enable a Court trying a case to take a witness's deposition bodily from the Magistrate's record, as the Judge has done here, and to treat it as evidence before itself; and I entirely concur in the remarks made on this head by Phear, J., in Queen v. Amanulla (10). At any rate the Judge was bound to put to the witnesses he proposed to contradict by their former statements the whole or such portions as their depositions as he intended to rely upon in his decision, so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning, or denying that they had made any such statements, and so forth. The course adopted by the Judge was contrary to practice, and inconsistent with all the rules regulating the admissibility of evidence. . . ."

The first part of these observations, which relates to the admission of whole depositions as distinguished from particular statements contained in them, is based on Amanulla's case (10) which was decided under the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872. S. 249 of this Code, which corresponds to S. 288 of the present Code, ran in these words:

"When a witness is produced before the Court of Session or High Court, the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate may be referred to by the Court if it was duly taken in the presence of the accused person, and a Court may, if it thinks fit, ground its judgment thereon, although the witnesses may at the trial make statements inconsistent therewith."

Shortly after the decision in Amanulla's case (10) the section was amended by Act 11 of 1874 to run as follows:

"When a witness is produced before the Court of Session . . . the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate may, in the discretion of the presiding Judge, be treated as evidence in the case, if it was duly taken in the presence of the accused person."

This, unlike the original section, clearly made the previous deposition "evidence in the case," and S. 288 of the Code of 1882, which was in the same terms as the present section without the amendments introduced by the Act of 1923, made no change in the position. Dan Sahai's case (2) was decided under the Code of 1882, but Straight, J., in following the observations in Amanulla's case (10), does not seem to have noticed the change in the law. Dan Sahai's case (2) was considered by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (5), when Banerji and Aikman, JJ., held that under S. 288, Criminal P. C., depositions before the committing Magistrate may be evidence in the Sessions trial; and since then it has no longer been held in any High Court that the section was meant to authorise the Court to take only particular statements and not whole depositions, as evidence in the Sessions trial.

The second part of Straight, J.'s, observations refers to the necessity or otherwise of affording the witnesses an opportunity of explaining their meaning, etc. This must be considered not in the light of the Criminal Procedure Code but of the principles of the law of evidence. In Reg. v. Arjun Megha (11), which was decided shortly after the amendments made in the Criminal Procedure Code by Act 11 of 1874. S. 249 was explained to mean that the Sessions Judge had discretion to consider the depositions given before the committing Magistrate in the preliminary inquiry as "evidence for the purposes of the trial in the Court of Sessions," and that the exercise of the discretion is open to review in appeal:

"If he (the Sessions Judge) finds that the statement of the witnesses in his own Court differ materially from those previously made by the same witnesses," said West, J.:

"It is his duty to examine them as to the discrepancies, and this is more especially his duty when the prisoners are undefended, and contradictory testimony is given by the prosecution. But if he thus examines the witnesses, he ought: (see Taylor on Evidence, ss. 1,300-1301, and Evidence Act, S. 155,) in ordinary cases to make the depositions upon which he has examined them evidence in the case: he is at liberty to do so, and the power should be exercised so as to bring all relevant matter, so far as possible, under consideration in forming a judgment on the case. If the Sessions Judge has omitted to examine witnesses on obvious and important discrepancies in their statements, this Court will in general direct that such an examination be made, and the Sessions Judge having the witnesses before him for such a purpose, will, in most cases, feel it his duty to make the former depositions evidence quantum valent for the purposes of the final adjudication in appeal."

This early interpretation of the section gives one reason why witnesses should be questioned regarding their previous depositions and the depositions then brought on the record of the Sessions trial.

Edge, C. J., ordered a retrial in Empress v. Jawahar (12), because the Sessions Judge had:

"taken into consideration as evidence against the accused, statements made by witnesses before the committing Magistrate, without giving the accused any previous notice or warning, either by examining the witnesses as to the previous statements or otherwise of his intention to do so."

The learned Chief Justice held that the conductors of the prosecution and the defence ought to have full notice of the admission of evidence under S. 288, and after expressing agreement with every word that Straight, J., had said in Queen Empress v. Dan Sahai (2), he observed :

"I go further and say that before the Judge presiding at a criminal trial can use 'as evidence on which' in whole or in part, to form his judgment, the deposition of a witness taken before the committing Magistrate, he is bound to let his intention, or the possibility that he may do so, be known to the accused and the prosecution, in order to afford the accused and the prosecutor an opportunity for testing such statement by cross-examination, or otherwise dealing with such statement as part of the case which may be taken into consideration by the Judge. Otherwise it seems to me impossible for the prosecution of the defence to deal with the matters which may influence the Judge's mind in coming to a decision."

This shows that before a previous deposition can properly be treated as evidence on which the Sessions Judge may base his judgment, the parties concerned must have an opportunity of testing it by cross-examination, etc.

Depositions in commitment proceedings can now be :

"treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act, 1872."

This makes them available for use as substantive evidence (and not merely for contradicting or corroborating the makers under S. 145 or S. 157, Evidence Act), as was indeed held in several cases even before the addition of the words "for all purposes . . . 1872" by the amendment of the section in 1923: vide Gansa Oraon v. Emperor (13) and the case referred to in Emperor v. Jehal Teli (14). But it is as a rule only when and so far as such depositions are not repeated in the Sessions trial that it becomes particularly necessary to make use of them. Section 145 of the Evidence Act, it is true, requires the attention of the witness to be drawn to his previous deposition only in those cases in which it is intended to use the previous record for the limited purpose of contradicting him; the object of the cross-examiner is to shake the evidence given by the witness at the trial. Although the putting in of depositions under S. 288 is not confined to this object, it is plainly necessary that the oral evidence given by a witness during the Sessions trial, so far as it conflicts with his previous deposition, should be properly displaced before the Court gives preference to his deposition before the committing Magistrate. Where a witness's evidence at the trial differs from his previous deposition :

"and the contradiction is intended to be used as evidence in the case, it has been held that he must be allowed an opportunity of explaining or reconciling his statement if he can do so, and that if this opportunity is not given to him, the contradictory writing cannot be placed on the record as evidence. It has also been held that the opportunity of tendering an explanation is still more essential when a witness's character and reputation are at stake, and that the Court is precluded both by S. 145, Evidence Act and by general principles from treating his oral testimony as rebutted by statements by him contained in documents in evidence unless such statements were put to him in cross-examination."

See Woodroffe's Law of Evidence Edn. 8, p. 960, and the cases cited in the first two footnotes.

The principle, it seems to me, applies with even greater force where previous depositions, more or less inconsistent with the oral evidence given by the same witness during the trial, are sought to be used as substantive evidence; if the witness were not called to reconcile the contradictions (so far as he could), the record would contain two sets of unrelated statements, and it would be unfair to the witness himself no less than to the parties to accept the previous deposition and so reject the testimony given at the trial. The observations in Lachmi Lall's case do not, therefore, seem to me to require reconsideration.

Criminal Revn. No. 79 of 1930, Decided on 6th March 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Muzaffarpur, D/- 5th December 1929.

(a) Behar and Orissa Excise Act (2 of 1915), Ss. 47, 70 and 75—Sub-Inspector of Excise can arrest without warrant person found committing offence under S. 47—S. 78 has no application to such case.

Under S. 70 of the Act the Sub-Inspector of Excise is entitled to arrest without a warrant a person found committing an offence punishable under S. 47 of the Act and S. 78 has no application to such a case. [P 717 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 225—Obstructing Sub-Inspector of Excise from arresting—Offence comes within S. 225.

Threatening a Sub-Inspector of Excise in order to prevent him from making an arrest amounts to offering a resistance and illegal obstruction to lawful apprehension of an offender, but where the obstruction has not been such as to constitute a serious offence the case does not call for heavy punishment. * [P 717 C 2]

Safdar Imam—for Petitioner.

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—A Sub-Inspector of Excise, who detected one Hira Dusadh in the act of committing an offence under S. 47, Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, attempted to arrest him, but he took refuge in the house of Bechu Mian. The Sub-Inspector called upon Bechu Mian to give up the man. Bechu Mian declined to do so; and he prevented the Excise Sub-Inspector from entering the house. Bechu Mian was accordingly prosecuted at the instance of the Sub-Inspector, and he was fined two-hundred rupees under S. 216, I. P. C., on the charge of having harboured Hira Dusadh with the intention of preventing his lawful arrest. On appeal the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur affirmed the findings of fact of the Magistrate; but he altered their application, changing the finding that the man was guilty of an offence under S. 225, I. P. C., while he affirmed the sentence imposed by the Magistrate.

Mr. Safdar Imam on behalf of the petitioner argues in the first place that he has been prejudiced by this action of the lower appellate Court, since he was placed on his defence to answer a charge under S. 216 and not to answer a charge under S. 225, I. P. C. of obstructing the arrest of Hira Dusadh. But the charge framed under S. 216 to the effect that Bechu Mian harboured and concealed Hira Dusadh with the intention of preventing his lawful arrest was practically the same as the charge of obstructing the arrest by preventing the Sub-Inspector from entering the house; and I do not consider that it can be held that the accused person has been in any way prejudiced by the fact no formal charge under S. 225, I. P. C., was framed in the Court of the trying Magistrate.

Mr. Safdar Imam argues in the second place that the Sub-Inspector had no power to arrest Hira Dusadh. Under S. 70, Excise Act, any officer of the Excise Department may, subject to any restrictions prescribed by the Local Government by rule made under S. 89 arrest without warrant any person found committing an offence punishable under S. 47 of the Act. The only rules placing restrictions on the exercise of powers conferred by S. 70 of the Act are Rr. 65 and 66 of the Government rules, providing that officer below the rank of a Sub-Inspector of the Excise Department may exercise the power of arrest without warrant in open places only. But Mr. Safdar Imam suggests that sub-S. (c), S. 89, in some way relates back to S. 70. The subsection provides that the Local Government may make rules prescribing restrictions in the application to Excise Officers of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to power of Police Officers which are referred to in S. 78 (1), Excise Act. Under S. 78 (1) of the Act, an Excise Officer specially empowered may, after recording and writing his reason for suspecting the commission of an offence which he is empowered to investigate, exercise the powers conferred upon a Police Officer in respect of cognizable offences by Ss. 54 and 56, Criminal P. C. But S. 78 has no application in this case, since the Sub-Inspector was not investigating an offence which he had reason to suspect had been committed. He actually detected the offence, which was committed before his eyes; and S. 70, Excise Act, applied, so that he was entitled to arrest Hira Dusadh without warrant. Mr. Safdar Imam argued further that whatever view may be taken of the legality of the action of the Sub-Inspector, the petitioner should not be held to have obstructed the arrest of Hira Dusadh, since he offered no physical resistance to the Sub-Inspector. According to the evidence of the Sub-Inspector the petitioner threatened him in order to prevent him from making the arrest in the house; and this must certainly be treated as offering resistance and illegal obstruction to the lawful apprehension of Hira Dusadh. But the argument that the sentence is excessive in view of the fact that the Sub-Inspector so meekly respected the threats held out by the petitioners does, in my opinion, deserve some consideration. I consider that in the circumstances the Sub-Inspector ought to have compelled the petitioner to let him into the house; but instead of doing this he went straight to the Magistrate and complained of obstruction and it should be recognized that the obstruction offered was not such as to constitute a serious offence. I consider that in the circumstances a fine of thirty rupees will be sufficient punishment for the petitioner. The finding of the lower appellate Court is affirmed but the sentence is reduced to a fine of thirty rupees. The balance of the fine originally imposed, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Ref. No. 7 of 1930, Decided on 30th January 1930; made by Sess. Judge, Bhagalpur, D/- 13th January 1930

Criminal P. C., S. 195 (b)—Cognizance of offence under Penal Code, S. 211 committed in or in relation to offence committed in Court without that Court's or superior Court's complaint in writing is illegal.

Section 195 (1) (b) is a bar to cognizance of offence under S. 211 alleged to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court except on complaint in writing by that Court or some other Court to which that Court is subordinate and so where there is clearly no such complaint in writing it is not open to a Magistrate to take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (c). [P 718 C2]

L. K. Jha—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur under the provisions of S. 438, Criminal P. C., recommending that the proceedings of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhipura in respect of Uchit Dusadh Chaukidar and Harikinkar Jha under S. 211 read with S. 114, I. P. C., be set aside on the grounds: first, that he has exceeded his jurisdiction and secondly, that there is very little likelihood of the prosecution undertaken by him terminating in a conviction.

Mahmood Mian was the complainant in a case tried by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Mudhipura. The latter acquitted the accused and forwarded a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., against Mahmood Mian to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate:

"for favour of taking cognizance of the case under S. 182 read with S. 211, I. P. C. and prosecuting the said Mahmood under those sections."

Thereon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate noted that he took cognizance of the case and issued warrants of arrest against Mahmood Mian under S. 211 and against the petitioners under that section read with S. 114.

In his explanation the Magistrate states that he took cognizance of the case against Uchit and Harikinkar in the exercise of the powers vested in him under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C. He was of opinion that he was entitled to do so because the Sub-Deputy Magistrate had in his judgment come to a finding that Mahmood Mian had brought a false and malicious charge against the present accused:

"in pursuit of vengeance and gratification of spite in order to harass him at the instance of the chaukidar Uchit Dusadh and Harikinkar Jha."

Manifestly S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. was a bar to cognizance of an offence under S. 211 alleged to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in the Court of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate except on complaint in writing by that Court or some other Court to which that Court is subordinate. There was clearly no such complaint in writing and it was not open to the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (c) against the petitioners in respect of whom neither the Sub-Deputy Magistrate nor a superior Court had complained in writing.

I accordingly accept the reference on the first ground and direct that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate dated 3rd December 1929 taking cognizance of an offence under S. 211 read with S. 114, I. P. C., against Uchit Dusadh and Harikinkar Jha be set aside.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No., 8 of 1930, Decided on 30th January 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Muzaffarpur, D/- 11th January 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 88—Attachment in another district without endorsement is illegal.

An attachment of property is not authorised in a district other than that of the issuing Magistrate except when the order of attachment has been endorsed by the district Magistrate within whose District the property to be attached is situate, and an attachment made in contravention of this provision is illegal.

Judgment.—This is a report by the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur for the orders of the High Court that attachments under S. 88, Criminal P. C., have been made in the district of Muzaffarpur on a warrant issued by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bettiah which has not been endorsed by the District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur.

The report apparently contemplates two warrants, but there seems to have been only one warrant. Three persons appear to have presented petitions of claim under sub-S. 6 (a) to the District Magistrate of Muzaffarpur, who having no jurisdiction under Sub-S. 6 (b) because he did not endorse the warrant of attachment, directed them to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bettiah. They then moved the Sessions Judge.

The report contains no recommendation.

It is clear that the attachment was illegal since an attachment of property is not authorized in a district other than that of the issuing Magistrate except when the order of attachment has been endorsed by the District Magistrate within whose district the property to be attached is situate. It need not be determined whether the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction to allow under Sub-S. 6 (a) the claims made to him by the applicants. It clearly appears that all attachments in the Muzaffarpur District on the strength of the order of attachment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bettiah are fundamentally illegal.

I accordingly set aside all the attachments made in that district on the strength of the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate dated 5th July 1929. It is, of course, open to him to proceed according to law.

Daroga Lohar—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 175 and 204 of 1929, Decided on 20th December 1929, against decision of the Sess. Judge, Monghyr, D/- 31st August 1929.

Penal Code, S. 304—Person being abducted exceeds his power of self defence and on sudden irrational impulse kills person against whom he is defending — Offence falls under S. 304 and not under Penal Code S. 302.

Seizure of the person and dragging a debtor to his creditor by the peons of the creditor against his will, constitutes an offence of abduction within the meaning of S. 362 thereby giving the person so dragged the right of private defence of his body even to the causing of death subject to restrictions mentioned in S. 99. If while defending himself such person strikes the person against whom he was defending on a sudden irrational impulse thereby exceeding the power given to him under the statute and causes death of the other person, the offence comes not under S. 302 but under S. 304.

S. K. Bhattacharjya and G. C. Mukerji —for Appellant.

Assistant Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Macpherson, J. — These appeals are preferred, one from jail and the other through pleader, by Daroga Lohar who has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of Monghyr and sentenced to transportation for life. They are to be treated as a single appeal.

The charge against him was that on 3rd June 1929 at Lakhisari he committed murder of Durga Singh, a Punjabi, by stabbing him in the abdomen with a knife or dagger. The assessors considered that the case fell under S. 304, I. P. C. but the learned Sessions Judge was unable to accede to the contention that Excep. 2 to S. 300 was applicable to the case.

The case for the 'prosecution' was briefly as follows:

The appellant was a debtor of a Punjab money-lender named Thakur Singh whose two peons Durga Singh and Maha Singh went out in the afternoon of the 3rd June to collect his dues. They met the appellant about 7-30 p. m. and insisted that he should accompany them to their master to settle the question of payment. The appellant declined to go and the deceased Durga Singh caught hold of him by the arm and dragged him along. After they had proceeded a little distance the appellant pulled out a knife or dagger and stabbed Durga Singh with it in the lower part of the abdomen on the right side. The appellant then made off and seems to have gone to the thana. The injured man was taken by Maha Singh to the National School some 250 or 300 yards distant and placed there in charge of the masters while Maha Singh himself set out to tell his master Thakur Singh what had happened, and brought him with a number of other persons to the National School when they found that a literate constable from Lakhisari thana was already there. Thakur Singh examined the wound of the injured man and found it very serious and with the literate constable insisted upon taking him to the thana in spite of the remonstrances of the headmaster who advised that he be taken forthwith to the hospital. From the thana where he made a statement that the wound was caused by appellant with a knife Durga Singh was taken to the hospital where he died on the following morning. The Civil Surgeon in post-mortem examination found an incised wound 2-1/2 inches long on the right-side of the lower part of the abdomen perforating the abdominal wall and in his opinion death was due to the injury and hæmorrhage in the abdomen which ensued in consequence of it. He also held that the wound could have been inflicted with a knife to be presently mentioned.

It is further set out that on the morning of 4th the literate constable was directed to proceed to the scene of occurrence and search for the knife with which the appellant was alleged to have stabbed the deceased. A chaukidar named Idan Mian, who accompanied him, discovered in a paddy field some 15 yards from the roadside a knife described as in a more or less finished state.

This knife is sought to be connected with the appellant by the evidence of Lachmi Marwari, who is the landlord of the house of Thakur Singh and who states that he saw the appellant preparing it at his forge on the evening of the day of occurrence. That is the knife which the Civil Surgeon stated could have inflicted the wound which caused the death of the deceased.

The defence is difficult to describe. But it appears from the written statement to be that when the appellant refused to go to Thakur Singh, Durga Singh the deceased aimed a knife at him and in the struggle for it between the two men both fell down and the knife injured Durga Singh in the abdomen by accident.

The Judge and the assessors who heard the evidence obviously accepted it so far as the question whether the appellant dealt the fatal blow is concerned and they only differed as to whether the offence committed by the appellant fell under the head of murder or of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. There is indeed a further statement of some of the assessors that they were not satisfied that the knife produced was the weapon which had caused the injury to the deceased. The learned Sessions Judge, however, was of opinion that the evidence of Lachmi Marwari was clearly true and that there could be no doubt that the wound which caused the death of Durga Singh was inflicted by the appellant with the weapon already described. To my mind his view is unquestionably correct.

In appeal it has first been urged by Mr. S. K. Bhattacharjya that the injury was accidental. There does not appear, however, to be any sound foundation for this submission. The evidence has, in my opinion, been rightly believed in the trial Court and it clearly brings home to the appellant the responsibility for the death of the deceased by a deliberate blow and not by any accident.

The main submission, however, is that the offence does not amount to murder, but is by reason of the right of private defence of the person clearly a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Reliance is placed on the provision of S. 100, fifthly, whereby the right of private defence of the body extends under the restrictions mentioned in S. 100, to the voluntary causing of death if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right be an assault with the intention of kidnapping or abducting.

The material findings of the learned Sessions Judge are stated in a single sentence:

"Apart from the fact that it was undoubtedly Daroga Lohar who stabbed Durga Singh, the two points which emerge quite clearly from the evidence are that the blow was struck on a sudden irrational impulse and it was struck because Daroga Lohar was being forced against his will, to go with the peons to Lakhisarai."

In my judgment the seizure of the appellant by the two Panjabi peons, who were dragging him against his will to their master falls within the provisions of S. 362 and constituted abduction since they were by force compelling him to go from the place where they seized him, and accordingly he possessed the right of private defence of his body even to the causing of death, subject to the restrictions mentioned in S. 99. The most important of these restrictions so far as the present case is concerned, is that the right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it was necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence. Now the peons were armed with lathis and it would appear that they also had kirpans since the evidence of Lachmi Marwari is that in such circumstances they usually carry them the fact which may well have been known to the appellant. But it was also well known to him that no real personal harm was likely to ensue since he was only being taken by them to their master whom he had met a few hours before and with whom he had discussed the question of the repayment of the sum which was owing by him. In these circumstances though he clearly possessed the right of private defence of his person, it was an excess of it to inflict the harm which he did by striking the deceased with the knife or dagger in a vital part of the body. But, as remarked by the learned Sessions Judge, it was sudden irrational act, and he had not the intention of doing more harm than was necessary for the purposes of his defence. Accordingly he is within Excep. 2 to S. 300 as an offender who in the exercising in good faith of the right of private defence of person exceeded the power given to him under the statute and caused the death of the person against whom he was defending himself. In these circumstances I would hold that the offence falls not under S. 302 but under 304, I. P. C.

As to the question of sentence, a heavy punishment does not appear to be called for. The appellant is a youth of 20 and he found himself in the hands of two armed peons who were not likely to handle him at all gently and from whose clutches he probably felt that it was necessary that he should be free as soon as possible.

I would therefore allow the appeal in part and alter the conviction under S. 302 to one under S. 304, I. P. C. (part. 2) and sentence the appellant Daroga Lohar to rigorous imprisonment for a period of two years.

(Patna)

COURTNEY-TERRELL, C. J., AND SCROOPE, J.

Bhagawan Swain—Appellant.

v.

Mathuri Swain—Respondent.

Criminal Ref. No. 3 of 1930, Decided on 14th February 1930, made by Sess. Judge, Cuttack, D/- 7th January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 147 (1)—Meaning of "and shall thereafter inquire into the matter in the manner provided in S. 145."

The words "and shall thereafter inquire into the matter in the manner provided in S. 145" merely mean that after the order in writing has been drawn up as required by the earlier part of the subsection, the procedure in the inquiry is then to follow the course laid down in S. 145 and it is immaterial whether the enquiry itself was instituted before or after the drawing up by the Magistrate of the order requiring the parties to attend the Court.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 147 (2) Proviso—"Institution of inquiry" does not mean date of drawing up of formal proceedings under S. 147 but date on which complainant first approaches Magistrate.

The words "institution of inquiry" in the proviso to Cl. 2, S. 147, does not mean the date of the drawing up of the formal proceedings under S. 147, but it means the date on which the complainant first brings his grievance to the notice of the Magistrate either directly or indirectly through the police, and the Magistrate takes action with a view to enquiring into the allegation, although that action is merely a preliminary to the eventual institution of a formal proceeding. Hence the period of three months is to be calculated from the date, the complainant first approaches the Magistrate and not from the date of institution of formal proceedings. 44 C. L. J. 214, Foll. [P 728 C 1]

P. Misra—Against the reference.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This is a reference by the Sess. Judge of Cuttack under S. 498, Criminal P. C. relating to an order by a First Class Magistrate drawing up proceedings under S. 147, of the Code under the following circumstances: On 10th May 1929 one Mathuri Swain petitioned the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Cuttack complaining of the blocking of a public pathway by Parsu Swain and others which blocking was alleged to have been committed on 4th May preceding. The Magistrate sent the case for police enquiry and report and on 26th June, the police reported that the allegations of the petitioner were true and recommended proceedings under S. 107 against Parsu Swain and his associates. On 20th September both parties petitioned that the proceedings under S. 107 should be dropped and that a proceeding under S. 147 should be drawn up and the Magistrate complied with their request but did not pass his formal order until 4th November 1929.

Now the proviso to S. 147, Criminal P. C. is as follows:

"Provided that no such order shall be made where the right is exercisable at all times of the year, unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry, or where the right is exercisable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, unless the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons or on the last of such occasions before such institution."

The right of user of the public path by Mathuri Swain could not have been exercised within three months of the formal order of the Magistrate passed on 4th November 1929 and if that date is to be considered the date from which the period of three months running backward in time is to be taken it is clear that the proceedings under S. 147 will be abortive. On behalf of Mathuri Swain it is contended that the period backwards from which the three months mentioned in the proviso must run is the first order of the Magistrate made on 10th May 1929 when Mathuri Swain petitioned the Magistrate alleging the blocking of the pathway and it is contended that the beginning of the enquiry mentioned in the proviso to S. 147 means the date upon which the Magistrate made his order sending the case for police enquiry. The learned Sessions Judge in his letter of reference takes a different view. In his opinion the matter of the date of the enquiry referred to in the proviso to the section is to be tested in the following way: If S. 147, sub-S.

(1) be properly read according to his view there must first of all be an order under S. 147 referring to the section and that order must state the grounds upon which the Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists and that thereafter there must be an order for an enquiry and that the enquiry does not begin until these two conditions have been satisfied and he construes the words in the proviso "the institution of the enquiry" as referring to the enquiry which according to his view of S. 147, sub-S. (1) does not begin until there has been an order in writing stating the grounds of his being satisfied that a breach of the peace is imminent. In my opinion that construction of the section is not correct. The words in S. 147, sub-S. (1):

"and shall thereafter inquire into the matter in the manner provided in S. 145" merely mean that after the order in writing has been drawn up as required by the earlier part of the subsection the procedure in the inquiry is then to follow the course laid down in S. 145 and it is immaterial whether the enquiry itself was instituted before or after the drawing up by the Magistrate of the order requiring the parties to attend the Court. It will be noticed that in S. 145 the word "inquiry" is not used at all and under S. 145 the proceedings begin from the moment that the Magistrate having been satisfied that a breach of the peace exists makes his order requiring the parties to attend the Court in person.

It is very clear that if another construction of the words "institution of the enquiry" in the proviso to S. 147, were adopted great difficulties would arise in applying S. 147 in many cases, for a proceeding under S. 107 might be started, the matter might be taken up to the High Court, the High Court might direct that proceedings under S. 107 should be dropped and that proceedings under S. 147 should be undertaken in which case a loss of many months might have occurred, and if the words "institution of the inquiry" mean the date of the ultimate order which actually mentions the section it would be impossible for the party who had alleged that he had exercised the right to be able to prove that he had exercised the right within three months from the date of the order. In my view therefore the opinion expressed by the learned Sessions Judge is erroneous. I find that I am supported in my opinion by the case of Rama Nath Basu Choudhury v. Sarada Prosad Basu Choudhury (1) where the learned Judges said:

"We are not prepared to accede to the argument that the institution of the inquiry meant the date when the formal proceedings were drawn up under the section. Such an interpretation of the section would make its working difficult and we think the words of the section are wide enough to justify such a conclusion as that to which we have come."

I would therefore reject the reference and the proceedings should now continue.

Scroope, J.—I agree. In my opinion the learned Judge has taken too narrow a view of the law in regarding the words "institution of the enquiry" in the proviso Cl. (2) to S. 147, as meaning the date of the drawing up of the formal proceedings. This as the learned Chief Justice has pointed out would lead to considerable difficulties in the working of the section. The proviso is one relating to limitation, and it would be very unusual to make, as it were, limitation run backwards instead of forward, that is to say, from the date on which the Court draws up formal proceedings instead of from the date on which the complainant brings his grievance to the notice of the Court either directly or indirectly through the police, this would be the result of accepting the view of the learned Sessions Judge. The latter date would ordinarily be that on which the Magistrate takes action with a view to enquiring into the allegation. Such action may be as here merely a preliminary to the eventual institution of a formal proceeding but in my opinion it covered by the words referred to. In this case the petitioner approached the Magistrate first on 10th May and in my opinion the period of three months should be calculated from that date and not from the date of institution of formal proceedings which was some seven months later.

Ramkisan Ram Sonar — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 717 of 1929, Decided on 6th January 1930, against order of Sub-Divl. Magistrate, Siwan, D/- 6th November 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 344—Order staying criminal proceedings pending decision in civil suit is only justifiable on special grounds.

An order staying criminal proceedings pending decision in civil suit, is in essence only justifiable on special grounds, the general rule being that High Court should avoid staying proceedings in lower Courts, particularly when the civil suit is instituted after the commencement of the criminal case with the object of postponing the criminal trials: A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 778 and 2 Weir 415, Ref. [P 724 O 2]

J. Chatterji and R. S. Chatterji—for Petitioners.

G. P. Das—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—In this application for revision the petitioners pray that criminal proceedings pending against them in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Siwan be quashed or in the alternative be stayed pending the disposal of a civil suit. The first petitioner is a mahajan and the second petitioner is his munib.

On 23rd September last Ramkishun Sonar preferred a complaint against them alleging that on the preceding day petitioner 2 went to him and asked him to fetch his hathchitha (a sort of bank pass book) to petitioner, 1 petitioner 1 asked for the hathchitha and made entries on the debit and the credit side in spite of the protest of the complainant who is illiterate; the hathchitha originally showed Rs. 224 as due by the complainant but by the entries an additional Rs. 594 was fraudulently shown as due.

by him. The complainant's case was that on the 17th day, seventeen days previously, he had refused to clean the ornaments of petitioner 1 who tried to get even with him in the manner described.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the Sub-Deputy Magistrate to enquire and on reading the report of the enquiry at which the petitioners were represented, he on 6th November summoned the petitioners under S. 467, I. P. C. for 28th November. On 26th November petitioner 1 filed a civil suit for the sums mentioned plus interest and without asking the Court below for a postponement under S. 344, Criminal P. C., moved this Court on 13th December and obtained the present Rule.

In support of the Rule Mr. Jyotirmay Chatterji first urges that no offence is disclosed. The original complaint appears to have been of cheating though summons was issued for a more serious offence. The complainant alleges that only Rs. 244 was due and that the entries were made in the hathchitha fraudulently. The Magistrate was of opinion that the action of petitioner 1 amounted to the making of a false document and that petitioner 2 who had made the previous entries abetted petitioner 1. It is manifestly not possible to say at this stage that the proceedings should be quashed because they disclose no offence.

The learned advocate has, however, most strenuously contended that the criminal case should be postponed until the civil suit has been decided. In this connexion the decisions of single Judges of this Court and the remark obiter of Sulaiman, J. in Kanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan Das (1) have been cited. On behalf of the opposite party reliance has been placed on the decisions in Ram Saran Singh v. Nikhad Narain Singh (2) Raghubir Singh v. Emperor (3) Gnanaisigamani Nadar v. Vedamuthu (4) and C. Ramiah v. N. K. Ramiah (5) decided by Jackson, J., the last mentioned of which has been cited with approval by Wort, J. in Hirdan Narian

Singh v. Emperor (6) as well as the recent decision in Gopal Chandra Chakraverty v. Suresh Chandra Sanyal (7).

It is not without significance that the petitioners failed to make any application to the Magistrate under S. 344. Again it is obvious that the civil suit was filed on 26th November with the object of stifling the pending prosecution. It is not a case of the civil suit being first instituted and thereafter a complaint being filed with the object of prejudicing the trial of the civil suit, in which circumstances the trial of the criminal case might well be postponed. A. R. S. P. Subramanian Chetti v. Emperor (8). In my opinion the true Rule is laid down by Jackson, J. There is no reason to prefer consecutive to simultaneous trials. A stay order is in essence only justifiable on special grounds.

"The general rule is that the High Court should avoid staying proceedings in the lower Courts."

The only question which can arise is whether the circumstances of the present case afford reason for treating it as an exception to these rules. In my opinion the answer must be in the negative. The civil proceedings will in all probability be protracted for several years before they are concluded. They have obviously been instituted as a counter blast and particularly with an eye to the present prayer, the grant of which would postpone the criminal proceedings until they are stale. One would also expect the petitioners themselves to resent a serious criminal charge being kept hanging over their heads for years. If, as they allege, it is without substance, the Magistrate may be expected to release them from the shadow of it at a very early date.

Upon this view the application is without merit and the Rule must be discharged.

RAZA, J.

Rangi Lall—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 34 of 1930, Decided on 8th April 1930.(a) Criminal Trial—Duty of prosecution—Burden lies on prosecution to establish charge substantially and beyond reasonable doubt—Suspicion is not sufficient.

The onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution who must prove the charge substantially as laid. The guilt of the accused must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The gravest suspicion against the accused will not suffice to convict him of a crime, unless evidence establishes it beyond doubt. [P 727, C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 408—Dishonesty is of essence—Duty of Court in cases under S.
408 stated.

Mere retention of money or mere failure to return it does not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation. The mere fact that the payment was delayed is no ground for imputing a criminal intention. Though the ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust are somewhat broadly stated, there is no doubt as to their meaning. The sections dealing with the offence of criminal breach of trust were intended to punish an offence of which dishonesty is the essence. Any breach of trust is not an offence. It may be intentional without being dishonest or it may appear dishonest without being really so. In such cases the Magistrate should be slow to move. This caution is all the more necessary since there is a natural desire to secure speedy justice by having recourse to criminal law: 42 All. 522, Ref. [P 727 C 2]

R. F. Bahadurji and Jagat Narain
Mathur—for Applicant.

Judgment—This is an application for revision of an order dated 8th March 1930 passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow dismissing the applicant's appeal against the order dated 12th February 1930 passed by the special Magistrate, Lucknow convicting the applicant under S. 408, I. P. C. and sentencing him to three months R. I. and a fine of Rs. 100/- (or in default, one month's further simple imprisonment).

The applicant Rangi Lal is the son of one Brij Bihari Lal. Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal both were charged with an offence punishable under S. 418, I. P. C. but Brij Bihari Lal was acquitted and his son Rangi Lal was convicted and punished under S. 408, I. P. C.

The case originally started on a complaint lodged by one Ram Dass on 25th November 1929. His case was that he had purchased a lorry on the 'hire purchase system' from the Pioneer Motor Engineering Works, Lucknow, for Rs. 1,200/- on 6th September 1929, at the instance of Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal, having paid the initial sum of Rs. 400/- out of Rs. 1,200/- on 2nd September 1929. The remaining Rs. 800/- were to be paid by monthly instalments of Rs. 80/-. Having got the lorry he employed Rangi Lal at the instance of Brij Bihari Lal to drive the lorry for him. Rangi Lal was to get Rs. 30/- p. m. and daily food. Rangi Lal was thus employed on 6th September 1929. He (Rangi Lal) drove the lorry daily till nearly the end of September when he was dismissed. Another man Ram Swarup was then appointed to drive the lorry, but he drove it for one day only, and after that was prevented from doing so by Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal both. The lorry had been kept at the house of Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal while it was being driven by Rangi Lal and they refused to part with it. As the other instalments had not been paid, according to the agreement executed in favour of the Pioneer Motor Engineering Works they took back the lorry ultimately in November 1929. The substance of the complaint was that Rangi Lal had retained all the money realised by him as hire of the lorry to the amount of Rs. 440/-.

Both the accused pleaded 'not guilty'. It was stated in defence that the complainant Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal were partners in the lorry business and had purchased the lorry as such. It was not denied that Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal had realised the hire of the lorry. It was stated that Rangi Lal was always ready to pay Ram Dass his share of the profits after payment of the expenses and wages etc., the account of which had not been settled. Rangi Lal had stated also on 17th December 1929 that he had paid the money received less daily expenses, to Ram Dass. It should be noted that six of the prosecution witnesses were examined on 17th December 1929 and the accused were also examined the same day. Two more witnesses were examined for the prosecution on 6th January 1930, but the accused were not examined after that, though they should have been examined as required by law.

A written statement was filed on 2nd February 1930. It purports to be a written statement on behalf of Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal both, but it bears the signature of Brij Bihari Lal alone.

It was contended before the learned Sessions Judge that there was a genuine dispute as to accounts and no criminal intention; but the contention was not accepted by the learned Judge. The learned Judge was of opinion that Rangi Lal was bound to account for the money realised by him, and he withheld it with criminal intention.

Ordinarily, I do not enter into the merits of cases in revision, that is to say, I refuse to consider questions of fact but, I have to consider questions of fact in this case. The lower Courts have approached the case from a wrong point of view and the evidence which has been produced in this case has not received due consideration.

The learned Sessions Judge has not given any definite finding on the question of partnership. He was of opinion that it was perhaps outside the province of a criminal Court to inquire and determine whether any sort of partnership existed. I am unable to agree with him on this point. In my opinion the determination of that question has an important bearing on this case.

In my opinion there is sufficient reliable evidence on the record to show that Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal were partners in the lorry business and had purchased the lorry as such. Ex. A is the receipt for Rs. 400, which was given by the Pioneer Motor Works to Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both on 2nd September 1929. This receipt shows clearly that Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both had purchased the lorry from the Pioneer Motor Works. Ex. 2 is the deed of agreement which was executed by Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both in favour of the Pioneer Motor Works. This document also shows that Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal had purchased the lorry as partners. Ram Dass' statement that he had got the name of Brij Bihari Lal entered in the agreement (Ex. 2) simply for his convenience, is not reliable at all and must be rejected. It is true that J. Franklen who is in the service of the Pioneer Motor Works Company gives evidence in favour of Ram Dass in his examination-in-chief, but let us see what he states in his cross-examination. He admits in his cross-examination that Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lal both were present at the time the bargain was settled and that Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both were present at the time Ram Dass had paid Rs. 400/- on 2nd September 1929. When the receipt, Ex. A, was shown to him he admitted that it was in the name of Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both, that it was correct and that Brij Bihari Lal and Ram Dass both had paid the money for which the receipt was given to them. When the agreement Ex. 2 was shown to him he admitted that Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both had signed it as purchasers in his presence and that both of them were bound to pay the money under that deed. The learned Magistrate was of opinion that Brij Bihari Lal had signed the agreement simply as a surety for Ram Dass, as he wanted to get a job for his son Rangi Lal. It is noticeable that this finding is not supported by any reliable evidence on the record. It was never alleged by Ram Dass himself that Brij Bihari Lal had signed the agreement in question simply as his surety. He states simply that he had obtained Brij Bihari Lal's signature on the deed for his convenience. This statement is surely untrue. If Brij Bihari Lal had signed the agreement simply for the convenience of Ram Dass, it is difficult to understand why the names of Brij Bihari Lal and Ram Dass were entered in the receipt Ex. A. Surely the name of Brij Bihari Lal was not entered in the receipt for the sake of Ram Dass' convenience. It should be borne in mind that the receipt had been given to Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal both some four days before the execution of the agreement. The fact is that both of them had paid the money to the Motor Works Company and so the names of both of them were entered in the receipt. J. Franklen, P. W. 2, had to admit in his cross-examination that Brij Bihari Lal and Ram Dass both had paid the money for which the receipt was given to them on 2nd September 1929. I am entirely unable to agree with the finding of the learned Magistrate which is purely conjectural and is inconsistent with the statement of the complainant himself. I hold therefore that Ram Dass and Brij Bihari Lal were partners in the lorry business and had purchased the lorry from the Motor Works Company as such.

The next matter I have to consider is the question of the criminal liability of Rangi Lall applicant. His statement on some points may be untrue, but the onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution who must prove the charge substantially as laid. The guilt of the accused must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. The gravest suspicion against the accused will not suffice to convict him of a crime, unless evidence establishes it beyond doubt. Ram Dass, complainant states in his cross-examination that at the time he had lodged the complaint, he knew that Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lall had realized Rs. 366 only as hire of the lorry, but as he had also paid Rs. 75 in cash to them, he had alleged in his complaint that they had misappropriated Rs. 440. He admits in his cross-examination that at the time he had demanded money from the accused they had said to him that they would pay money to him after deducting expenses, etc. He makes the following statement at the end of his cross-examination :

"I have not yet paid the pay due to Rangi Lall, as the accounts have not yet been settled. Rangi Lall himself has incurred expenses of petrol and mobil oil for the lorry over and above Rs. 25 (not Rs. 75 as stated before) which I had paid to him. Rangi Lall himself has paid the price of all the things which he has purchased (for the lorry). The dispute between me and Rangi Lal is this : Rangi Lal says that the income, after deducting the motor expenses and his pay and the expenses of his daily food, may be taken by me and Brij Bihari Lal in equal shares. However Rangi Lal, is wrong in saying so, as Rangi Lal's father is not my partner in business."

The statement made by the complainant shows clearly that Rangi Lall really never refused to pay the money which might be found due to the complainant on account of his share after deducting the necessary expenses and that he was always ready and willing to pay the income of the complainant's share to him on settlement of accounts. However, the complainant wanted to get the whole income and wanted also to keep the lorry in his exclusive possession. This is clear from the statement of the complainant's witness, Ram Swarup, P. W. 6. He states that he was present at the time the dispute took place between Ram Dass and the accused over the income of the lorry. Rangi Lall had said at that time that he would pay money at the end of the month after deducting all the expenses, but Ram Dass had insisted on getting the whole income and on keeping the lorry in his own possession. Surely Ram Dass was wrong in doing so when he and Brij Bihari Lal were partners in business. The proposal which the accused had made to him was a reasonable proposal, but he was wrong in refusing to accept it and in demanding the whole income and in insisting on keeping the lorry in his exclusive possession. Ram Dass wanted to deprive Brij Bihari Lal and Rangi Lall of the amounts which were due to them and to which they were legally entitled. It is neither alleged nor shown that Rangi Lall was to pay the income to the complainant daily or within any particular period. He never refused to pay to the complainant the money which might be found due to him on settlement of accounts.

These are the facts which are established by the evidence in this case. In my opinion no charge is made out against Rangi Lal under S. 408, I. P. C. It should be borne in mind that mere retention of money or mere failure to return it does not necessarily raise a presumption of dishonest misappropriation. The mere fact that the payment was delayed is no ground for imputing a criminal intention. Though the ingredients of the offence of criminal breach of trust are somewhat broadly stated, there is no doubt as to their meaning. The sections dealing with the offence of criminal breach of trust were intended to punish an offence of which dishonesty is the essence. Any breach of trust is not an offence. It may be intentional without being dishonest or it may appear dishonest without being really so. In such cases the Magistrate should be slow to move. This caution is all the more necessary since there is a natural desire to secure speedy justice by having recourse to criminal law. As pointed out in the case of Emperor v. Mohan Singh (1), although transactions, which involve civil liabilities may amount to criminal offences, and often do, so that the dividing line between the two in a discussion of the case is almost indistinguishable, the use of the criminal law, not for the purpose of punishing an offender or in the public interest, but as a means of exerting pressure to extract money from an agent, is to be discouraged. I say nothing about the civil liability of Rangī Lāl or his father Brij Bihari Lāl, but I am not satisfied that the charge under S. 408, I. P. C., is made out against Rangī Lāl. He should at all events be given the benefit of doubt.

The result is that I accept the application for revision and setting aside the conviction and sentence of Rangī Lāl direct that he be acquitted and released. His bail bond may be discharged.

NANAVUTTY, J.

Chandrika Prasad—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Complainant—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appn. No. 19 of 1930, Decided on 31st March 1930.

(a) Penal Code, S. 409—Appropriation of money drawn from Bank for payment of one bill towards another bill of same firm does not amount to embezzlement.

Appropriation of money drawn from the Bank for payment of particular bill, towards payment of another bill due to the same firm or person does not amount to embezzlement of Government money; it may at the most amount to deliberate violation of the account rules making the person liable for departmental punishment. [P 729 C 2, P 730 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 409—Wrong account and wrong entry do not by themselves prove criminal breach of trust.

The fact that the accounts have been wrongly kept will not of itself prove that the person keeping the account committed criminal breach of trust unless it can be shown that the person misappropriated proceeds of cheque or remittance transfer receipt or any cash proved to have been received by him; and the wrong entries may raise strong suspicion which may serve as a ground for scrutiny but cannot justify the conviction of the person for criminal breach of trust. [P 730 C 1, P 731 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 8—Subsequent conduct when relevant as proof of guilt explained.

Different persons are differently constituted and that some accused even though innocent deliberately abscond rather than face the ordeal of a criminal trial and that some other innocent accused do equally foolish things such as make a false admission of guilt or pay off the amount said to have been stolen or embezzled in the vain hope that they may escape a criminal prosecution or get off with a light punishment. Such subsequent conduct cannot dispense with the positive proof of the guilt of the accused, the burden of which lies upon the prosecution. When once the Crown has established the guilt of the accused by the evidence of prosecution witnesses then such subsequent conduct may be utilized as furnishing further proof of the correctness of the conclusion as to the guilt of the accused drawn from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses; by itself, however, it can furnish no legitimate proof of the guilt of the accused. [P 731 C 2]

St. G. Jackson, and W. A. Akhgar—for Applicant.

H. K. Ghosh—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an appellate order of the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow upholding the conviction and sentence passed upon the applicant Chandrika Prasad for an offence under S. 409 I. P. C. The charge framed against the applicant is to the effect that on 31st March 1927 while he was Head Clerk of the Government Technical School at Lucknow and as such entrusted with or having dominion over a sum of Rs. 183-11-0 on account of the price of books purchased for the school from Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. of Calcutta he committed criminal breach of trust in respect of the said sum. There is absolutely no evidence on the record to prove that the applicant Chandrika Prasad was ever entrusted with this sum of Rs. 183-11-0 or ever had dominion or control over that amount. Even the learned City Magistrate concedes that fact when he writes in his judgment that :

"when there is no cash payment but only book transaction there can be no literal entrusting of money."

He, however, held that the accused had undoubtedly dominion over the money of the cheque Ex. 19. Ex. 19 is a cheque for Rs. 4,393-10-6 drawn by the Pay and Accounts Officer of Allahabad in favour of the Principal of the Government Technical School at Lucknow. It was in payments of three bills, one for Rs. 342-11-0 another for Rs. 2,214-2-0 and the third for Rs. 1,836-13-6. The Principal of the Government Technical School (Mr. Lyons) sent this cheque Ex. 19 duly endorsed to the Imperial Bank of India, Lucknow Branch, along with Rs. 86-0-2

In cash and asked the Bank that in lieu of the cheque Ex. 19 and the money remitted to the Bank nine drafts or remittance transfer receipts payable at sight in favour of the parties noted below should be sent to him by the Bank. The persons in whose favour these drafts were drawn are as under :

1. Manager, Pioneer Press, Allahabad	Rs.	a.	p.
2. Messrs. Mather & Platt Ltd., Calcutta	3,338	10	8
3. General Electric Co. Ltd., Calcutta	120	11	9
4. Messrs. Martijn & Co., Calcutta	69	4	0
5. Messrs. Birkmyre Bros., Calcutta	253	2	0
6. Messrs. Bishambhar Nath Niranjana Lal, Allahabad	357	11	3
7. Messrs. Jaggi Lal Kam-lapat, Cawnpore	64	0	0
8. Messrs. Jessop & Co., Calcutta	72	11	0
9. Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co., Calcutta	155	8	0
Total ...	4,479	10	8

It is admitted that Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. of Calcutta received the cheque for Rs. 155-8-0 and realized the amount of that cheque and that all the eight other persons or firms in whose favour drafts were drawn received their money. It is thus clear that out of the sum of Rs. 4,479-10-8 which included the amount of the cheque Ex. 19 from the Pay and Accounts Officer of Allahabad, not a pie was received by the applicant Chandika Prasad but that the whole amount was paid off to the various firms and persons to whom the Government Technical School of Lucknow owed money.

It is argued on behalf of the Crown that while the applicant is not proved of having actually embezzled a single pie, he is nevertheless guilty of constructive criminal breach of trust in that he utilised the cheque of Rs. 155-8-0 to pay the money due to Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. on their original bill for Rs. 183-11-0, whereas this cheque of Rs. 155-8-0 was meant for payment to that firm in respect of another bill for which the Government was liable. There is no clear and reliable evidence on this point. In the absence of any instructions to the contrary, Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. would naturally credit the amount of the cheque for Rs. 155-8-0 towards the payment of their oldest bill outstanding in order to save limitation. The mere fact that Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co's bill for Rs. 183-11-0 was paid off in part by the cheque of Rs. 155-8-0 which was drawn in respect of another bill for that amount due to that firm does not go to prove that the applicant Chandika Prasad embezzled the amount of the original bill for Rs. 183-11-0 (subsequently reduced to Rs. 172-6-0) due to that firm. The presumption of innocence in favour of the applicant must hold good until replaced by cogent and convincing evidence of his guilt. Unfortunately for the prosecution it has not been possible for the Crown to examine Mr. Lyons as a witness in this case to elucidate the crucial facts of the transaction in respect of which criminal breach of trust is said to have been committed. The Financial Hand Book, Vol. 5, p. 75, Art. 169 clearly lays down the responsibility of the head of the department in respect of all items of contract contingent grants. The learned City Magistrate has coolly assumed that Mr. Lyons, the late Principal of the Government Technical School was either an accomplice of the applicant Chandika Prasad or a mere dupe of his. In the circumstances of this case and in the absence of Mr. Lyons it is not permissible for any Court to make this sweeping allegation against one who is not on his defence and who is not in a position to defend himself. Every page and every item of the account books and registers of the school produced in the Court bear the signature or initials of Mr. Lyons, the late Principal of the School. He has not been given an opportunity to explain these entries in his account books which are said to evidence the commission of the alleged offence of embezzlement. It is argued on behalf of the prosecution that money drawn from the Bank for payment of a particular bill has been appropriated towards the payment of another bill due to the same firm or person. Even if this were proved to be the case I fail to see how such conduct amounts to embezzlement of Government money. Taking the matter in its most serious or worst light, I find that it only amounts to a deliberate violation of the account rules on the subject on the part of the applicant and of his late Principal, Mr. Lyons, rendering them, both liable to severe departmental punishment. But it does not prove that either of them committed the criminal offence of embezzlement. The present case against the applicant was started not upon the complaint of Mr. Lyons but upon a letter sent by Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. to the present Principal of the School, Mr. Mathewe, asking for payment of Rs. 172-6 which had been long outstanding. This sum of Rs. 172-6 was in respect of items included in the bill for Rs. 342-11, Ex. 22. This bill of Rs. 342-11 is included in the cheque for Rs. 4,393-10-6 (Ex. 19), and when this cheque Ex. 19 was sent to the Imperial Bank of India at Lucknow under the orders of Mr. Lyons together with Rs. 86-0-2 in cash the Principal of the School requisitioned for 9 remittance transfer receipts, one of which was for Rs. 155-8-0 in favour of Messrs Thacker Spink & Co. The learned City Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge have both laid stress upon the fact that the account books are muddled and that the entries in the cash books and other registers are incorrect.

The fact that the accounts have been wrongly kept will not of itself prove that the applicant committed criminal breach of trust unless it can be shown that the applicant Chandika Prasad misappropriated the proceeds of any cheque or remittance transfer receipt or any cash proved to have been received by him. It is admitted that no cheque was drawn in favour of the applicant Chandika Prasad and that all cheques and drafts or remittance transfer receipts drawn in favour of various persons and firms were duly received and cashed by those persons and firms and that not a pie out of these cheques or drafts came into the pockets of the applicant. Realizing the great difficulties in the way of the prosecution owing to the absence of Mr. Lyons from India the learned Sessions Judge has convicted the applicant not for the offence in respect of which the charge sheet has been framed by the learned City Magistrate but for embezzling certain sums of money said to have been received in hard cash by the applicant from one Ali Naqi. The learned Sessions Judge himself concedes that the applicant is not charged with any offence in respect of the money said to have been received by him from Ali Naqi but he justifies himself by adding that it forms the basis of the present charge against the applicant. The learned counsel for the applicant, Mr. St. George Jackson, vehemently protested against the conduct of the lower appellate Court in convicting the applicant of an offence in respect of a sum of money said to have been received in cash from Ali Naqi when the charge framed against the accused made no mention at all of this matter. There is no doubt great force in this contention of the learned counsel for the applicant but apart from this technical objection I find that the evidence of Ali Naqi is not only vague but unreliable and does not prove the guilt of the applicant. Ali Naqi does not know the exact amount he gave to Chandika Prasad or when he made those payments in respect of the price of books sold by him. He deposes that Mr. Lyons had told him to sell the books and hand over the price to the applicant. He has produced no written order of Mr. Lyons to that effect and he took no receipts either from Mr. Lyons or from the applicant when he made the alleged payment of the price of the books to the applicant. For aught I know to the contrary, Ali Naqi may have himself embezzled the price of the books which were deposited with him to be sold to the students of the school. He deposes that he sold seventy books at Re. 1-8-0 a book and gave the price Rs. 105 to the applicant and he took no formal receipt or even an informal acknowledgment from Chandika Prasad. There is no documentary evidence of any kind to corroborate the story told by Ali Naqi and I am not prepared to believe implicitly his solitary and unsupported testimony against the applicant, in view of his own conduct in showing Mathura Prasad a retired clerk as still on the establishment working in the name of Ori Lal. If the testimony of Ali Naqi is rejected, there is no evidence to prove that any money in cash was ever received by the applicant. There remain then only the erroneous entries in the cash books and account registers of the school written in the handwriting of the applicant and initialled or signed and verified by the late Principal of the School. These wrong entries no doubt raise strong suspicion against the applicant, but, as was well pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council, suspicion through a ground for scrutiny may not be the basis of a civil Court decree much less can it justify the conviction of an accused person in a criminal trial for an offence under the Penal Code. The case for the prosecution has so far not emerged from the region of suspicion into the arena of proved concrete facts constituting an offence punishable under S. 409, I. P. C. The absence of Mr. Lyons has been a great handicap to the prosecution. The difficulties of the prosecution, however, furnish no legal justification for the conviction of the applicant Chandika Prasad on mere suspicion. These suspicions moreover operate as strongly in the present case against the applicant as against his late principal Mr. Lyons. The learned Sessions Judge very rightly deprecates any expression of opinion as to Mr. Lyons' liability in respect of the sum of money said to have been embezzled. Unfortunately he holds the applicant guilty of criminal breach of trust inasmuch as under the signature of his principal Mr. Lyons he caused the remittance transfer receipt for Rs. 155-8 to be issued at the end of March 1927 in favour of Messrs. Thacker Spink and Co. for payment of a bill for Rs. 183-11 although the money represented by the remittance transfer receipt or draft for Rs. 155-8 had been drawn for payment of another bill to Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. I regret I find myself unable to accept this reasoning. All that it amounts to is that money drawn by the Principal of the school for payment of a bill due to a particular firm has been under his order appropriated towards the payment of another bill due to the same firm. This may be a serious irregularity in the eyes of the Audit Officer but it does not amount to an offence under S. 409, I. P. C., because no money was actually embezzled by anybody and because no money in fact reached the hands of the accused Chandika Prasad.

The learned City Magistrate as well as the learned Sessions Judge have both laid stress upon the subsequent conduct of the applicant in paying off the amount due to Messrs. Thacker Spink & Co. and have considered that the fact that this money was paid on behalf of the applicant to this Calcutta firm is further ample proof of the applicant's guilt. I find myself unable to accept this line of reasoning when there is no evidence on behalf of the Crown sufficient to justify the finding that the accused committed the offence of criminal breach of trust. The mere fact that on account of sheer timidity or on account of a desire to avoid running the risk of disgrace of a criminal trial and of dismissal from Government service, either the accused or someone on his behalf paid off the amount said to have been embezzled to the party to whom it was due would not furnish any proof of his guilt. Such subsequent conduct is equally consistent with the innocence of the accused; and no inference adverse to him ought legitimately to be drawn from it. The learned Sessions Judge writes:

"If the appellant (Chandrika Prasad) was not guilty I do not see why he should have caused the bill to be paid in this way".

The simple answer to this method of reasoning is that different persons are differently constituted and that some accused even though innocent deliberately abscond rather than face the ordeal of a criminal trial and that some other innocent accused do equally foolish things such as make false admission of guilt or pay off the amount said to have been stolen or embezzled in the vain hope that they may escape a criminal prosecution or get off with a light punishment. Such subsequent conduct dispenses with the positive proof of the guilt of the accused, the burden of which lies upon the prosecution. When once the Crown has established the guilt of the accused by the evidence of prosecution witnesses then such subsequent conduct may be utilised as furnishing further proof of the correctness of the conclusion; as to guilt of the accused drawn from the evidence of the prosecution witnesses by itself, however, it can furnish no legitimate proof of the guilt of the accused.

For the reasons given above I allow this application for revision, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the applicant Chandika Prasad, acquit him of the offence charged and order his immediate release.

Criminal Appeal No. 1109 of 1929, Decided on 27th March 1930.

(a) Penal Code, S. 366-A—Father taking away his unhappy daughter from her husband's house and giving her as wife to another commits offence under S. 366-A.

When a married girl is unhappy with her husband and the father takes her from the husband's house and gives her as a wife to somebody else, that can hardly be called trafficking in women but having regard to the provisions of S. 366-A, the act of the father would come within those provisions. [P 732 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 366-A — "Induce".

The word "induce," is used in its ordinary meaning of any words of inducement flowing from one person to the girl. [P 732 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 366-A—Inducement to leave must have for its object seduction by another person.

The inducement to leave must have for its object seduction by another person and not by the person who himself induces the woman to leave.

K. D. Malaviya — for Appellants.

Sankar Saran—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The facts proved to the satisfaction of the Sessions Judge and all the assessors are that Ram Saran, father of a married woman, Suraj Bali and Jagardeo, went to the house of the woman's husband, took the woman away from the house and left her at Jagardeo's house in the position of the wife of Jagardeo. These facts have been conclusively proved. The only question is whether the acts of the appellants amount to an offence. The principal question from the decision is whether the young woman is under 18 or over 18. The burden of proving that she was over 18 lay on the prosecution. I have gone through the evidence. It is of an exceedingly slight nature. The medical witness was of opinion that the girl was under 18 years of age on the date of the occurrence. He, however, gave his opinion in a very hesitating manner to the effect that there might be a difference in the estimate of a year or so. One year is of great importance when the doctor thinks that she is 17 and it is asserted on behalf of the appellants that she is 18. On the side of the appellant Ram Saran the evidence is produced to the effect that the girl is about 22. The girl appeared in Court yesterday and from her appearance she did not appear that she was under 19. All these are mere opinions and there is no definite evidence. Under the circumstances the benefit of the doubt must be given to the appellants, particularly in a case like this, where the father himself has taken the girl from her husband.

The next argument is that the act would not be covered by the provisions of S. 366-A. It is true that those provisions were enacted to give effect to the International Convention for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children signed at Geneva in 1922. When a married girl is unhappy with her husband and the father takes her from the husband's house and gives her as a wife to somebody else that can hardly be called trafficking in women. At the same time, having regard to the provisions of the section, I am of opinion that the act of the father would come within these provisions. The provisions will apply to Ram Saran and Suraj Bali. The girl was seduced to illicit intercourse and induced to leave her husband's house for the purpose. It was objected that there was no evidence of inducement. The word "induce," however, is used in its ordinary meaning of any words of inducement flowing from one person to the girl. The father's telling the girl to come away with him from a house where she was unhappy would amount to an inducement. If the girl had been held by me to be under 18 years of age, I am of opinion, that Ram Saran and Suraj Bali would have been guilty under S. 366-A. As regards Jagardeo, the principal offender, who had kept the girl as his wife, the provisions would not apply as the inducement to leave must have for its object seduction by another person and not by the person who himself induces the woman to leave. Very likely the wording of the section makes the offence much wider than may have been intended by the legislature, but the business of a Court is to interpret the words as they stand and not to make an attempt to discover what offence is particularly meant and what kind of offenders the legislature desired to include in the definition.

In the result I set aside the conviction and sentence and order the release of the appellants. If any of them is on bail his bail bonds shall be cancelled.

Nawal Behari Lal—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 803 of 1929, Decided on 26th March 1930, made by Assist. Sess. Judge, Allahabad, D/- 22nd November 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 307—When case is referred, it should be referred as a whole.

When a Sessions Judge refers a case by virtue of the powers given by S. 307 he must refer the whole of the case against the particular accused, and not merely those charges on which there happens to be a finding with which he disagrees. [P 733 C 1]

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

K. D. Malaviya and D. P. Malaviya—for Accused.

Boys, J.—Nawal Behari Lal was put on trial upon charges under Ss. 193, 471 and 467/109, I. P. C. The jury convicted him under S. 193, I. P. C., but acquitted him by a majority of three to two on the other two charges. The learned Judge proceeded to accept the finding of guilty as regards S. 193, and to convict and sentence him to five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. Disagreeing with the jury's verdict on the other two charges he has referred the matter to this Court under S. 307. In the first place we must point out an error into which the learned Judge has fallen. When he refers a case by virtue of the powers given by S. 307, Criminal P. C., he must refer the whole of the case against the particular accused, and not merely those charges on which there happens to be a finding with which he disagrees. In this particular case he should have referred the whole of the case against Nawal Behari Lal instead of merely referring the case so far as the charges under Ss. 471 and 467/109 are concerned, and he should not have proceeded to a conviction and sentence upon the charge under S. 193, I. P. C. Holding as we do this view we shall have, after dealing with the rest of the case, to set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 193 and pass an appropriate order ourselves. The facts against Nawal Behari Lal are very clear. There are four persons concerned in this case Raghunath Lal and Johri Lal, who are uncle and nephew. One Sham Behari Lal was working in partnership with Raghunath Lal and Johri Lal, and it is the case for the accused, and is also admitted by the Crown, that the accused Nawal Behari Lal was acting in certain matters relating to the sale and purchase of coal as an agent on behalf of the firm. Raghunath Lal appears to have taken little or no part in the conduct of the business. Similarly Johri Lal was also practically a sleeping partner, the main conduct of the business being left to Sham Behari Lal. As Johri Lal was leaving Allahabad to arrange for a wedding and there was litigation in contemplation or proceedings, it was desirable to give Sham Behari Lal full authority to act. As Johri Lal was busy and had not time to see to the writing out of a complete mukhtarnamah, he therefore bought a stamp and signed it at the end on behalf of himself and on behalf of his uncle Raghunath, adding, in order to guard against the document being improperly used, the words "mukhtarnamah likha so sahi." The stamp was bought on 23rd February 1925, and according to Johri Lal, was handed over to Sham Behari Lal. Later this stamp appears as the document upon which a suit was filed by Nawal Behari Lal against Johri Lal. In that suit a claim was made for commission on certain coal sales, and the document as filed purported to be an agreement by Johri Lal to pay such commission. The document was manifestly a forgery and it is not now and cannot be denied on behalf of Nawal Behari Lal that it is a forgery. In the civil suit Johri Lal asked that the document might be photographed, and the suit was promptly withdrawn. The criminal proceedings followed.

We have heard Mr. K. D. Malaviya on behalf of the accused. It is quite unnecessary to enter into detailed argument about the case or the charges that were framed in the criminal proceedings. We entirely agree with the order referring the case to this Court which we might amplify, but which it is not necessary to amplify, that the verdict of the jury in reference to the charges under Ss. 467/109 and 471 was ludicrous, if not actually perverse. We have not the shadow of a doubt that Nawal Behari Lal deliberately got the document fabricated and that he used it knowing, of course, that it was fabricated.

We set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 193 arrived at and passed by the Sessions Judge, and for it we substitute a conviction by this Court under S. 193, I. P. C., and further convict Nawal Behari Lal under S. 467/109 and S. 471, I. P. C. In the matter of sentence we have been asked to deal leniently. But arriving at the finding at which we have, there is no shadow of an excuse for dealing with him leniently. The fraud was as deliberate and gross as it could be. We sentence Nawal Behari Lal to five (5) years' rigorous imprisonment under each of the Ss. 193, 471 and 467/109, the sentences to run concurrently; and we further sentence him to a fine of Rs. 100 under S. 467/109. In default of payment of the fine a further three months' rigorous imprisonment will be undergone. The sentence will run as from the date of his conviction by the learned Sessions Judge as the accused has been in jail since that date. A copy of this order will be sent to the learned Sessions Judge in answer to his reference.

Boys, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the Local Government from the acquittal of Padam Singh, son of Mohan Singh, who had been found guilty by the trial Court under S. 193, I. P. C., and sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment, but who had been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that the facts did not come, at any rate did not clearly come, within Ss. 191 and 193, I. P. C. Before us two questions have been fully argued, one of law and the other of the merits, and it is incumbent on us to deal with both. The plaintiff in a civil suit was Sher Mohammad Khan. The defendant was the present opposite party, Padam Singh. The suit was brought on the basis of a promissory note said to have been executed by Padam Singh on 15th January 1926, supported by a receipt stated to have been taken from Padam Singh on the same date.

The suit was brought on 11th August 1928 and was decreed ex parte on 25th September 1928. An application for restoration made on 15th October 1928 was allowed on 1st December, 1928, and on the same date the defendant, Padam Singh, was directed to file a written statement. He filed the written statement and in it denied execution of the promissory note, denied owing any sum at all and at the end of the written statement he verified these denials stating that the paragraphs in which the denials were made were true to his personal knowledge. No question has been raised before us that the verification was not in the ordinary form called for by O. 6, R. 15.

Having filed this written statement on 1st December 1928, Padam Singh three weeks later, on 20th December 1928, applied that the thumb-impressions on the promissory note and the receipt alleged to be his might be sent for examination.

Police Inspector Gorton of the Finger Print Bureau of the Criminal Investigation Department reported that the finger prints on the promissory note and receipt, which were the basis of the suit, were the finger prints of Padam Singh, the defendant. Padam Singh, having heard that the report was against him, again allowed the suit to be decreed in default. The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes issued notice under S. 476, Criminal P. C., to Padam Singh to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 193, I. P. C. Padam Singh appeared in response to the notice and threw himself on the mercy of the Court. We have not had his answer placed before us in detail, but it is common ground between the learned Government Advocate and the counsel for Padam Singh that he did not on that occasion do more than throw himself on the mercy of the Court, more especially he did not set up any defence of any sort that his finger impressions must have been taken from him while he was in a state of intoxication, which was his line of defence at the criminal trial which followed.

As we have said above, Padam Singh was convicted by the Magistrate and has been acquitted by the learned Judge. The Magistrate considered that the only question which he really had to determine was whether the thumb impressions of the accused had been obtained by fraud while the accused was drunk or whether the accused had deliberately perjured himself in the civil Court in order to evade the satisfaction of the loan. Rejecting the accused's defence, he held that Padam Singh was clearly guilty under S. 193, I. P. C., and there is nothing to show that any question was raised before him that if the alleged facts were found against the accused, S. 193, I. P. C., was not applicable. The grounds of appeal to the learned Sessions Judge do not appear to have raised any question but one of fact. But the question of the applicability of S. 193 or, in the alternative, S. 199, I. P. C., was clearly raised before the learned Sessions Judge who was further referred to the decisions in Queen Empress v. Meharban Singh (1) and Emperor v. Janki Rai (2). After mentioning these cases the learned Judge says :

"In the present case the written statement of Padam Singh is merely a general denial of the claim of the plaintiff, Sher Mohammad Khan, and there is no specific denial of a specific and material fact constituting the plaintiff's claim."

We are unable to attribute any meaning to this statement in view of the actual written statement. The defendant, Padam Singh, began by not admitting the allegations in the plaint, but in his additional pleas he expressly denied that he had executed any pro-note, in favour of the plaintiff or that any amount was due to the plaintiff. What more specific denial of a substantial and material fact constituting the plaintiff's claim there could possibly be, it is impossible to conceive. Again the learned Sessions Judge says :

"On general grounds I am of the opinion that statements in the pleadings by themselves should not form the subject of a criminal prosecution."

Again it would seem to us that if "general grounds" are entitled to any weight at all, it would prima facie be most desirable that if a party makes deliberately false statements to a Court intending the Court to be influenced thereby, he should be liable to a criminal prosecution. But it is not on any "general grounds" that a judgment should be based in a matter of this description. It is the province of the legislature to declare in what circumstances a person shall be liable to punishment and it is the duty of the Court merely to determine whether the circumstances in the particular case come within the provisions enacted by the legislature. The learned Sessions Judge next says :

"It is true that the Law Commissioners who drafted the Penal Code were anxious to depart from the rule of the English law on this subject."

The learned Judge has, therefore, quite rightly recognized that any practice that may be current in England can be of no weight in applying the law in this country, if the legislature in this country has in fact carried out its intention of declaring different laws. The learned Sessions Judge next says :

"It is doubtful if the law as actually enacted provides for the punishment of a party making a false allegation in a pleading filed in a civil Court in India."

This is a conclusion to which he was entitled to come and, coming to that conclusion, he was bound to acquit the accused.

The Local Government asks us in this appeal to determine whether on this point the learned Judge was right. This question of law was the first to be argued at length by both sides. We are confident that it can be disposed of briefly. In addition to the two cases to which we have above referred the learned Government Advocate brought to our attention the case of Lakhu Shah v. Queen Empress (3), the case of Trailokya Nath Banerji v. Bodaranjan (4), the case of J. B. Ross & Co. v. C. B. Scriven (5) and the case of Emperor v.

Janki Rai (S). No other case than these was referred to by counsel for Padam Singh. We do not propose to consider in detail the cases to which we have referred, and though there was on both sides frequent reference to the scope of S. 199, I. P. C., we do not feel that it is incumbent upon us in this case to say anything whatever as to what may be the scope of that section. We propose to confine ourselves to declaring our view of the meaning of S. 191, I. P. C. Its interpretation, in our view, gives no rise to serious difficulty. In the case before us we are not concerned with any affidavit or any statement taken from the parties or any oral evidence given by Padam Singh. We are concerned with the written statement, in which of course must be included the verification, and with that only. S. 191 says :

"Whoever being legally bound by an oath or by express provision of law to state the truth makes any statement which is false and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true, is said to give false evidence."

We are invited to rely, and we do rely, on the words :

"bound by express provision of law to state the truth."

It is contended by counsel for the opposite party that a defendant is not legally bound either by any express provision of law or in any other way to file a written statement at all. That of course must at once be conceded. But if he does desire to file a written answer to the plaint, he is by express provision of law bound to do something further. He is bound to attach the verification which is called for by O. 6, R. 15, and his written statement is not, until that verification is attached, a written statement in law at all and could not be received for any purpose whatever. When, therefore, filing a written statement he is bound by express provision of law to verify the facts alleged in that written statement as being true either to his own knowledge or to the best of his belief. It is contended that when the law requires a defendant to verify his written statement it does not necessarily require him to tell the truth. This contention, in our view, is manifestly untenable. Words have a certain meaning and we have only to give them their plain and ordinary meaning, in the absence of any circumstances indicating that that meaning is not permissible. The ordinary dictionary meaning of the word 'verify' used in the present circumstances is : "to confirm the truth or truthfulness of." It was further contended on behalf of the opposite party that the mere fact that in cases under the Income-tax Act and possibly other such Acts a false verification was expressly to be declared to be punishable under S. 177, I. P. C., or some other such section and the absence of any such enactment in connexion with O. 6, R. 15, was sufficient to show that a false verification in accordance with O. 6, R. 15 could be made with impunity.

In other words, we were asked to hold that the legislature orders a defendant to declare that his statements are true and, since it is further emphasised that the same legislature passed all the Acts, in the same breath says that it does not care whether the statements are true or not and that no penalty shall follow the making of a false verification. It is manifest that such an argument would be extremely dangerous. It is not possible for one moment to know what was in the minds of particular individuals when they were considering whether it was necessary or whether it was merely desirable or whether it was undesirable to add a clause declaring under what section of the penal law a person infringing the law should be punishable. We confine ourselves, therefore, to the simple question whether the facts of the case come within S. 191. Here we find that there is an express provision of law requiring the defendant to confirm the truth of the statements made by him in the preceding clauses of his written statement, and if he does so, knowing that that verification is false, he is declared by the legislature in S. 191 itself to be giving false evidence. Whatever may or may not be connoted by the word 'evidence' in other sections, there can be no doubt about the meaning in S. 191 and there can equally be no doubt that the words 'gives false evidence' in S. 193 are used in the same sense as the same words in S. 191, and it has not of course been contended that if S. 191 is applicable to the present case, S. 193 is not applicable. We are, therefore, of opinion that so far as the legal point is concerned the trial Court was right in holding that an offence had been committed under S. 193, I. P. C.

The next and only other question concerns the merits. The present being an appeal from an acquittal, it was open to counsel on behalf of Padam Singh to contend that on the merits his client should not have been convicted. The trial Court held that there could be no doubt that Padam Singh's defence that the thumb impressions taken from him were taken in a state of intoxication was false. The lower appellate Court, though it has not expressed its opinion so clearly, would at least seem to have been of the opinion that Padam Singh had not substantiated his defence. We have had to hear counsel on both sides on the merits. It is manifest that although the acquittal of Padam Singh by the appellate Court was not an acquittal on merits, it is for the Crown here in appeal to establish that the conviction of the accused on the merits ought to have been sustained, and it is for the Crown to establish that beyond any reasonable doubt. It would serve no useful purpose to enter into the details of the evidence, but we have no hesitation in saying that we are not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the conviction of Padam Singh was right. We need only mention one or two outstanding features of the case. When Padam Singh got the suit restored after the first occasion on which it had been decreed in default, he forthwith applied for expert examination of his finger prints. We are informed, and it is not denied, that such expert examination is always carried out by an official of the Criminal Investigation Department, there being no private experts in finger prints. So far then there is no reason for supposing that the accused's application was not bona fide, and this at any rate must stand to his credit. Next we have the fact that the particular promissory note and receipt in question are the only two documents which either side produced before the Court in which Padam Singh signed by means of a thumb impression rather than by his full signature in the Hindi script.

Obviously it might have been difficult for the plaintiff to produce documents on which the defendant had put his thumb impression, but the fact remains that we have several documents of a similar nature on all of which Padam Singh signed his full signature and there is no evidence of his ever having signed any similar document or any other document at all by affixing his thumb impression. Thirdly, there is evidence, which has been believed by the Court below, to the effect that Padam Singh was what may be described as a habitual drunkard. It is, therefore, at least not impossible that advantage might have been taken of him when he was in a state of intoxication. We do not of course suggest for one moment that he has established this, but he has established circumstances rendering his assertion at least not wholly improbable. Finally, there is no satisfactory reason suggested by the man who was plaintiff in the civil suit and is the principal witness for the Crown in the trial why Padam Singh should have on this one occasion signed by means of his thumb impression. In view of these facts we cannot hold it to be satisfactorily established that Padam Singh knew at the time that he filed his written statement that his denial of execution of the document was false denial. The result is that we are of opinion that the Local Government must succeed in its contention that Ss. 191 and 193 are applicable to the case of deliberately false allegations in a written statement and false verification, but that in the particular case the appeal must fail on merits, and it is dismissed.

Saila Nath Mukerji — for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—Kashi Ram has come here in revision from his conviction by a Magistrate of the First Class for an offence under S. 500, I. P. C. The conviction was upheld by the Sessions Judge. Kashi Ram was a plaintiff in a civil suit where the basis of his claim was that Sheoraj was not the daughter's son of Prithi Singh but was the child of some other woman and Prithi Singh's daughter Mt. Bishan Devi pretended that Sheoraj was her own child. The plaintiff was examined as a witness on 18th March and in his statement he elaborated a long story of inquiries made by Mt. Bishan Devi of a likely boy to be smuggled in as her own and finally, the choice falling on a son of Mt. Jamna of Amritsar. He stated that three women were approached, one was Bal Mukand's wife another Mt. Jamna of Amritsar and a third Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister. This was in examination-in-chief when his own counsel was examining him. He further elaborated how Mt. Jamna's boy had to be smuggled in. He said that Bal Makund's wife gave birth to a female child which could not be taken, and Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister had a miscarriage (the word used in the record of the evidence is abortion), so Mt. Jamna's child who happened to be a boy was the one taken advantage of. The defamation alleged against the applicant Kashi Ram is with reference to his statement that Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister had a miscarriage. It turned out that the girl, the daughter of one Ram Karan Das, was only a child of 12 and not married. Kashi Ram was thereupon prosecuted for defaming the girl. In this Court it was argued:

(1) that the statement did not come within the definition of defamation given in S. 499, I. P. C., and (2) that the statement was privileged under S. 132, Evidence Act.

It was admitted, as it could not be otherwise after the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (I. L. R. 29 All. 685), that a witness did not have complete privilege when he made a statement in the witness-box. It was sought to keep the statement out of the definition of defamation on the ground that Kashi Ram himself knew nothing at all about the matter of this woman, that he had received information from one Kishori and that he merely made statements at random without any intention of harming the reputation of any person. I have not examined the record myself, but I was told by Mr. Saila Nath that Kishori denied having given any information to Kashi Ram. The statement, therefore, of Kashi Ram was merely imaginary. A long story was invented by him in order to bolster up his allegation that Sheoraj was not the son of Mt. Bishan Devi. In the definition intending is not the only circumstance of mind of the offender that is included. It is further stated that it will be enough if the offender had knowledge or reasonable belief that such imputation would harm the reputation of any person. To give out that a woman had miscarriage without any knowledge whether she was married or not would amount to defamation because the person who makes the statement would have reasonable belief that such imputation would harm the reputation of the woman in case she was not married. In cross-examination Kashi Ram went to the length of making a reckless statement that he had no knowledge whether Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister was married or not. Obviously what he desired to detail was not an ordinary instance of a miscarriage by a married woman. He was prepared to give out that even if the woman was not married there was certainly a miscarriage. The statement would come within the definition because Kashi Ram being presumably a man of ordinary sense would know that such an imputation about a woman would harm her reputation.

Next we come to the provisions of S. 132, Evidence Act. Two matters are to be kept in mind:

(1) That the matter about which the witness makes a statement is relevant to the matter in issue in any suit; and
 (2) that the witness was compelled to make the statement which is held to be defamatory.

In my opinion the statement is not protected under either ground. The character of Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister was in no way relevant to the question whether Sheoraj was a son or not a son of Mt. Bishan Devi. There was no allegation, that Sheoraj was really the son of Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister. "This woman was dragged in merely to give verisimilitude to Kashi Ram's false details of an elaborate story. Even if Sheoraj was really the son of Mt. Jamna, there was no necessity for him to drag in two other women as being ready to offer their children to Mt. Bishan Devi. Kashi Ram's statement was a tissue of lies as regards Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister and lies were in no way relevant. In Haidar Ali v. Abru Mia (1), two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court dwelt on the relevancy of the matter in determining whether a particular statement was protected under S. 132 or not. The question there was whether one Haidar Ali was in possession of false weights or not, and a witness stated during the trial that Haidar admitted in the panchayat that Kannu beat him with a wooden shoe. The learned Judges pointed out that this statement had no relevancy whatsoever to the possession of false weights and did not make the possession of false weights more or less probable because of the shoe beating. They, therefore, held that the statement was not covered by the provisions of S. 132. In the present case also I have given reasons why I do not consider the statement or even the mention of Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister in the suit as in any way relevant. Secondly, the statement was made in examination-in-chief when there could be no compulsion for Kashi Ram to make any particular statement. His counsel must have examined him on instructions given by him to counsel. Counsel himself presumably did not invent the story of Mt. Jaggo's husband's sister. There may be cases where questions by one's own counsel may also be taken to be questions to which a witness is compelled to give answers. The present is not such a case. I hold the statement to have been a voluntary statement. Reference was made to the case of Ganga Sahai v. King Emperor (2). That was a case where the Court itself put a question to the witness. The Judge himself asked the witness why he was suing for his money. The witness replied that he did not desire to leave it with the defendant who was a badmash and a thief. In such a case where the Court itself asked a question the presumption would be that the witness was compelled to answer it. Such a presumption would not exist when the client himself had given instructions to his counsel and the counsel put questions in accordance with those instructions. The statement in such a case would be considered to be voluntary. I dismiss this application.

Emperor

Criminal Misc. Case No. 3 of 1930.
 Decided on 23rd January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 256—Word 'recall' does not mean re-summon.

The word 'recall' in S. 256 does not mean re-summon. After the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, a charge was framed and the Magistrate for reasons recorded in writing required the accused to state forthwith whether they would cross-examine any and what witnesses for prosecution. He further said that the counsel would have opportunity of cross-examining them or never.

Held: that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was correct: 8 A.L.J. 707, Rel. on.

(b) Criminal Trial—Administrative officer cannot merely by reason of his knowledge of important men and their characters, be deprived of jurisdiction as Magistrate.

So long as executive and judicial powers are combined in the same officer, he cannot but have extra-judicial information about men of importance and position in his sub-division and their characters. Merely by reason of such knowledge an administrative officer cannot be deprived of jurisdiction as Magistrate.

Accused's state of mind while deciding upon transfer application by him in another case will be considered if he is ignorant villager who believes that Magistrate's mind is prejudiced against him for such reason and not where he is well versed in litigation.

The state of mind of the accused with whom the Magistrate had grown angry in a case will be taken into consideration while deciding upon an application for transfer made by him in another case if he is an ignorant villager who would be frightened by the Magistrate being angry with him in one case and would believe that in another case the Magistrate would be for that reason prejudiced against him and not where he is well experienced in the art of litigation. [P 740 C 2]

Zahur Ahmad and M. A. Aziz—for Applicants.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The main point desired to be made out for this transfer was that the Magistrate hearing the case acted in conflict with the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C. After the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses a charge was framed and the Magistrate for reasons recorded in writing required the accused to state forthwith whether they would cross-examine any, and, if so, which, of the witnesses for the prosecution. The counsel did not desire to do so. The Magistrate said that counsel would have an opportunity of cross-examining then or never. It is suggested in this Court that the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C., imply that the question as to re-examination should not be put to an accused person until the next date of hearing. There is a very good answer to this argument given by one of the most experienced Judges of this Court. The learned Judge observed in the case of Mula v. Sheoraj Singh (1):

"The word 're-call' is very significant and does not mean re-summon. The grace given of two days for cross-examination was a distinct mistake on the part of the Magistrate and should be avoided in future. If the pleader for the defence who had heard the evidence-in-chief is not prepared to cross-examine then and there after the charge-sheet had been drawn up, he hardly deserves the name and rank of pleader. Cross-examination is intended for testing the accuracy and credibility of the witnesses, not for building up a case for the defence."

After such specific instructions to subordinate Magistrates I am afraid that the eloquence of the learned counsel Mr. Zahur Ahmad has not produced much effect on me.

(1) [1911] 8 A.L.J. 707=11 I.O. 1007=12 Cr. L.J. 471.

The next point made was that the Magistrate had some extra-judicial information about Baqridi. So long as executive and judicial powers are combined in the same officer this could not be prevented. Some Magistrates are honest enough to disclose their knowledge; others, more experienced, would take the precaution of not disclosing it. But as an officer in an administrative charge of a subdivision he has by the nature of his office to know men of importance and position in his subdivision and their characters. Merely by reason of such knowledge, an administrative officer cannot be deprived of jurisdiction as Magistrate.

The third point was that the Magistrate had in one case told the applicant Baqridee to go out of his sight. The reasons given by the Magistrate for making such a verbal order are satisfactory. Baqridee tried to interfere with some settlement at which the parties to a litigation had arrived in the Magistrate's Court. Baqridee desired to stir up mischief and prevent accommodation, and the Magistrate naturally was not best pleased with the sight of him. It is finally argued that the state of the mind of Baqridee should be considered. This would have been considered if Baqridee had been an ignorant villager who would be frightened by the Magistrate being angry with him in one case and would believe that in another case the Magistrate would be for that reason prejudiced against him. Baqridee is not a man of that type. When the Magistrate turned him out he presented to the Magistrate a petition inquiring of him why he had been angry. A man who does that must be a man well experienced in the art of litigation and not a simpleton. I am perfectly certain that Baqridee does believe that he will get justice in this Court. His desire for transfer appears to me to be due to the hope that by the change of Court his point of view may have a greater chance of success. This application is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 850 of 1929, Decided on 1st April 1930.

Penal Code, S. 366 — Judge charging jury under S. 366 and explaining whole section to them need not suggest that if they find girl not compelled by force to leave father's house, they should proceed to consider whether deceitful means were practised upon her and thereby induced to leave father's house.

Seduction is a comprehensive expression and it does not exclude the possibility of deceitful means being used in order that seduction may be practised with effect. Where, therefore, a Judge charges the jury under S. 366, and explains the whole section fully to them, he need not suggest that if they find that the girl was not compelled by force to leave her father's house they should next proceed to consider whether deceitful means had been practised upon her by the accused and whether by such means she was induced to leave her father's house. [P 742 C 1]

Arityunjoy Chatterjee — for Appellants.

M. Banerjee—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellants in this case have been convicted under Ss. 366 and 368, I. P. C., in manner following, that is, appellant 1 Md. Jalaluddin Mandal has been convicted under S. 366 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years and to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or, in default, rigorous imprisonment for six months and appellant 2, Kazi Md. Anwarul Haq, has been convicted under S. 368 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years and to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or, in default rigorous imprisonment for six months. The point taken on behalf of the appellant is a short one and in order to understand Mr. Chatterji's contention, it is necessary to set out at some little length the facts.

It appears that one Tarapada had a widowed daughter, the age of whom, according to the medical evidence, is under 16. Her name is Lilabati. She was married when she was only nine years old but became a widow within a year of her marriage. Since then she had been living at the house of her father under his care and guardianship. The accused Jalaluddin and another person named Badaruddin who was acquitted by the jury were of the same village. It appears that Lilabati complained to her parents of Jalaluddin having cut jokes with her. This was brought to the notice of the village gomasta, as the result of which Jalaluddin was remonstrated with and he kept quiet for some time. But he commenced after an interval cutting jokes at the girl. On the night of the occurrence at about 8 or 9 p. m. Lilabati came out of her father's house to ease herself in a lane between that house and the house of her uncles. The girl's story is that as soon as she had eased herself, the accused Jalaluddin suddenly fell upon her and gagged her mouth with one hand and caught hold of her arms with the other and began to drag her along the lane towards the other end of it which opened into the garden of a doctor named Rasik Sheikh. When she had been dragged by Jalaluddin along the lane a few cubits, the accused Badaruddin joined and both the accused then dragged her to Jalaluddin's house.

There she was pushed into a room and ravished by Jalaluddin on threat of death if she cried. Later on, she was taken by Jalaluddin and Badaruddin to a village called Bamanpara where she was made over to the accused Anwar at about midnight. Anwar was asked to keep the girl in his house. It is further alleged that on the way to Bamanpara the girl was asked by Jalaluddin to say to the police if they would enquire into the matter that she had become a convert to Mahomedanism and would marry Jalaluddin of her own accord in nika form. It appears that the girl was kept in Anwar's house during the night and the following day. On Tuesday night following she was taken outside Anwar's house where she met Jalaluddin and Badaruddin. Jalaluddin told her that the nika marriage had to be postponed and he reminded her again what she was to tell the police if they should arrive at the scene. On Thursday the police recovered the girl from Anwar's house and she went home. On these facts, the accused, namely, the two appellants before us and the said Badaruddin were sent up for trial before the Sessions Court under Ss. 363, 366 and 368, I. P. C. Now, the learned Judge, after explaining the ingredients which had to be proved under S. 363, reminded the jury that the case could only be proceeded with if the jury found affirmatively that the girl was below 16. If, on the contrary, upon the evidence before them they came to the conclusion that the girl was above 16, then there was no case under S. 363 but the jury would have to consider whether the girl had been abducted under S. 366.

It is with reference to the charge under S. 366 that the present complaint by Mr. Chatterjee has been made. He says that the whole case under S. 366, according to the prosecution, was that the girl had been compelled by the accused by force to leave her father's place and that there was no suggestion whatsoever in the evidence on behalf of the prosecution that she had been led to leave her father's house by deceitful means being practised upon her by the accused. Now, it is perfectly true that the prosecution case at first sight would seem to indicate that the case, if it had to be brought under S. 366, was one of the girl being compelled by force to leave her father's house. But the entire case was put before the jury and it is not suggested that in the presentation of the facts relating to the occurrence in question, the learned Judge has not been particularly fair and scrupulous. There is no complaint made on that score. The complaint is that it should have been suggested to the jury that if they found that the girl had not been compelled by force to leave her father's house, then they should next proceed to consider whether deceitful means had been practised upon her by the accused and whether by such means she had been induced to leave her parent's house. The section speaks of force being used and of compulsion under force. The section also speaks of a girl having been seduced to leave her parents house with a view to illicit intercourse. Seduction is a comprehensive expression and as one understands the matter, it certainly does not exclude the possibility of deceitful means being used in order that seduction may be practised with effect.

In that view of the matter, can it be suggested that the learned Judge in his charge to the jury in respect of this particular portion has used words which amount to misdirection. In our opinion, the learned Judge was bound to explain the section to the jury comprehensively and fully after presenting the facts to them for consideration. The jury were the masters of the situation and they were to consider whether under all the circumstances, the accused were guilty under the sections charged. We think there is no substance in Mr. Chatterjee's contention. The appeal, accordingly, fails and must stand dismissed.

SUHWARADY AND PAGE, JJ.

Jabanullah and others—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 390 of 1929,
Decided on 11th December 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Charges to jury must be few, simple and easily capable of explanation to jury—Multitude of charges confuses jury and causes mistrial.

In a case triable by a jury, the charges should be few and simple, and so readily capable of explanation by the Judge that the jury will have no difficulty in appreciating the law which they have to apply to the facts of the case before them. The charge should shortly state the salient points in the case, the evidence adduced in it and the points for determination to the jury with reference to the law. A multitude of charges covering offences subtly distinguished from one another is enough to confuse a jury and cause a mistrial. [P 743 C 1 ; P 744 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C. S. 298—It is the duty of Judge to place facts clearly before jury and explain law with reference to points of determination—Merely reading out head-notes or portions of reported cases is dangerous—Plea of private defence—Merely indicating argument is not sufficient—Law about must be explained.

It is the duty of the Judge in his charge to the jury to place the facts clearly and explain the law with reference to the points for determination. The Judge must tell the jury how they should apply the law to the facts found by them. The practice of reading out head-notes or other portions of the reports of a case is a dangerous practice likely to confuse the jury. But the Judge may tell the jury how to apply the law laid down by the decisions of the High Court to the facts of the particular case.

When the defence takes up a plea of private defence, it is a serious defect if the charge merely indicates the argument but does not direct the jury how they are to apply the law in deciding the guilt or otherwise if they find facts giving rise to the right of private defence. [P 743 C 2]

Camell and Hemendra Kumar Das—for Appellants.

Satindra Nath Mukerjee— for the Crown.

Suhrawardy, J.—In this case the appellants who are 18 in number were tried along with another accused on various charges which are too numerous to mention. They were convicted by the unanimous verdict of the jury and sentenced to different terms of imprisonment by the Judge. The accused who has not appealed before us was sentenced to pay a fine which has been paid. There are various grounds taken before us on behalf of the appellants, but it is necessary to refer to a few of them in order to show that the trial has not been conducted in the way in which it should have been. The first is with regard to the charges framed against the accused. There were 11 charges framed in this case and each accused was charged with not less than eight of the offences covered by some of the charges. The charges were under Ss. 304, 147, 148, 323, 324, 304/149, 304/109, 323/109, 324/109, 304/114 and 147/114. This impressive array of charges is enough to confuse any jury.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused in a body attacked the party of the deceased who were said to have been in possession of the land in dispute, and in the course of the riot accused 1 struck a blow on the head of the deceased which ultimately proved fatal. The case as made out by the evidence was a simple one and it was not necessary to charge the accused with so many offences some of which it is difficult to distinguish from some others. We have on several occasions condemned the practice of having a long series of charges in a case triable by jury as it is likely to confuse them. In the present case the learned Judge has devoted eight pages of his charge to the explanation of the several sections of the Penal Code. Now to refer to some of those charges, the accused have been charged under S. 304/109 and they have also been charged under S. 304/114. There is not enough explanation of the fine distinction between Ss. 109 and 114 with the result that the jury have convicted one of the appellants accused 2 under S. 147/114. The case against that accused is that he is the landlord of the deceased and he took men with him to the place of occurrence and gave order to beat the deceased and his party. On these facts he could either be convicted under S. 147/109 or under S. 147 being member of an unlawful assembly. This indicates that the jury were not able very well to appreciate the law as propounded by the Judge.

Then there is the more serious defect in the charge which it is difficult for us to overlook. The defence argued that if the jury believed that the deceased was dispossessed the day previous to the occurrence and the accused reaped the paddy on the field and stacked it and on the day of occurrence the deceased with a number of men came to snatch the paddy away, the accused had the right of private defence to resist force by force, and the offence they would have committed would be one of trespass but not of rioting. The learned Judge in his charge mentioned this argument on behalf of the defence and then it appears he referred to some decisions of the High Court which are not before us and which we cannot say are how far applicable to the facts of this particular case. He gives no further directions on the question raised by the defence. It is the duty of the Judge to tell the jury how to apply the law to the facts found by them. In a case like this he would be wanting in the proper discharge of his duty to the jury if he places the proper facts to the jury without telling them how they should decide the guilt or otherwise of the accused on the law. In the case of Meher Sardar v. Emperor (1) the practice of referring to reported decisions has been condemned. It is not necessary for me to go so far as to say that there is any bar to the Judge in explaining the charge to the jury what particular view was taken by the highest Court of the land, but he must tell the jury how to apply the law laid down by the decisions of this Court to the facts of the particular case. The learned Judge in the case before us has not helped the jury to apply the law if they found that as a matter of fact the deceased was dispossessed the day previous to the date of occurrence. This seems to me to be a very serious matter because we do not know what view of the facts the jury took. It may be that they believed that the deceased was all along in possession in spite of the rent decree.. It may be that they believed that the landlord who had obtained this decree against the deceased, by getting symbolical possession through the civil Court had succeeded in dislodging the deceased from the land previous to the occurrence or some day previous to it, but still as the accused in a body attacked the deceased and committed murder, they should be convicted of the offences with which they were charged.

We should also refer to the way in which the charge was delivered to the jury. As we have observed the case is not a very difficult one though the evidence is voluminous. The charge should have shortly stated the salient points in the case, the evidence adduced in it and the points for determination to the jury with reference to the law. The learned Judge it seems delivered a very long charge which, though a careful one, may have the effect of confusing the jury as to the way in which the law should be applied to the case. We find that the trial was a very protracted one and entailed a great deal of time and expense but we regret that we have to interfere in this case because of the defects in the charge we have pointed out.

We accordingly set aside the convictions and sentences of the appellants and direct that they be retried. The appellants will remain on the present bail until further orders from the Sessions Judge.

Page, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I think that it is desirable to emphasise one aspect of this case. From an examination of the proceedings it appears that the ultimate cause of this mistrial was the multiplicity of charges upon which the accused were put on their trial. The mere enumeration of the offences with which the accused were charged, and which the jury had to take into consideration, is in itself sufficient in my opinion, to justify this Court in holding that a summing up such as that delivered by the learned Judge was bound to confuse the minds of the jury as to the issues which they had to determine before they could bring in a verdict in respect of the accused or any of them. It is of the utmost importance that proceedings in a criminal trial should be as simple as possible, and that the Judge and the jury should not be compelled to wade through a morass of confused and varied charges. The practice in the moffusil appears to be to lump together and to try the accused upon as many charges as the ingenuity of those whose duty it is to frame them can devise. This practice has repeatedly been condemned, and for the reason that where an accused person is put upon his trial the charges against him should be so clear and so readily capable of explanation by the trial Judge that the jury will have no difficulty in appreciating the law which they have to apply to the facts of the case before them. In this case the nature of charges against the accused has been referred to by my learned brother, and the trial Judge in his summing up proceeded apparently to give an exposition of the law of inordinate length upon each of these intricate and confused charges.

Having regard to the nature of the charges and the manner in which the learned Judge endeavoured to explain their meaning I do not believe that the jury could have understood the law which was to be applied to the facts of the very simple case before them. It would be a much better practice, I think, that those responsible for framing charges against an accused person should make them not as numerous, but as few, as possible, for such a course would obviate what otherwise must often result in a misunderstanding of the law on the part of the jury. The learned Judge in this case, however, notwithstanding his lengthy exposition of the law does not appear adequately to have discriminated between the different charges preferred against the accused, and not content with leaving to the jury all these charges with an insufficient explanation of their meaning, the learned Judge, after expounding what he himself stated to be an intricate matter of law relating to the right of private defence, proceeded to read to the jury head notes of a number of cases decided in this Court with a view apparently to enable the jury the better to appreciate the meaning of the doctrine of the right of private defence in relation to the particular facts of the case before them. Of course, it is often useful to illustrate the meaning of a legal doctrine by relevant example culled from the books or stated by the learned Judge in his own words, but the practice of reading out head notes or other portions of the report of a case not before them to the members of the jury is a dangerous practice which is to be discouraged as more likely to mystify than enlighten the jurors. In the present case the effect of so doing must have been to plunge the facts of the case still more deeply into a legal morass, and make confusion worse confounded.

The result is that the time spent upon this case has been wasted, and it is to be hoped that when the retrial takes place this simple case will be placed before the jury in a manner and in a proceeding where the issues before them are clearly defined and the jury need have no difficulty in applying their minds to the facts of the case in order to ascertain whether the accused are guilty or not guilty of the charges which are framed against them.

S. C. Talukdar and Radhikaranjan Guha—for Complainant.

C. C. Ghose, J. — In appeal 2 of 1930 the appellant is one Mohiuddin Ahmed and in appeal 3 of 1930 the appellant is one Hemayetuddin Mukhtear. They have been found guilty by the jury in the proportion of 3 to 2 in manner following: the accused Mohiuddin and the accused Hemayetuddin have both been found guilty under S. 120-B read with S. 366, I. P. C., the accused Mohiuddin guilty under Ss. 366 and 376, I. P. C. and the accused Hemayetuddin guilty under S. 366/114 I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge, agreeing with the verdict of the jury, has convicted both the accused under the sections referred to above and he has sentenced them as follows: the accused Mohiuddin to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of two years on each of the three charges, namely under Ss. 366 and 376 (two counts) and to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of 18 months under Ss. 120-B/366, I. P. C., the sentences to run concurrently: the accused Hemayetuddin to rigorous imprisonment for a period of 18 months on each charge under Ss. 120-B/366 and 366/114, I. P. C., the sentences to run concurrently.

Against this conviction and sentence the above appeals have been preferred to this Court. They have been separately argued before us by Mr. Bagram and Mr. Mingail on behalf of the accused Mohiuddin and by Mr. Gregory on behalf of the accused Hemayetuddin and the main point that has been argued in these appeals is that the selection and empanelment of the jury in this case were irregular and unwarranted by law. Various other points were taken and in order to understand these other points, which will be indicated later on, it is necessary to set out the facts shortly.

Babu Charu Chandra Roy is a pleader at present, practising at Barisal. From September 1928 to 22nd December 1928 he used to occupy a house at Barisal which was next door to the house of a Deputy Magistrate named Moulvi Panaulla. With him were his wife and his daughter named Sovana, an unmarried girl aged about 13 years and odd months. The adjoining house which was occupied as stated above by Moulvi Panaulla, was only a few cubits off. Moulvi Panaulla had with him his wife named Latifa, and there used to live in Moulvi Panaulla's house the accused Mohiuddin who is said to be a cousin of Latifa. It is stated that Latifa, who is a young lady aged about 16 or 17 years, used to come to Babu Charu Chandra Roy's house and visit the latter's wife and daughter and Sovana used to visit Latifa at the latter's house. The ladies of the two houses apparently became very friendly and Sovana was introduced by Latifa to Mohiuddin and to one Golapjan who is Moulvi Panaulla's sister-in-law. On one occasion Mohiuddin, Latifa and Golapjan took Sovana to see an exhibition which was being held in Barisal. On two other occasions these four persons went to a local theatre in the evenings, all four of them going in the same carriage. They returned from the theatre shortly after midnight. It is said that on all these occasions Sovana had her mother's permission to go with Mohiuddin and his party. Be that as it may, Mohiuddin and Sovana fell in love with each other and there followed exchange of letters between Sovana and Mohiuddin. These letters, at any rate, a large number of them, are exhibits in this case and have been marked Z. The letters written by Sovana are addressed "Praner Mohi," "Praner Swami" and in such like terms and they breathe ardent and passionate love. Some of these letters ultimately came to the knowledge of Sovana's father: but before that he had apparently noticed that Mohiuddin was paying undesirable attentions to his daughter Sovana. He thereupon brought the matter to the notice of Moulvi Panaullah and asked him to send Mohiuddin away.

This, however, Moulvi Panaullah was for various reasons, not in a position to agree to; and Babu Charu Chandra Roy thereupon removed to a house, a short distance away, near the house of one Bazlur Rahaman, River Police Inspector in Barisal. Meanwhile Mohiuddin used to come and peep through a window into the inner apartments of Charu Babu's house and he renewed sending letters to Sovana through Bazlur Rahman's servant Hariz. It appears Mohiuddin on one occasion sent a gold ring to Sovana which, however, was made over by Sovana to her mother who again made it over to Charu Babu. This fact was brought to the notice of Moulvi Panaulla and the latter eventually i. e., by the middle of April 1929, sent Mohiuddin away to his home in Kuligram in the District of Rangpur. On 30th April 1929 Sovana's father had to leave Barisal on urgent professional work and Sovana and her mother stayed in Barisal. The accused Mohiuddin had returned meanwhile to Barisal and it is alleged that he kidnapped and abducted Sovana on the night of 30th April 1929. At noon on that date Sovana got a letter from Mohiuddin through Hariz saying that he would take her away that night and asking her to be ready. This letter is not forthcoming and a detailed account of how it was got hold of and burnt by the accused Hemayetuddin is given by the witness Sisir Kumar Guha.

To continue the story. Sovana describes how she awoke on hearing a noise near her window and how she came out after opening the door of her room. She apparently occupied the room in question by herself. Mohiuddin joined her and there was also a young man named Khaleq. They, i. e. Mohiuddin and Khaleq took her to the house of a constable named Gani. At Gani's house there was present, apparently by previous arrangement the appellant Hemayetuddin. The three, i. e., Mohiuddin, Hemayetuddin and Khaleq left Sovana in the constable's house and went to buy tickets for the steamer journey to Chandpur. Thereafter Mohiuddin and Khaleq came back and took Sovana to the steamer ghat, Hemayetuddin accompanying the party to the steamer ghat. Mohiuddin and Khaleq and Sovana went to Chandpur by steamer. At Chandpur they got down from the steamer and went by boat to the house of Khaleq's aunt. Mohiuddin and Sovana got into one boat and Khaleq into another. It is alleged that Mohiuddin ravished Sovana in the boat. After a short rest at Chandpur, Mohiuddin and Sovana proceeded to Goalundo by steamer. From Goalundo, they went by train to Niahati and thence to Bandel and Howrah. They then went to Balasore and from Balasore to Waltair and Vizagapatam. From Vizagapatam they went to Hyderabad and thence to Bombay. It is not denied that while Mohiuddin and Sovana were together they had sexual intercourse. The father Charu Babu returned to Barisal several weeks after at the conclusion of his professional business and complained before the Magistrate. We will not pause to comment on the extraordinary conduct of the father and we would fain hope that such conduct is rare. However, there was a full and complete investigation by the police with the result that the two accused before us were committed on 30th September 1929 to take their trial in the Sessions Court on the charges mentioned above.

I will deal with the question of the constitution of the jury in a few moments but before I do so I desire to say at once that I have perused and reperused the learned Sessions Judge's charge to the jury and I am satisfied that it is an eminently fair, impartial and dispassionate summing up of the whole case and that everything that could be urged in favour of the accused has been placed before the jury in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. I have listened with very great care to the earnest and vigorous addresses of learned counsel for the two accused; I was then of opinion and I am still of opinion that many of their points would only be admissible if we were hearing an appeal on facts; that is not the position with reference to these appeals at present and our powers of interference with the verdict of the jury are strictly limited and can only arise if the accused succeed in showing that there are misdirections in the learned Judge's charge to the jury.

Now, as regards the question of the constitution of the jury. The accused have raised this question in an affidavit which was put in at the time of the admission of these appeals; they have also taken this point in their grounds of appeal. That affidavit must have been allowed to be put in per incuriam. The deponent of the affidavit does not say that he knows the English language or he understands the same; indeed, there is internal evidence in the affidavit itself that he does not know English; in these circumstances, the statements in the affidavit in question cannot be relied upon for the purposes of this judgment and we have accordingly excluded the same from our consideration.

Mr. Mingail stated before us that he was one of the counsel who appeared before the learned Sessions Judge on behalf of the accused Mohiuddin and that he was in a position to state before us what happened in the Court below at the time of the empanelment of the jury. The matter is of very great importance and we have allowed Mr. Mingail to make a statement from his place at the Bar. Mr. Mingail stated as follows :

"Fifteen jurors attended, Charges were read out and the pleas of the accused taken. Before the selection of the jury actually commenced, the learned Public Prosecutor observed to the Court that he would rather have a jury composed of English-knowing people, inasmuch as some of the documents were in English and they would need to be shown to the jury. The learned Judge agreed to this and on asking me, I said that that course would certainly be desirable from my point of view. One juror was then called. The learned Public Prosecutor objected to this juror being empanelled on the ground that he did not know English, basing his objection on S. 278, Cl. (g), Criminal P. C. I protested against this objection maintaining that it could not be sustained under that section, as Cl. (g) provided that the objection could only be made if the juror neither understood English nor the language into which it was interpreted. The learned Judge did not pass any order on this at the time. He called out the name of another juror. He said he knew English and he was empanelled. He then called out the names of all the remaining jurors and each one was asked, if he knew or could read English. Some said they knew a little, some said they did not know at all. They were all made to sit in the body of the Court. The learned Judge then called out four names from amongst those who were sitting in the body of the Court and put them in the jury box. I believe that the four other jurors who were selected were taken out of those who had said that they knew English."

It is important in this connexion to look into the order-sheet of the learned Sessions Judge.

The learned Sessions Judge in his order-sheet notes as follows :

"When the Court began the selection of the jurors, the learned Public Prosecutor pointed out that there were certain documents in English the identity of the handwriting of which was a fact in issue. The prosecution purpose to examine a handwriting expert, and the jury have to decide on such a question of fact, with the assistance of the evidence of such a witness. It was suggested by the learned Public Prosecutor, and agreed to by the Court, and to the best of my belief by learned counsel for accused, that it was desirable that the jurors should be able to read English. Amongst the jurors present were a number who could do so. The learned Public Prosecutor actually objected to an individual jurymen on the ground that he was unable to read English, basing his objection on S. 278 (g), Criminal P. C. This was objected to by learned counsel for the accused, and the Court agreed with his view that objection on these grounds could not be raised under that section. That is as far as the defence objection went, and it was agreed to by the Court, who proceeded to choose the jury from amongst those able to read English."

"The defence objected against three jurors individually. One is a Head Master of a School at Sadar, and was said to have stayed with a Hindu pleader of the local Bar. This objection was allowed. Another was said to have had a discussion on the case with another Hindu pleader; this objection was considered distinctly weak and was disallowed; the case has been discussed throughout the District, and there are no grounds for assailing the impartiality of this juror even if the facts are as alleged. He comes from the mofussil. A third objection was allowed on the ground that the juror was concerned in a dispute over a hat in which the accused was also concerned. Against the other four jurors selected, no objection was raised, and no objection was raised against the constitution of the jury as a whole. These remarks are considered a necessary part of the order-sheet in view of the petition submitted after the jury had been sworn and the case opened for the Crown. I am satisfied that the accused have been in no way prejudiced."

In my opinion, there is no substance in the argument which was sought to be advanced before us that there was no lottery. The record shows that there was a lottery; the only thing that happened was that the Judge proceeded to choose the jury from amongst those able to read English. In doing what he did, the learned Judge did not in my opinion exceed the inherent powers that he had in ensuring a fair trial or infringe in any way the provisions of S. 278, Criminal P. C. It is really not necessary to go to the last clause of S. 278, Criminal P. C., for authority for the procedure adopted by the learned

Judge. As far as I can make out, what was done could not possibly raise any question of jurisdiction and it was done with the entire concurrence of learned counsel for the accused. I deprecate most strongly the attempt to give a communal complexion to the affair in the grounds of appeal in this Court. The learned Sessions Judge Mr. Stork cannot be accused of any bias and the attempt in this Court by means of the said affidavit is incompatible with one's notion of what we are used to in this Court. Each case must depend upon its own facts and I am unable to say that on the facts of this case the learned Judge's action was in any way irregular or contrary to law. I am therefore of opinion that this point about the constitution of the jury which has been urged by both the accused must fail.

On behalf of the accused Mohiuddin grounds 3, 6, 9, 10 and ground 4 relating to the question of Sovana's age have been urged before us. Ground 3 relates to Sovana's letters. This ground is inseparably connected with the question of Sovana's age on 30th April when she was taken away by Mohiuddin and during the month of May and until she was recovered. Now the question of Sovana's age is of course all important having regard to the charge under S. 366 and it is dealt with in paras. 7-14 of the learned Judge's charge to the jury. All the material evidence on record was placed by the learned Judge before the jury; the question was viewed in the light of the medical evidence and from various angles and it is difficult to suggest that this portion of the learned Judge's charge suffers either from under-statement or over-statement. A great deal of Mr. Bagram's forensic wrath was centred on Ex. 26 for no earthly reason whatsoever. The jury were left a free hand; the jury were told that it was for them to consider whether the document in question which the prosecution claimed was a horoscope had been manufactured for the purposes of this case and whether Gharu Babu's word that it was a horoscope written by him and containing the dates of the births of his several children could be accepted. What more the learned Judge was to do or could have done has not been made clear to us. Nothing more need be said about this point.

On the charge under S. 366 and 376, as indicated above the question of Sovana's age was very material. If in fact Sovana was less than 14 years of age although she had been love-smitten and could write the letters referred to above, her consent to the acts referred to in Ss. 366 and 376, I. P. C., was in law immaterial; and this question has been brought out prominently in the learned Judge's charge to the jury. The whole of Sovana's present story is referred to in paras. 17-22 in the learned Judge's charge to the jury at very great length and the jury were definitely asked to come to a conclusion having regard to Sovana's letters whether Sovana actually consented to go away with Mohiuddin. Here again the learned Judge has been scrupulously fair to the accused. The question of age and her consent, if any, have an important bearing on the question of the charge under S. 376, I. P. C., and this was dwelt upon by the learned Judge. He points out all the circumstances that could be urged on behalf of the accused, such as Sovana's previous relationship with Mohiuddin, the visits to the theatre, the presentation of the ring and the exchange of letters. The learned Judge goes on to discuss the conduct of Sovana's father up to 31st May 1929 and he has said enough from which the jury could, if they had liked, have drawn an inference that Sovana's father was supremely indifferent and that he gave implied consent to what happened. Lastly there was the question as to whether a marriage has been celebrated between Mohiuddin and Sovana. On this point too, the learned Judge's summing up was adequate, clear and exhaustive.

There remains the question of the withholding of certain witnesses by the prosecution. Now it may be said at once that para. 4 of the learned Judge's charge dealing with this point may at first sight be open to certain verbal criticism; but when the facts are gone into and the evidence perused, one must come to the conclusion that there is nothing in that paragraph to which any objection can be sustained in law. In my opinion the jury were given proper directions and no prejudice to the accused has been shown to our satisfaction.

Now, as regards the accused Hemayetuddin in addition to the grounds referred to above, grounds 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 in his grounds of appeal were urged. The accused Hemayetuddin was charged with having abetted Mohiuddin in the commission of the offence of kidnapping by taking part in the removal of the girl immediately after she was taken out of her father's house and by procuring steamer tickets for them. The learned Judge in paras. 60-62 has referred to the matter at very considerable length, leaving to the jury to determine for themselves whether or not compulsion was being continuously brought to bear on Sovana in order to prevent her from returning while she had an opportunity. The threat to publish to the world Sovana's letters and thereby bring disgrace on her, was that not compulsion? However, the matter was for the jury and I can see nothing in the charge of the learned Judge to which any exception can be taken by anyone acquainted with the facts. Indeed this portion of the charge was distinctly in favour of the accused Hemayetuddin. Then as regards the charge of conspiracy there was an abundance of material on the record to which the jury's attention has to be directed and the learned Judge did it in an extremely careful and satisfactory manner. The grounds taken on behalf of the accused Hemayetuddin have no substance and must be negatived.

On the question of sentence I am unable to reduce the sentence in Mohiuddin's case. I am fully aware that the crime in respect of which Mohiuddin has been convicted would have been impossible, were it not for the negligence, to put it very mildly, of Sovana's parents but I cannot take that fact into consideration for a further reduction of the sentence, because the learned Judge in passing the sentence he did has already taken this and various other circumstances into his consideration.

As regards Hemayetuddin, the record shows that he has been throughout the most resourceful ally of Mohiuddin and I fail to find anything on the record which can induce me to order a further reduction in the sentence passed on him. In his case too, the learned Judge has passed a moderate sentence.

The result is that both these appeals will stand dismissed. The accused who are on bail must surrender to their bail bonds and serve out the remainder of the sentences imposed on them.

Emperor

Criminal Appeal No. 486 of 1929, Decided on 15th January 1930, against order of Offg. Addl. Sess. Judge, Faridpur, D/- 14th June 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Defence — Nature of defence to be ascertained from statements of accused persons and trend of cross-examination of prosecution witnesses.

The nature of the defence is to be ascertained not only from the statements of the accused persons themselves, but also from the trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and from the arguments of the accused's pleader at the close of the trial.

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 297 and 299—Plea of private right of defence could have been put forward as disclosed from cross-examination of prosecution witnesses but not put forward—Charge to jury expressly calling upon jury not to consider plea of private right of defence amounts to misdirection—Duty of Court explained.

It was clear from the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses that occurrence in connexion with which the accused were tried on the charge of rioting attended by murder of one of the opposite party, took place in consequence of the complainant and his party coming to the land with a large body of armed men and having attempted to forcibly cut the paddy grown by the accused. In his charge to the jury as the plea of right of private defence was not expressly raised by the defence counsel, the Judge after discussing evidence regarding possession and actual occurrence at considerable length expressed himself in following terms with regard to the plea of right of private defence: "The accused have not set up right of private defence, in answer to the charge against them, and there are not also circumstances appearing upon the evidence in the case justifying the exercise of right. The learned prosecutor had argued the matter by way of anticipation but as it is not necessary for you to consider in this case, I do not think it necessary to place the law on the subject before you."

Held: that the charge to the jury amounted to misdirection which occasioned failure of justice in the sense that it has the effect of depriving the accused of their undoubted right to have the question of the existence of the right of private defence and other questions of fact arising therefrom decided by the jury;

Held further: that it ought to have been left to the jury to decide on a consideration of evidence as a whole, whether the existence of the right of private defence had or had not been established and if so what would be the effect of the existence of that right on the question of the liability of the various accused persons in respect of the charges on which they had been tried. [P 750 C 2; P 751 C 1, 2]

S. G. Taluqdar and Jyotish Chandra Guha—for Accused:

Khundkar and Anil Chandra Ray Chowdhury—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This case arises out of a riot that is said to have taken place over the cutting of paddy, in the course of which one of the members of the complainant's party was killed.

At the trial both sides claimed to have been in possession of the land and to have grown the disputed crop, and each party alleged that the members of the other party had been the aggressors.

In his charge to the jury the learned Additional Sessions Judge discussed the evidence regarding possession, and the evidence regarding the details of the actual occurrence at considerable length, and he expressly left these matters to the decision of the jury.

As regards the question of the right of private defence, however, the Judge expressed himself in the following terms:

"The accused have not set up the right of private defence in answer to the charge against them, and there are not also circumstances appearing upon the evidence in the case justifying the exercise of that right. The learned Public Prosecutor had argued the matter by way of anticipation, but as it is not necessary for you to consider in this case, I do not think it necessary to place the law on the subject before you."

This, in our opinion, amounted to a misdirection such as makes it necessary that the case should be sent back for retrial.

It is true that none of the accused in their statements in Court, expressly claimed to have grown the disputed crop or gave their own version of the occurrence or put forward the plea that they had asked in the exercise of the right of private defence; most of them merely stated that they were innocent and that false evidence had been given against them out of enmity, while some of them said that they had been elsewhere at the time of occurrence. The nature of the defence is, however, to be ascertained not only from the statements of the accused persons themselves, but also from the trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and from the arguments of the accuseds' pleader at the close of the trial. To hold otherwise would be to run the risk of grave injustice being done in certain classes of cases, for it is a matter of common experience that ignorant people who have been directly or indirectly concerned in causing a man's death will seldom admit that they have been so concerned, even though death may have been caused in the lawful exercise of the right of private defence. Now it is clear from the trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses in the present case, that the defence sought to be set up by the accuseds' pleader was that the alleged delivery of possession to Bani Kanta Chakravarti and his brothers in execution of a decree of the civil Court, had never actually taken place, that the disputed crop had been grown by the accused Mazaffar and others of his party, and that the occurrence had taken place not in the manner alleged by the prosecution, but in consequence of the complainant and his party having come to the land with a large body of armed men and having attempted to cut the paddy by force. The case for the defence as put forward by the accuseds' pleader in the course of his argument has nowhere been clearly stated in the charge to the jury, but it would appear from various passages in the charge that it was of the nature indicated above, and it is hardly conceivable that the accuseds' pleader would not have pursued his argument to its logical conclusion, and would not have expressly raised the plea of private defence.

The mere fact of this plea having been so raised, would not, however, have made it incumbent on the Judge to place this aspect of the matter before the jury, unless there was some evidence in support of the plea.

There is, however, some such evidence on the record, not only as regards the question of possession but also as regards the nature of the actual occurrence, (there is, for example, the deposition of prosecution witness Kamini Kumar Das before the committing Magistrate), and it ought in our opinion, to have been left to the jury to decide on a consideration of the evidence as a whole, whether the existence of the right of private defence had or had not been established, and if so, what would be the effect of the existence of that right on the question of the liability of the various accused persons in respect of the charges on which they had been tried.

The only question that remains to be considered is whether the misdirection referred to above, has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In our opinion it has, in the sense that it has had the effect of depriving the accused of their undoubted right to have the question of the existence of the right of private defence, and the other questions of fact arising therefrom, decided by the jury.

In this view of the matter, the convictions and sentences must be set aside, and the case must go back for retrial.

v.

Derajtulla Sheikh and others — Accused.

Death Ref. 4 and Criminal Appeal No. 230 of 1929, Decided on 18th December 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Faridpur, D/- 24th September 1929.

* Criminal P. C., S. 303—Judge can question jury only to ascertain verdict and for no other purpose.

The object of S. 303 is merely to enable the Court to ascertain whether the jury intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty. For no other purpose is a Judge entitled to interrogate the jury under S. 303 after they have given their verdict. A Judge is not entitled to examine the jurors as to the grounds upon which they have based their verdict.

[P 752 C 1]

B. C. Chatterjee and Nurul Haq—for Accused.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Page, J.—In this case the three appellants were charged with the offence of murder under S 302, I. P. C. The accused Derajtulla was unanimously found guilty, and the accused Erfan and Surat were found guilty by a majority of 7 to 2. The learned Sessions Judge, agreeing with the verdict of the jury in the case of each of the accused, sentenced Derajtulla to death and Erfan and Surat to transportation for life. The three accused have now appealed against their conviction and respective sentences to this Court. It is expedient, I think, that we should say something about the action of the learned Sessions Judge in taking the verdict of the jury. The jury having brought in a clean and clear verdict of guilty as against the accused, the learned Judge proceeded to examine the jurors, apparently with the object of ascertaining the ground upon which their verdict was based, in the following manner :

Q. Have you believed the evidence of Anath and Ajmal?

A. We are unanimous in believing the evidence of Anath. We have believed the evidence of Ajmal by a majority of 7 to 2.

In our opinion such a question the learned Judge was not permitted by law to ask. S. 303, Criminal P. C., provides suitable procedure, where the answer of the jury to the question put to them as to whether an accused person is guilty or not guilty is so vague and uncertain that in order to ascertain whether the jury intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty it is necessary to ask supplementary questions. The object of S. 303 is merely to enable the Court to ascertain whether the jury intended to bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty, and for no other purpose, in our opinion, is a learned Judge entitled to interrogate the jury under S. 303 after they have given their verdict. In this case the verdict of the jury was clear and precise, but for some reason or other the learned Judge took upon himself to examine the jurors with a view to ascertain whether their verdict was based upon the evidence of one or other or both of two important witnesses who had been called for the Crown. Such an interrogatory, in our opinion, the learned Judge was not permitted by law to administer, and the course taken by him has repeatedly been condemned by this Court, which has laid down that a Judge is not entitled to examine the jurors as to the grounds upon which they have based their verdict.

Now, the fact that a murder was committed on the night of 5th March 1929 is not and cannot be challenged. By a deodar tree at the entrance to a path leading through a bamboo jungle the trunk of the body of Sushil Bhaduri was discovered about 10-30 on the night of 5th March 1929; but the head had been severed from the trunk by some sharp and heavy weapon and has never been found. Where it is, and what happened to it, nobody knows, and it is idle to speculate. The question to be determined in this case is whether the accused or any of them took part in the murder of Sushil Bhaduri. (After discussing the evidence in the case, his Lordship concluded.) In these circumstances, in our opinion, the case on behalf of the Crown was so strong that the only verdict which a jury of reasonable men would be justified in returning was one of guilty of wilful murder under S. 302 against each of the accused.

With regard to the sentences that ought to be imposed upon the accused it is enough to say that the perpetrators of a crime so callous and brutal as the murder of Sushil Kumar Bhaduri rendered each of them amenable to the extreme penalty of the law. The sentence of death passed upon Derajtulla Sheik is confirmed, and if a like sentence had been passed upon Erfan and Surat we should not have been disposed to disturb it. The learned Sessions Judge, however, for three reasons (none of which we think should have weighed with him in considering the sentence), has sentenced Erfan Sardar and Surat Sardar to transportation for life, and in all the circumstances we do not feel it necessary to alter that sentence which will stand.

The appeal, therefore, of all the appellants is dismissed, the sentence of death passed upon Derajtulla Sheikh is confirmed, and that of transportation for life upon Erfan Sardar and Surat Sardar will also stand.

Ramendra Chandra Roy, Amicus curiae.

C. C. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by the Government of Assam and it arises out of the following circumstances :

On 9th March 1929, at about 10 p. m. two constables of Jorhat Town Police in the District of Sibsagar, named Phanidhar Aham and Bibhu Ram Chutia, while on duty were passing along the Trunk Road. They saw accused 1, Chauthmall making water by the side of the road. The constable thereupon went up to the said accused and told him that he had committed an offence punishable under the Police Act and asked for his name. The accused refused to give his name and thereupon the constable, Phanidhar, gave him a piece of paper and pencil and asked him to write his name thereon. The accused having refused to do that either, the constables arrested the accused by seizing his two hands. The constables thereafter asked the accused to go with them to the thana and he having refused to go to the thana, the constables tried to take him by force. It is said that thereupon Chauthmall called out to his friends who with the accused 2 came up, assaulted the constables and rescued accused 1 from their custody. The accused were thereafter placed on their trial before the Magistrate, First Class, Jorhat under Ss. 147 (rioting), 225-B (escaping from lawful custody) and 353 (assaulting a public servant), I. P. C. The trying Magistrate by his order dated 4th July 1929, negatived the case against the accused under S. 147. He, however, was of opinion that the accused had committed the offences punishable under sections 225-B and 353, I. P. C., and he thereupon convicted them under those sections and sentenced them to pay certain fines. The accused then preferred an appeal to the learned Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts and that officer by his judgment and order dated 23rd September acquitted both the accused, holding that 'making water' was not included within the expression 'commits nuisance by easing himself' as used in Cl. 7, S. 34, Act 5 of 1861. Now, having regard to the view which we have taken it is only right and proper that we should set out herein a short extract from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, Mr. Patterson, dealing with this question. The Sessions Judge observes as follows :

"The act in respect of which Chauthmall was arrested by the constable was that of making water by the side of the public road, and the only point that has been discussed before me on appeal is whether this was, or was not an offence under S. 34, Act 5 of 1861. Under that section, a person who 'commits nuisance by easing himself' is under certain circumstances, liable to punishment, and may be arrested without a warrant by any police officer in whose view the offence is committed. The section is, however, silent as to whether, 'making water,' in similar circumstances is an offence or not. The question is, therefore, whether the act of making water is, or is not covered by the term 'easing himself.' I am definitely of opinion that it is not covered thereby. 'Easing oneself' means, 'evacuating the bowels,' whereas 'making water' means 'evacuating the bladder.' The two things are quite distinct, and there are obvious reasons why the former has in certain circumstances, been made a cognizable offence under the Police Act, while the latter has not been declared to be punishable and cognizable under that Act though it might be, and often is, declared so to be under by-laws framed by the local authorities."

It is argued on behalf of the Local Government in this appeal that the learned Judge's construction of the expression referred to above is much too narrow and is indeed wrong in law and that such construction has occasioned a failure of justice. The accused did not appear by an advocate before us but we invited Mr. Ramendra Chandra Roy to assist us in this matter as an amicus curiae. Mr. Roy has contended that the learned Sessions Judge's construction is by no means to be summarily rejected and has further argued that on the evidence on record there is no case for action under S. 34, Police Act, inasmuch as there is no evidence of any obstruction, inconvenience, annoyance, risk, danger of damage, or resistance of passengers. He has, therefore, submitted that it was not lawful in the circumstances for the constables to take accused 1 into custody without a warrant. Now the expression 'easing one-

'self' means 'relieving nature' and the expression 'relieving nature' means 'evacuating the bladder or bowels': (see Fowler's Concise Oxford Dictionary); the underlying idea being that of relief or comfort to one's person or freedom from strain. If that is so, then it is difficult to hold that 'making water' is not within the ambit of the expression "easing oneself." I am not unaware that in Murray's Oxford Dictionary the expression 'to ease nature' is put down as being absolute but equivalent to the expression 'to ease oneself' which again is put down as equivalent to 'relieve the bowels.' The word 'ease' is of French origin and the word 'nature' is of Latin origin; and going by the etymological meaning of the word 'nature' it would include the bowels as well as the bladder. In an ancient book called Potter's Antiquities of Greece (1715) the expression occurs "Whosoever easeth nature in Appollo's Temple shall be indicted." Having regard to the context in which it appears, the expression would include 'evacuating the bladder as well as the bowels.' It is, however, not necessary for us to go into the lexicographical meaning of the expression in older days. It is sufficient to observe that the expression in modern times means what has been given in Fowler's Oxford Dictionary. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge in the view he has taken has placed an unduly narrow construction on the expression and to that extent he is wrong in law.

The question, however, arises whether on the evidence on record this is a fit and proper case for interference by this Court with an order of acquittal. We, have, therefore, made ourselves acquainted with the entire record and we are satisfied that in this case there is no evidence on record of any annoyance or inconvenience caused to anybody, having regard to the hour of the occurrence alleged. Therefore, on the facts, we are of opinion that this is not a fit and proper case for interference with an order of acquittal. The result therefore is that the present appeal stands dismissed on the facts, it being held that the learned Judge's constructions of the expression in Cl. 7; S. 34, Act 5 of 1861 is wrong.

The accused who are on bail will be discharged from their bail bonds forthwith.

Criminal Revn. No. 670 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 606 of 1929, Decided on 22nd January 1930 from decision of Sessions Judge, Madura, in Criminal Appeal No. 65 of 1928.

* Penal Code, Ss. 161 and 116—Patient ordered to be discharged but still in hospital—Bribe offered to doctor in charge but not accepted—Doctor is not "functus officii" and offence falls under Ss. 161 and 116.

Where the doctor in charge of a Government hospital has already decided to discharge a patient but that patient is still in the hospital he cannot be regarded to be functus officii as his duties and responsibilities to the patient still remain and an offer of a bribe to him to retain the patient for a longer period is an offence under S. 161 and the refusal of the bribe brings the case under illustration (a), S. 113: A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 753, Dist.

[P 753 C 2]

V. I. Ethiraj and S. K. Ahmed Meeran—for Petitioner.

K. S. Vasudevan—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner was convicted under Ss. 161 and 116, I. P. C. of abetment of bribery by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madura and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 300 and this conviction and sentence were confirmed on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Madura. The present petition is by the accused to have the conviction and sentence set aside.

The learned advocate for the petitioner argued in the first instance that of the witnesses who spoke to the petitioner's act only one had actually seen the offer of the money and the others had only seen him in Col. Harley's bungalow, that Col. Harley himself was unable to identify the petitioner and that his description of the petitioner as a revenue inspector was belated and that the whole case was due to the influence of the petitioner's enemies who were friends of Col. Harley. This is an argument purely upon the evidence in the case and all these aspects of the evidence have been considered by both the Courts below. They have accepted the evidence and I am not in a position to say that their conclusion is incorrect, that the petitioner went to the house of Col. Harley, P. W. 1 and there offered him money to induce him to retain in hospital as an inpatient a brother of the petitioner who had been injured in a fracas with the object, no doubt, of making out that the injury caused was grievous hurt and not simple hurt. With these conclusions, I agree.

The learned advocate then raised the point that the facts established do not amount to an offence under S. 161 read with S. 116; and for this he relied upon the decision in In re, Venkatarama Naidu (1). In that case a Police Inspector had passed orders rejecting the application of Venkatarama Naidu to be enlisted as a police-man. After he had rejected this application, Venkatarama Naidu offered Rs. 5 to the Inspector of Police to take him. The Bench held the Inspector had become functus officii, in other words, his official duties had become spent so far as accepting Venkatarama Naidu as a police-man was concerned and that therefore according to decisions of Indian Courts there could no longer be in that matter any bribery of a public servant or abetment of such bribery. In my opinion that decision does not apply to the facts of this case. If I held that the facts were very similar, I should, as at present inclined, have thought it my duty to refer the question to a Bench because in my opinion the point requires reconsideration. But the facts of the two cases are entirely dissimilar. In this case Col. Harley was not functus officii as his duties and responsibilities to the patient still in the hospital were by no means over. It is true, that he had decided or proposed to discharge him the next day but the man was not discharged and if Col. Harley could have been illegally influenced it would still have been possible for him by reason of that influence to detain the patient further in the hospital than he was bound to do according to his official duties. That fact distinguishes this case from the facts of the decision relied upon. In my opinion the facts proved clearly come within S. 161 as they amount to an offer of illegal gratification to a public servant as a motive or reward for showing favour to a patient in the discharge of that public servant's official duties. As the offence was not completed by reason of the refusal of the offered bribe, the case comes strictly within Illus. (a), S. 116, I. P. C. and is covered by it.

The petition must be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 789 of 1929 and Crim. Revn. Petn. No. 710 of 1929, Decided on 20th January 1930.

(a) Penal Code, S. 424—Concealment by debtors or removal by others of property to avoid attachment with dishonest intention is offence.

Concealment of property by debtors or taking away of property by others to avoid its attachment if done with a dishonest intention is an offence under S. 424. [P 756 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 43 — Attachment of cattle securely tied — Actual contact is not necessary—Mere declaration by Court officer of intention to attach is enough.

Actual seizure of moveables to be attached does not always require physical contact but this depends upon the particular fact.

Where the goods to be seized were cattle securely tied by ropes so that they could not run away of their own accord.

Held: that it was sufficient for the officer of the Court to go sufficiently near the cattle and declare to others his intention to attach the cattle: 27 Mad. 346, Appr. [P 756 C 2]

C. Rama Rao—for Petitioner.

K. S. Vasudevan—for Respondents.

Order.—Four persons were accused before the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Amalapur for offences under Ss. 424 and 379, I. P. C. The facts alleged against them were that in execution of a decree obtained by P. W. 2 against one P. Subbaraju, since deceased, the decree-holder accompanied by an amin of the Munsiff's Court P. W. 1 went to attach cattle belonging to the estate of the deceased, and that after the amin had attached one cow, a calf and a she-buffalo, the accused drove them away. The Stationary Sub-Magistrate examined witnesses including P. W. 1 the Court

(1) A. I. R., 1929 Mad. 756.

amin, P. W. 2 the decree-holder and P. W's. 3, 4 and 5 attestors to the attachment list. The Stationary Sub-Magistrate discharged the accused under S. 253 (1) on the ground that the proceedings conducted by the amin P. W. 1 did not in law amount to actual attachment. He says :

"He (the amin) did not know what he had to do when he attached the property and so in the cross examination he merely stated that he did nothing beyond notifying the distraint and writing up the attachment list. The omission was noticed by the counsel for the complainant and all the P. W's. 2 to 4 that came afterwards on subsequent dates were prepared with an answer on this point. In the circumstances, I consider that there was no valid attachment at all and that any obstruction to such an illegal attachment was not certainly punishable by law."

The complainant applied to the District Magistrate of East Godavari to revise the above order of discharge but that application was dismissed, the District Magistrate making the following observation:

"It is quite clear from the evidence of P. W. 1, the amin, that he simply went to the place where the cattle were tied and proceeded to write up the distraint list and that the accused came up and removed the cattle from the place where they had been tied all the time. The amin did not take actual possession of the cattle at any time. The lower Court rightly in my opinion held that there had been no legal distraint of the cattle and that the accused committed no offence in removing the cattle."

On this ground the District Magistrate dismissed the revision petition. The complainant has applied to this Court to set aside the discharge and order a fresh enquiry.

It is clear that the view of the lower Courts is wrong in two particulars. In the first place assuming that their view as to completed attachment was right, as to which I will speak presently, still there was the charge under S. 424 made in the complaint about which the Courts have said nothing. The offence under S. 424 is dishonestly removing any property and the dishonesty in such a case consists of the intention to avoid attachment for a debt. Therefore concealment by debtors themselves is an offence. Similarly taking away property by others with a view that it may not be attached, if done with a dishonest intention would fall under S. 424. The act of the accused would amount to an offence under that section and this matter has been ignored.

The more important point, however, is that the view of the lower Courts as to what constitutes a valid attachment is erroneous. They seem to have been of the opinion that in order to constitute a valid attachment of cattle, it is necessary actually to seize them or do something which would bring them into physical contact with the person attaching. Actual seizure of moveable property to be attached does not always require physical contact. Whether it is so required in any particular case, must be decided upon the particular facts. For instance, property in a locked room may be attached without even seeing the goods, by putting a lock upon the outer door: see Multan Chand Kanyalal v. Bank of Madras (1). In England it has been held that "for an act of the Sheriff or his bailiff to constitute a seizure of goods, it is not necessary that there should be any physical contact with the goods seized, nor does such contact necessarily amount to seizure. An entry upon the premises on which the goods are situate together with an intimation of an intention to seize the goods, will amount to a valid seizure even where the premises are extensive and the property seized widely scattered. But some act must be done sufficient to intimate to the judgment-debtor or his servants that seizure has been made: see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 14, p. 54."

In this case, the goods to be seized were cattle. It was not necessary to attach them that they should have been seized by their horns or even by their ropes. From the evidence it appears that they were already tied and secured so that they themselves could not run away of their own accord. All that was necessary to constitute the attachment was that the officer of the Court should go sufficiently near to them to explain to others that he has come to attach the property and to intimate his intention to do so. This the officer did do. What more in the circumstances he could have done or should have done to get possession of these cattle which were already tied up, it is difficult to see. The view of the lower Courts as to the ingredients of a valid attachment is erroneous. The discharge must be set aside and further enquiry into the charges ordered. The case will be sent back to the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Amalapur for disposal according to law.

J.M./PR.S. Discharge set aside.

Sikandar—Accused.

Criminal Appeal No. 1059 of 1929, Decided on 13th March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Aligarh, D/- 5th September 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 32 (c)—Dying statement not in deceased's own words but being mere note of substance is not sufficient for conviction.

It is unsafe to convict a person merely on the dying statement* when such statement is not recorded in the deceased's own words and contains a note of the substance of what deceased told the police. [P 757 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 302—Evidence—Murder by arsenic poisoning — Examination of viscera is necessary.

In view of the common diseases of this country whose symptoms are almost indistinguishable from that of arsenic poisoning it is very unsafe to convict a person without such evidence as can be obtained from a proper scientific enquiry. The proper enquiry consists in the careful examination of the viscera of the body and an analysis by a competent analyst showing from the amount of arsenic found in the viscera that at least a lethal dose must have been administered. Mere examination of the vomit or night-soil is totally insufficient and it is extremely dangerous to rely upon some traces of arsenic found in either of these two things. [P 759 C 1, P 759 C 1]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

G. S. Pathak—for Accused.

Young, J.—Sikandar was charged under S. 302, I. P. C., before the Sessions Judge of Aligarh with having poisoned one Mt. Tufania by administering arsenic to her. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted the accused, and the Government has appealed.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused, who had had illicit relations with the deceased woman, and also was in the habit of committing sodomy with her son, because the woman refused to leave the place in which she was then living and go and live with him, administered arsenic to her in gur on 22nd June 1929, and thereafter, within some twenty-four hours, she died as a result of arsenic poisoning.

The prosecution called three eyewitnesses who deposed that they had seen the accused giving the deceased gur. The witnesses also gave evidence that shortly afterwards the woman became very ill and vomited and purged. There was also on the record the statement of Mt. Tufania herself made to the police, which was admitted in evidence as a dying declaration. In that statement the woman said that the accused had illicit intimacy* with her and also with her son; that she refused to go to Aligarh with him, and that afterwards he gave her gur to eat saying that it was a "parshad" from a Pir; that shortly afterwards she began to feel giddy and thirsty and drank water from a jar and that the water was bitter. She also said that the gur tasted bitter, and that she charged Sikandar with administering poison to her mixed with the gur. As regards the evidence of the three eyewitnesses, the learned Sessions Judge discards it on the ground that he was not satisfied that they were speaking the truth. We have carefully examined their evidence, and we have no reason to disagree with the finding of the learned Sessions Judge on this point. There remains, then, the evidence of the deceased woman herself as given in her dying statement. As regards the statement, the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion, from the internal evidence in the statement itself, that the statement was not given in the woman's own words but that it was merely a note of the substance of what she told the police. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that it would not be safe to convict the accused merely on the statement. We are in agreement with the learned Sessions Judge in the finding to which he came, and we see no reason to upset that finding and to convict the accused.

While we agree with the Sessions Judge we think we ought to put it on record that there are several other more important reasons than have been given by the learned Sessions Judge, or even discussed by him, for acquitting Sikandar. There is, in our opinion, no evidence on the record worthy of the name to prove that Mt. Tufania died of arsenic poisoning. In a case of arsenic poisoning two things must be proved: firstly, that the person alleged to have been murdered did die of arsenic poisoning; and, secondly, that the arsenic was administered by the accused person. The only evidence in this case of arsenic poisoning is the evidence of the Civil Surgeon who says in his original report that the cause of death was "probably some irritant poison." Later on the Civil Surgeon was more definite. He said: "Death was due to some irritant poison." But he did not say that death was due to arsenic. Nor was he questioned either by counsel for the defence or by the Judge as to whether the condition of the stomach and the intestines which he found in the post-mortem examination was not consistent with gastro enteritis, cholera, or some similar complaint. Further, some of the vomit and the matter purged was collected from the ground and sent to the Chemical Examiner for report; also the jar which had contained the water which she had drunk and in which, as was alleged by the prosecution, she had washed the gur, was sent to the Chemical Examiner. The Chemical Examiner reported, after using the Reinsh test, that arsenic "was detected" in the vomit of Mt. Tufania and also in the night-soil, but arsenic was not detected in the mud jug. The report of the Chemical Examiner is wholly insufficient to prove that the cause of the woman's death was arsenic poisoning. A very small and harmless quantity of arsenic can be "detected" by the Reinsh or Marsh test. It is of the utmost importance in a case of arsenic poisoning that the prosecution should prove that a lethal dose of arsenic that is, two grains or upwards, had been administered. The authorities, such as Taylor, are agreed that there must be unequivocal proof: "that some rational quantity of arsenic was found in the viscera, or good evidence of such a lapse of time after the administration of the last dose as to give a satisfactory explanation of its possible abscence."

In this case there is no lapse of time. In other words, there ought to be a careful examination of the viscera of the body and an analysis by a competent analyser showing from the amount of arsenic found in the viscera that at least a lethal dose must have been administered. Mere examination of vomit or night-soil is totally insufficient and it would be extremely dangerous to rely upon some traces of arsenic found in either of these two things. Arsenic might have been put in the vomit or night-soil after death. Arsenic on the other hand may be legitimately in the body through various causes. Arsenic in some forms is obtained from earth, and as in this case the vomit and night-soil was taken from the earth, it is not beyond the bounds of reasonable possibility that traces of arsenic might have been detected in these two substances from that cause. It is usual where the matter to be examined has been contaminated with earth to send a sample of the earth from a neighbouring spot to be analysed in order to show whether there is arsenic in the earth or not. In India arsenic is used as a medicine in all manner of diseases, and it is also used as an aphrodisiac. It is, therefore, impossible to take the mere evidence that arsenic was detected as sufficient to prove conclusively death from arsenic poisoning. It is of the utmost importance, before a Court could find any individual guilty of murder by the administration of arsenic, that a very much more complete chemical analysis should be made than in this case. There are several methods of analysing the viscera of a dead body and of making a quantitative analysis. Reference to any of the books on this subject can easily be made. That such analysis has been made in India in the past is clear from a reference to Dr. Chever's Medical Jurisprudence, published in 1870, where he observes at p. 116: "Dr. Macnamara discovered considerable quantities of arsenic in both stomachs." Given the necessary knowledge and the necessary instruments, modern science has no difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to the approximate quantity administered.

There is one other point to which we would like to allude as regards this particular case. From the evidence on the record it is not impossible that the gur taken by the deceased did not contain arsenic. The woman said that the gur tasted bitter. The authorities are unanimous on the point that arsenic is tasteless, and at p. 507 of Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence it is said:

"Sir T. Stevenson has known an ounce of arsenic homicidally put into a pint of rice pudding. The pudding was eaten without suspicion."

It seems to be a common error to consider that arsenic tastes bitter at the moment of eating, and, therefore, it is suspicious, when the fact is otherwise, to see in the statement of this woman that the gur was bitter when she ate it. The most that can be said is that later it produces a burning sensation in the throat. In every murder case in Britain, where arsenic poisoning is alleged, the contest always is over the evidence as to the amount of arsenic found in the body. We are told that quantitative analyses have been for some years unknown in this country in arsenic cases. It is our opinion that without such evidence as can be obtained from a proper scientific enquiry it would in most cases be very unsafe to convict any person of murder by arsenic, especially in view of the common diseases in this country whose symptoms are almost indistinguishable from that of arsenic poisoning.

The appeal is dismissed. If Sikandar is under arrest he will be set at liberty immediately if he is not wanted on any other charge.

v.

Emperor

Criminal Appeal No. 1145 of 1929, Decided on 1st April 1930, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Benares, D/- 27th November 1929.

Criminal Trial—Court's duty — Sessions Judge's duty in trials.

A Sessions Judge should start his interest in a case at the very beginning of the trial and not when the time comes to write or dictate the judgment. First of all the ingredients of an offence ought to be clearly grasped and then attempts made continuously to discover whether the evidence of the complainant and that of the prosecution witnesses did satisfy those ingredients or not. When a consideration of the facts of the case and of their applicability to a particular section of the law are left to the end, a trial is bound to suffer and often a decision is arrived at in conflict with law. [P 760 C 2]

Captain C. O. Carleton—for Appellant.

Sankar Saran—for the Crown.

Judgment.—I am afraid that the Sessions Judge has not a grip of the facts of the case and misunderstood them. There can be no doubt that the patwari on 17th September 1928, gave a wrong copy of certain entries in the village records to the complainant Ram Nandan. The wrongness of the entries consisted in the patwari (appellant) not noting in the copy that besides Mt.

Jhagri there were other tenants of the plots in suit. It is, however, important to remember that the complainant Ram Nandan had already purchased what he considered a fixed-rate tenancy from Mt. Jhagri prior to 17th September, that is, five days prior, on 12th September 1928. It cannot, therefore, be said that the wrong copy induced him to spend money in making the purchase.

On 24th September he sued not only Mt. Jhagri but the others whose names appeared in the records for a declaration that the others were not tenants of the land. This suit was brought for a declaration under S. 123, Tenancy Act of 1926. His suit was dismissed on the ground that Mt. Jhagri was not a fixed-rate tenant and had no right of transfer. The incorrect copy was filed by the complainant in the suit which he filed on 24th September. He, however, refused to summon the patwari and on 19th November made a statement to the revenue Court that the patwari be not summoned as he was an enemy. Subsequently the patwari was summoned by the defendant Mangal of that suit and then it was discovered that Mangal was also a tenant of the land. I have not the slightest doubt that the patwari knowingly made a false copy, but there are further points to be considered whether the false copy was made with the connivance of Ram Nandan himself and whether there could have been any intention on the part of the patwari to cause harm to Ram Nandan. After reading the evidence I have come to the conclusion that the patwari is a black-guard. He has, fortunately for him, escaped the clutches of the criminal law. It is certain that Ram Nandan to bolster up his claim of a declaration that Mangal was not a tenant induced the patwari to give a false copy, and the patwari, presumably for consideration, did so. Ram Nandan hoped that the original would not be sent for and actually went to the length of refusing to summon the patwari. I cannot possibly believe that after obtaining the copy he could have feared that the patwari would depose against the copy, if in reality he had not known that the copy was falsely prepared. Mangal, however, insisted on summoning the patwari, and the patwari had not the courage in Court to depose falsely about the entries in his papers. The trick to be played on Mangal was by collusion between Ram Nandan and the patwari to avoid the summoning of the original papers. Possibly Ram Nandan hoped that even if the patwari was summoned he would favour his cause and make a false deposition. When the patwari failed to oblige him to that extreme extent Ram Nandan filed a complaint. As I often observed in these cases it is unfortunate that a private person can prosecute a patwari without any departmental inquiry being made on the subject. These prosecutions have recently been so frequent that a suggestion may be made that some kind of protection may be given to these revenue officials by making a departmental inquiry necessary before a criminal prosecution is launched. Anyone acquainted with revenue law like a qanungo or a tahsildar would have discovered at once that Ram Nandan and the patwari were colluding at first and that Ram Nandan knew well that the copy which he obtained was a false copy.

The Judge does not seem to have read the charge framed against the patwari. The charge was that he gave wrong copy with the intention of inducing Ram Nandan to file a suit, and thereby incur expense which would cause him harm in money. This is the only possible harm which the patwari may have contemplated. The harm is far too remote. Even if the patwari was an enemy it would hardly be worth his while to damage Ram Nandan by inducing him to bring a suit in which he was sure not to succeed. I cannot believe that such harm would be contemplated by one enemy for another. The Judge, however, takes a totally different view. What he says is :

"It is thus clear that the accused gave an incorrect copy to the mukhtar "

(meaning the complainant)

"with a view that he would thereby cause injury to the complainant, inasmuch as the mukhtar lost his case for the declaration that Mangal and others were no tenants of the plots."

The harm intended was, according to the Sessions Judge, that the complainant may lose his suit. It is obvious that the complainant did not lose his suit because of the wrong copy, and the wrong copy, therefore, did not harm the complainant in that manner.

It is not necessary to examine the false defence of the patwari that the wrong copy was extorted from him. It may, however, be pointed out to the Sessions Judge that he took no trouble to obtain from Ram Nandan's own mouth what the harm was which he suffered by the wrong copy. A judicial officer who had understood the case from the commencement would have made an inquiry as to how when Ram Nandan got a wrong copy in which the interest of Mangal was not mentioned, he happened to sue Mangal seven days later for a declaration. It is my belief that during trials Sessions Judges rely far too much on a badly instructed Government Pleader or on the evidence of the prosecution shaping itself as best it may. It is much to be desired that a Sessions Judge should start his interest in a case at the very beginning of the trial and not when the time comes to write or dictate the judgment. First of all the ingredients of an offence ought to be clearly grasped and then attempts made continuously to discover whether the evidence of the complainant and that of the prosecution witnesses did satisfy those ingredients or not. When a consideration of the facts of the case and of their applicability to a particular section of the law are left to the end, a trial is bound to suffer and often a decision is arrived at in conflict with law.

I set aside the conviction and sentence of Suraj Prasad and order his bail bond to be cancelled.

Madras Local Boards Act, S. 221—Application under S. 221 for recovery of dues—Other remedies not exhausted as enjoined by Government Orders—Government Orders being merely advisory, Magistrate cannot decline to consider application.

The Government Orders enjoining on the Local Boards to exhaust all other remedies of realizing dues before having recourse to S. 221 before a Magistrate are only advisory and merely administrative direction and a Magistrate cannot decline to consider an application under this section where other remedies have not been exhausted. [P 761 C 1]

Order.—This petition arises from an application to the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Bhimavaram by the Union Board of Akiveedu under S. 221, Local Boards Act, to realize from the respondents the amount of a penalty which the Union Board alleged the respondents had incurred by reason of unauthorised occupation or encroachment upon the property of the Union Board. The Sub-Magistrate, instead of proceeding under the section to hear the application and the objections if any and to determine them, made an order on 27th March 1929 that in pursuance of two Government Orders respectively 4657 L & M dated 23rd November 1928 and 770 L & M dated 13th February 1929, the Union Board could not proceed before the Magistrate, before it had exhausted all other processes for the recovery of the dues. The Board has petitioned this Court to revise the said order.

I think the order of the Sub-Magistrate was wrong. The Government Orders, mentioned above are at best only advisory and amount to a caution to the Local Boards that it is proper to exhaust the other available means of realising dues before having recourse to S. 221 before a Magistrate. Government Orders as such have no force of law and were merely administrative directions. Once the matter was placed before the Magistrate, it was his duty to enquire into it according to law, i. e., S. 221. He has practically declined to do so and therefore the order is set aside and the papers will be remitted to him for disposal according to law.

Criminal Appeal No 420 of 1929,
Decided on 27th November 1929.

1930 Cr. C. 96

Criminal P. C., S. 417 — Appeal by Government against acquittal—High Court should not interfere if trial Court's judgment is neither perverse nor such as no reasonable man shall come to even if it comes to conclusion that prosecution case upon evidence was strong enough to justify conviction.

An appeal on behalf of Government in the exercise of the powers conferred by S. 417 should not be entertained when the judgment appealed from is based upon facts and the conclusions of the Court are such as may reasonably be arrived at upon the facts found. Where, therefore, the High Court cannot say that there were not some grounds which might justify the acquittal of the respondent and that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is perverse or one which no reasonable man could have come to, on the facts, it should not interfere with that judgment even if it comes to the conclusion that upon the evidence the prosecution case was sufficiently strong to justify a conviction: 16 All. 212 and 16 Cr. L. J. 529, Appl. [P 762 C 1]

K. S. Vasudevan—for Accused.

Beasley, C. J.—On the 9th February last the deceased a young boy had climbed a fruit tree to get some berries or some other fruits which had grown on that tree. Beneath the tree was a little girl, the daughter of the accused, the respondent here. The little boy threw the fruits down on to the ground from the tree above and the little girl picked up those fruits whereupon the little boy climbed down from the tree and beat the little girl with a cholam stick. She went off to her home and complained to her mother (the respondent) about the beating. The mother then came up and pursued the little boy. Up to this point both the prosecution case and the defence case agree. The little boy sustained very serious injuries. He had three ribs broken on the one side and four on the other penetrating the pleural cavity and causing his death some two days later. The respondent was charged at the Sessions Court with murder under S. 302, I. P. C. The defence put forward by the respondent was that it was true that she pursued the little boy and that he was running away but in the course of his flight he tripped up and fell upon a stone or a boulder well imbedded in the ground and that was how he came by his injuries.

The learned Sessions Judge after hearing the evidence agreed with the opinion of the four assessors in finding that the respondent was not guilty of the offence and she was accordingly acquitted.

This is an appeal by Government against the acquittal. The case for the prosecution was that the respondent fisted, struck and kneed the little boy and was the cause of his broken ribs. (Here the judgment considered evidence and proceeded.) The conclusion we have come to in this case is that upon the evidence the prosecution case was sufficiently strong to justify a conviction for an offence and that it establishes the fact that the injuries were caused to the little boy by this woman.

But we have got to consider what test should be applied by the High Court on an appeal by Government against an acquittal. Is the test to be that in the opinion of the appellate Bench there should have been a conviction sufficient to justify allowing the appeal or should it be something much more strong on the facts before the High Court is entitled to allow that appeal? We have not had any cases cited to us but we have discovered two cases which lay down a test which we think is the correct one to be applied in such cases as this. The first of them is Queen Empress v. Robinson (1). In that case it was held that an appeal on behalf of Government in the exercise of the powers conferred by S. 417, Criminal P. C., should not be entertained when the judgment appealed from is based upon facts and the conclusions of the Court are such as may reasonably be arrived at upon the facts found. The other case is a decision of a single Judge Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Public Prosecutor v. Narayana Nayudu (2). There it was held that in appeals against acquittals the High Court ought not to interfere unless the trying Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment is either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure. That is saying the same thing which was said in the Allahabad case in different words. We think that those tests are the proper ones. At the trial in a Sessions Court or in any other Court in which evidence is taken the trial Judge or Magistrate, as the case may be, has the witnesses before him and he is really in a better position to decide whether those witnesses give correct evidence and in this case the Sessions Judge has disbelieved most of the prosecution witnesses. We cannot say that there were not some grounds which might justify the acquittal of the respondent in this case. We are unable to say that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is perverse or one which no reasonable man could have come to on the facts. There was just a reasonable doubt and, that being so, we are unable to interfere with that judgment and this appeal by Government must be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 779 of 1929 (Case referred No. 44 of 1929), Decided on 13th November 1929, on reference by Sess. Judge, Ganjam, D/- 11th September 1929.

Explosives Rules (1914), R. 35 — Person accused of having taken delivery of consignments described as fireworks in contravention of R. 35—Burden of proving that they were explosives such as are covered by Explosive Rules is on prosecution—His having signed those consignments does not amount to admission that they were such explosives.

Where a person is accused of having taken delivery of consignments described as "fireworks" in contravention of R. 35, the burden of proving that these were explosives such as are covered by the Explosives Rules is upon the prosecution and the mere fact that the accused took possession of and signed for a consignment which was described as fireworks does not amount to an admission by him that these were explosives such as are within the purview of these rules. Order.—This case comes to us on a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Ganjam in which reference he recommends that the conviction of a man named Chidambaram for an act in contravention of R. 35, Explosives Rules, 1914 and the fine of Rs. 50 imposed upon him should be set aside. The facts of the case are that a certain firm had consigned some packages described as "fireworks" weighing 52 maunds 36 seers to one Indupuri Narasimham and that he having no license for explosives did not take delivery of them but Chidambaram did so paying the money into a Bank. He got the railway receipt and received the goods on 8th August 1927. He was thereafter charged with an act in contravention of R. 35, namely, being in possession of explosives not in accordance with the conditions of the license granted under the rules for possession. He had a license entitling him to have explosives weighing up to 200 lbs. The origin of the complaint seems to be that some rival trader in the place complained to the police that the consignment was to be taken possession of by the accused. Certain facts appear and one fact is that at the hearing of the complaint the actual consignment or parts of it were not produced in Court but certain material objects were and the witnesses stated that the crackers taken delivery of by the accused were similar to those material objects. If that is true, then it is obvious that the conviction in this case was wrong because they are clearly toy fireworks and the rules do not apply to the manufacture, possession etc. of those fireworks. But it is said that those material objects are not samples of what the consignment contained; but all we can say with regard to that is that the police had ample opportunities of satisfying themselves when the consignment was at the railway station as to its nature. Certain cases, we are informed, were opened and on examination were seen to contain very small fireworks; and it was sought to collect the amount of gun-powder that these articles contained and after a most diligent attempt the quantity of gun-powder obtained was simply infinitesimal.

(1) [1894] 16 All. 212—(1894) A. W. N. 49.

(2) [1915] 16 Cr. L. J. 529—23 I. C. 657.

The Joint Magistrate seems to have thought that the onus of showing that an offence under the Explosives Rules had not been committed lay upon the accused, namely, that it was for him to produce the fireworks in Court and satisfy the Court that they were only toy fireworks and seems to have proceeded on the assumption that, as the consignment was labelled fireworks and as delivery on the railway receipt was taken of these articles as fireworks by the accused, it was tantamount to an admission that the articles in the consignment were articles coming within the Explosives Rules. The learned Sessions Judge has taken the view that the prosecution had not proved the case that there had been any contravention of R. 35 by the accused and furthermore that the accused was in possession of explosives and of a greater quantity than 200 lbs. With that view of the learned Sessions Judge we entirely agree. We think that the burden of proving that these were explosives such as are covered by the Explosives Rules is clearly upon the prosecution and that the mere fact that the accused took possession of and signed for a consignment which was described as fireworks does not amount to an admission by him that these were explosives such as are within the purview of these rules. Under these circumstances we set aside the conviction and order the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

V. L. Ethiraj and A. S. Sivakaminathan—for Petitioner.

K. S. Vasudevan—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a petition to revise the conviction of the petitioner for defamation of the complainant recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Vizagapatam in C. C. 33 of 1928 and upheld by the learned Sessions Judge of Vizagapatam on 16th November 1928.

Objection is taken to the legality of the conviction on the ground that the proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate were vitiated by one of two alternative grounds: (a) that there was no complaint before the Magistrate on which he could take cognizance of the case and that the Magistrate, though informed of this defect at the very outset and objection was taken to his proceeding further with the case, brushed aside and took cognizance of the case i. e. issued process against the accused; (b) if the proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate be regarded as a continuation of those which were started by a previous complaint instituted by the complainant, the said complaint had been transferred by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate himself to the Sheristadar First Class Magistrate of Vizagapatam and was pending before him and had not been withdrawn from that file to the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. .

To appreciate these objections it is necessary to state that the proceedings against this petitioner originally started upon a complaint filed before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 21st December 1927. This complaint was transferred to the Court of the Huzur Sheristadar First Class Magistrate of Vizagapatam and was filed there on 27th December 1927. As shown in the order in C. C. 1 of 1928 of that Magistrate that complaint embraced two distinct matters (1) theft or robbery on 14th December 1927 by the present petitioner and others of a brass vessel and a cloth and (2) defamation of the complainant by this petitioner on and after 18th December 1927, by the pasting of defamatory leaflets and handbills. At the trial of this complaint the present petitioner took objection to the trial of both matters going on together as they constituted distinct offences. On this, the complainant's vakil in the words of the order in C. C. 1 of 1928 dropped that portion of the complaint which relates to the offence of defamation punishable under S. 500, I. P. C. The trial proceeded on the charge of theft and ended in a discharge dated 25th February 1928. Thereupon on 17th April 1928, Mr.

Narasimha Rao, pleader for the complainant, put in a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate accusing the former vakil who had conducted the complainant's case in the Huzur Sheristadar Magistrate's Court of having improperly added a charge of robbery into the complaint and of having dropped the charge of defamation, stating that the same complaint is still pending and that therefore no new complaint is necessary and praying for process on the charge of defamation. The complainant did not sign this petition nor was she examined on oath. But the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 18th April 1928 passed this order "Take on file under S. 500, I. P. C." and posted the case to the 2nd May 1928. On that day the accused through his vakil put in a long petition pointing out the irregularity, that there was no complaint and that there was no case and that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed. The pleader Mr. Narayana Rao for the complainant answered these objections and as far as can be gathered, the petitioner's objections were overruled and the trial proceeded and ended in a conviction under S. 500 and a sentence of a fine of Rs. 100.

From the above facts it is quite clear that treated as a new case started before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate there was in C. C. 33 of 1928 no complaint nor was the complainant examined on oath. This is certainly a grave irregularity. Whether it might have been cured or not by acquiescence, there was certainly no acquiescence. This was immediately pointed out but was brushed aside. I can therefore see no ground for saying that this objection was waived or acquiesced in. This would in itself be a sufficiently grave irregularity to vitiate the subsequent proceedings.

The only way in which that objection could be met is by supposing that there was originally a complaint including the charge of defamation, namely, the one made on 21st December 1927. But this supposition only involves a still greater error because in that case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to proceed with that complaint because it was transferred to the Huzur Sheristadar First Class Magistrate and had not been recalled. Several decisions have been cited to me to show that once a case is transferred by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate or District Magistrate to another, a Subordinate Magistrate, he cannot proceed with that case without withdrawing or transferring it back again. It is only necessary to refer to Radha Bullar Roy v. Benode Behari Chatterjee (1) and Ajaib Lal v. Emperor (2). That proposition appears to me not to require any authority for its support and it has not been stated by the Public Prosecutor that there was any order by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate withdrawing the complaint from the Sheristadar Magistrate to himself. It was suggested by the learned Public Prosecutor that that also was a curable defect and must be held to have been cured in this case because that objection was not taken in that form in the Courts below. In the first place I am not at all sure, because no authority has been cited for that proposition, that it is a curable defect. If a Magistrate having no jurisdiction to try a case does so, his proceedings are void (See S. 530, Cl. p) and a Magistrate trying a case which has not been taken cognizance of by him or has not been sent to him in the proper way or withdrawn by him in the proper way has certainly no jurisdiction to try it.

Then assuming it was curable there is nothing in the case to show that it was cured or was acquiesced in. On the contrary at the earliest possible moment the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was informed of the defect that there was no complaint in the case. That was quite sufficient to put the Court and the opposite party upon notice of the objection which went to the root of the case. It could only have been met by the answer that there was a previous complaint in the case which itself would have been met by the still more fatal objection that that complaint was pending in another Court. It seems to me that the prosecution in this case is on the horns of a dilemma as has been stated above and the learned Public Prosecutor has not satisfied me how he can escape from the one or the other horn of this dilemma. The proceedings in the lower Courts must therefore be set aside as without jurisdiction. The complaint was started by a private party and it is not therefore right that I should not allow her after all this time, further opportunity to prove her case, if she desires it, to the satisfaction of the Magistrate. The records will be sent back to the Huzur Sheristadar First Class Magistrate before whom the first complaint is pending for disposal according to law. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Judgment.—This is an application in criminal revision. The applicant Mohammad Raza alias Shamshad has been convicted of an offence under S. 482, I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100 (or in default, two months rigorous imprisonment). His appeal was dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge of Lucknow on 13th January 1930.

It has been found that the applicant used the trade-mark of the firm of Anwar Khan Mahboob who manufacture biris in Jubbulpore, with deliberate and dishonest intention and with the object of passing his biris off as if they had been manufactured by that firm. The learned Sessions Judge has made the following observations in his judgment :

"The learned Magistrate who tried the case found that both the label and the green strip used by the appellant are deliberate imitations of those used by the firm of Anwar Khan Mahboob and before dealing with the points raised in the arguments addressed to me it will be convenient to record at once that I entirely agree with the view taken by the learned Magistrate. In my opinion both the label and green strip are flagrant imitations of those used by Anwar Khan Mahboob, and in my opinion they are imitations used with deliberate and dishonest intention. The imitation is deliberate and the purpose of using the label and strip was to make it appear that the biris sold by the appellant were made by the Jubbulpur firm it is a question of fact whether the imitation has been such as to cause it to be believed that the goods on which it is used were the goods of some one else. We are concerned rather with what, as I have held, is a deliberate attempt to reproduce copies of Anwar Khan Mahboob's label and strip so close as to be calculated to deceive anyone except a very close observer. In fact there is in my opinion no question here of any bona fide dispute which should be settled in a civil Court."

I have read the detailed and careful judgment of the learned Sessions Judge. So far as I see he has considered all the relevant questions very carefully. The applicant's learned counsel has contended before me that the lower Court has not decided that the trade-mark in question is the exclusive property of the opposite party. I think this contention is not well founded. The lower Court has found in effect that the trade-mark in question is the exclusive property of the firm of Anwar Khan Mahboob of Jubbulpur. The trade-mark in question is a distinctive mark which the firm has been using ever since 1919. Anwar Khan Mahboob have acquired property in that mark as indicating that all goods which bear it have been manufactured by their firm at Jubbulpur. In my opinion the lower Courts were perfectly right in holding that the charge under S. 482 is made out against the applicant. I should like to refer to the case of Banarsi Das v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 186. In that case a manufacturer of cotton thread balls having acquired by user (since 1917) the right to the mark "D. I." for the purpose of denoting his goods, prosecuted the accused who had lately begun to manufacture cotton thread balls and to attach the mark "D. I." and to imitate the mark and the "get up" of the complainant's label so closely that his goods were calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that the accused's goods were those of the complainant. It was held that in India registration is not necessary in order to complete title to a trade-mark, and there is no warrant for the broad proposition that a letter or a combination of letters cannot constitute a trade-mark. It was further held that a person aggrieved by the infringement of his trade-mark has two remedies open to him (1) he can institute criminal proceedings under the Penal Code, or (2) he can bring an action for an injunction and damages and; although the criminal Court has a discretion in view of the peculiar circumstances of particular cases, e. g., if there exists a bona fide dispute as to the right to use a trade-mark, or where there has been undue delay in commencing criminal proceedings, to stay its own hands and direct the complainant to establish his rights in a civil Court, it is nowhere laid down by the legislature that an aggrieved person should seek his remedy in a civil Court and not in a criminal Court. I take the same view. The application must therefore be rejected.

Hence I dismiss the application.

M. K. Mukharji—for Appellant.

Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Scroope, J.—These two Rules have been obtained by the petitioner in respect of conviction and sentences in two separate trials passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Begusarai. There were two burglaries, one on the night of 13th June in the house of a local zamindar of Begusarai, Jagarnath Singh, and the other on the night of 4th July 1929, in the shop of one Harbans Lal, a jeweller of Begusarai and as a result of a confession made by Suraj Sekhar Singh the properties stolen in both the burglaries were recovered, and the present petitioner with Suraj Sekhar Singh and others with whom we are not concerned was placed on his trial in two separate cases in respect of each burglary. In respect of the former he was convicted under Ss. 414, 457 and 380, I. P. C., by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Begusarai and received respectively under each section (a) three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200 (b) eight months' rigorous imprisonment, and (c) three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, that is, in all 14 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 400. The conviction and sentence under S. 414 were set aside by the Sessions Judge of Monghyr, but he maintained the conviction and sentence under Ss. 457 and 380, I. P. C. In respect of the second burglary, that of 4th July, the petitioner also received three sentences under Ss. 457, 380 and 414, I. P. C., (a) rigorous imprisonment for a period of 18 months, (b) rigorous imprisonment for six months and a fine of Rs. 500 and (c) rigorous imprisonment for six months and a fine of Rs. 1,000 totalling in all 24 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,500. The Sessions Judge of Monghyr set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 414 but maintained the convictions under Ss. 457 and 380 as well as the sentence of imprisonment, but he also set aside the order of fine passed under S. 380, I. P. C.

The conviction in both cases raises the question of the admissibility against the petitioner of the confession made by his co-accused Suraj Sekhar Singh which is in evidence in both the cases, and the learned Sessions Judge very properly took the view that confession implicating a co-accused required corroboration if a co-accused is to be convicted on it; this has been held in a series of decisions and I will only refer to the cases of Emperor v. Nani Gopal (1), Queen Empress v. Khandia (2) and Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor (3). The learned Assistant Government Advocate cites the case of Sheo Narain Singh v. Emperor (4) in support of his contention that an accused can be convicted on a confession made by his co-accused. Assuming the correctness of the learned Assistant Government Advocate's contention I see nothing in the present confession to lift it out of the ordinary run of confessions that are covered by the series of cases referred to above. The confessing prisoner has several previous convictions, so, obviously his character is not such as to lend any exceptional value to his confession.

Taking first Reference No. 14 of 1930 there is corroborative evidence as the petitioner was found wearing a chaddar which has been identified as part of the property stolen in the burglary. It is contended that the evidence establishing identification of the chaddar is inadequate but both Jagarnath Singh and Brahmdeo Singh who were the victims of the burglary identified it, as also did their dhobi Jaddu. Apparently both Jagarnath Singh and Brahmdeo Singh are men of position and they showed discrimination in their identification as pointed by the learned Sessions Judge. The rebutting evidence as to the identification called by Khatir Jama Khan petitioner has, in my opinion, rightly been disbelieved by both the Courts below, and the fact that a person is found in possession of the stolen property shortly after the theft raises the presumption that he took part in the theft. Apart altogether from the confession which is to the effect that the petitioner took part in the burglary the conviction of the petitioner must be held correct on the facts but separate consecutive sentences under Ss. 457 and 380 cannot be passed: see Queen v. Sreemunt Adup (5), Queen v. Sahrae (6), Jogeen v. Nobo (7), In re Mussahur Daoudh (8), Queen v. Chytum Bowra (9) and Makhru Dusadh v. Emperor (10). I accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 380, the conviction under S. 457 is maintained and the sentence of eight months' rigorous imprisonment passed thereunder is confirmed.

As regards reference No. 15 of 1930 the confession has been, in my opinion, adequately corroborated. The petitioner is a resident of Basti District in the United Provinces; he has not satisfactorily explained his presence in Begusarai. Sukhan Dhanuk, a chowkidar (P. W. 8), met the petitioner in company with Suraj Sekhar Singh the confessing accused and two others with whom we are not concerned now at Singhouli, 3 or 4 miles from Begusarai on the morning after the burglary; they told him that they were Musalmans from Muzaffarpur. On the same morning they were seen drinking at the local toddy shop; they were arrested the morning by the police and the Sub-Inspector (P. W. No. 8) states that all were more or less under the influence of liquor; later on same day the stolen property was produced certainly by Suraj if not by Khatir also. The explanation given by Khatir Jama Khan to police for his presence in Begusarai was that he had come to Singhouli on an invitation given by Suraj Sekhar Singh. At the trial the petitioner denied that he knew Suraj Sekhar at all; in fact he denied that he was with him when he was arrested and said that he had come to Begusarai with another man Rasul to search for a relative who had not been heard of for over a year.

In my opinion his association with the prisoner Suraj Sekhar Singh immediately after the theft and his being found drinking with him, the fact that being a man of Basti in the United Provinces he has not been able to account satisfactorily for his presence at Begusarai, taken along with the confession leave no doubt in my mind that he was rightly convicted. It was contended that the confession must be false as according to the confession petitioner must have arrived at Begusarai at 9 p.m., on 4th July whereas according to Harbans Lal the victim of the theft on preceding evening petitioner had come to his shop and bargained for gold bangle. There may be some confusion here, but the discrepancy is not sufficient to justify rejecting entirely the evidence from the confession, seeing that it is corroborated by the discovery of a large quantity of stolen property. In my opinion, therefore, the accused has been rightly convicted for his participating in this burglary but for the reasons given above the conviction under S. 380 must be set aside; the sentence of imprisonment under S. 457, I. P. C., will stand.

Adami, J.—I agree.

Sir H. S. Gour's "Age of Consent Bill"

(The prospect and a retrospect)

BY SRINIVASA RAO, M.A., B.L., Guntur.

The herculean efforts of Rai Sahib Sarda are now over, but not yet of Sir H. S. Gour. In introducing their respective bills in the Central Indian Legislature they have been animated by the same desire. Both of them desired to penalize thereby premature cohabitation and early consummation. But while the former proposed to achieve this purpose by prescribing a statutory age limit for the marriage of boys and girls, the latter endeavoured to bring about the same result, by raising the age of consent, both within and without the marital state. If diehard orthodoxy be conceived as a citadel of effete superstitions and meaningless doctrines, unsuited to the changing requirements of our social organism, Sarda's bill—now transformed into a statute—may be described as a direct attack on the citadel, while the bill of Dr. Gour may well be described as a flank attack on the very same citadel.

It is now within everyone's knowledge how after a vigorous fight the efforts of Sarda have been crowned with well-merited success, and with the assent of the Governor-General of India his bill has found its way to a place on the Statute Book, as Act 19 of 1929. But the purpose and provisions of Dr. Gour's bill have not been sufficiently canvassed outside the Assembly. Hence an attempt is made to present in these columns the interdependence of the two bills, and finally how the bill now before the Assembly is a necessary complement to the bill already passed by it.

In 1927 Dr. H. S. Gour introduced his bill in the Legislative Assembly to amend S. 375, I. P. C., by raising the age of consent to 14 in marital cases, and to 16 in extra-marital cases. The Home Member expressed sympathy with the measure but would do nothing unless there is a strong backing in the country for the amendment proposed by the mover. Hence the bill was not pressed for immediate consideration, but a dilatory motion to circulate it for opinion was carried by the House. This led to the appointment of what is known as the Age of Consent Committee presided over by Sir Moropant Joshi and consisting of nine members.

The terms of reference were:

(1) to examine the state of the law relating to the age of consent, as contained in Ss. 375 and 376, I. P. C., specially with regard to its suitability to conditions in India;

(2) to inquire into the effect of the amendment made by the Penal Code (Amendment) Act (29 of 1925), and to report whether any further amendment of the law is necessary; and if so what changes are necessary as regards offences (a) without and (b) within the marital state.

For clearer understanding of the scope of the proposed amendment, the latter as it stands may be briefly noticed. The law relating to age of consent is embodied in Ss. 375 and 376, I. P. C., and are reproduced below:

"Section 375.—Rape—A man is said to commit rape who except in the case hereinafter excepted has sexual intercourse with a woman under circumstances falling under any of the five following descriptions.

First.—Against her will.

Secondly.—Without her consent.

Thirdly.—With her consent, when her consent has been obtained by putting her in fear of death or of hurt.

Fourthly.—With her consent, when the man knows that he is not her husband and that her consent is given because she believes that he is another man to whom she is or believes herself to be lawfully married.

Fifthly.—With or without her consent when she is under 14 years of age.

Exception.—Sexual intercourse by a man with his own wife, the wife not being under 13 years of age, is not rape.

Section 376.—Whoever commits rape shall be punished with transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years and shall also be liable to fine (unless the woman raped is his own wife, and is not under 12 years of age in which case he shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years or with fine or with both)."

Dr. Gour proposes to alter 14 into 16 in Cl. (5), S. 375, and altogether omit the portion in brackets in S. 376 beginning from "unless the woman," and add a new section, viz. S. 376-A "entitled Illicit Married Intercourse", and running :

"Section 376-A—Whoever has sexual intercourse with his own wife, the wife not being under 13 years of age and being under 14 years of age, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine or with both."

The Age of Consent Committee sent out their questionnaire to about 8,000 persons with a view to find out the feeling in the country regarding the necessity and advisability of amending Ss. 375 and 376 on the lines proposed by Dr. Gour. The committee toured throughout the length and breadth of our country, received statements, examined witnesses, and at last presented their report.

The Committee recommended inter alia :

(1) that the age of consent within the marital relation be raised to 15 ;

(2) that sexual intercourse by a man with his wife below 15 be made an offence, designated "marital misbehaviour" and included in Ch. 20, I. P. C. ;

(3) that Ss. 375 and 376, I. P. C., be confined to rape outside the marital relation;

(4) that the age of consent for the protection of a girl against rape by a person who is not her husband be raised to 18 years.

(5) that in order to deal most effectively with the evil of early marriage and early consummation a law be enacted fixing the minimum age of girls at 14;

(6) that the offence of marital misbehaviour do remain bailable and non-cognizable, as in the case of rape by a husband as at present;

(7) that it be punishable with (a) imprisonment of either description for 10 years and fine; when the wife is under 12 and (b), imprisonment of either description which may extend to one year or fine or both when the wife is between 12 and 15;

(8) that women police be employed when available, to aid in the investigation of sexual offences, in taking statements from girls or women witnesses in cases of rape as well as marital misbehaviour;

(9) that the law be amended so that a suit by a husband for the custody of a wife or for restitution of conjugal rights shall not lie when the girl is below 15;

(10) that effective steps be taken to spread general education amongst men and women.

As per recommendation No. 5, Sarda's original bill has been amended fixing the minimum age of marriage for girls at 14. But it is submitted that is not sufficient. That might cope with one phase of our social evil, but leaves untouched the extra-marital relation. Nor does it even adequately cope with the evils within the marital state.

It is one thing for the Legislature to prescribe a minimum age for marriage of girls ; another to prevent premature cohabitation and "illicit married intercourse." To combat the evil has been the desire of both Rai Sahib Sarda and Sir. H. S. Gour. And undoubtedly Sarda has taken us a long way to the solution, but not sufficiently far. And in this sense it may be said that where the former ends, the latter begins.

To borrow a word from the law Courts, the Age of Consent Bill is still "pending" final approval of the Assembly ; and if it should be passed by the Central Legislature, not only would our countrymen be free from some of our age-long social evils, but positive ground would have been paved for a new and better social order.

In passing, however, a few objections may be noticed, regarding the necessity and the advisability of pressing Dr. Gour's bill. In the first place it has been urged, that no law should encroach upon matters of purely domestic and social nature, and that the evil in question ought to be remedied by the zeal of the reformer, and the eventual spread of education. It has next been urged that such an encroachment would amount to a violation of the pledges recited in the Queen's Proclamation, and is bound to create disaffection amongst a considerable section of our society ; and finally it has been suggested that in view of the unrepresentative character of the present Assembly, it is unsafe to embark on legislation affecting age-long usages and practices of our countrymen.

At first sight these objections may seem formidable, but closer scrutiny would incline dispassionate minds to a contrary conclusion. To the general proposition broadly laid down and universally applied, that under no circumstances should State interference be invoked, the writer respectfully demurs. There is neither principle nor precedent for such an extreme position. Most of the civilized countries, notably Turkey and Egypt, have resorted to legislative checks for putting down some of their shocking social evils. Nearer home, similar laws have been promulgated and are in full swing, in several Native States. The Central Indian Legislature has itself trenched on custom and religious and social usages, in more than one instance. This is not the first time that the question of State interference is mooted. The laws of Sati and widow re-marriage, the removal of ban on inheritance by converts, and the law permitting "civil" marriages, are a few of the many instances in which the aid of State interference has been invoked. Apart from precedent, our critics are also "estopped" from questioning the competence of legislative interference.

Passing now to the second objection, we see no substance in the count. The proclamation merely says :

"... in framing and administering laws due regard be paid to ancient rites, usages and customs of India."

The words in italics neither exclude interference in a just and necessary case, nor guarantee absolute non-interference. Dealing with a similar question in 1891, when Sir Andrew Scoble sought to raise the age of consent from 10 to 12, Lord Lansdowne, the then Viceroy of India, observed :

"... the pledges must be read with a two-fold reservation the first of these is that when demands are preferred in the name of religion leading to practices inconsistent with individual safety and the public peace, and condemned by every system of law and morality in the world, it is religion and not morality which must give way. Far from absolutely precluding the Government of India from dealing with matters affecting religion, it expressly contemplates the possibility of such legislation, though with adequate safeguards against irresponsible initiation."

Nor is there any force in the objection regarding the unrepresentative character of the Central Legislature. It may be remembered that most of the critics of Dr. H. S. Gour's Bill themselves admit the right of the Assembly to formulate a demand for Dominion Status or for an all-round amnesty for political detainees, or a more substantial reform. If the legislature could be representative enough to formulate such measures one fails to see how its character is lost the moment a social question comes to be discussed on its floor.

But the need for supporting the present Bill is not merely negative—the absence of any reasonable objection to its enactment. The grounds in support thereof are more positive and irresistible. They have been set out with remarkable care and clearness in Ch. 8 of the Report of the Age of Consent Committee, and classified under five heads: (1) Physiological; (2) Eugenic; (3) Social; (4) Educational; and (5) Economic. To traverse all that ground here would be clearly outside the scope of the present article. Suffice it to note that an irresistible case has been made out for acceptance of the bill, by the labours of the Age of Consent Committee. The ball of beneficial social legislation set rolling on the floor of the Assembly by Rai Sahib Sarda should not be allowed to suffer from inertia, but gain momentum and roll on still further, till at least Dr. H. S. Gour's bill be passed into law; when it may legitimately be hoped that the combined operation of the new law of marriage and an enhanced age of consent may result not merely in eradicating some of our persistent social evils, but in actually paving the way for a healthier and sounder social organism.

SEVERE CROSS EXAMINATION

Cross-examination is admittedly the most difficult of all the varied work to which a lawyer is called to turn his hand; how difficult, only those who have tried it, can appreciate. To dwell for a moment on an aspect of the matter somewhat professional, there are, generally speaking, two schools of cross-examination. One is known by the description which is always sure to appear in the headlines to a newspaper report of a sensational trial: "Severe cross-examination." By this method the witness is taken over the whole facts of the case and minutely catechised as to his acquaintance with them. Given a very skilful counsel and a flagrantly dishonest witness, this style may serve its purpose, but, as a general rule, witnesses tell some truth, are not fools and are not inclined to be like clay in the hands of the examiner. Not infrequently, then the "severe cross-examination" gives an able witness the opportunity of emphasizing his evidence-in-chief, and driving home points actually unnoticed in his first examination. But it may be dangerous to ask too little as well as too much. To minutely probe into statements may seem to be, and not seldom is, wasting the time of the Court but not always. What is called a severe cross-examination, when applied to truthful witness, only makes the truth stand out more clearly, and unless counsel is able to arrive in his own mind at a satisfactory opinion, it is far better to ask nothing than to flounder on with the chance of getting out something by a crowd of questions. A truthful witness usually adheres to the dry statement of facts, and avoids diverting attention by introducing irrelevant matter.

It is not always safe to press a question upon a witness who manifests a disinclination to answer. Whether it is or is not safe must depend upon the peculiar circumstances of the case. If it is apparent from the conduct of the witness, or from the general scope of his testimony, that his reluctance proceeds from a desire to give the examiner no comfort, then press the question with decision and energy. But it should never be assumed without good reason that this is the cause of his reluctance. If the reluctance proceeds from a fear that he will expose himself to censure or disgrace, do not press him if, while his answer may bring disgrace, it will also bring sympathy. If it brings sympathy, it will produce evil not easily remedied. The excitement of forensic contest must at times give rise to a certain degree of heat, and the warm blood of youth is apt to betray itself in altercation. But no one who has seen three decades of the law can fail to observe enormous improvement in the demeanour of counsel towards each other. Moreover, there is a remarkable absence of anything like malice or uncharitableness out of Court. Indeed, the profession, which is by no means the bed of roses which the public fondly imagine, has this to its advantage, that the friendships formed among its members are very numerous and very real. Side by side with the change in manners of counsel, one to another, there has also been an advance in courtesy towards the suitors and witnesses. There must be occasions on which it is necessary to press witnesses into admissions against themselves, and even to recall their past history, but this is now done with the desire to inflict as little pain as possible. No one wishes to arrogate to the Bar any special credit for these reforms. They are only part of the general tendency in the minds of the people at large towards pity for, rather than condemnation of, wrong doers. Indeed it is now a somewhat risky business to cross-examine a witness as to his past career with a view to his discredit, for the foreman of the jury will stand up and say "My Lord, has this anything to do with the case?" And then the counsel begins to think that the verdict is slipping away from his side. Neither the jury nor the public has the least idea how often the brief of counsel contains a mass of information about the suitors and the witnesses with the intention that this shall be used in cross-examination to their discredit, and how often the information is not used in spite of the pressure put upon counsel by the client.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

*In re, Mohaniraj Krishna Korhalkar.*Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 413 of 1929, Decided on 28th February 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 195 (b)—Plaintiff challenging evidence that might be produced in defence as being false and fabricated—Evidence not produced—In order to file complaint against other party under Ss. 192 and 193, Penal Code, no complaint by Court necessary.

Where a party who has brought a civil suit has not himself fabricated the evidence in relation to that suit but is challenging certain evidence the opposite party might produce against him, to his prejudice as being false and fabricated and is not produced and the party succeeds in the suit, party is entitled to file a complaint against the other party under Ss. 192 and 193, Penal Code, and it is not necessary that the Court should file complaint under S. 193 (b), Criminal P. C. : A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 105 and 89 Mad. 677, Dist. [P 771 C 2]

Chimanlal Setalvad and J. G. Rele—for Applicant.

V. D. Limaye—for Opponent.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—The facts leading to this application for revision are as follows : On 24th July 1924 the present applicant, Mohaniraj Krishna, purchased a house at Kopargaon from Raghunath Balvant Thombare. The sale deed contained certain recitals which are alleged to be untrue and prejudicial to the rights of Damodar Shivram Thombare, the present opponent, who is the owner of a neighbouring house. On 23rd October 1924 Damodar filed a civil suit against Mohaniraj for a declaration that the said recitals were false and fraudulent and for certain injunctions. On 19th April 1926 the Subordinate Judge made a decree declaring plaintiff Damodar's exclusive right to a plot of land between the houses of the parties and negating defendant Mohaniraj's right to do any act interfering with Damodar's enjoyment of the same. This decree involved a finding that the recitals in the sale deed were incorrect. Damodar then moved the Subordinate Judge to take proceedings against Mohaniraj for forgery, fabricating false evidence and perjury, under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application on 5th April 1927 holding that Ss. 476 and 195 (1) (b) of the Code did not apply and that Damodar could prosecute Mohaniraj without the intervention of the civil Court. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the order, but left it open to Damodar to apply again to the Subordinate Judge in respect of the allegation of perjury. A revision application made by Damodar to this Court was summarily rejected on 11th January 1928. Damodar then moved the Subordinate Judge again to take action under S. 476 in respect of the perjury allegation, but the Subordinate Judge rejected this application on 9th April 1929 and the District Judge in appeal confirmed that order on 1st August 1929.

In the meantime, on 10th June 1929 Damodar himself presented a criminal complaint against Mohaniraj and others in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, N. D. Nagar, for offences under Ss. 193 and 465 I. P. C. The offence under S. 193 is alleged to be not perjury but fabrication of false evidence the details given in the complaint being that the accused got false recitals in the aforesaid sale-deed made "with the object of securing benefit to themselves and with the object of causing wrongful loss to the complainant and with a view that this fabricated evidence might be of use to them in future."

The accused made an application to the Magistrate objecting that the trial could not proceed on the private complaint of Damodar by reason of S. 195(1) (b), Criminal P. C. which provides that no Court shall take cognizance of an offence under S. 193, I. P. C., when the offence is alleged to have been committed "in or in relation to any proceeding in any Court," except on the complaint of that Court or of a Court superior thereto. The Magistrate, on 2nd October 1929, overruled this objection and rejected the application. It appears from his order that he considered that he was bound by the High Court's order of 11th January 1928 and also that he held on the merits that S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., does not apply. It is this order of the Magistrate which Mohaniraj now asks us to revise.

It is sufficiently obvious, but should nevertheless be stated that we are not in any way concerned now with the motive of the complainant Damodar in launching this prosecution so long after the event, and that of course we cannot consider the merits of the case. Those are matters entirely outside the scope of this revision application. The only point we have to decide is whether the Magistrate is right in his view that S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., does not apply in the circumstances of this case; in other words, was the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused, viz., the fabrication of false recitals in the sale deed of 24th July 1924 committed "in relation to" the civil suit filed by Damodar in October 1924?

Counsel for the applicant Mohaniraj has relied on the following cases: In re, Vasudeo Ramchandra (1), Emperor v. Bhawani Das (2), Kanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan Das (3), and Re Parameswaran Nambudri (4). In In re, Vasudeo Ramchandra (1) it was held that the words "in relation to" in S. 195 (1) (b) are very general and are wide enough to cover a proceeding in contemplation before a Court though it may not have begun at the date when the offence was committed. But it was there found that the offence in question which was subornation of perjury related to proceedings which were clearly in contemplation at the time the offence was committed; and the decision will not govern the present case unless it is clear that Damodar's suit, or at any rate some proceeding in Court, was contemplated by the accused at the time of the execution of the sale deed and the recitals were inserted in the sale deed with reference thereto. In Emperor v. Bhawani Das (2) it was held that when once a document has been produced or given in evidence before a Court the sanction of that Court is necessary, notwithstanding that the offence alleged was committed before the document came into Court. Both that case, and Kanhaiya Lal v. Bhagwan (3), which followed it were cases under S. 195 (1) (c) in which the language to be construed is different. They are distinguishable on that ground and also on the ground that in the present case the document was not in fact produced in the civil proceeding. Mohaniraj refused to produce the sale deed in Damodar's suit, and it was the plaintiff who put in a copy of it. That is a circumstance which seems to me to have an important bearing on the question whether the alleged offence can be said to have been committed in relation to any proceeding in Court.

In Re, Parameswaran Nambudri (4) the facts were these: A complaint of false endorsement on a promissory note to prove a payment of Rs. 1,500 was made to a Second Class Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the case. It was transferred for trial to a First Class Magistrate and before the date of transfer the complainant in the criminal case had filed a suit on the promissory note. The Court held that the sanction of the civil Court was necessary under S. 195 (1) (b). There are some passages in the judgment in this case which may perhaps be said to support the very wide construction which the applicant wishes us to put upon this provision of the law. Thus Ayling, J., says in Re Parameswaran Nambudri (4), p. 678.

"If it were shown that the accused could have had no other object than the appearance of the endorsement in evidence in a case a suit should be brought on the promissory note, then I do not think the uncertainty at the time of writing the endorsement as to whether any suit would ever actually be brought affects the completeness of the offence."

Again, at p. 679:

"The object of this clause of the section seems to be to save the time of criminal Courts being wasted and accused persons being needlessly harassed by erecting a safeguard against rash, baseless or vexatious prosecutions for the offences specified. It aims at doing so by providing that where, prior to the institution of the criminal prosecution, a properly constituted judicial tribunal had placed itself in a position to determine whether the facts constituting the offence really exist, the criminal Court should decline cognizance unless that tribunal has, in effect, certified that in its opinion the complaint is one worthy of investigation. I see no reason why this safeguard should be limited to cases where the offence is committed pendente lite and should not extend to cases of fabrication of false evidence in advance."

But it is important to note that the Court appears to have been satisfied in that case that the accused could have had no other object than the appearance of the fabricated document in evidence in Court, and that the evidence was fabricated in advance, that is to say, in contemplation of the suit which was filed on the promissory note. I am not at all sure, therefore, that this decision really carries us any further than the decision of our own High Court in In re Vasudeo Ramchandra (1).

In the Madras case it appears that the suit on the promissory note was practically inevitable and that being so there is no difficulty in holding that the fabrication of the endorsement on the note was made "in relation to" the suit. But the position is by no means the same in the case with which we have to deal. We do not know how Damodar came to know about this sale deed, but there is no reason at all to suppose that Mohaniraj contemplated that a suit would be brought against him, except perhaps in the distant future, and as the learned Government Pleader on the opponent's behalf has pointed out, it would not be to his interest that there should be litigation about the matter until after the lapse of a considerable time. The suit being, as it appears, unexpectedly filed, Mohaniraj refrained from putting the document in evidence. It would, in my opinion, be a straining of the language of S. 195 (1) (b) to hold that in those circumstances the offence is alleged to have been committed "in relation to" the suit. As I have already mentioned the complaint does not allege an intention to use the evidence in a judicial proceeding.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the view taken by the Magistrate in this case is in accordance with law, and that the rule and interim stay should be discharged.

Mirza, J.—I agree.

The question we have to determine on this application is whether the offence of fabricating false evidence with which the applicant is charged in the complaint can be said to have been committed by the applicant in relation to a proceeding in Court, viz., Civil Suit No. 689 of 1924, brought by the opponent against the applicant in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Kopergaon, so as to require a complaint in writing by that Court or a Court superior to it, under the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. Sir Chimanlal Setalvad has put the applicant's contention before us on the broad ground that the intention of the legislature should be taken to be that no one is to be harassed with a criminal prosecution in respect of matters which have come before a civil Court except on a complaint in writing of the civil Court itself or a Court superior to it where those matters relate to offences which are set out in S. 195. No doubt the offence with which the applicant is charged in the complaint formed part of the subject-matter of the civil suit and the opinion of the civil Court whether the offence if committed, is of sufficient gravity to call for a written complaint by it would be a proper safeguard against the time of the criminal Court being occupied in a futile, unnecessary or trivial prosecution. But can it be said that the alleged offence was committed in relation to this suit?

It would be straining the language of the section too far in my opinion to apply it to a case such as here where the party who has brought the civil suit has not himself fabricated the evidence in relation to that suit but is challenging certain evidence the opposite party might adduce against him to his prejudice as being false and fabricated. The authorities to which our attention has been called do not seem to have gone so far except perhaps in Re, Parameswaran Nambudri (4), the facts of which case can be distinguished from the case before us. In that case a false endorsement had been fabricated on a promissory note with a view to resisting a claim which the holder of the note was expected to bring on the note. The maker of the false endorsement had made it with a view that it might be used on his behalf in resisting the suit that was to be brought against him on the note. In the case before us it cannot be reasonably urged that the applicant in fabricating the false evidence had in view that the fabricated evidence would be used by him in a proceeding that was in the contemplation of any party at the time. Lapse of considerable time would be necessary before the fabricated evidence could serve the purpose for which it was designed and it would not be unreasonable to suppose that if considerable delay did take place before the false and fabricated evidence was discovered there would be little likelihood of the party who might be prejudiced proceeding to challenge that evidence. As a matter of fact the applicant probably realizing the futility of the fabricated evidence which was so recent did not produce it in support of his defence. The opponent adduced a certified copy of the sale deed in evidence in order to challenge some of its recitals as being false and fabricated. It does not appear how the opponent came to know of the sale deed and the recitals it contained. It cannot be said in my opinion that when the false recitals were fabricated in the sale deed a proceeding of the nature subsequently taken by the opponent or any proceeding was in the contemplation of the applicant so as to bring this case within the ruling of our Court in In re, Vasudeo Ramchandra (1), which gives a wide and very general interpretation to the words "in relation to" appearing in S. 195 (1) (b), but which none the less requires that a proceeding should be in contemplation.

The view taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate appears to me to be correct. I agree that the rule and interim stay should be discharged.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

Bechardas Narotamdas and others—Applicants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 458 of 1929, with Revn. Applns. Nos. 459 to 461 and 508 of 1929, Decided on 30th March 1930, from orders of Sess. Judge, Broach.

(a) Bombay City Municipalities Act, Ss. 123 (7) and 118 (4)—Failure to remove building in respect of which person was convicted under S. 123 (7) or S. 118 (4) is not "continuing contravention."

The failure to remove a building in respect of which a person has been convicted under S. 123 (7) or S. 118 (4) is not a continuing contravention within the meaning of those sections, as the words "continuing contravention" refer to some further construction subsequent to the first conviction and not merely failure to pull down or remove a building in respect of which a conviction has been had: Marshall v. Smith, (1878) 8 G. P. 416 and Welsh & Son v. West Ham Corporation (1900) 1 Q. B. 324 and A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 336, Foll. [P 779 C 1]

(b) Bombay City Municipalities Act, S. 200—Limitation for prosecution for continuing offence begins when offence is first committed.

Limitation for a prosecution for a continuing offence runs from the time when the offence was first committed, or where the offence consists in the failure to remove a building after conviction, from the date of the conviction: 37 Cal. 545 and A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 401, Rel. on.

[P 779 C 2]

(c) Bombay City Municipalities Act, S. 123—Direct method provided by the Act—Indirect and capricious method cannot be deemed to have been contemplated by legislature.

When the Act provides a direct, straightforward and perfectly effective method of securing the removal of a building which has been erected in contravention of the law, there is no reason why the legislature should be supposed to have provided an alternative method which is indirect and liable to become both capricious and oppressive. [P 778 C 2]

(d) Words and Phrases—Expressions "continuing offence" and "continuing contravention" mean same thing.

The expressions "continuing offence" and "continuing contravention" must mean the same thing since in each case the offence consists of contravention of certain rules.

[P 778 C 2]

R. J. Thakor—for Applicants.

G. N. Thakor and H. D. Thakor—for the Crown.

Mirza, J.—These are five revisional applications against the orders of the Sessions Judge of Broach who has confirmed the convictions of the applicants by the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Broach, for certain offences under the Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925, but has varied the sentences originally imposed. The applications have been heard together.

In Revision Application No. 460 of 1929, the facts found were that the applicant had in 1927 constructed a house without previously obtaining the permission of the Broach Municipality in that behalf. The Broach Municipality prosecuted the applicant for the offence and the applicant was convicted and fined Rs. 100 on 10th October 1927. On 30th April 1929, the municipality filed the present complaint alleging that the house constructed by the applicant and allowed to remain undemolished by her was a continuing contravention of the provisions of S. 123 (7), Bombay City Municipalities Act. The First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate who tried the case convicted the applicant of an offence under S. 123 (7) and sentenced her to pay a fine at the rate of eight annas per day from 21st October 1927 to 30th April 1929. The appeal Court confirmed the conviction but reduced the fine to four annas per day for a period of six months only.

The two main grounds taken up in revision are (1) that the lower Court have erred in their interpretation of S. 123 (7), and (2) that the lower Courts have erred in holding that the cause of action for the complaint had arisen from day to day. S. 123 (7), Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925, inter alia, provides as follows:

"Whoever begins any construction . . . in any . . . respect contrary to the provisions of this Act or of any bye-law in force thereunder, shall be punished . . . and in the case of a continuing contravention of any of the aforesaid provisions, he shall be liable to an additional fine which may extend to ten rupees for each day during which such contravention continues after conviction for the first such contravention; and the Chief Officer may

(a) direct that the construction, . . . be stopped, and

(b) upon a conviction being obtained under sub-Cl. 7 by written notice, require such construction, . . . to be altered or demolished in accordance with the provisions of such notice."

It is contended on behalf of the opponents, that the words used in the latter part of sub-S. (7), S. 123 "in the case of a continuing contravention of any of the aforesaid provisions" would include a building which has been completed in contravention of the provisions of the Act and has since been allowed to remain undemolished. The provisions regarding the continuing contravention of the provisions of the Act which appear in sub-S. (7), S. 123, were not contained in the corresponding S. 96 (5), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. It is contended* on behalf of the opponent that the object of the amendment was to give the municipality an additional remedy against a party who has completed a building in contravention of the provisions of the Bombay City Municipalities Act, and has not afterwards demolished it. The Sessions Judge observes:

"Section 96 (5), Bombay District Municipal Act, had not provided for punishment of a continuing contravention of the provisions of the section. The present Act makes good the deficiency . . .

"In amending the Act the object of the legislature seems to provide the municipalities with more than one mode of having offenders punished. The municipality could ask for a fine for a continuing contravention and also the Chief Officer could ask for the demolition of the building by giving a written notice. If this be the intention of the legislature it is reasonable to suppose that the legislature did not merely intend that the offence of a continuing contravention should be restricted to a building before it reaches a stage of completion, but also intended that the building, when completed, should come within its scope. There is no reason why in the case of uncompleted buildings the municipality could have the power to get the offender punished for a continuing offence and also to have the building demolished by giving notice and in the case of completed buildings it should have the power of having the buildings demolished only."

The language of S. 123 (7) would not, in my opinion, justify the construction placed on it by the Sessions Judge. There are no express words used which would indicate that a building when completed in contravention of the Act and allowed to remain is to be regarded as a continuing contravention of the provisions of the Act. Had it been the intention of the legislature to provide a remedy by way of imposing a fine in addition to the right the municipality has of requiring a structure so completed to be altered or demolished, one would expect to find clear words to that effect in this section. It does not seem to follow that because the words "continuing contravention" used in this section are new therefore the legislature intended that the words should apply to a completed structure.

Halsbury in the article on Public Health and Local Administration, Vol. 23 (Laws of England), para 828, p. 425, states:

"Where an authority may under the statutory provision pull down or remove any work begun or executed in contravention of any bye-law, or where the beginning or execution of the work is an offence punishable under a bye-law by penalty, the existence of the work during its continuance in such a form or state as to be in contravention of the bye-law is deemed to be a continuing offence."

In the footnote to this paragraph he states:

"Continuing to build in contravention of bye-laws might be a continuing offence; but without the provision in the text, supra, mere omission to pull down would not."

A reference is made for this statement of the law to the leading case of Marshall v. Smith (1), where the Court had to construe certain bye-laws made by the Local Board of Sunderland under the Public Health Act, 1848, S. 115, and the Local Government Act, 1858, S. 34, by one of which all party walls, except in houses of one storey, were required, under a penalty of 40s., to be nine inches at least in thickness, and by another of which it was provided that:

"In case any offence under any of the foregoing bye-laws shall continue, the person offending shall be liable to a further penalty of not exceeding 40s. for each day during which such offence shall continue after written notice of the offence has been given by the Local Board to the offender."

The appellant before the Court had been previously convicted and fined for having built a party wall of four and a half inches in thickness instead of nine inches. He was afterwards convicted upon an information which charged him with a continuing offence and was again fined. The Court of Common Pleas held in appeal that suffering the party wall to remain unaltered was not a "continuing offence" within the bye-law, or if it was, that the bye-law was unreasonable, the appropriate remedy being the removal of the structure by the Board, as authorized by S. 34, Local Government Act, 1858. In consequence of this decision the legislature intervened and expressly enacted that the continuance of a completed structure under such circumstances would be regarded as a "continuing offence."

In Welsh & Son v. West Ham Corporation (2) Channell, J., has observed on this point (p. 328):

"I can entertain no possible doubt that S. 158, Public Health Act, 1875, was passed in order to meet the case of Marshall v. Smith (1), in which the Court held that suffering a wall built of a less thickness than required by a bye-law to remain unaltered was not a continuing offence."

In The Corporation of Calcutta v. Ananta Dhar (3), the petitioner had been previously convicted under Cl. 1, R. 7, Sch. 17, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, for having put new golpata leaves upon the old frame of the roof of his hut. Subsequently he was prosecuted on the allegation that inasmuch as he had not pulled down the golpata leaves or altered it in accordance with the requirements of R. 7, Sch. 17 of the Act, he was guilty of a continuing offence and was liable to a daily fine. Rankin, C. J., and Ghose, J., held that suffering the roof to remain unaltered was not a continuation of the offence of making the roof within the meaning of S. 488, sub-S. (2). Rankin, C. J., observed in his judgment (p. 698):

"The leading case on this subject is the case of Marshall v. Smith (1), and in that case which has never been dissented from in England it was held under a very similar clause that the offence consisted in the building of the wall. It was also held that a mere failure to pull down a wall or rebuild it in accordance with the statutory requirements was not a continuation of that offence. In consequence of that decision S. 158, Public Health Act, 1875 was made to provide that "where the beginning or the execution of the work is an offence in respect whereof the offender is liable in respect of any bye-law to a penalty the existence of the work during its continuance in such a form and state as to be in contravention of the bye-law shall be deemed to be a continuing offence." No such provision has been incorporated into the Calcutta Municipal Act and if, therefore, we are to hold that the conduct of the opposite party in suffering the roof to remain is a continuation of the offence of making the roof we have to do a certain amount of violence to the language of Cl. (2), S. 488. It is plain as a matter of right reason that suffering the roof to remain is not a continuation of the offence committed, i. e., of making the roof.

The reasoning in this judgment, in my opinion, would equally apply to the construction to be put on S. 123 (7), Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925. I would hold, therefore, that by allowing the structure to remain undemolished the applicant has not committed a continuing offence under S. 123 (7), Bombay Act 18 of 1925.

The second question which arises on this application is whether the prosecution was competent having regard to the proviso to S. 200, Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925, which provides that no prosecution for an offence under this Act or bye-laws framed under it shall be instituted except within six months next after the commission of such offence. The prosecution was instituted long after the expiry of six months from the date of the commencement of the offence if allowing the completed building to remain undemolished is to be treated as an offence. It is contended on behalf of the opponent that this was a continuing offence and therefore the rule about bringing a prosecution within six months would not apply to it. The Sessions Judge held that S. 200 would be applicable although this was a continuing offence. He observes:

"A continuing offence is a fresh one and every day it gives rise to a cause of action. The municipality could therefore ask for the infliction of a fine for a period of six months next preceding the complaint."

For that reason the Sessions Judge modified the order of the First Class Magistrate by restricting the fine to a period of six months after reducing the daily quantum. In The Queen v. Slade (4) the appeal Court held that the limitation of six months, within which complaint must be made, imposed by S. 11. Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, applied proceedings for acting contrary to a closing order, in breach of S. 5, sub-S. 9, Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and therefore, a conviction for such an offence, which imposed a fine in respect of every day during a period exceeding six calendar months, was bad. Wills, J., in his judgment observes, p. 248:

"We cannot take the conviction to pieces, so as to reduce the penalty by the amount imposed in respect of those eleven days, and uphold the remainder of the order. In the present case the Magistrate has made no mistake which can be the subject of an amendment such as we have been invited to make. Mr. Saunders was convicted in respect of the whole period of 193 days, and the penalty was imposed in respect of the whole of that period. The motion for a certiorari was made and granted on this ground only and the conviction must be quashed."

In my judgment this case is an authority for holding that a prosecution such as in the case before us was not competent as having been brought six months after the date of the commencement of the alleged offence and that the Magistrate's order imposing a fine for a period in excess of six months could not be cured by restricting it to the six months last preceding as the Sessions Judge has done.

In Narain Chandra Chatterjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (5) Jenkins, C. J., expressed the following opinion (p. 548):

Had the bye-law been correctly framed, it would have been a question whether limitation would not run from the time when the offence was first committed, for it is to be noticed that the words of the section are that the complaint must be made within three months next after the commission of such offence. There are authorities which bear on that point, but the question does not arise in the view I take of this case, and I therefore do no more now than guard myself against being taken to accede to the argument that has been addressed to us on that point.

This expression of opinion by the learned Chief Justice is referred to and not dissented from by Fawcett, J., in Emperor v. Chhaganlal (6). At p. 738 (of 29 B. L. R.), Fawcett, J., observes:

We still have to consider whether the effect of the proviso to S. 161 (1) necessitates a qualification, by enacting that the prosecution must be within six months of the time when the alleged offence was first committed. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, when Chief Justice at Calcutta, seems to have been inclined to answer that question in the affirmative, because of the use of the words "next" after the commission of such offence, implying that the six months should be from the very commencement of the offence in question. He did not, however, actually decide that point, because the decision of the Court was on a different question. I refer to Narain Chandra Chatterjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (5).

With great respect I am prepared to accept the view to which Sir Lawrence Jenkins inclined in Narain Chandra Chatterjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (5) as the correct view. The intention of the legislature appearing in the language of S. 200, Bombay Municipalities Act, 1925, seems to have been that the period of six months within which prosecutions should be brought for contravention of any provisions of the Act should apply to all contraventions continuing as well as not continuing. It would be unjust and unreasonable, in my opinion, to put any other construction on this section. If the view of the lower Court on this point were to be accepted as correct it would be open to a municipality after any period to bring a prosecution against the owner of a completed building, built in contravention of the provisions of the Act and get the owner fined for a period of six months. This, in my opinion, could not have been the intention of the legislature. I would hold on this point that the period of six months within which a prosecution has to be brought under S. 200 of the Act is in the case of a continuing offence to be computed from the commencement of the offence when it came to the notice of the municipality. On both these grounds the conviction and sentence should be set aside and the fine, if paid, should be refunded to the applicants.

In Revision Application No. 458 of 1929 the applicants have been convicted under Ss. 118 (4) and 123 (7) of Bombay Act 18 of 1925. The applicants were prosecuted for building within the alignment line and in excess of the permission granted to them by the Broach City Municipality. They were convicted on 23rd November 1927, and fined Rs. 150. They were prosecuted also under Ss. 118 and 143 for putting up a balcony in excess of the permission granted to them and were convicted and fined Rs. 75. The present convictions were in respect of the completed building and the completed balcony having been allowed to remain undemolished. S. 118 (4) provides:

"Whoever contravenes the provisions of sub-S. (3) shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and, in the case of a continuing contravention with an additional fine which may extend to Rs. 10....."

For the reasons I have already given in construing the proviso to S. 123 (7) I hold that a continuing contravention would not cover the case of a completed building or balcony. The convictions and sentences in this case should be set aside and the fine, if paid, be refunded to the applicants.

In Revision Application No. 459 of 1929, the same applicants have been convicted under Ss. 118 (4) and 143 (2) (b), Bombay Act 18 of 1925 in respect of a building and a balcony which were both completed by them before the prosecution was instituted. S. 143 (2) (b) provides:

"Any such owner or occupier putting up any projection as aforesaid without such permission or in contravention of such permission or orders shall be punished with fine which may extend to twenty-five rupees, and if any such owner or occupier fails to remove any projection in respect of which he has been convicted under this section, he shall be punished with further fine which may extend to five rupees for each day on which such failure or neglect continues."

As the prosecution was brought six months after the first commission of the continuing offence, for reasons I have already given, I hold it was not competent under S. 200 of the Act. The convictions and sentences should be set aside, and the fines, if paid, be refunded to the applicants.

In Revision Application No. 461 of 1929 the applicant was convicted under circumstances similar to those in Criminal Revision Application No. 460 of 1929, under Ss. 118 (4) and 123 (7), Bombay Act 18 of 1925. For reasons already given I hold the convictions and sentences should be set aside, and the fines, if paid, be refunded to the applicant.

In Revision Application No. 508 of 1929, the applicant has been convicted under circumstances similar to those in Criminal Revision Application No. 459, of 1929 of offences under Ss. 118 (4) and 143 (2) (b), Bombay Act 18 of 1925. For reasons already given I hold the convictions and sentences should be set aside and the fines, if paid, be refunded to the applicant.

Broomfield, J.—These five applications for revision, Nos. 458 to 461 and 508 of 1929 involve common points of law and may be disposed of together. The applicants, who reside within the limits of the Municipality of Broach, were all prosecuted for erecting buildings in contravention of the provisions of the Bombay City Municipalities Act 18 of 1925 and were convicted and fined on various dates in October and November 1927. We are not now concerned with those convictions. On 30th April 1929, they were again prosecuted, not for any further constructions (it is admitted that no further building was done after the first convictions), but for not having removed the buildings in respect of which they had been convicted. In one case the conviction was under S. 123 (7) of the Act, in two cases under that section and S. 118 (4) and in two cases under S. 118 (4) and S. 143 (2).

Section 123 is a general provision relating to the construction of new buildings. Cl. (7) of it is as follows:

"Whoever begins any construction, alteration, addition or reconstruction without giving the notice required by sub-S. (1) or without furnishing any plan, information or particulars required by or under this section, or except as provided in sub-S. (5), without awaiting or in any manner contrary to such legal orders of the Chief Officer may be issued under this section, or contrary to the provisions of sub-S. (5) or (6) or in any other respect contrary to the provision of this Act or of any bye-law in force thereunder, shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees; and in the case of a continuing contravention of any of the aforesaid provisions, he shall be liable to an additional fine which may extend to ten rupees for each day during which such contravention continues after conviction for the first such contravention and the Chief Officer may,

(a) direct that the construction, alteration, addition or re-construction be stopped, and

(b) upon a conviction being obtained under sub-Cl. 7 by written notice, require such construction, alteration, addition or re-construction to be altered or demolished in accordance with the provisions of such notice."

Section 118 relates to buildings within the regular line of a public street.

Cl. (3) (a) provides:

"Except under the provisions of S. 143 no person shall construct or reconstruct any portion of any building within the regular line of the public street without the permission of the Chief Officer under S. 123."

Clause (4) provides:

"Whoever contravenes the provisions of sub-S. (3) shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and, in the case of a continuing contravention with an additional fine which may extend to ten rupees for every day during which such contravention continues after the conviction for the first such contravention, and the Chief Officer may

(a) direct that the building be stopped, and

(b) with the previous sanction of the Standing Committee, by written notice, require such building or portion thereof to be altered or demolished in accordance with the provisions of such notice."

Section 143 requires the permission of the Chief Officer to be obtained for certain projections over public streets, and Cl. (2) (b) is as follows:

"Any such owner or occupier putting up any projection as aforesaid without such permission or in contravention of such permission or orders, shall be punished with fine which may extend to twenty-five rupees and if any such owner or occupier fails to remove any projection in respect of which he has been convicted under this section, he shall be punished with further fine which may extend to five rupees for each day on which such failure or neglect continues."

The trial Magistrate convicted the applicants and fined them eight annas a day from the date of the first conviction to the date of the second complaint, a period of about eighteen months. On appeal the Sessions Judge reduced the amount of the daily fines, and also reduced the period to six months, but confirmed the convictions. The period was reduced to six months, by reason of S. 200 of the Act, in which it is enacted in the proviso to Cl. (1):

"that no prosecution for an offence under this Act or bye-laws framed thereunder shall be instituted except within six months next after the commission of such offence."

The first point raised by Mr. R. J. Thakor for the applicants is that there has been no "continuing contravention" of the provisions of the Act. He argues that these words in Ss. 123 (7) and 118 (4) must refer to some further construction subsequent to the first conviction, and not merely to the failure to pull down or remove a building in respect of which a conviction has been had. I think this is the correct view. It appears to me to be the most natural interpretation of the words, considered in their context and in relation to the other provisions of the Act. The original offence made punishable by S. 123 (7) is the beginning of any construction, alteration, addition or reconstruction contrary to the provisions of the Act or any bye-law. The original offence made punishable by S. 118 (3) is the construction or reconstruction of any portion of a building within the regular line of the public street without permission. Any further construction of the building can quite fairly be described as a continuance of the original offence. But if the building is completed at the time of the first conviction it is difficult to see how the offence described as above can be held to continue, or how there can be said to be a continuing contravention of the prohibitions. It would have been very easy for the legislature to make the failure to remove the building a punishable offence also, as has been done as a matter of fact in S. 143, and as was done in S. 472, City of Bombay Municipal Act 3 of 1888. That section is as follows:

"Whoever, after having been convicted of (a) contravening any provision of any of the sections, subsections or clauses mentioned in the first column of the following table, or of any regulation made thereunder, or (b) failing to comply with any requisition lawfully made upon him under any of the said sections . . .

continues to contravene the said provision or to neglect to comply with the said requisition, or fails to remove or rectify any work or thing done in contravention of the said provision, as the case may be, shall be punished, for each day that he continues so to offend. . . ."

The language of this section is interesting because it provides both for a continuing contravention and, separately, for failure to remove an offending building, the implication being that the latter would not be included in the former. No doubt it does not necessarily follow that the words "continuing contravention" in Ss. 123 and 118 of the Act we are considering have the same restricted meaning as in the City of Bombay Municipal Act. But I think the language employed in the latter does afford some support to the applicants' contention that the restricted meaning suggested by them is the natural one.

On the other hand I do not think that Mr. G. N. Thakor, who appears for the municipality, gains anything by the comparison which he asks to make between the language of S. 123 (7) and that of S. 96 (5) in the District Municipal Act of 1901, to which S. 123 (7) corresponds. The offence made punishable by the old S. 96 (5) was the beginning or making of any building or alteration or addition contrary to the provisions of the Act or of any bye-law. There was no provision about a continuing contravention, but the insertion of that provision in the new S. 123 (7) does not seem to imply in any way that it was meant to cover a mere failure to remove a building erected contrary to the provisions of the Act. In fact a comparison of the language of the two sections rather suggests that the provision about continuing contravention is meant to apply to further construction of a building after the first beginning. The words in S. 96 (5) of the Act of 1901 are "whoever begins or makes any building ..." Fawcett, J., in Emperor v. Chhaganlal (6) said (p. 737 of 29 B. L. R.):

"I think that due effect should be given to the words "or makes" in S. 96 (5). They show that it is not only the mere beginning of a building that is punishable, but its continuance even to completion without the requisite permission. . . . In other words, it is a continuing offence."

Now in the new S. 123 (7) these words "or makes" do not appear; and the provision about continuing contravention was necessary, therefore, to cover the case of a building which has not merely been begun but continued even to completion in contravention of the Act.

The insertion of the provision about continuing contravention in S. 123 (7) can, therefore, be perfectly well explained without supposing that it was intended to cover the failure to remove a building. Moreover, there does not appear to be the slightest necessity for such a wide construction of the words. The new Act, like the old, gives the municipality ample powers for dealing with buildings constructed in contravention of the Act or bye-laws. S. 123 (7) itself provides that the Chief Officer may by notice require that the offending building be demolished. Failure to comply with such a notice is punishable under S. 193, and under S. 192 the Chief Officer may, if necessary, demolish the building himself and recover the cost.

There is this further point to be noticed. Cases may not infrequently occur when it is not necessary to go so far as to demolish a building because of a contravention of the building rules. The person responsible may have to be prosecuted and fined, because the law must be maintained; but sometimes that may be enough, and the building may be allowed to stand. If, besides being fined, the owner is also to be required to demolish the building, he may fairly expect that he will be so informed by a notice, otherwise how is he to know what his position is? If no notice is sent, it would surely be most unreasonable that the municipality should be able to come down upon him after 18 months, or even within six months (to adopt the Sessions Judge's view of what is permitted by the Act), and get him fined so much a day for the whole period. That seems to me to be the obvious answer to the construction placed upon these sections by the Sessions Judge, namely, that they give the municipality a choice of remedies. When the Act provides a direct, straightforward and perfectly effective method of securing the removal of a building which has been erected in contravention of the law, there is no reason why the legislature should be supposed to have provided an alternative method which is indirect and liable to become both capricious and oppressive.

We have not been referred to any authority which is inconsistent with what is on the face of it the natural interpretation of the words "continuing contravention." But the case of Marshall v. Smith (1) is a very good authority in support of it. The facts there were that Marshall was convicted and fined for building a wall four and a half inches in thickness, in contravention of a bye-law requiring party walls to be nine inches at least in thickness. He was afterwards convicted under another bye-law which provided that:

"In case any offence under any of the foregoing bye-laws shall continue, the person offending shall be liable to a further penalty . . . for each day during which such offence shall continue."

It was held that the failure to remove the wall was not a continuing offence and that the conviction was bad. An attempt was made to distinguish this case on the ground that the words in the bye-law were "continuing offence," not "continuing contravention." But as in each case the offence consists of the contravention of certain rules the two expressions must mean the same thing. It was also pointed out that in consequence of the decision in Marshall v. Smith (1) a new S. 158, Public Health Act, 1875, was enacted, which provided that :

"where an urban authority may under this section pull down or remove any work . . . the existence of the work during its continuance in such a form and state as to be in contravention of the bye-law shall be deemed to be a continuing offence, but a penalty shall not be incurred in respect thereof after the expiration of one year from the day when the offence was committed or the bye-law was broken."

Since that change in the law the position of course is different in England. But there is no provision corresponding to the above S. 158 in the Act with which we have to deal. Marshall v. Smith (1) was cited by Rankin, C. J., in The Corporation of Calcutta v. Ananta Dhar (3) (p. 698 of 32 C. W. N.) as "the leading case . . . which has never been dissented from in England," and he held in the case before him that where the Calcutta Municipal Act made it an offence to make a roof or external wall of inflammable materials, the suffering the roof to remain after conviction was not a continuation of the offence.

I hold, therefore, that the failure to remove a building in respect of which a person has been convicted under S. 123 (7) or 118 (4) is not a continuing contravention within the meaning of those sections. The conviction of the applicants in Applications Nos. 458, 460 and 461 is illegal and must be set aside.

As regards S. 143 (2) (b), on the other hand, the language appears to me to be perfectly explicit :

" . . . if any such owner or occupier fails to remove any projection in respect of which he has been convicted under this section, he shall be punished with further fine . . . "

It was urged that the words "after notice to remove it" should be understood, but the words are plain and unambiguous, and there is no need to imply any such proviso. The convictions under this section in Applications Nos. 459 and 508 are correct; or rather would be correct, provided that the prosecutions were not time-barred.

That brings us to the consideration of S. 200. The trial Magistrate does not seem to have considered the point of limitation. At any rate there is nothing about it in his order; the cases were tried summarily. The Sessions Judge took the view that as the offences are continuing ones (and the offence under S. 143 (2) (b) is a continuing one) a fresh cause of action arises everyday. The other view, which is the one contended for by the applicants, is that the words "within six months next after the commission of such offence" mean, in the case of a continuing offence, within six months after the first commission thereof. The words would seem to be capable of either construction. But the construction which found favour with the Sessions Judge involves what seems to me the very unreasonable result that there would be practically no bar of limitation at all. The Municipality might do nothing for ten years, or for 50 years, and then, as long as the building continued to exist, might prosecute and recover a fine for the preceding period of six months. This process, moreover, might apparently be continued indefinitely, and turned into a source of revenue. It is pretty obvious, I think, that that is not what the legislature intended. The question of the proper construction of a limitation clause of this kind has arisen before, but, so far as the authorities cited to us are concerned, it has not been necessary to decide it. In Narain Chandra Chatterjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (5) there had been a prosecution for failure to comply with a notice to remove an obstruction on a public street, under a bye-law. The bye-law was held to be ultra vires in so far as it created a continuing offence after notice. But Jenkins, C. J. said (p. 548):

"Had the bye-law been correctly framed, it would have been a question whether limitation would not run from the time when the offence was first committed, for it is to be noticed that the words of the section are that the complaint must be made within three months next after the commission of such offence. There are authorities which bear on the point, but the question does not arise in the view I take of this case, and I therefore do no more now than guard myself against being taken to accede to the argument that has been addressed to us on that point."

These remarks of Sir Lawrence Jenkins were referred to by Fawcett, J. in Emperor v. Chhaganlal (6), which I have already cited in another connexion. Fawcett, J. said (p. 738 of 29 B. L. R.):

"We still have to consider whether the effect of the proviso to S. 161 (1) (of the Act of 1903) necessitates a qualification, by enacting that the prosecution must be within six months of the time, when the alleged offence was first committed. Sir Lawrence Jenkins . . . seems to have been inclined to answer that question in the affirmative He did not, however, actually decide that point. . . ."

"Nor did Fawcett, J., himself decide it, as it was not necessary to do so in that case either. But in the present case the point must be decided one way or the other, and in my opinion it should be decided in the sense that limitation for a prosecution for a continuing offence runs from the time when the offence was first committed, or, where the offence consists in the failure to remove a building after conviction, from the date of the conviction. The other construction might, as I have shown, have unreasonable consequences. In this connexion I may refer again to S. 158, English Public Health Act, 1875, which was enacted in consequence of the decision in Marshall v. Smith (1). I have quoted the section already; it is given in Welsh & Son v. West Ham Corporation (2). It seems to me worth noting that, though this provision was expressly enacted in order to make the mere existence of a work or building a continuing offence, it was also enacted at the same time that a penalty should not be incurred in respect thereof after the expiration of one year from the day when the offence was committed or the bye-law was broken. I do not think it can be doubted that those words mean that time runs from the first commission of the offence, and does not begin to run from day to day as long as the work or building is in existence. As the prosecution in all these cases was not instituted until more than 18 months after the first conviction, the second convictions are illegal, including the convictions under S. 143 (2). I would, therefore, set aside the convictions in all the cases and direct that the fines, if paid be, refunded.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

In re, Sama Jetha.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 37 of 1930, Decided on 27th March 1930, from decision of City Magistrate, First Class, Surat.

Criminal P. C., S. 488 (8)—Husband last residing with wife for two months at parents-in-law as "Gharjamai".—Sub-S. (8) includes such residence.

The words "last resided" are not restricted to permanent residence but include also a temporary residence of two months with wife at the house of parents-in-law as "gharjamai" as to confer jurisdiction on the Court of that place: 18 Cr. L. J. 706 and A.I.R. 1927 All. 291, Foll., A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 268, Dist.: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 410, Coys. [P 781 C 2]

U. L. Shah—for Petitioner.

N. K. Desai and K. M. Metha—for Opponent.

Mirza, J.—This is an application for revision of an order of the City Magistrate, First Class, Surat Sub-Division, ordering the applicant to pay to the opponent Rs. 12 per month for maintenance under the provisions of S. 488, Criminal P. C. The applicant contends that the Court at Surat had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. The applicant is a permanent resident of Bombay. He has been in the employment of the Bombay Municipality for more than twenty-five years last and is in receipt of a salary of Rs. 24 per month from that body. He has a wife by regular marriage who resides with him in Bombay. Five years ago he married the opponent at Surat as his natra wife. After the marriage the opponent resided with the applicant in Bombay as his wife along with the applicant's first wife. The opponent was ill-treated by the applicant and his first wife, and as the opponent and the applicant could not live amicably together at Bombay, the applicant called his mother-in-law from Surat and sent the opponent with her mother to go and reside at Surat. Later the applicant followed the opponent to Surat and resided with her in the house of his mother-in-law for one or two months. The parties became reconciled and the opponent accompanied the applicant back to Bombay on his promising to be of good behaviour and two persons having put themselves forward as sureties for the applicant's good behaviour towards the opponent while in Bombay. Quarrels having again ensued between the parties the applicant after some time took the opponent back to Surat and left her there with her mother. The opponent has lived with her mother since then in Surat for the last three years during which period the applicant has not been maintaining the opponent. The letter Ex. 2 (1), from the applicant to the opponent before these proceedings shows that the applicant has ceased to entertain any affection for the opponent and no longer wants her for his wife. It is common ground that when these proceedings were taken the applicant was not residing at Surat, and the summons in consequence was served on him in Bombay.

Clause (8), S. 488 is as follows:

"Proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife."

It was admitted by the applicant before the Magistrate that he last resided with the opponent as his wife at Surat when he took her there three years ago. It is contended, however, that this residence of the applicant at Surat was a temporary residence and Cl. (8), S. 488, should not be made applicable to the case of a husband who has temporarily resided with his wife at another place when he had a permanent residence elsewhere. In his deposition before the Magistrate the applicant admitted that he resided with the opponent on this occasion for two months. It is also shown that in a letter he wrote at the time the applicant stated that he was residing in the house of his mother-in-law at Surat as a "gharjamai", which expression means a son-in-law who resides permanently with his parents-in-law as a member of their family.

There is nothing in the language of S. 488 (8) which would indicate that the term "last resided" should be restricted to a permanent residence. In In re, Khairunnissa (1) Patkar, J., on a review of the authorities on the subject has thus summarized their effect at p. 933 of his judgment:

"It would follow from these decisions that where the husband and wife had a fixed place of abode or a permanent place of residence, a casual or temporary residence in any other place would not confer jurisdiction on the Court situate at that place."

Wild, J., in a separate but concurring judgment, expressed the following opinion (p. 935):

"The meaning of the words 'last resided' in S. 488 have apparently not been construed by this Court and I would prefer to follow the ruling in Mrs. E. H. Jolly v. St. John William Jolly (2), where it was held that temporary residence was sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction under sub-S. (8), S. 488. It is difficult enough for a wife to recover maintenance from her husband who refuses to maintain her and to give a strict interpretation to the words "last resided" in S. 488 would render the difficulty even greater."

Mr. Shah has tried to distinguish the case of Mr. E. H. Jolly v. St. John William Jolly (2) on the ground that at the date of the application by the wife the husband was as a matter of fact in Calcutta where the application was made. That consideration does not seem to me to have been the determining factor in the decision. The case of Mrs. E. H. Jolly v. St. John William Jolly (2), seems to me to be a direct authority on the point that the residence of the husband though temporary would give jurisdiction to the Court.

In Sher Singh v. Amir Kunwar (3) Ashworth, J. held that a stay of two months in a temporary place of residence with occasional visits during that period to the permanent place of residence can be regarded as amounting to a "residence" within the meaning of S. 488, Criminal P. C. He held that the expression "resided" in Cl. (9) [now clause (8)] of this section includes a temporary residence and is not to be confined to permanent residence. This case seems to me to be another direct authority on the point and goes against the contention of Mr. Shah. The facts of the present case are stronger than were the facts in Sher Singh v. Amir Kunwar (3), for here the applicant resided with the opponent for an unbroken period of two months at Surat and left her only when he was being asked to sign a document in favour of the opponent. We are of opinion that the meaning of S. 488, sub-S. (8), should not be confined to a permanent residence but should also include a temporary residence of the nature established by the evidence in this case.

In the course of the trial the applicant made an offer that he would maintain the opponent if she went and lived with him in Bombay and would allow her Rs. 20 per month for the joint maintenance of herself and the applicant, giving the remaining Rs. 4 of his salary to his first wife for her separate maintenance.

(2) [1917] 18 Cr. L. J. 706=40 I. C. 706.

(3) A. I. R. 1927 All. 901=101 I. C. 670=29 Cr. L. J. 494=49 All. 479.

This offer was declined by the opponent. The Magistrate was satisfied from the evidence before him that the applicant's offer was not a bona fide one. We see no sufficient reason to take a different view on this point.

It has been urged by Mr. Shah that Rs. 12 per month for maintenance is an excessive amount having regard to the salary of the applicant which is only Rs. 24. As the opponent according to the findings has been ill-treated in the past by the applicant, and has had no maintenance allowance from him during the last three years, we do not feel disposed to interfere with the discretion which the Magistrate has exercised in awarding Rs. 12 for maintenance to the opponent. The Rule is discharged.

Broomfield, J.—I agree. There is nothing in the language of S. 488, Cl. (8) which makes it necessary, and if it is not necessary it is for obvious reasons undesirable to assign a strict or technical meaning to the words "last resided" in that clause or to treat those words as denoting permanent residence only. Mrs. E. H. Jolly v. St. John William Jolly (2) is a good authority for the proposition that temporary residence is sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction. That case was approved of by Wild, J., in In re, Khairunnissa (1) and does not appear to have been dissented from by Patkar, J., in his judgment in the same case. Sher Singh v. Amir Kunwar (3), is a decision of a Judge of the High Court at Allahabad to the same effect. In that case Ramdei v. Jhunni Lal (4), which was relied upon by Mr. Shah, has been distinguished, and it is clear that the circumstances there were quite different from those in the case before us. It appeared that the husband had merely taken his wife to her relations in a place where he did not reside in order to leave her there, and stayed with her for a week only. The present applicant's stay with his wife at Surat for two months in the circumstances described by my learned brother can fairly be said to amount to residence with her at Surat. As regards the other points in the case I have nothing to add to what my learned brother has said.

W. B. Pradhan—for the Crown.

G. N. Thakor, Barot and H. D. Thakor—for Accused.

Mirza, J.—This is an application for revision of a conviction and sentence of the applicants by the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Broach, for an offence in the case of applicants 1, 2 and 3 under S. 4, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, and in the case of applicants 4 and 5 for an offence under S. 5 of the same Act. The District Magistrate, Broach, has made a reference to this Court recommending that the sentences of applicants 1 and 2 may be enhanced. The application and reference have been heard together. The applicants were found in a house when the complainant, the Home Inspector of Police, entered it under a warrant issued to him by the District Superintendent of Police under the provisions of S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. On making a search of the house the Inspector found certain papers and account books which were of the nature of instruments of gambling. The accused were arrested by the Inspector under the warrant and the instruments of gambling were attached by him.

It is contended on behalf of the applicants that the warrant under which the Inspector entered the house, arrested the applicants and attached the papers and account books was not according to law, and therefore no presumption would arise under S. 7 of the Act that the place was a common gaming house. The evidence shows that the Home Inspector on receiving certain information with regard to the doings that were going on in this house, took the informer with him to the District Superintendent of Police, and himself made a complaint on oath before the District Superintendent of Police setting out that there was reason for him to suspect that the house in question was being used as a common gaming house. The District Superintendent of Police, after investigating the matter issued the warrant. It has been urged by Mr. Thakor on behalf of the applicants that S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, does not contemplate the issuing of a warrant upon a complaint made by police officer. The complaint on oath he contends should have been by the informer and not by the police officer. The language of S. 6, Gambling Act, in our opinion, is wide enough to include a complaint on oath made by a police officer. The complaint can be made before any Magistrate of the First Class or any District Superintendent of Police or any Assistant or Deputy Superintendent empowered by Government in that behalf and the words are "upon any complaint made before him on oath." Had it been the intention of the legislature to exclude a police officer from the class of those who are competent to make a complaint on oath in this connexion, we would expect to find words to that effect in this section. In our opinion the warrant was properly issued.

(*) A. I. 1926 Ogdh 268=95 I. O. 396=27

Mr. Thakor has also contended that it was illegal to have issued the warrant to the police officer who had sworn on the complaint before the District Superintendent of Police. We do not find any words in S. 6 which would restrict the issue of the warrant by the District Superintendent of Police in this manner. The warrant, in our opinion, was properly issued.

The warrant having been properly issued and instruments of gaming found in the house entered under the warrant, a presumption arises under S. 7, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, that the house was being used as a common gaming house and that the persons found there were there for the purpose of gaming. As applicants 4 and 5 were among those found in the house when the police officer entered it under the warrant they would be properly convicted under S. 5. The Magistrate has passed a sentence of Rs. 50 fine on each of these applicants and has imposed a sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment on each in default of the payment of fine. The sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment in default contravenes the provisions of S. 65, I. P. C., by which the period in default must not exceed one-fourth of the maximum substantive sentence of imprisonment that can be imposed. The maximum substantive imprisonment which can be imposed on conviction for an offence under S. 5 is one months' imprisonment only. The sentence in the case of applicants 4 and 5 should be altered by changing two months' rigorous imprisonment in default to one week's rigorous imprisonment in default.

Applicants 1, 2 and 3 have been convicted of an offence under S. 4, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. The relevant terms of that section are:

"Whoever—

(a) being the owner or occupier or having the use of any house, room or place, opens, keeps or uses the same for the purpose of a common gaming house,

(b) being the owner or occupier of any such house, room or place knowingly or wilfully permits the same to be opened, occupied, kept or used by any other person for the purposes aforesaid. . . ."

It is conceded by Mr. Thakor that the house in question is a family house belonging to a joint and undivided Hindu family which consists of applicant 1, the father, applicants 2 and 3 who are his sons, and some other members of the joint family. It is contended by Mr. Thakor that applicant 1 does not reside in this house but resides in a separate house with a woman, who is described by the Magistrate as his mistress. Mr. Thakor has also contended that the papers and books which were attached go to show only that a business in the name of a company or firm was being carried on, which business was in the nature of gambling, but the papers and account books do not show that the business was that of applicant 1. He contends that as defendant 1 was not residing in the house no presumption can arise that the papers and account books which were attached from the house were in his possession. It is clear, in my opinion, that applicant 1 being the joint owner of the house which for purposes of this application must be regarded as a common gaming house was present there under circumstances which raise a legal presumption that he was gaming there. A further presumption arises against him therefore that the house was being used as a gaming house with his knowledge and permission. It is clear from the papers and books attached that the business which was being carried on in this house was one of gaming. The books also show profit or gain to the persons who were doing the business in the name of a firm called a company. It was not shown by applicant that he was separated in interest from his sons who were admittedly residing in this house. It has been found that although applicant 1 was residing in another house with his mistress, the female members of his family continued to reside in this family house. By residing with his mistress in a separate house the applicant in my opinion did not cease to be the occupier of the family house where the ladies of his family continued residing. His occupation of the house where his mistress was must be regarded as being in the nature of a temporary residence, the family house being there as his other residence. It is possible for a person to have more than one residence at a time. In any case in my opinion, as applicant 1 was present when the gaming was presumed to be going on in his house, he could be properly convicted under this section for having knowingly permitted the house to be used as a gaming house. The convictions of applicants 1, 2 and 3 for an offence under S. 4 are correct and should be confirmed.

With regard to the sentences on applicants 1 and 2 the District Magistrate states in his letter of reference that applicants 1 and 2 were out to capture the whole betting public of Broach as shown by Exs. 16 and 17 and had branches or bucket shops spread throughout the city as shown by Exs. 4, 10 and 14. The total bets for different dates appearing in these account books show that the gambling was carried on on a large scale. The sentence of Rs. 50 fine appears to us under these circumstances to be inadequate. We enhance the sentences of applicants 1 and 2 to Rs. 200 fine each with three weeks' rigorous imprisonment in default in each case. The sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment on default in applicant 3 will be altered to three weeks' rigorous imprisonment. Two weeks will be allowed for paying the enhanced fines.

Broomfield, J.—I agree.

v.

Heptulla Alibhai

Criminal Appeal No. 474 of 1929, Decided on 1st April 1930, from order of the Bench of Second Class Hon'ble Magistrate, Surat.

Bombay City Municipalities Act (1925), S. 137 — Notice signed by Chief Officer — Notice referring to resolution of Standing Committee showing that Chief Officer signed it on behalf of Standing Committee — Notice held valid.

A notice under S. 137 was issued and it was signed by the Chief Officer and not by the Chairman of the Standing Committee. In the notice there was a reference to a resolution of the Standing Committee.

Held: that, although the Chief Officer cannot sign the notice under S. 137, still the notice will not be invalid if he signs it on behalf of the Standing Committee, and the reference to the resolution of the Standing Committee makes it clear that he signed it only on behalf of the Standing Committee. The omission to write such words as "by order" or "on behalf of" is a mere defect of form which can be cured by Cl. 4, S. 192. [P 786 C 2]

W. B. Pradhan—for the Crown.

M. H. Mehta and S. E. Banaji—for Accused.

Mirza, J.—This is an appeal by the Government of Bombay against an order of the Bench of Second Class Honorary Magistrates, Surat, acquitting the accused of an offence under S. 193, Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925. The accused had constructed a drain on land which belonged to the Municipality of Surat without having first obtained permission from the municipality in that behalf. He was prosecuted for that offence and was fined Rs. 10 on 28th February 1929. On 8th April 1929, the Chief Officer of the Surat City Municipality addressed a notice to the accused calling upon him under S. 137, Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925, to arrange to demolish the drain in respect of the construction of which he had been previously prosecuted and fined, within four days of the receipt of the notice and intimating that if he failed to comply with the direction within that time he would be prosecuted under S. 193 of the Act. The notice refers to a resolution No. 17 of the Standing Committee dated 28th March 1929. The accused not having complied with this notice was prosecuted before the Bench of Second Class Honorary Magistrates, Surat, for an offence under S. 193 of the Act. The Bench Magistrates held that the notice was not a valid notice because it was not signed by the Chairman of the Standing Committee, but was signed by the Chief Officer of the Municipality and it was not shown that the Standing Committee had delegated its power of issuing such a notice to the Chief Officer.

Section 46, Bombay City Municipalities Act provides as follows :

"Any powers or duties or executive functions which may be exercised or performed by or on behalf of the municipality may be delegated in accordance with rules to be made by the municipality in this behalf, to the president or to the vice-president or to the Chairman of the School or other committee, or to one or more stipendiary or honorary officers, but without prejudice to any powers that may have been conferred on the Chief Officer by this Act or on any Committee by or under S. 37 or S. 38, and each person, who exercises any power or performs any duty or function so delegated may be paid all expenses necessarily incurred by him therein."

Before the Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925 was made applicable to the Surat City Municipality that municipality was governed by the provisions the Bombay District Municipal Act, of 1901. Under that Act certain rules were sanctioned and made applicable to the municipalities governed by that Act by a Government resolution dated 11th July 1923. R. 44 made under S. 46, Bombay District municipal Act, 1901, which is the same as S. 46, Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925, provides as follows :

"An executive committee may depute any of their members or the Chief Officer or any Municipal Officer or servant under the control of the committee to perform the executive functions resultant from any of their resolutions. In the absence of any such specific deputation in the terms of a resolution, the necessary functions shall be performed by the Chief Officer."

The latter part of this rule would seem to apply to the notice in this case. As there does not appear to be any specific deputation in the terms of the Standing Committee's resolution the necessary functions would have to be performed by the Chief Officer in issuing the notice.

It has been contended by Mr. Mehta that R. 44 is ultra vires of S. 46, Bombay City Municipalities Act, inasmuch as it confers not a specific but a general power on the Chief Officer. No doubt if the powers conferred by R. 44 detracted in any manner from the powers conferred on the Standing Committee by the Act the rule would be ultra vires of S. 46 of the Act. But it is not shown how the powers conferred on the Chief Officer in the latter part of R. 44 could be said to detract from the powers that have been conferred under the Act on the Standing Committee.

It has also been urged by Mr. Mehta that as the rules have been framed and sanctioned under the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901 they would not apply to the Surat City Municipality in the absence of a special resolution in that behalf by the Bombay Government. S. 5 (1) (b), Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925, seems to be a complete answer to that contention.

The notice as issued, in my opinion, is not invalid because the Chief Officer and not the Chairman of the Standing Committee has signed it. The reference in the notice to a resolution of the Standing Committee makes it clear that the Chief Officer has signed the notice on behalf of the Standing Committee. The order of acquittal should be set aside and the accused convicted of an offence under S. 193, Bombay City Municipalities Act, 1925. As this is the accused's first conviction under S. 193 a small fine, in my opinion, would meet the ends of justice. He should be sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20. Should the drain continue undemolished the municipality could, if so advised, bring a fresh prosecution against the accused.

Broomfield, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother and with his reasons. I need only add a few remarks with reference to one or two of the points in the argument of Mr. Mehta who appears for the opponent (accused). He has argued that the Chief Officer cannot be held to have the power to sign a notice under S. 137 because that section empowers the Standing Committee to issue the notice, whereas when the power to issue the notice is conferred upon the Chief Officer it is so expressly stated, as for instance in Ss. 135, 138 and 139 of the Act. But there is an obvious distinction between the power to decide whether a notice shall be issued and the mere executive act of signing the notice. Ss. 135, 138 and 139 confer upon the Chief Officer powers in respect of certain matters which are similar to the powers conferred upon the Standing Committee by S. 137. But, in my opinion, there is nothing in this which is inconsistent with the view that the Chief Officer has the power delegated to him by Municipal R. 44 of signing the notice which has to be issued in consequence of the conclusion come to by the Standing Committee. Mr. Mehta was quite correct in pointing out that rules delegating powers made under S. 46 of the Act must be subject to any powers which have been conferred by the Act itself on the Chief Officer or on any committee. The rules, therefore, must be consistent with and must not in any way detract from the powers conferred upon the Standing Committee by S. 137. If it had been provided in the rules that the Chief Officer was to have the power to issue a notice under S. 137 of his own motion, such a rule would obviously have been inconsistent with the Act and ultra vires. But a rule which merely allows the Chief Officer to sign the notice does not in any substantial way trench upon the powers of the executive committee. Mr. Mehta has told us that the position would have been different if the Chief Officer had signed the notice "by order" or "on behalf of the Standing Committee." He seemed to be almost disposed to admit that in that case no objection could have been taken to the notice. I think it is quite clear that if there had merely been an omission to write such words as "by order" or "on behalf of the Standing Committee" that would have been a mere defect of form which would have been cured by Cl. (4), S. 192 of the Act. For the reasons which have been given I do not consider that in this case there was any defect or irregularity in the notice in view of R. 44 made under S. 46. The Chief Officer appears to be the proper person to sign such a notice. But even if that rule had not existed I should have been inclined to hold that the defect in the notice would merely have been a defect of form. It is quite clear that in substance there has been no irregularity. The Standing Committee decided that a notice ought to be issued. The resolution of the Standing Committee is referred to in the notice itself. To all intents and purposes then the notice which the Chief Officer signed is a notice issued by the Standing Committee in accordance with the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.

William Cooper—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 18 of 1930, decided on 13th March 1930, from judgment of Chief Presy. Mag., Bombay.

* (a) Evidence Act, S. 30—Statement of accused taken after close of prosecution case under S. 342, Criminal P. C., implicating co-accused—It is admissible against co-accused—But no weight can be attached to it if co accused implicated by it was not given opportunity to cross-examine accused nor was he asked any questions to explain allegations made against him and statement was not made on oath.

Statement of accused person taken after the close of the prosecution case under S. 342, Criminal P. C., implicating himself and the other co-accused would be admissible against the co-accused, although they are made in the course of the trial. But the weight to be attached to such a statement would depend upon the circumstances of each case. Where the statement is taken after the statement of the other co-accused was recorded and the other co-accused is not given opportunity to cross-examine the accused making the statement nor the Magistrate put him any questions to explain the allegations made against him and further the statement was not made on oath, not even the least value can be attached to it while considering the evidence against that co-accused : 4 Cal. 483 ; A. I. R. 1928 All. 322 ; 39 Mad. 302 17 All. 524 and 23 All. 58 Cons. 6 Bom. 124, Rel on. [P 788 C 1 ; P 790 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 342—Statement of one accused cannot be considered against another accused in same trial under S. 342.

There is no provision in S. 312 which would seem to allow the statement made by one accused person to be taken into consideration against the other accused in the same trial.

[P 787 C 2]

G. N. Thakor and B. G. Padhye—for Appellant.

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Mirza, J.—The appellant, original accused 1, was tried along with two other, original accused 2 and 3, before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, for offences under S. 468 read with S. 119, and S. 420 read with S. 120-B, I. P. C., was convicted of those offences and sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment. In convicting the appellant the Magistrate has relied on a written statement which accused 3 put in after the close of the prosecution case in answer to the question put by the Magistrate:

"What do you wish to say with reference to the evidence given and recorded against you."

He said :

"I got these false Goa lottery tickets printed at No. 1's press. Cooper (accused 1) made all the tracings. I have stated in full in my written statement the circumstances in which I got these tickets printed."

The written statement gives a full and detailed account of how the offences charged against the accused were committed by all the accused and one Coutinho who was not before the Court. Accused 3 pleaded guilty to all the charges and has inculpated himself and the other accused in the commission of the offences by his statement before the trial Magistrate.

The question we have first to consider is whether it would be permissible under the provisions of S. 30, Evidence Act, to take accused 3's statements into consideration against accused 1 and, secondly if these statements are admissible in evidence what value we should attach to them against accused 1. S. 30, Evidence Act, provides that :

"When more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as against the person who makes such confession."

This provision of the Evidence Act is against the general rule of English law and also the rule which prevailed in India prior to the passing of this Act. The general rule of English law on this subject is that the confession of an accused person is evidence only against himself and cannot be used against others. On this account this section has always been strictly construed. It is clear in this case that this was a joint trial and if the statement made by accused 3 can be said to be a confession which was "proved" at the trial it would be permissible to take it into consideration against accused 1 under the provisions of S. 30, Evidence Act. Mr. Thakor on behalf of the appellant relies upon a dictum of Garth, C. J., in Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (1) for the view that a confession under S. 30 must not be one made at the trial. The learned Chief Justice has observed :

"The word 'proved' in S. 30 must refer to a confession made beforehand."

Mr. Thakor has also relied on Emperor v. Mahadeo Prasad (2) where Walsh, J., has held that (p. 326) :

"the expression 'proving a confession' is inapplicable to the procedure where the Judge asks questions and an accused person gives explanations under a special section provided for that purpose."

The questions which the Magistrate put to accused 3 were so put under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. There is no indication in the language of that section that the answer given by one accused could be taken into consideration against his co-accused in their joint trial for the same offence. The learned Government Pleader has argued that although the language of S. 342 speaks of an accused person in the singular it must be held to apply equally to cases where the number of the accused is more than one. Although that is so there is no provision in S. 342 which would seem to allow the statement made by one accused person to be taken into consideration against the other accused in the same trial as contended for by the Government Pleader before us. For that provision of the law we can rely only upon S. 30, Evidence Act.

In Re Vempally Bali Reddi (3) Ayling, J. drew a distinction between a trial before a Sessions Court where a person pleads guilty at the outset and is convicted on his plea and cannot be tried jointly with others against whom the trial proceeds and the trial before a Magistrate. In the case before him all the accused were tried jointly before a Magistrate and some had confessed the crime and implicated their co-accused in statements made under S. 342, Criminal P. C., and after their statements had been recorded and the evidence for the prosecution closed had pleaded guilty under S. 255 (1), Criminal P. C. The Court held that these statements could be taken into consideration against the other accused under the provisions of S. 30. In Emress v. Lachman Bala (4) the judgment of this Court implied that if the statement of the accused implicating their 'co-accused had been made' by them at the trial in the presence of the co-accused whom those statements implicated in the offence they could have been taken into consideration under the provisions of S. 30, Evidence Act. The language of S. 30 does not seem to me to justify a distinction between a confession made by an accused person before the trial and in the course of the trial. In my judgment the statements made by accused 3 would be admissible under S. 30 although they were made in the course of the trial.

The next question is what weight should be attached to these statements of accused 3 against accused 1. The statements of accused 3 were made after accused 1 had made his statement. It does not appear from the record that the learned Magistrate put any further questions to accused 1 with a view to enabling him to explain the allegations which were made against him in the statement of accused 3. Accused 3 on his own showing is guilty of the offences charged against him. He pleads guilty and prays for mercy. No doubt he has been convicted by the Magistrate and sentenced to twelve months' rigorous imprisonment in the same trial. But the circumstance under which accused 3's statements were made seem to detract considerably from the weight which the Court might otherwise have attached to them. The statements are not on oath. Accused 1 has had no opportunity of subjecting accused 3 to cross-examination on those statements. The statements admittedly are those of an accomplice made after the close of the case for the prosecution and after the statement of accused 1. In my opinion it would not be safe to attach any weight to these statements of accused 3 in so far as they inculpate accused 1.

Eliminating the statements of accused 3 from our consideration as being of no value we have next to consider whether the evidence in the case apart from these statements would justify the conviction of accused 1. The learned Magistrate has relied upon the evidence of the two witnesses for the prosecution, Motiram Chandu and Ramchandra Ranji. He has also relied upon certain circumstances in the case which seem to raise an inference of guilt against accused 1. (Here the judgment discussed the evidence of the two witnesses and proceeded). There is nothing in the evidence of these witnesses which beyond raising a suspicion against accused 1 would go to prove that he had participated in the offence with which he is charged.

With regard to the unsatisfactory nature of accused 1's statement it is for the prosecution to make out a prima facie case against the accused in the first instance. If no such case is made out the accused is not bound to give any explanation. The explanation given by accused 1 in his statement if true would appear to show that he is a gullible person who implicitly believed all the representations that were made to him by a comparative stranger like accused 3. This explanation does not appear to be inconsistent with the probabilities of the case. Accused 3 must be credited with possessing a sharp intellect and pushful manners to have committed an offence of this nature as admitted by him. It is by no means an impossible supposition that a man of this nature might by his plausible manners succeed in imposing on another who possesses a less acute intellect than he.

The circumstance that accused 2 was present in the press that evening has not been satisfactorily explained by accused 1 in his statement. That again seems to create only a suspicion against accused 1 but is not sufficient by itself to raise a conclusive presumption of guilt against him. In my opinion on the evidence as it stands, if no value is to be attached to the statement of accused 3 in so far as it inculpates accused 1, the conviction of accused 1 should not be sustained. The conviction and sentence of accused 1 should be reversed and he should be acquitted and discharged.

(4) [1882] 6 Bom. 121.

Broomfield, J.—The prosecution in this case arose from certain information given by accused 3 to the police. Accused 3 was inculpated by the accused in another case in connexion with the issue of forged lottery tickets which was decided in August 1929. On 9th September, he went to Inspector Dyer and on that date and subsequently he made certain statements which were reduced to writing. It would have been possible presumably to produce accused 3 before a Magistrate, in which case these statements of his might have been formally put in evidence. This, however, was not done. What happened was that after the evidence for the prosecution had been recorded at the trial, accused 3 was asked by the Magistrate what he wished to say with reference to the evidence recorded against him. He then said:

"I have stated in full in my written statement the circumstances in which I got these tickets printed" and thereupon a long written statement was placed upon the record purporting to give a detailed account of the whole affair and making various allegations against accused 1 in the case. A preliminary question which we have to consider is whether this written statement of accused 3 so put in is a confession which can be taken into consideration under S. 30, Evidence Act. In the commentary on S. 30 in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence the opinion is given that

"a confession duly made at any time by one of several accused persons who are under trial jointly for the same offence can be taken into consideration under S. 30 as against the other accused persons."

The authority for this proposition, however, is a case in some unauthorized report which is unfortunately not available to us. The name of the Court is not given and it is impossible for us to say what weight should be attached to it. My learned brother has already referred to the dictum of Garth, C. J. in Empress v. Ashootosh Chukerbutty (1). That was an obiter dictum. The question whether a confession made at the trial was within the scope of S. 30 was not actually before the Court. On the other hand in several reported cases it appears to have been assumed that S. 30 would apply to such a confession. In Empress v. Lakshman Bala (4) and in In the matter of the Petition of Chandra Nath Sirkar (5) statements made at the trial by one accused were held inadmissible against another on the ground that they were not made in the presence of that other. The view of the Court in both cases appears to have been that apart from that irregularity the confessions would have been sufficiently "proved" within the meaning of S. 30, although the point is not expressly decided. In Queen Empress v. Pirbhu (6) and Queen Empress v. Paltia (7) confessions at the trial by one accused incriminating another were held inadmissible on the ground that the accused making the confession had pleaded guilty. It was held, therefore, that the confessing accused was not being jointly tried within the meaning of S. 30. Apart from that circumstance, however, the view of the Court would apparently have been that the confessions would have been within the terms of the section. In Re, Bali Reddi (3) which has been referred to by my learned brother, we have a definite authority for the view that S. 30 does cover confessions made at the trial. I think there can be no doubt that the general practice has been to regard such confessions as admissible under S. 30, although I should say that statements made from the dock by one accused against another have not usually been treated with much attention, and a case like the present, in which a long written statement is put in from the dock, must be quite exceptional. Since the commentary in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali was written, there has been a decision of a Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Mahadeo Prasad (2) to the effect that (p. 326):

"the expression 'proving a confession' is . . . inapplicable to the procedure where the Judge asks questions and an accused person gives explanations under a special section provided for that purpose."

In the course of his judgment in that case Walsh, J., after referring to the fundamental principles of English criminal law that an accused is entitled to know what the evidence against him is before he is called upon for his defence and that when the prosecution case is closed it cannot be reopened or added to, observed as follows (p. 325):

"Every Judge in such a case in England, where statements are made from the dock after the case for the prosecution is closed, warns the jury that they must not take into account anything which one accused in the dock may say about the other. To use, therefore, a statement made in the dock by one accused against the other in a joint trial, offends against at least two of the fundamental principles of the criminal law. The legislature in India saw fit to create an exception which is contained in S. 30, Evidence Act. In my opinion that must be construed with reference to the fundamental principles to which it creates an exception. If the section is carefully read, I think nobody, bearing in mind the fundamental principles which I have just mentioned, ought to have any difficulty in coming to the conclusion that what is contemplated is formal proof by the prosecution of a confession previously made."

I think it must be admitted that the reasoning in this case is very cogent. S. 30, Evidence Act, must certainly have contemplated a confession "proved" as part of the prosecution case, to which the accused has an opportunity of replying, and not a statement made by a co-accused from the dock in reply to questions by the Court or a written statement handed in at that stage. The language of S. 30, when a confession is proved" is clearly not very appropriate to statements made or put in from the dock. If statements made by an accused in reply to questions under S. 342, Criminal P. C., were intended to be admissible as evidence or to be taken into consideration against other accused one would have expected that the section would provide for it. But it does not do so. On the other hand, there is no reason for regarding the language of S. 30, when it speaks of a confession and of proving a confession, as being in any way technical. The statement of accused 3 in this case is undoubtedly a confession. It was produced by accused 3 himself and it appears to have been read out in Court, that is to say, it would seem to have been "proved" in the sense which was regarded as sufficient in Empress v. Lakshman Bala (4) and in other cases to which I have referred. I should not be prepared to go so far as to say that the language of S. 30 is not wide enough technically to cover a confessional statement so put in.

At the same time I have no hesitation in holding that under the circumstances of this case the statement of accused 3 is quite worthless and ought not to be relied upon in the least. If the statement had been proved as part of the prosecution case, if there had been an opportunity of comparing it with previous statements made by accused 3 to Inspector Dyer, it might then have been said to have some value. Even in that case it would have been obviously inferior to the evidence of an accomplice as not being given on oath and not subjected to cross-examination. Even in that case we should have to consider that the statement is not corroborated by any other evidence as to some of the most material particulars, for instance, as to the alleged preliminary conspiracy, and that on the other hand it is contradicted, for instance, as to the time taken over the printing of the tickets, by the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. But as it is the statement having been simply put in after the prosecution case was completed, and accused 1 not having even been questioned about it it has in my opinion no value at all. (Here the judgment discussed evidence and concluded.) The evidence being what it is I think it may be said that there is a reasonable doubt in the case, of which the accused must have the benefit, I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the conviction should be set aside.

Per Curiam.—The conviction and sentence are set aside. The accused is discharged and acquitted and ordered to be set at liberty.

MIRZA AND BROOMFIELD, JJ.
Gafur Karimbak—Accused.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 17 of 1930, Decided on 2nd April 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 179 — "Consequence" is not restricted in its meaning to consequence which is necessary ingredient of offence.

The word "consequence" in S. 179 bears its ordinary grammatical meaning and is not to be restricted in its meaning to a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence: A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 89, Foll.; 38 Mad. 689, not Foll. [P 791 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 179—V. P. parcels, posted by accused, received by addressee and value paid to post office—Accused charged of cheating—Posting of parcels was essential part of offence and so Court where they were posted has jurisdiction to try case both under S. 179 and also under Criminal P. C., S. 182 (2).

Where the accused styling himself as "The Director of Mesmerism" posted three V. P. parcels containing a piece of paper purporting to convey the first lesson in mesmerism, the parcels were received by the addressees and value paid to the post office, the act of deceiving and the act of inducing delivery of property were composite acts which began with the delivery of the parcels to the post office for posting. The posting was an essential part of the offence and so both under S. 179 and S. 182 (2) the Court in whose local area the posting was made had jurisdiction to try the case: A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 686, Appr.; 83 Mad 639, not Appr.; 1927 Mad 544, Diss. from. [P 792 C 1]

W. B. Pradhan—for the Crown.

Broomfield, J.—The District Magistrate, Kolaba, has forwarded to this Court the papers in three cases pending in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Panvel, and asks for directions under S. 185, Criminal P. C., as to the place in which and the Court by which the said cases ought to be tried. The accused in these three cases is one Y. A. Gafur Karimbax Pathan. He is said to belong to Srinagar but has been living at Panvel, where he has been leading the life of a fakir and calling himself a "Director of Mesmerism." On 6th July 1923, the accused sent a parcel by value payable post for Rs. 2-8-0 to one Vithal Shankar Gulve of Poona. On 16th July 1923 he sent a similar parcel by value payable post for the same amount to the Deputy Commissioner, Sialkot, and on the same day he sent a third parcel by value payable post for the same amount to the Deputy Commissioner, Hissar. The parcels contained nothing but a paper on which was written what purported to be the first lesson in a correspondence course in mesmerism. The addressee in each case paid the amount to the post office and in two cases the amounts were in due course paid by the post office to the accused at Panvel. The amount of the V. P. parcel addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, Hissar, has been detained in the post office. In consequence of these transactions the accused was charged with three offences of cheating under S. 420, I. P. C., and the cases were being tried jointly. During the course of the trial the attention of the Magistrate was drawn to a decision of a single Judge of the Madras High Court in the case of Kaleek,

In re (1). On the strength of this ruling the Magistrate came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to try the cases and that they ought to be tried at Poona, Sialkot and Hissar respectively. He accordingly submitted the papers to the District Magistrate for disposal and the District Magistrate, as already stated, has referred the matter to this Court under S. 185, Criminal P. C.

In our opinion the Magistrate is mistaken in holding that he has no jurisdiction to try these cases. The case of Kaleek, In re (1) is no doubt a case upon similar facts. The accused in that case, who had received an order for four boxes of tea from the complainant, a resident of Hyderabad, despatched from Madras by value payable post four boxes containing not tea but sawdust. The point before the Court was whether the Madras Court had jurisdiction to try the accused on a charge of cheating. It was held that it had no jurisdiction, the reasons given being that so far as the complainant was concerned the deceit and the delivery in consequence of the deceit were complete when the money was handed over to the post office at Hyderabad, and the subsequent delivery by the post office to the accused was not a necessary ingredient of the offence. The Madras High Court has held in several cases that the word "consequence" which occurs in S. 179, Criminal P. C., must be taken to mean something which is a necessary ingredient of the offence. That has been laid down, for instance, in the case of Re, Ram-bilas (2). But that case was not approved of in Emperor v. Ramratan Chuni-lal (3), where it was held by Macleod, C.J., that the word "consequence" in S. 179, Criminal P. C., bears its ordinary grammatical meaning and is not to be restricted in its meaning to a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence. The payment of the money to the accused in Panvel may not be technically a necessary ingredient of the offence of cheating as defined in S. 415, I. P. C., but quite obviously it is a consequence of the accused's act in posting these parcels. It was precisely the consequence which he must have intended. If, therefore, we take the word "consequence" in its ordinary grammatical sense it is clear that S. 179 gives the Panvel Court jurisdiction to try all the three cases. This is one way in which the case of Kaleek, In re (1), may be distinguished so far as the Courts in this Presidency are concerned, viz., that it is based on a restricted interpretation of the word "consequence" which has not been approved of by our High Court.

But, with all deference to the learned Judge who decided that case, it appears to us that S. 179 and also S. 182, Criminal P. C. should be considered to give the Panvel Court jurisdiction quite apart from any question of the interpretation of the word "consequence" in the former section. The language of S. 179 is as follows :

"When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued."

The offence of cheating, as defined in S. 415, I. P. C., consists in deceiving a person and dishonestly inducing the person deceived to deliver property. In a case such as the present it appears to us to be reasonable to hold that the act of deceiving and the act of inducing delivery of property are composite acts which begin with the delivery of the parcels to the post office for posting. It may, therefore, be properly said that the accused in this case is accused of the commission of the offence of cheating by reason of the delivery of these parcels to the post office in Panvel. That posting is in fact an essential part of the offence. Even if the parcels had not reached the addressees, or if the addressees had declined to pay, the posting of the parcels with the dishonest intention of getting payment on them would seem to amount to an attempt to commit the offence. In our opinion, therefore, S. 179 clearly applies. For the same reason it would appear that S. 182, Criminal P. C., would give jurisdiction to the Magistrate at Panvel. That section provides in Cl. 2 thereof that where an offence is committed partly in one local area and partly in another and in Cl. 4 thereof, that where an offence consists of several acts done in different local areas, it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas. The offence in this case, in our opinion, was committed partly in Panvel, by the posting of the parcels there, and partly in Poona and Hissar where the money was paid over by the addressees to the post office. The offence also consists of several acts done as regards the posting of the parcels in Panvel, as regards the inducing payment of money in the other places aforesaid. For both these reasons, therefore, S. 182 enables the cases to be tried in the Panvel Court.

The learned Government Pleader referred to another case of the Madras High Court, Krishnamurthy Aiyar v. Parasurama (4). It was there held that where a letter containing defamatory matter was posted at one place in order that it might be read at another, the offence of defamation is triable, under Ss. 179 and 182, Criminal P. C., either at the place where the letter was posted or at the place where it was intended to be read. The reason given for the decision was that the accused had done all in his power towards publication and had lost control of the letter when he had committed it to the post. We find some difficulty in reconciling the decision in this case with the decision in Kaleek, In re (1), referred to above, and we consider that it supports the view we have taken of the application of Ss. 179 and 182.

The District Magistrate appears to have accepted the First Class Magistrate's view of the law as to jurisdiction. He has asked this Court to make a direction as to the trial of these cases under S. 185, Criminal P. C. That could only be done as regards one of the cases, namely, that in which the parcel was despatched to Poona, but for the reasons given above there is no need to make any order under S. 185. The First Class Magistrate, Panvel, has jurisdiction to try all three of the cases. We, therefore, direct that the papers should be returned to him and that he should proceed to dispose of the cases according to law.

Mirza, J.—I agree.

S. N./R.K. Order accordingly.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 546 of 1929, Decided on 21st January 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Judge should group witnesses in such way as to direct attention of jury to evidence regarding each of particular facts sought to be proved on each side.

The Judge in his charge to the jury, should group the witnesses in such a way as to direct the attention of the jury to the evidence regarding each of the particular facts sought to be proved on each side. He should not merely place the depositions before the jury in the order in which they were examined as it may lead to confuse the minds of the jury in some respects.

[P 794 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Material witness not examined by prosecution—Judge should direct jury to presume that his evidence would not have supported prosecution.

Where a material witness for the prosecution is not called the Judge in his charge to the jury, should direct them that it should be presumed from the fact of his non-examination, that if he had been examined his evidence would not have supported the case for prosecution.

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Evidence of approver—Judge should tell jury that corroboration required is one tending to connect each accused with offence.

In dealing with the evidence of an approver the Judge should tell the jury that the sort of corroboration that is required is corroboration in material particulars tending to connect each of the accused with the offence.

Where the jury are well aware of the kind of corroboration required, the omission to state the law in more precise terms does not amount to misdirection.

But the omission of the Judge to draw the special attention of the jury to the fact that though there is some corroborative evidence as regards the movements of two of the accused in a case of dacoity immediately before and immediately after the occurrence, there is no such corroboration in respect of the third accused, amounts to misdirection.

Nurul Huq—for Appellants.Rhondkar and Nirmal Chandra Das Gupta—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This case arises out of a dacoity that was committed on the night of 2nd November 1928, in the boat of one Kali Kumar Banikya, an itinerant vendor of metal utensils. The other occupants of the boat were Kali Kumar's nephew, Lebu, and two Manjhis named Rajendra and Bir Charan. They were all strangers to the locality and so were unable to recognize any of the dacoits as men who had been known to them from before. Kali Kumar lodged a first information at the thana on 3rd November, in which he stated that none of the occupants of the boat had been able to recognize anyone, but that he thought that he might be able to recognize two or three of the dacoits, if he saw them again. He also gave descriptions of three of the dacoits, one of whom, he said, had threatened him with a knife, while the other two had caught him by the throat. On coming to the spot, the Sub-Inspector arrested one Samiruddin, and in consequence of information given by Samiruddin, a box of utensils that had been stolen by the dacoits was recovered from the bed of the river. Various other articles were also seized, and a number of persons were arrested and sent up for trial. When produced before the Magistrate, Samiruddin made a confession and was subsequently made an approver. Seven persons, including the three appellants, were committed for trial before the Third Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, and of these, three were acquitted, while the three appellants and one other person, who has not joined in the present appeal, were convicted on a unanimous verdict of guilty.

The evidence consists mainly of that of the approver Samiruddin who gives a detailed account of the whole affair from start to finish, and the evidence of Kali Kumar, Lebu and Rajendra to the effect that the three appellants were among the dacoits, and also the evidence of some of the local men regarding the movements of the approver and of his associates immediately before and immediately after the occurrence, as well as evidence regarding the recovery of the box of utensils and the proceedings of the police in the course of the investigation.

The statements of the appellants at the trial were to the effect that they were innocent and knew nothing about the occurrence, while the defence sought to be set up on their behalf in cross-examination and in argument appears to have been that they had been falsely implicated by the approver, partly in order to exculpate his real associates in the crime and partly out of enmity. It was not denied by the defence at the time of the trial that the dacoity had actually taken place as alleged and that the approver had been one of the dacoits, nor has any such contention been urged on appeal.

In his charge to the jury the learned Additional Sessions Judge has dealt with the matter in the following way. After explaining the charges he places the approver's evidence before the jury at great length, at the same time stating that though it is not illegal to convict an accused person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, it is considered as a rule of practice unsafe to do so, unless the testimony of the approver is corroborated by independent and reliable evidence in material particulars fixing the guilt on that person. He next places before the jury the evidence of Kali Kumar, Rajendra and Lebu with special reference to the question of identification, at the same time drawing the attention of the jury to the discrepancies in the evidence of these witnesses and of the approver as regards the specific acts attributed by them to the various accused persons. He also draws the attention of the jury to the fact that Rajendra and Lebu had not been able to identify any of the accused before the police, and asks them to consider whether in these circumstances the evidence of these witnesses is not altogether worthless, and whether it can at all be relied on as corroboration of the evidence of the approver Samiruddin. As regards Kali Kumar, the Judge points out that Kali Kumar has stated in his evidence that he hopes to get back his money in case of conviction, and he asks the jury to consider whether this hope may have induced Kali Kumar falsely to identify some of the accused as having been among the dacoits. After discussing the evidence of the approver and of the occupants of the boat in the above manner, the Judge proceeds to place the evidence of the remaining witnesses before the jury. This he does at great length, indeed at too great length, for the important facts elicited from these witnesses are to some extent buried under a mass of unnecessary and unimportant details. This is especially unfortunate in view of the fact that the Judge, instead of grouping the witnesses in such a way as to direct the attention of the jury to the evidence regarding each of the particular facts sought to be proved on either side, has merely placed their depositions before the jury in the order in which they were examined. This method of dealing with the evidence may have tended to confuse the minds of the jury in some respects, but this defect has in our opinion been remedied (except to some extent, as regards the existence or the absence of corroboration of the approver's evidence, a point which will be referred to again presently), by the summing up of the evidence against each individual accused in the concluding portion of the charge.

After placing the evidence before the jury in the manner indicated above, the Judge briefly discusses the evidence to show that the dacoity actually took place, and that the approver was one of the dacoits. He then goes on to say that the most important question is whether any of the accused persons standing in the dock and if so, which of them, were concerned in the dacoity; and again warns the jury that it would be extremely unsafe to rely solely upon the uncorroborated testimony of the approver. He also reminds them that they will have to consider whether the statements of the approver regarding the complicity of any of the accused have been corroborated by independent, untainted and reliable evidence, and points out that "it is one thing that a dacoity was committed, but it is quite another thing that any of the accused was concerned in the crime."

In this connexion he invites the attention of the jury to the evidence suggesting the existence of enmity between Samir and some of the accused and to the defence contention that Samir may have implicated them falsely out of enmity and in order to shield his real associates. He then again refers to the evidence of identification, pointing out that there was moonlight at the time of the occurrence, and that Kali Kumar had no grudge against any of the accused; and after referring again to the discrepancies regarding the part played in the dacoity by the persons whom Kali Kumar had identified, he asks the jury to consider whether, independently of the evidence of the approver, they can rely upon the identifications made by Kali Kumar at the trial.

In his summing up of the evidence against each individual accused, the Judge draws the attention of the jury, so far as the accused persons other than the present appellants are concerned, to the existence, or the absence, of independent evidence corroborating the approver. In dealing with the case of Hachani Khan one of the present appellants, the Judge refers to his identification by Kali Kumar, to the discrepancies regarding the part played by him as pointed out in the earlier part of the charge, and to the evidence suggesting the possible existence of enmity between him and the approver Samiruddin. He omits, however, to refer to the evidence of (P. W. 11), Safiruddin, who speaks of the assemblage of a number of people (including Meghu, one of the appellants), in Hachani's house on the night of the occurrence. This is a piece of evidence which if believed, tends to corroborate the evidence of the approver, both in respect of Hachani and in respect of Meghu. The Judge has dealt with Meghu's case in a manner similar to that in which he has dealt with Hachani's case referring again to the evidence of identification by Kali Kumar and to the discrepancies between the evidence of Kali Kumar and Samiruddin regarding the particular part played by the accused. He has also referred to Safiruddin's evidence regarding Meghu's presence in Hachani's house on the night of the occurrence and to the evidence of (P. W. 19), who says that he saw Samiruddin (the approver) and Meghu sleeping together in a hut in Meghu's bari shortly before sunrise on the morning after the occurrence. This is a piece of evidence which, if believed, tends to corroborate the approver's evidence as against Meghu. The Judge has not in so many words drawn attention of the jury to the fact that the evidence of Safiruddin and of Samiruddin Taluqdar (P. W. 19), tends, if believed, to corroborate the approver's evidence as regards Meghu's participation in dacoity, but he has, after referring to their evidence, again reminded the jury of the evidence of enmity between Meghu and the approver.

As regards the appellant Shah Newaj alias Fuler Bap, the Judge asks the jury to consider whether they can rely on the identification by Kali Kumar and the approver. He has not, however, specifically drawn their attention to the fact that, apart from the identification of Shah Newaj by Kali Kumar, there is no other evidence of the approver so far as the participation of Shah Newaj in the dacoity is concerned. It may here be remarked that there is some evidence on the record to the effect that some of the accused persons, including the three appellants, had been at the hat on the day immediately preceding the occurrence, but the Judge has quite rightly not treated this as corroboration of the approver's evidence to the same effect, and has in fact not referred to it in his charge, except quite casually while placing the evidence of the witnesses before the jury. It would perhaps have been better, if the Judge had told the jury in so many words that the evidence on this point ought not to be regarded as corroborating that of the approver inasmuch as it in no way tended to connect any of the accused with the actual occurrence.

It is true that the evidence on this point tends to corroborate Kali Kumar's evidence to the effect that he had seen these persons at the hat on the day in question. The first information, however, contains no mention of Kali Kumar having recognised any of the dacoits as men whom he had seen in the hat on the previous day, (as he now says), and it would have been better if the Judge had drawn the attention of the jury to this fact. It is very doubtful whether there is any truth in the allegation but the Judge, though he did mention it in stating the case for the prosecution, does not appear to have laid any stress on it and there is no reason to suppose that the jury attached any importance to it or that they might have taken a different view of Kali Kumar's evidence if their attention had been specifically drawn to the fact that the first information contains no mention thereof. As a matter of fact, the first information was read over to the jury in the course of the charge: so they were in a position to notice the omission for themselves and to draw such inference therefrom as they might think fit.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that there are certain defects in the charge which amount to misdirections and that the result has been a failure of justice. It is contended in the first place that there was an omission amounting to a misdirection in not drawing the special attention of the jury to the fact that the first information contains no mention of Kali Kumar having, as he stated in his evidence seen some of the dacoits including the present appellants, at the hat on the day immediately preceding the occurrence. This point has already been referred to above and for the reasons given we are of opinion that the accused have not been prejudiced by the omission in question, and that there is, therefore, no substance in this contention.

Another point that has been taken is that the Judge did not draw the attention of the jury to the fact that there was no evidence to show that Kali Kumar identified any of the present appellants before the investigating police officer. It is a fact that there is no such evidence on the record, and the reason is obvious, namely that, having regard to the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., it was not open to the prosecution to question Kali Kumar on this point. It was, however, open to the defence to cross-examine him on the point (if he had, in fact, not identified the appellants before the Sub-Inspector) and this the defence did not do. The approver was arrested on 7th November and the appellants, Shah Newaj and Meghu were arrested on the following day. There is evidence that Shah Newaj and some others (but not Meghu) were taken to the complainant's boat after arrest and that Rajendra and Lebu failed to identify any of them as having been among the dacoits. There is, however, no evidence as to whether Kali Kumar did or did not identify any of these persons before the Sub-Inspector as having been among the dacoits. Now would such evidence have been admissible unless the defence had chosen to cross-examine Kali Kumar on the point. As regards Meghu, there is no evidence to show that he was at any time taken to the complainant's boat for the purpose of identification or that Kali Kumar and his companions were ever asked during the course of the police investigation whether they could identify him or not. As regards Hachani he was arrested later and was shown to Kali Kumar at the thana, but there was no cross-examination as to whether Kali Kumar did or did not identify him at that time.

In these circumstances the Judge was quite right in only drawing the attention of the jury to the fact that Rajendra and Lebu had not been able to identify Shah Newaj before the police, and in making no comments as regards the evidence or lack of evidence of identification before the police in respect of the other two appellants, Hachani and Meghu.

Then again, it is pointed out that Bir Charan, one of the occupants of the boat, was not examined as a witness and it is urged that the Judge was guilty of a misdirection in not telling to the jury that it might and indeed should be presumed from the fact of his non-examination that if he had been examined his evidence would not have supported the case for the prosecution. This contention is perfectly correct so far as it goes. The Judge should in our opinion have given the jury a direction on these lines. There is, however, evidence that Bir Charan is a very old man and there is nothing to show that he ever came out of the covered portion of the boat or that he saw anything of the dacoity. This being so we have no doubt that the jury, though not given any special direction on the point drew the correct inference for themselves, namely that Bir Charan if he had been examined as a witness would not have been able to throw any light on the question of the identity of the dacoits. In this view of the matter, the omission to give the jury the direction that is usually given in such circumstances, is a matter of little importance and cannot possibly have had any effect on the verdict.

Lastly, and this is a point of some importance, it is contended that the charge is defective inasmuch as the Judge did not properly direct the jury regarding the kind of corroboration that is required before placing reliance on the evidence of such an approver as the approver in the present case. It is conceded that the Judge repeatedly told the jury that it would be unsafe to base a conviction on the evidence of the approver, unless, such evidence was corroborated by independent and reliable evidence in material particulars, but it is contended that the Judge should have gone further than that, and should have explained to the jury that by the expression "material particulars," as used in this connexion, is meant such particulars as tend to connect each of the accused with the offence charged. In this connexion reference has been made to the case Rebati Mohan Chakravarti v. Emperor (1) in which it was held that it is for the Judge to determine whether there is any evidence that does corroborate the story of the approver so far as the complicity of the accused is concerned, and that it is the duty of the Judge to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the evidence confirming or corroborating the accomplice's story, which do or do not fulfil the requirements referred to above, namely the evidence corroborating the accomplice's story in material particulars implicating the accused. In that case the Judge had, in his charge to the jury, treated as corroborative evidence, evidence which in no way tended to connect the accused with the offence, and in this he was held to have been wrong, but the conviction was nevertheless upheld, as it was found that there was in fact sufficient corroborative evidence in law against the two appellants, that is to say, evidence corroborating the accomplice in some material particulars implicating the accused. In the present case the Judge has not indeed told the jury, in so many words, which portions of the evidence should be regarded as corroborative in the above sense, and which portions should not be so regarded, but there are several passages in his charge which must in our opinion have had the same effect on the minds of the jury as a specific direction on the lines indicated above would have had, as for example, the passage that has already been quoted, namely:

"it is considered as a rule of practice unsafe to convict an accused upon the testimony of an approver, unless corroborated by independent and reliable evidence in material particulars fixing the guilt on that accused."

Then again, after placing the whole of the evidence before the jury, the Judge says:

"The most important question is whether any of the accused persons standing in the dock, and if so which of them, were concerned in the dacoity. On this point the jury, unless they are inclined to rely solely upon the uncorroborated testimony of the approver which would be extremely unsafe, will have to consider whether the statements of the approver regarding the complicity of any of the accused have been corroborated by independent, untainted and reliable evidence. It is one thing that a dacoity was committed, but it is quite another thing that any of the accused was concerned in the crime."

Lastly, in the concluding paragraph of the charge, the Judge again reminds the jury that

"though it is not illegal to convict any of the accused on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver, it would be extremely dangerous to do so without corroboration of Samir's statements regarding the complicity of the accused or any of them by independent reliable evidence."

In view of these remarks it may, we think, be assumed that the jury were well aware that the sort of corroboration that was required, was corroboration in material particulars tending to connect each of the accused with the offence, and this being so, it cannot, in our opinion, be held that the omission to state the law on the point in more precise language amounted to a misdirection.

Turning now to the cases of the individual appellants, it is in our opinion to be regretted that the learned Sessions Judge, in summing up the evidence against each, did not indicate more clearly in what respects the approver's evidence had been corroborated as against each, and in what respects it had not been so corroborated. This is not a matter of much importance so far as the appellants Hachani and Meghu are concerned, for there is, in our opinion, as in Rebati Mohan v. Emperor (1), sufficient corroborative evidence in law against those two appellants on the record, and that evidence has been very fairly and fully placed before the jury in other portions of the charge.

As regards Shah Newaj, however, the Judge ought, in our opinion, to have drawn the special attention of the jury to the fact that though there was some corroborative evidence as regards the movements of the appellants, Hachani and Meghu, immediately before and immediately after the occurrence, there was no such corroboration in respect of this appellant, Shah Newaj. The omission to do so amounts in our opinion, to a misdirection, and having regard to the weakness of the evidence of identification of Shah Newaj and the evidence regarding the existence of enmity between this appellant and the approver, it must, we think, be held that the evidence against him, is insufficient to justify a conviction, and that the misdirection referred to above has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, so far as this appellant, Shah Newaj, is concerned.

In these circumstances, the conviction and sentence in respect of the appellant Shah Newaj should, in our opinion, be set aside, and he should be acquitted and released from custody. As regards the other two appellants, Hachani and Meghu, the convictions and sentences should be upheld, and their appeals dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 372 of 1929, Decided on 12th April 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 137 — Accused alleged to have obstructed public pathway—On receipt of notice of proceedings under S. 133 he appearing in Court — Magistrate instead of enquiring whether he denied public right in pathway enquiring whether there was obstruction — Procedure held to be wrong.

Where the accused is alleged to have obstructed a public pathway, and on receipt of notice of the proceedings under S. 133, he appears in Court, the first duty of the Magistrate is to question him whether he denied the existence of public right in the pathway. If instead of doing so the Magistrate proceeds to enquire into the matter whether there was any obstruction, the procedure is wrong in law.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 139-A.— Accused alleged to have obstructed public pathway — Evidence on record indicating that path was private—Magistrate should stay trial until question is decided by civil Court.

Where accused is alleged to have obstructed a public pathway, and there is some evidence on record indicating that the path was private, it is incumbent on a Magistrate under S. 139-A to stay his hands immediately, until the matter of the existence of the public right was decided by a competent civil Court. Judgment. — This rule is directed against an order whereby a conditional order under S. 133, Criminal P. C., was made absolute. The rule was issued on ground 2 alone of the petition and that ground was that the procedure as laid down under Ss. 139-A and 137, Criminal P. C., had not been followed. It appears that a notice was at first served on the petitioner to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 283, I. P. C., and the petitioner, on the notice being served on him, appeared and showed cause. Thereupon, proceedings were drawn up against him under S. 133 of the Code and, when the petitioner appeared and showed cause by saying that his objection was the same as contained in his first petition, the learned Magistrate proceeded to enquire into the matter whether there had been any obstruction and, having come to the finding that there had been an obstruction, made the conditional order absolute. The procedure followed by the learned Magistrate was, in our opinion clearly wrong in law. When the petitioner, on receipt of the notice of the proceedings under S. 133, appeared in Court, the first duty of the Magistrate was to question him whether the petitioner denied the existence of public right in respect of the pathway alleged to have been obstructed. This the Magistrate did not do and he proceeded, as stated before, to enquire into the matter whether there had been any obstruction. The order of the learned Magistrate shows that there was some evidence before him, evidence which he nowhere said was unreliable, to indicate that the path was a private path. If the Magistrate had before him any evidence of this nature, it was, under the provisions of S. 139-A, Criminal P. C., incumbent on him to stay his hands immediately, until the matter of the existence of public right was decided by a competent civil Court. This again the learned Magistrate did not do in the present case.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the order of the learned Magistrate cannot be sustained. The rule is, accordingly, made absolute. The order passed by the Magistrate, making the conditional order under S. 133, Criminal P. C., absolute, is set aside and it is directed that he do proceed with the proceedings which he started under S. 133 in accordance with law, after complying with the mandatory provisions of S. 139-A of the Code. •

Criminal Revn. No. 236 of 1929, Decided on 2nd May 1929, against order of Presidency and Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, D/- 21st December 1928.

Calcutta Municipal Act, S. 535—Order passed under S. 535 (2) (a)—Person in whose favour order was passed claiming costs by subsequent application—Magistrate can consider that question.

There is nothing in the terms of S. 535 or in any other section, which prevents the Magistrate from taking into his consideration on a date subsequent to the date of order under S. 535 (2) (a) the question of costs raised by an application by the person in whose favour that order was passed.

H. D. Bose with Debendranath Bagchi and Gopendrakrishna Banerji—for Corporation.

Mrityunjay Chattopadhyaya and Jnanchandra Ray—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The short facts necessary for the purposes of this judgment are as follows: Edwards is a rate-payer of the Corporation of Calcutta and he has his house in Burdwan Road at Alipur. Immediately to the south of his house, there is another house belonging to a gentleman, Amulyadhan Addy, and tenanted by D. M. Ray. In the compound of this last-mentioned house, were erected certain huts with cutcha floorings, in which were kept a number of cows, goats and horses. The result was that the whole place was turned insanitary and Edwards complained to the Corporation of Calcutta for the purpose of inducing the latter to take action to prevent or abate the nuisance. Nothing was apparently done and, in the last resort, Edwards complained before the Municipal Magistrate under S. 535, Calcutta Municipal Act.

The Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was no nuisance and refused to pass any order. The matter then came to this Court and, after an examination of the record, this Court passed an order under S. 535 (2) (a), by which it directed the Magistrate to pass a written order directing the Corporation to prevent or abate the nuisance. Thereafter, the Corporation, it would appear, took steps to abate and remove the nuisance in question. The date on which the Magistrate, in pursuance of this Court's order, made the written order referred to above is 10th August 1928. Thereafter, Edwards made an application for the award of costs to him against Messrs. Addy and Ray. That application was considered to be misconceived and it was allowed to be withdrawn. Subsequently, Mr. Edwards made an application against the Corporation of Calcutta under the provision of S. 535 (2) (c) of the award of costs and compensation against them. The Magistrate has gone into the matter and has awarded a sum of Rs. 501 against the Corporation of Calcutta and in favour of Edwards. It is against this last-mentioned order that a rule was obtained and Mr. Bose has appeared in support of the rule. His principal argument is that either the order is one which should have been made at the time when the Magistrate made the written order under S. 535 (2) (a) or the order should not have been made at all.

There is nothing, in our opinion, in the terms of S. 535, Calcutta Municipal Act, or in any other section, which prevented the Magistrate from taking into his consideration, on a date subsequent to the date of the order, under S. 535 (2) (a), the question of costs raised by Edwards. In that view of the matter, Mr. Bose's contention must be negatived. We have examined the terms of the judgment of the Magistrate assessing the amount of costs and it seems to us, on an examination of the circumstances present on the record and taking into account the submissions made by Mr. Bose, that the award of costs must be substantially varied, and we think that the ends of justice will be sufficiently met if we reduce the amount of costs and compensation from Rs. 501 to Rs. 100. With this variation, the rule is discharged. Nothing that we have said will prevent the Corporation of Calcutta, if so advised, from making any application against anybody whom they might choose to proceed against in respect of costs incurred for abatement of the nuisance.

Criminal Revn. No. 214 of 1930, Decided on 7th May 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Arrah, D/- 28th February 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 88—Doors of house embedded in walls are immovable and digging them out amounts to serious irregularity in search.

The doors of a house have never been considered anything else but part of the furniture of the house and moveable property, but the frames, if embedded in the walls or floor, are to be considered immovable and accordingly the action of the police officers in digging the walls or floors to remove them does not seem to be technically correct and amounts to serious irregularity in connexion with a house search: 37 All. 358, Ref. [P 800 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 323—Serious irregularity in connexion with house search—Constable beaten—Offence under S. 323 and not under Penal Code, S. 332.

Where there are serious irregularities in connexion with house search and the person whose house is searched assaults and beats a constable, the offence falls under S. 323 and not under S. 332. [P 800 C 2]

S. C. Mazumdar—for Petitioner.

B. P. Jamuar—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 332 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months by a First Class Magistrate and his appeal to the Sessions Judge has been dismissed. The facts found are that Writer Head Constable Sher Khan with other constables went to the family residence of the petitioner to execute a warrant of attachment under S. 88, Criminal P. C., which had been issued by the Court of a Magistrate to enforce the attendance of the father of the petitioner. The Head Constable affixed the proclamation under S. 87, and after giving the ladies of the household an opportunity to retire took possession of the house. He and his men were going to remove the doors and door frames of the house when the petitioner with his brother Lachman came and abused the police party and resisted them, with the result that blows were exchanged, the petitioner as well as the Writer Head Constable receiving injuries.

It is contended that the police officers were not acting lawfully in removing or attempting to remove the doors and door frames. It is said that the property attached being a house was immovable property and the doors and door frames were similarly immovable. Now the doors of a house so far as I know have never been considered anything else but part of the furniture of the house and moveable property, but the frames, if embedded in the walls or floor, are, I should think, to be considered immovable and accordingly the action of the police officers in digging the walls or floors to remove them does not seem to be technically correct. I am of opinion therefore that the action of the petitioner did not amount to an offence under S. 332, I. P. C. No case exactly on all fours has been cited, but I may refer to Emperor v. Mukhtar Ahmad (1). In this case there were serious irregularities in connexion with a house search and the accused assaulted and beat a constable. The lower Court convicted the accused under S. 332, I. P. C., but it was held in revision that conviction should only be recorded under S. 323.

For the petitioner in the present case it has been argued that he had a right of private defence, but under S. 99, I. P. C., there is no right of private defence against an act which does not reasonably cause the apprehension of death or of grievous hurt if done or attempted to be done by a public servant acting in good faith under colour of his office though that act may not be strictly justifiable by law. The result is that the conviction under S. 332 is altered to a conviction under S. 323.

Finally it is contended that the sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment is excessive. In the circumstances of this case, the petitioner will pay a fine of Rs. 60 in default one month's rigorous imprisonment: That I consider a sufficient punishment.

Civil Ref. No. 33 of 1929, Decided on 14th April 1930, by Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore,

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act (8 of 1923), S. 2 (1) (d) — Son maintained by deceased father on account of some infirmity is not dependant unless "minor".

Where a son cannot be said to be "minor", the mere fact that on account of some infirmity he was maintained by his deceased father does not give him the right to be regarded as dependant within the meaning of the statute.

[P 801 C 2]

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (8 of 1923), S. 19—Commissioner cannot set aside previous order of compensation made under mistake.

Commissioner has no power to set aside a previous order for compensation made by him under a mistake.

(c) Workmen's Compensation Act (8 of 1923), S. 23—Commissioner exercises power of Court only under certain sections of Civil P. C., and does not possess inherent power under S. 151, Civil P. C.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act the Commissioner exercises power of a Court only under certain provisions of the Code and S. 151 Civil P. C., not being one of them, Commissioner does not possess any inherent power contemplated by the aforesaid section.

[P 802 C 1]

Abdul Rashid—for Petitioner.

M. C. Mahajan—for Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The circumstances, which have given rise to this reference under S. 27, Workmen's Compensation Act (8 of 1923), do not admit of any dispute. On 17th September 1928 the Agent of the North Western Railway deposited with the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, who had been appointed a Commissioner under the Act, a sum of Rs. 1,930 on account of compensation payable by the employer in respect of the death of a workman, named Karim Dad. On 21st January 1929, the whole of the compensation was paid by the commissioner to the deceased's son Fazl Karim. It was subsequently discovered that Fazl Karim was not a dependant entitled to the compensation, and the employer accordingly moved the Commissioner to call upon Fazl Karim to refund the money.

The first question upon which we are invited to express our opinion is whether Fazl Karim was a dependant within the meaning of S. 2, sub-S. (1), Cl. (d) of the Act. Now, the material portion of the clause is as follows:

"Dependant means any of the following relatives of a deceased workman, namely, minor son".

And a "minor" means a person who is under the age of 15 years. It is beyond dispute that Fazl Karim was about 23 years old and could not, therefore, be held to be the 'minor' son of the deceased. It is clear that he was not entitled to the compensation, and the mere fact that on account of some infirmity he was maintained by his deceased father does not give him the right to be regarded as a dependant within the meaning of the statute.

The second question is whether the Commissioner can modify his previous order granting compensation to Fazl Karim. In this connexion our attention has been invited to sub-S. 6, S. 8, which provides that where the Commissioner is satisfied that, on account of neglect of children on the part of a parent or on account of the variation of the circumstances of any dependant or for any other sufficient cause, an order of the Commissioner as to the distribution of any sum paid as compensation or as to the manner in which any sum payable to any such dependant is to be invested, applied or otherwise dealt with, ought to be varied, the Commissioner may make such orders for the variation of the former order as he thinks just in the circumstances of the case. It will be observed that this subsection provides for two cases: (1) the variation of an order as to the distribution of any sum paid as compensation; and (2) the variation of an order as to the manner in which any sum payable to a dependant is to be invested, applied or otherwise dealt with. Now, the order, with which we are concerned in the present case, did not make any distribution of the compensation among the dependants, but directed the payment of the whole of the money to one person, who was wrongly supposed to be, but was not, a dependant. Nor is this a case of the variation of a previous order. The Commissioner is asked to quash an order which was wrongly made by him and to direct the refund of the money for payment to the employer. The language of the subsection does not confer any such power upon him. My answer to the second question submitted by the Commissioner is that he has no power to set aside the previous order made by him under a mistake.

The third question is whether the Commissioner has inherent powers such as are conferred upon a civil Court by S. 151, Civil P. C. A perusal of the various sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act shows that the Commissioner can exercise the powers of a Court only under certain provisions of the Code, but S. 151 is not one of them. The Commissioner does not, therefore, possess any such inherent powers as are contemplated by the aforesaid section.

Wazir Chand and another — Petitioners.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1872 of 1929, Decided on 2nd May 1930, reported by Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 27-1-1930.

(a) Factories Act, S. 41-J—Liability of manager and occupier is joint and several and primarily it is manager who is to be supposed to have contravened provision.

Section 41-J of the Act provides that both the occupier and manager shall be jointly and severally liable to fine for any of the offence committed under the Act. This joint and several fine imposed on both the occupier and manager is irrespective of the fact as to which of the two had committed the offence. The duty to inform the authority under the Factories Act under S. 84 is laid on the manager. It is therefore primarily the manager who is to be supposed to have contravened this provision of the Act, but both the occupier and manager are made responsible jointly and severally for this contravention under S. 41 J.

(b) Factories Act, S. 34 — "Person" includes plural.

The word "person" includes the plural and consequently where as a result of a single accident more persons than one are injured the accident cannot be split up into as many persons injured and notice contemplated is single notice of the accident which the manager is required to submit to the authorities and therefore contravention of this rule is one offence which cannot in its turn be split up into as many offences as the number of casualties.

Mukand Lal Puri—for Petitioners.

Facts.—Two petitions for revision have been put up, Nos. 17 and 18, against the orders passed by Sardar Balwant singh Additional District Magistrate, Multan, under S. 41-J, Factories Act. The facts are not much in dispute and they are as follows.

The petitioner Wazir Chand is the declared occupier and the petitioner Gokal Chand is the declared manager of the factory which had some ginning machines working in it. As a side business it appears that an ice factory was also established, worked by the same steam engine which worked the ginning factory. An accident occurred at this factory, when an oil tank in the lathe room caught fire and two men, who were working there got injuries, one of whom succumbed to those injuries. No intimation, as is required by S. 34 of the Act, was given by the manager of this factory to the authority under the Factories Act. It is for contravention of this duty that the petitioners have been convicted under S. 41-J, Factories Act, and the learned Magistrate says, that as two men were injured, the offence must be considered under two separate accidents and not one.

Grounds.—I do not think that there is any justification for this conclusion. S. 34 of the Act lays down that "when any accident occurs in a factory causing death or bodily injury whereby the person injured is prevented from returning to his work in this factory during 48 hours after the occurrence of the accident, the manager shall send notice of the accident to such authority in such form within such time as may be prescribed."

The learned Public Prosecutor has had to admit that the accident which occurred in this factory, and upon the basis of which the petitioners are convicted, was the burning of the oil tank in the lathe room and this accident cannot be split up into two merely because two persons and not one were injured when it occurred. The word "person" as used in this section, is no doubt in the singular but under the General Clauses Act, it must include the plural. It was a single notice of the accident which the manager was required to submit to the authorities under the Factories Act and therefore the contravention of this rule is one offence which cannot be split up into two.

The learned Magistrate has imposed separate fines on the occupier Wazir Chand and the manager Gokal Chand for each of the so-called offences. S. 41-J of the Act provides that both the occupier and manager shall be jointly and severally liable to fine for any of the offences committed under the Act. This joint and several fine imposed on both the occupier and manager is irrespective of the fact as to which of the two had committed the offence. The duty to inform the authority under the Factories Act under S. 34 is laid on the manager. It is, therefore, the manager who has contravened this provision of the Act, but both the occupier and manager are made responsible jointly and severally for this contravention under S. 41-J of the Act.

For reasons stated above, I submit both the petitions to the High Court with a recommendation that instead of two separate convictions against both Wazir Chand and Gokal Chand, a single conviction against both of them jointly may be ordered and a single sentence of fine of Rs. 50, be imposed against them jointly and severally.

Order.—For reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I accept these petitions and order that instead of two separate convictions against Wazir Chand and Gokal Chand under S. 41-J, Factories Act, a single conviction against both of them jointly be recorded, and a single sentence of fine of Rs. 50, be imposed upon them jointly and severally.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 421 and 423—Appeal cannot be dismissed for non-appearance of appellant.

The Code does not permit the dismissal of an appeal on the ground that the appellant does not appear to support it. [P 803 C 2]

Order.—The learned District Magistrate was entirely wrong in dismissing the appeal preferred by the convict simply because the latter did not appear on the date of the hearing. The Code of Criminal Procedure does not permit the dismissal of an appeal on the ground that the appellant does not appear to support it. S. 421 read with S. 423 of the Code makes it incumbent on an appellate Court to hear the appeal on the merits; and there is no warrant for the dismissal of the appeal by reason of the non-appearance of the appellant. I must, therefore, quash the order of the District Magistrate dismissing the appeal for default. The learned Magistrate, instead of disposing of the appeal on the merits promptly, has allowed it to drag on and postponed it from time to time without any adequate reason. The appeal is accordingly transferred to the Court of the Sessions Judge, who is directed to decide it without any further delay.

Criminal Appeal No. 366 of 1930, Decided on 14th May 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 31st March 1930.

Criminal Trial—Presumptive evidence.—To justify inference of guilt inculcating facts must be incompatible with innocence of accused and incapable of explanation.

In the case of presumptive evidence in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculcating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. [P 806 C 2]

L. Saunders and Muhammad Rafi—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhne—for the Crown.

Tapp, J.—The appellant Feroze (25) an Awan of Adlakha in Attock District, has been found guilty of the murder of his younger brother, Dhaman, aged about 18 or 19 on 5th or 6th July 1929, at Mandra in the Rawalpindi district, and the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, in agreement with three out of the four assessors has convicted him of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced him to death. Feroze has appealed and the case is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for confirmation of the sentence.

On the evening of 6th July 1929, Ram Rakha Mal, Head Constable, Railway Police, Mandra, and Nand Lal, Assistant Station Master, while out for a walk along the Grand Trunk Road, found a corpse lying in an open field some 200 yards from the road, and about 500 yards from the Railway Station. A blood-stained axe was found lying some 10 or 15 yards from the body. A report was promptly made at the Mandra police station by Ram Rakha Mal, and Head Constable Sher Muhammad (P. W. 3) at once went to the spot, examined the body, on which there were several injuries, showing that death was due to violence, drew up the prescribed statement of injuries and inquest report, and dispatched the body to Gujjar Khan for an autopsy. A memorandum marked as Ex. P/A was found in the folds of the loin cloth on the body and this purported to show that the deceased was Dhaman, son of Shadi of Adlakha in the Tallagang tahsil of the Attock district. The contents of this document indicated that Dhaman, son of Shadi, had two enemies: Dhaman, son of Ahmad (who will be referred to hereafter as Dhaman witness) and the latter's maternal uncle Bahadur Khan, and that if anything happened to Dhaman, son of Shadi, one or other or both of these two persons would be responsible.

A photograph of the corpse was taken and this and the clothes found on the body were subsequently identified as those of Dhaman, son of Shadi, brother of the appellant.

The post-mortem examination disclosed five incised wounds of varying degrees and sizes on the neck and two contusions on the right lower jaw and forehead. Death was due to the cutting of the trachea, oesophagus and vessels of the neck with haemorrhage therefrom.

Suspicion appears to have fallen on the appellant who was not found in his village. He was apprehended by Pir Ahmed Shah, Sarbrah Zaildar (P. W. 25) who knew that appellant was "wanted by the police" at Malakwal Railway Station on 13th July and taken to the Malakwal Police post, where he was placed under arrest and sent to Mandra Police Station. On the search of his person a third class railway ticket dated 11th July, from Harnai in Baluchistan was recovered.

The prosecution led evidence to show that, on 5th July 1928, the deceased by a deed registered at Campbellpore on the 10th idem effected an exchange of his 1/4th share in the land jointly held by him, his brother the appellant and their grandmother, Mt. Agran, and his réversionary interest in the latter's half share, amounting in all to 94 kanals, 6 marlas, with Dhaman witness (P. W. 48) for an area of 101 kanals 3 marlas belonging to the latter. This transaction led to various applications being made to the revenue authorities in connexion with the mutation of names and a report to the police. These in chronological order are:

(1) Exhibit P. N., application dated 21st July 1928, by the appellant to the Deputy Commissioner, Attock, praying for the rejection of the mutation.

(2) Exhibit P. O., application dated 25th July 1928, by Mt. Agran, the grandmother, to the same effect.

(3) Exhibit P. V., an application dated 25th August 1928, by the deceased to the same effect, and alleging that he had also been deceived into selling his half share in the house to one Khan Zaman shown to be a relative of Dhaman, witness.

(4) Exhibit P. C. C., an application dated 21st September 1928, by the deceased making certain allegations against his brother, the appellant and one Fateh Khan of assault and wrongful confinement and praying for the mutation to be effected.

(5) Exhibit P. W., a report made by the deceased on 24th September 1928, at thana Tallagang, alleging that on account of the exchange of land effected by him, his brother and one Fateh Khan might possibly do him some injury.

(6) Exhibit P. D. D., a joint application dated 25th October 1928, by both the deceased and Dhaman witness praying for the attestation of the mutation.

(7) Exhibit P. Y., an application dated 21st November 1928, by the appellant and Mt. Agran for the rejection of the mutation.

(8) Exhibit P. P., an application dated 19th March 1929, by the deceased and Mt. Agran for the rejection of the mutation.

The applications and counter-applications set out above seem to have had their effect on the revenue authorities who could not make up their minds whether to allow or refuse the mutation. Eventually this was attested by the Naib Tahsildar, P. W. 10, on 28th March 1929, for the reason, as given by him, that the parties had taken possession of the lands exchanged.

The evidence referred to above and certain other evidence in the case undoubtedly show that appellant was displeased at the transaction effected by the deceased and tried all he could to undo it. It also affords some foundation for the contention of the prosecution that in this transaction and the appellant's failure to have it undone lay the motive for the act ascribed to him. There can also be no doubt that the deceased alternately came under the influence of Dhaman witness and his own family, and judging from Ex. P. P. and the memo Ex. P. A. found on the body, the family influence prevailed in the end to the extent of antagonizing deceased and Dhaman witness, though it did not succeed in undoing the exchange.

Nothing of any significance appears to have happened after the attestation of the mutation till the end of June 1929, when, according to the prosecution, the appellant sold 6 kanals 16 marlas of land to Fateh Khan receiving Rs. 237 in cash as part of the consideration. The mutation of this sale was attested on 26th June 1929, vide evidence of the Naib Tahsildar, P. W. 10. The two brothers are then alleged to have left their village for Rawalpindi stopping on the way at the house of Mt. Nur Bhari, P. W. 26, at Kot Malyar. Here they were seen by Khan, P. W. 27. Muzaffar, P. W. 28, who knew both the brothers also met them on the Khaur road about a mile from Kot Malyar and learnt that they were going to Rawalpindi. They were then seen together at the shop of a baker named Wazir (not produced, at Fateh Jang by Ahmed Khan, constable (P. W. 29).

Now, the evidence of these four witnesses, apart from it being of very unsatisfactory and unconvincing nature, is of very little, if any, value, and may well be disregarded in view of the later evidence, and as it only shows that the two brothers were seen together between their village and Rawalpindi, while the murder was obviously committed at Mandra, 25 miles by rail from Rawalpindi some few days later. There is also evidence to the effect that on 4th July, the appellant and the deceased went to Jodh Singh petition-writer, P. W. 32, at Rawalpindi, and deceased had the petition P. E. E. written. This is addressed to the Superintendent of Police, and after referring to the exchange of land and other matters, sets forth that the deceased's life is in danger at the hands of Dhaman witness and Bahadur, his maternal uncle, and prays that these two persons be placed on security. It was posted to, and received by, the Superintendent of Police, who forwarded it on to the Ilaka Magistrate for action. Then there is the evidence of Karm Illahi, P. W. 47, a cousin of the deceased, which shows that the deceased stayed with him for the night of 4/5th July, and that the witness wrote the memo P. A. found on the body at the request of the deceased. According to the witness appellant was not with the deceased.

Two witnesses Jamal Din, P. W. 35, and Nur Muhammad, P. W. 31, deposed respectively to having sold an axe-head and a handle to the appellant at Rawalpindi, and to the police having come to the shops with appellant some 15 to 17 days later. Evidence of this type requires no consideration, being of absolutely no value. Finally, we have the evidence of (i) Allah Ditta, P. W. 35, as to his having proceeded from Rawalpindi to Chakwal in search of employment and having travelled in the same compartment of the train from Rawalpindi to Mandra (the junction of Chakwal) with the appellant and his brother, both of whom he knew. The three of them alighted at Mandra and had some food at a shop outside the station, and then witness went on to Chakwal leaving the two brothers at Mandra. According to the witness appellant had an axe with him.

(2) Sawar, P. W. 36, the owner of the food-shop outside the station, deposed to the appellant and two others having had food at his shop on the evening before the discovery of the corpse. This witness identified Allah Ditta, P. W. 35, as one of the companions of appellant, but was apparently unable to recognise the photo of the deceased.

(3) Baz Khan, P. W. 43, the most important witness in the case employed as a Judicial Moharrir at Tallagang. He deposed to knowing the two brothers and Dhaman witness having seen them on two, three or four occasions at the tahsil with Pir Habib Shah, P. W. 7, the scribe of the deed of exchange, Ex. P.A.A. On 5th July Baz Khan left Chakwal by train at 4 p.m., on a journey to Chichawathi and arrived at Mandra at about 6.30 p.m. At the food-shop referred to above he saw the two brothers, who after having their food left in the direction of the road to Jatli. Appellant had an axe with him.

(4) Bakht, P. W. 44, deposed to having journeyed by train from Rawalpindi to Jhelum, where he intended to purchase some timber, and to the appellant, whom he knew, having got into his compartment at Mandra. Appellant told witness he was on his way to Loralai.

Now it will be obvious that the crucial evidence in the case connecting appellant with the murder is that of these four witnesses, and if their testimony is to be believed and is sufficient to satisfy us, there can be hardly any doubt as to the guilt of appellant. We have carefully examined and weighed this evidence, and are far from satisfied as to the veracity of Allah Ditta and Bakht. These two men are what is commonly styled 'wajtakkar' or adventitious witnesses, whose meeting with the two brothers at the time is prima facie open to considerable doubt. Evidence of such witnesses has to be received with considerable caution. Allah Ditta furthermore was at one time in the service of Bahadur, the maternal uncle of Dhaman witness who appears to have been under strong suspicion in the present case. Bakht travelled all the way to Jhelum to buy timber and did not do so. In short, their evidence quite fails to impress us. As regards Sawar, it is impossible to believe that out of all the several customers at his shop that evening it would be possible for him to remember the appellant from among them.

The evidence of Baz Khan cannot be rejected on similar grounds, but in our opinion it is insufficient owing to lack of corroboration and the possibility of his having made a mistake.

A very serious defect in this case has been the omission of the prosecution to show how the investigation proceeded step by step and bring out in evidence the manner in which the various witnesses were traced. For instance, both Allah Ditta and Lakht stated that a zaildar named Aurangzeb discovered them, but this individual, who seems to have taken part in the investigation and whose testimony might have been of some value, was not produced as a witness. On the other hand the appellant names Aurangzeb as one of those responsible for his implication.

The story of the appellant briefly is that he left his village on 28th June 1929 for Loralai in search of employment, leaving his brother, the deceased with their aunt. Failing to obtain work he was returning home when he was apprehended at Malakwal Railway Station by Ahmad Shah, Zaildar. He attributed his implication to Dhaman witness, Habib Shah and Aurangzeb. This is not a satisfactory account and may indeed be false as urged by Mr. Sawhney, but appellant's guilt cannot be determined by such considerations.

We have given the case our most anxious consideration, and while there may be grounds for strong suspicion, we are not satisfied that the guilt of the appellant, depending as it does entirely on circumstantial evidence has been established beyond all doubt. It is an axiom that in the case of presumptive evidence in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt.

Such an inference would be wholly unjustified in the present case and we, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence, acquit the appellant, and direct he be set at liberty forthwith.

BROADWAY, J.
Achhru and others—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1241 of 1929, Decided on 22nd November 1929, case reported by Sess. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 2nd August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 137—Magistrate making absolute conditional order passed under S. 133 without taking prosecution evidence in accused's presence—Trial is vitiated by material irregularity.

The provisions of S. 137 are imperative. The complainant has to start proceedings by adducing evidence and then the party showing cause may produce his own evidence, if so advised. Hence where a Magistrate makes his conditional order under S. 133 final without recording statement of the complainant or taking prosecution evidence in the presence of the accused, the whole trial will be vitiated by material irregularity. [P 807 C 2, P 808 C 1]

Ram Rup—for Petitioners.

Facts.—Certain Chamars of village Paddi Matwali were served with a notice under S. 133, Criminal P. C., to desist from tanning inside the village as this process emitted a very offensive smell which proved injurious to the health of the villagers. This order was made absolute on 8th May 1929, under S. 137, Criminal P. C. The Chamar petitioners have filed this revision application and their learned counsel has pointed out a material irregularity in the proceedings of the trial Court, which vitiates the trial. The learned Public Prosecutor has also conceded that point.

Grounds.—The Tahsildar had asked the Chamars, in compliance with the Deputy Commissioner's order, that they should remove their premises to a place outside the village population, otherwise action would be taken against them under S. 133, Criminal P. C. This order was communicated to the Chamars on 20th August 1928. It was apparently based on the report of the Health Officer dated 23rd July 1928, submitted by him to the Deputy Commissioner, in which he had pointed out the raw hide tannery of the Chamars was a perfect nuisance. On 14th September 1928, Ralle Khan, lambardar of the village, filed a complaint against the Chamars that their tannery emitted a very offensive smell which was injurious to the health of the general public. Notice was issued to the petitioners under S. 133, Criminal P. C., on 14th September 1928, asking them to desist from tanning inside the village, or to show cause why they should not be asked to remove their tannery to a place outside the village.

In response to that notice some of the Chamars actually attended the Magistrate's Court, but, before this was done, the Magistrate himself inspected the spot and his note, dated 2nd January 1929, shows that he wanted to provide some other place for the Chamars, where they could undertake their tanning profession. Obviously the proposal did not appear agreeable to the Chamars. They actually appeared on 12th April 1929, and filed written statements alleging that they were tanning leather in the kunni in dispute since the foundation of the village, that the villagers had not previously objected to that tannery and that the existence of the tannery inside the village was not at all injurious to health and did not amount to nuisance. They were ordered to produce evidence in support of their allegations on 24th April 1929. On that date three witnesses of the Chamars were recorded in brief and the learned Magistrate, relying on the strength of his inspection note, the report of the Tahsildar dated 20th August 1928, and the report of the District Medical Officer of Health dated 23rd July 1928, made his order dated 11th March 1929, absolute, and further ordered that the Chamars shall not carry on tanning within the village abadi and shall not continue or repeat the offence, obviously under Ss. 136 and 143, Criminal P. C.

The learned Magistrate has expressly ignored the provisions of S. 137, Criminal P. C. That section requires that if the respondent appears and shows cause against the order passed under S. 133, the Magistrate shall take evidence in the matter as in a summons case. This procedure is imperative. It was held in Emperor v. Hingu (1), following Srinath Roy v. Ainaddi Halder (2), that the complainant has to start proceedings by adducing evidence and then the party showing cause may produce his own evidence if so advised. When this has been done, and not before, the Magistrate can make the conditional order absolute if he finds sufficient reason for doing so. It was further held in Indar v. Emperor (3), that the opposite party is not bound to produce any evidence until the party who has set the law in motion has produced his evidence. Emperor v. Sita Ram (4) is another authority in point, in which it was held that the Magistrate should have proceeded as in a summons case and the order passed by him on the basis of his inspection note was held to be illegal. Tirkha v. Nanak (5), containing recent observations of the Lahore High Court on the subject has upheld the above view. In the present case the statement of the complainant Ralle Khan was not recorded in the presence of the accused neither was any evidence for the prosecution taken in their presence.

(1) [1909] 31 All. 453=10 Cr. L. J. 297=3 I. O. 7482.

(2) [1897] 24 Cal. 895=1 C. W. N. 217.

(4) [1917] 18 Cr. L. J. 898=41 I. O. 1000.

The Health Officer and Tahsildar's reports which were made even before the institution of the present complaint are not at all proved in this case and those reports cannot constitute any valid evidence against the present accused who were not given any chance to cross-examine the authors of those reports. The onus did lie on the prosecution to prove that the tanning on the part of the accused was injurious to the health or physical comfort of the villagers. In view of the denial of the accused that their trade was so injurious, the onus was shifted very heavily on the prosecution to prove their own assertion that it was really injurious to public health and was tantamount to a nuisance which must be removed by taking action under S. 133, Criminal P. C. The order of the learned Magistrate appears illegal, for the mandatory provisions of S. 137, Criminal P. C., were not observed.

I. therefore, submit the proceedings to the High Court, with the recommendation that this revision application should be accepted and the case remanded to the trial Court for trial in the proper way.

Order.—Acting on the recommendation in the referring order, and for the reasons therein contained, I set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct that the proceedings be carried out in accordance with the provisions of law.

Criminal Revn. No. 1754 of 1929, Decided on 24th January 1930, case reported by Sess. Judge, Karnal, D/- 21st November 1929.

Criminal Trial—Criminal Court should stay trial where civil suit is pending—Practice.

Criminal Court should stay its hand when a civil suit about the same dispute is pending.

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Facts.—On the complaint of Daya Ram Patwari that he had been cheated by Mani Ram, petitioner, who obtained from him a ruqqa for Rs. 100 under false pretences that the money would be paid to Daya Ram, but who did not pay the money, the trial Magistrate, Sahibzada Shamshad Ali Khan, Honorary Magistrate, exercising powers of a Second Class Magistrate, framed a charge against Mani Ram under S. 418, I. P. C., to the effect that Mani Ram had obtained the ruqqa under false pretences without intending to pay to Daya Ram the money for which the ruqqa was taken from him. Mani Ram has filed a petition for revision of the above order.

Grounds.—Mani Ram's story is that the ruqqa was executed of consideration and that no cheating was practised upon Daya Ram. He has also brought a civil suit for recovery of the sum of Rs. 100 due on the basis of the ruqqa from Daya Ram. The point in issue in the civil suit and in the criminal complaint is one and the same, viz., whether or not money was paid by Mani Ram to Daya Ram who executed a valuable security in Mani Ram's favour. Petitioner's contention is that proceedings in the criminal case should have been stayed and no charge under S. 418, I. P. C., should have been framed against him when the matter in dispute was before a civil Court. It is also contended that the alleged offence would fall under S. 420, I. P. C., which could not be tried by a Second Class Magistrate. The respondent's counsel admits that the trial Magistrate, who exercises only second class powers, could not frame a charge when the alleged offence clearly falls under S. 420, I. P. C. But on the strength of the rulings cited as Gnana-singamana Nadar v. Vedamuthu, A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 308 and C. Ramiah v. N. Ramiah, A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 778, he argues that the civil suit is no bar to the criminal proceedings. Petitioner's counsel relies on the rulings cited as Ladha Shah v. Zaman Ali, A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 289, Bishambar Das v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 17, Emperor v. Bishan Das (1), Pars Ram v. Jalal Din (2) and Nur Din v. Emperor (3), in which cases it was held by our High Court that when the matter in issue is one which can best be decided by a civil Court, then resort to criminal proceedings should not be allowed.

It is extremely doubtful if a patwari would execute a ruqqa without first obtaining money for which he executes the ruqqa. I agree with the contentions of the petitioner's counsel that the criminal Court should have stayed its hands when a civil suit about the same dispute was pending and that the alleged offence being one under S. 420, I. P. C., could not be tried by a Second Class Magistrate who has no jurisdiction to try such an offence. In my opinion, the charge under S. 418, I. P. C., framed against the petitioner should be quashed and I refer the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., to the High Court with a recommendation that the charge may be quashed and proceedings in the criminal case be stayed until decision of the civil suit.

Order. — For reasons given by the Sessions Judge I transfer this case to the District Magistrate of Karnal with direction to send it for trial to a Magistrate of the First Class competent to try it. The Magistrate to whom the case is sent for trial shall stay proceedings till the disposal of the civil suit by the trial Court, and if he decides to proceed with the case after the conclusion of the civil suit he will first consider the question of amending the charge.

Budhwa—Petitioner.

Kirpi—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 120 of 1930, Decided on 2nd May 1930, on reference by Sess. Judge, Ambala, D/- 17th January 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 488 — Husband willing to take back run away wife of bad character—Court must ask if she was willing to return before proceeding further.

Where, in a proceeding against husband under S. 488, Criminal P. C., the husband expresses his willingness to take his wife back although she had left him of her own will and was of bad character, it is incumbent on the Magistrate to ask the wife whether she was willing to return to her husband before proceeding further. [P 809 C 2]

Muhammad Akbar Khan — for Petitioner.

Facts.—Mt. Kirpi, the wife of Budhwa Chamar of Jatahpur in the Ambala Tahsil, has taken proceedings against her husband under S. 488, Criminal P. C., asking for Rs. 15 a month as maintenance. The learned Magistrate has allowed her Rs. 10 a month, and Budhwa has come to me on revision urging inter alia that he is willing to maintain his wife who has refused to return to him. The procedure of the learned Magistrate has been as follows :

Mt. Kirpi was examined on her petition, but not in the presence of her husband. In his presence four witnesses were examined on her behalf and he was then questioned, and expressed his willingness to take Kirpi back, although she had left him of her own will and was of bad character. Instead of the Magistrate asking the wife at this stage whether she was prepared to return to her husband, he adjourned the case and called on the husband to produce evidence, which he did, about his means only.

Grounds. — Since it was incumbent on the Magistrate so soon as the husband offered to maintain his wife, to ask her whether she was willing to return to him, and since the Magistrate has failed to put this question to her, I report the proceedings under S. 438, Criminal P. C., to the High Court with the recommendation that the order of the learned Magistrate should be set aside, and that he should be directed to re-hear the petition from the point at which the husband offers to take his wife back.

Order.—I accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge and setting aside the order of the learned Magistrate direct that the case be reheard from the stage when the petitioner offered to maintain his wife, the respondent.

Preman and others—Accused' Petitioners.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 845 of 1929, Decided on 9th August 1929, from order of District Magistrate, Sheikhpura, D/- 13th February 1929.

Penal Code, S. 441—Land in possession of alienor—Alienor trying to take possession by force without legal justification—Inference of criminal intention is justified.

Where the alienor had transferred possession for good consideration to the alienee and then tried to take it back by force without any legal justification.

Held: that the presence of criminal intention may be rightly inferred; 12 P. R. 1906 Cr. (F.B.), Foll.; 41 Mad. 156; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 600 and 17 I. C. 415, Dist. [P 810 C 2]

Abdul Aziz—for Petitioners.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Judgment.—These are three connected petitions for revision in which the petitioners have been convicted under S. 447, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine varying from Rs. 15 to Rs. 25 in each case.

The material facts were briefly as follows: One Preman had purchased half a square of land from Government. He had to pay the purchase money by instalments and was to remain a tenant until the whole price was paid. Before the instalments had been fully paid up, however, he transferred portions of the land to different persons and they took possession thereof. Subsequently it was declared by the Collector that these alienations, being contrary to the conditions on which the land had been sold to Preman, were void. Mutation which had been sanctioned in respect of one of the alienations was reviewed and the original entry was restored in the revenue records. Preman thereupon proceeded to take possession of the land which he had alienated by force with the help of the other petitioners. Preman and the other petitioners were, therefore, prosecuted under S. 447, I. P. C., and have been convicted and sentenced as stated above.

The learned District Magistrate in upholding the conviction of the petitioners has relied on the Full Bench ruling Ram Saran v. Emperor (1). Mr. Abdul Aziz, who appeared for the petitioner, has contended that the facts of the present case are distinguishable and that in any case the Full Bench ruling referred to above does not lay down the law correctly and needs reconsideration in view of Suleman v. Emperor (2), Vullappa v. Bheema Row (3) and Meajan v. Sharafatullah Khan (4).

After carefully considering the above authorities I have come to the conclusion that the present cases are covered by Ram Saran v. Emperor (1) and that there are no adequate grounds for making a fresh reference to a Full Bench.

The rule laid down by the majority of Judges in Ram Saran v. Emperor (1) is that when a person claiming a title to property, whether his title be good or bad, enters without any legal justification upon property in the established possession of another, he must be inferred to have had an intention to annoy the person in possession within the meaning of S. 441, I. P. C., even though he had no primary desire to annoy, and his only object was to obtain possession for himself.

In the present instance it is not disputed that Preman had not only alienated the land, but possession had been transferred and the land was cultivated by the alienees. In these circumstances it seems clear that Preman had no "legal justification" for taking back the land by the use of force as he did. An attempt was made to prove that the Tahsildar had authorised him to recover possession. But the Tahsildar denied having done so. All that he says is that the person in "unlawful possession" is sometimes warned to give up possession, but he did not remember if even this was done in the present case.

Whatever Preman's primary "object" may have been, he must have known

(1) [1906] 12 P. R. 1906 Cr. (F.B.).

(2) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 600=96 I. C. 871=27 Cr. L. J. 1015.

(3) [1918] 41 Mad. 156=19 Cr. L. J. 162=43 I. C. 878 (F.B.).

(4) [1912] 18 Cr. L. J. 783=17 I. C. 415.

fully well that he had no right to take back by force the land which he himself had alienated for good consideration. In these circumstances the Courts below were, in my opinion, justified in inferring that Preman and the other petitioners had the requisite "criminal intention" for the purposes of S. 441.

The facts in the Madras Full Bench ruling Vulappa v. Bheema Row (3) were of a different character. A young boy having stolen some jewels was believed to have handed over the same to the Head Master of a school. All that the accused were alleged to have done was to search the house of the Head Master for these jewels in spite of his protests. In these circumstances "intention to annoy" was not inferred. The ruling, however, makes it clear that whether the requisite criminal intention for the purpose of S. 447, I. P. C., should or should not be inferred depends upon the facts of each case. In the present instance such an intention has been inferred from the facts, and I think rightly.

In Suleman v. Emperor (2), the facts were of a very peculiar character. The accused was alleged to have committed the trespass with the object of prosecuting his intrigue with the complainant's daughter. It appeared, however, that the accused had taken special precautions to conceal his presence from the complainant, and hence it was held that he had no intention to annoy the complainant. The facts of the present case are clearly distinguishable.

In Meajan v. Sharafatullah Khan (4) there was no finding that the accused had any "intention to annoy."

I reject the petitions.

(c) Penal Code, S. 457.—Policeman convicted of burglary—Five years rigorous imprisonment is not excessive sentence.

Where a policeman whose duty it was to protect the lives and property of the subjects of the Crown was convicted of a serious offence of burglary, sentence of five years rigorous imprisonment was held not excessive.

T.M. Mackay—for the Crown.

Judgment—Two policemen, namely, Sardara and Amar Nath, have been convicted under S. 457, I. P. C., and sentenced to a term of five years rigorous imprisonment each. Amar Nath has appealed through his counsel, M. Saunders, while Sardara has submitted his petition to this Court through the jail in which he is confined. I take up the appeal of Amar Nath first. A burglary was committed in the house of one Dr. Khan Chand in the small hours of the morning of 5th May 1929. The police were informed and investigation made. Dr. Khan Chand gave a list of the articles which were found missing from his house. The police arrived at the spot and found certain broken window panes on the roof of Dr. Khan Chand's house. It appears that there were skylights in Dr. Khan Chand's house which were broken through by the burglars who thus effected entrance into the room. The police found that these pieces of glass bore certain finger impressions. They accordingly took these pieces of glass into their possession and had them subsequently photographed by Sardar Gurdit Singh, P. W. 2. The accused was suspected and taken into custody. His finger-prints were taken in the presence of the Court (Ex. P. C.). There is a register maintained in the Police Department in which the finger-prints of policemen are preserved. Amar Nath being one of these policemen naturally his finger-prints were also taken on this register, which is Ex. P. B. Altogether the thumb prints of 483 men are to be found in Ex. P. C. in which the finger prints of the accused person were taken before the Court and the enlarged photographs of the finger-prints found on the broken window panes and Ex. P./B. which contains the finger prints of a very large number of policemen including the accused Amar Nath, Sardar Harnam Singh, Deputy Superintendent of Police, in charge of Finger Print Bureau, Phil-laur, has given evidence to the effect that the finger Prints on the broken window panes were those of Amar Nath. He was hardly cross-examined by the accused and therefore his evidence stands practically unchallenged. Besides this evidence we find that Sardara, the co-accused, implicated Amar Nath in the offence when he made his formal confession before a Magistrate. It is true that that confession was subsequently retracted, but having regard to the authority of the Chief Court of Oudh in Sheo Ratan v. Emperor (1), there cannot be any doubt that this confession of Sardara, even though subsequently retracted, was admissible in evidence against Amar Nath, his co-accused. Thus we have the evidence of the expert about the finger-prints of Amar Nath on the broken window panes which received a certain amount of corroboration from the confession of Sardara. Two cases, Bazari Hajam v. Emperor (2) and Jassu Ram v. Emperor (3), were cited before me by counsel for Amar Nath, accused. Jassu Ram v. Emperor (3) is merely based upon Bazari Hajam v. Emperor (2) and the learned single Judge of this Court held that it would be unsafe to base a conviction upon the solitary testimony of the finger print expert. The learned Judge of the Patna High Court in a subsequent case reported in Basgit Singh v. Emperor (4) considered the case reported in Bazari Hajam v. Emperor (2) and accepted the view of law laid down in Emperor v. Viramal (5), that a Court cannot refuse to convict a person on the evidence of a finger print expert merely on the ground that it is unsafe to base a conviction upon such evidence. This I take to be the correct view of law. Thus the evidence of the finger print expert in the present case receives corroboration if corroboration were necessary, from the confession of the co-accused Sardara. On these facts in my judgment the accused Amar Nath was properly convicted.

I have been asked to consider the question of sentence and have considered it. The accused is a policeman whose duty it is to protect the lives and property of the Crown. Instead of performing this duty he has been found guilty of having committed the serious offence of burglary. In my judgment the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment which has been imposed upon him by the trial Magistrate is not by any means excessive. I dismiss the appeal.

As already stated while dealing with the case of Amar Nath, that as a result of the investigation, Sardara, accused, was taken into custody and he made a confession before Sardar Dewindar Singh P. W. 12. He subsequently recovered the property in the presence of another Magistrate, Qazi Rahmatullah, P. W. 11. There cannot be any doubt as to the genuineness both of the confession as well as of the recovery; and the evidence of the two Magistrates on these points cannot be impeached. In the presence of P. W. 11, Qazi Rahmatullah, the accused took out a tin which contained the articles belonging to the complainant, Dr. Khan Chand, which had disappeared from his house on the night of the burglary. The guilt of Sardara is therefore fully established and I do not think that the fact that he retracted his confession afterwards makes any difference. He has been convicted under S. 457, I. P. C., and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. In my judgment both the conviction and the sentence are fully appropriate. I dismiss the appeal.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Complaint under S. 107 made on Sunday—Magistrate taking complainant's statement on Sunday and issuing warrant against accused, for amount far beyond accused's means, with two sureties—When two persons offered security, enquiry held in their absence and on finding that they had not immovable property worth security amount, their security rejected—Other persons offering security and their bond attested by Honorary Magistrate—Honorary Magistrate called to appear and after his examination, that security also rejected—Magistrate's conduct was characterised by vindictiveness and desire to harass accused and so transfer of case to another Magistrate held justified.

The object of calling upon the accused to furnish security is not to penalise the accused but to ensure his presence in Court, and the amount of security must be fixed with due regard to the nature of the offence and the means of the accused. [P 816 C 1]

While a complaint against the three accused persons, members of the Congress, under Ss. 500 and S. 385, I. P. C., was pending another complaint under S. 107, Criminal P. C., was made on a Sunday, the statement of the complainant was recorded also on another holiday and order was passed directing issue of warrants bailable for Rs. 6,000 with two sureties who were to bind themselves jointly and severally in that amount. The amount of security was far in excess of the means of the accused. When bail was offered by two men, an enquiry was held in the absence of the sureties and the only question considered was whether the sureties had each immovable property worth more than Rs. 6,000, and as the answer was in the negative the security was refused. Other persons offered as sureties and their bonds were attested by an Honorary Magistrate. On enquiry, the Magistrate not being satisfied that the security was sufficient called the Honorary Magistrate to appear before him but when he appeared, the Magistrate postponed the case as the Courts were closed that day. The Honorary Magistrate appeared again, but after his examination the bonds were again rejected, although the sureties stated that they owned immovable property worth Rs. 1,00,000 and Rs. 25,000 respectively. The accused applied for transfer of the case.

Held: that the conduct of the Magistrate was characterised by vindictiveness and a desire to harass the accused and on this ground transfer of the case to another Magistrate was justified. [P 816 C 2]

Fakir Singh—for Petitioner.

R. C. Soni—for Respondent.

Judgment.—These are three applications by Swami Chetanand for the withdrawal of three criminal cases from the Court of Sardar Narindar Singh, Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, and for their transfer to a Magistrate in some district other than Lahore. It is alleged that the local officials at Kasur are prejudiced against the petitioner and that the District Magistrate of Lahore has also conducted himself in such a manner in dealing with the petitioner's cases that the latter apprehend that he also is prejudiced against him and, therefore, he does not expect justice in the Court of any of the Magistrates in Lahore. The following are the undisputed facts on which the application is based.

In October 1929, Gurbakhsh Singh and Thakur Singh filed a complaint under S. 500 and S. 385, I. P. C., against three persons, Durga Das, Lekh Raj and Swami Chetanand, and also against another person, with whom we are not concerned on the present occasion. A month later Swami Chetanand made a report to the police against Gurbakhsh Singh and another charging the latter with an offence under S. 392, I. P. C., in consequence of which the house of Gurbakhsh Singh was searched, but the police did not proceed further with the case. The case filed against Durga Das, Lekh Raj and Swami Chetanand was pending in the Court of Lala Roshan Lal, Magistrate, at Lahore. In the meantime on 2nd February 1930, which was a Sunday and a public holiday, a complaint under S. 107, Criminal P. C., was made by Gurbakhsh Singh before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kasur. In this complaint it was alleged that Durga Das, Lekh Raj and Swami Chetanand had committed certain acts which caused an apprehension in the mind of the complainant and that they would cause a breach of the peace and a prayer was made that they be bound over under S. 107, Criminal P. C. On the same day this complainant was transferred to the Court of Sardar Narindar Singh, who was at Pattoki. It seems that the complaint to the Sub-Divisional Officer was not presented at the headquarters but when he was in camp. On 3rd February 1930, which again was a public holiday, Sardar Narindar Singh recorded the statement of the complainant and passed an order directing issue of warrants bailable for Rs. 6,000 with two sureties, who were to bind themselves jointly and severally in that amount, for the arrest and production of Durga Das, Lekh Raj and Swami Chetanand on 5th February 1930. In the order recorded by this Magistrate an apprehension was expressed that the persons complained against were not likely to appear merely on summonses and for that reason warrants were issued. There is absolutely no indication on the record how the Magistrate entertained this apprehension, nor is there any suggestion in the statement of the complainant to that effect. In pursuance of the warrants issued the persons complained against were arrested on the 3rd before 10 a. m., were produced before the Sub-Divisional Officer and, under his orders, were taken to Kasur by a train which leaves Pattoki at 10.5 in the morning and were apparently kept in jail till the 5th, when they were produced before the Magistrate. They prayed to be released on bail and were informed that an order for their release on bail had already been passed on 3rd February 1930; further it would appear that they were not informed by the persons who arrested them that they could be released on bail and also that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case before 10 a. m.

On 5th February 1930, bail was offered by two men who belonged to Chunian, but the Magistrate declined to accept their security unless the Tahsildar of Chunian certified to the capacity to give security for Rs. 6,000 each. The security bond was consequently sent to Chunian and the accused were kept in custody. Chunian is 50 miles from Kasur, and it appears that the security bond did not reach the Tahsildar till 10th February 1930, for certification and the tahsildar fixed 16th February 1930, for an enquiry into the sufficiency of the security to be held at Pattoki. Consequently an enquiry was held on the 16th at Pattoki, but it seems that the sureties were not called and the enquiry was held in their absence.

The only questions asked from the persons from whom the enquiry was made by the Tahsildar were directed to ascertain whether the sureties had moveable property worth more than Rs. 6,000 each and the answers being in the negative, a report was made that the security was not sufficient, but it is to be observed that the Tahsildar stated that the sureties had not sufficient immovable property. The result was that the security offered was not accepted by the Magistrate.

In the meantime, realizing that delay is likely to occur in the attestation of the security bond by the Tahsildar of Chunian, the accused had a security bond executed by two residents of the Lahore Cantonment, Kidar Nath and Mehtab Rai, had it attested by an Honorary Magistrate and counsel produced the security bond with the sureties before the Magistrate Sirdar Narindar Singh, on the same day. The Honorary Magistrate had stated in his attestation that he knew one of the sureties personally and was satisfied that he had considerable moveable and immovable property far exceeding in value the amount of the security demanded and with regard to the other he had satisfied himself by enquiry that he also had sufficient immovable property to entitle him to give bail in the sum of Rs. 6,000. It is alleged that the bond was presented to the Magistrate at 2 o'clock, but no attention was paid. Consequently at 3.50 an application was presented by counsel stating that he had been waiting with the security bond and the sureties for acceptance of the security by the Magistrate. On this application the Magistrate noted that it was already 4.5 p. m., and, therefore, he could not attend to the matter. He consequently fixed the case for the next day. It may be mentioned that on 6th February 1930, another security bond executed by two sureties Qazi Abdul Kadir and Gokal Chand was presented, but, for some reason or other, was not attested.

On 7th February 1930, the sureties appeared before the the Magistrate again and were subjected to a lengthy examination including searching questions as to their movable property, the number of horses, tongas, value of jewelry, etc., owned by them. Questions were also asked from them with a view to ascertain whether they were the men who had actually signed the bond and appeared before the Honorary Magistrate to attest the same and also whether they knew the accused Swami Chethanand for whom they had given security. They stated that they owned immovable property worth Rs. 1,00,000 and Rs. 25,000 respectively. The Magistrate, however, was not satisfied and he called the Honorary Magistrate from the Lahore Cantonment to appear before him on 8th. The Magistrate, accompanied by counsel and the two sureties, reached Kasur a little after 1 o'clock but the Magistrate declined to do anything in the matter and postponed the case to the 10th on the ground that the Courts had been closed owing to the death of a local legal practitioner. He forgot the fact that complaint had been received and the warrants for the arrest of the accused were issued on public holidays. Consequently the Honorary Magistrate again appeared on the 10th and, after he had been examined the security bond was rejected.

I have examined the record of statements of the sureties and of the Honorary Magistrate and I am satisfied that the sureties were well able to pay the amount for which they offered bail respectively, and it was quite unnecessary to call and to examine the Honorary Magistrate and I further consider that there was no justification for the view of the Magistrate that the sureties must have moveable property of more value than the amount of the bail. The questions asked from the sureties were, in my opinion, calculated to harass and to insult them.

Now all this happened on 10th February 1930, and it is a curious coincidence that on the same day another complaint was filed by Mt. Gian Devi, a relation of Gurbaksh Singh, under S. 457, I. P. C., against the same accused persons. And this complaint was also on the same day sent by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to Sardar Narindar Singh. The suggestion of the petitioner's counsel is that this complaint was filed in order to circumvent the possible release of the petitioners on bail, in case the Magistrate felt constrained to accept the security of Kidar Nath and Mehtab Rai.

After this security bond had been rejected by the Magistrate, the accused moved this Court in order to obtain a direction to the District Magistrate of Lahore to decide the question of sufficiency or otherwise of the security tendered by the accused himself. An order was consequently passed that the District Magistrate himself should consider the question of sufficiency of security.

It is alleged that the District Magistrate took no action on it and consequently an application was presented that proceedings in contempt of Court be taken against him for not obeying the order of this Court and that on the presentation of this last mentioned application, the Additional District Magistrate accepted the same security bond which had been rejected by the Magistrate. When, however, the order was conveyed to the Magistrate he made some representation that the proceedings of the Additional District Magistrate were irregular, and on 5th March 1930 the order accepting bail was cancelled. When, however, the record went back to the Magistrate at Kasur the security of the same persons was accepted on 13th March 1930.

In the meantime, however, as I have stated above, a complaint under S. 457, I. P. C., had been made against the accused persons and in that case on 7th March 1930 an application was made to the Sessions Judge of Lahore praying that the accused be released on bail. The case was fixed for 10th March 1930 and an order was passed that the record of the case be produced before the Sessions Judge on that date. The record, however, did not reach on the 10th and the case had to be adjourned till the next day and the record was received only after the order was repeated by telegram. On the 12th the Sessions Judge directed that the accused Swami Chetanand be released on bail for Rs. 5,000 and on the 13th the security offered was accepted by the Magistrate along with the security in the former case.

The above proceedings took place with regard to the security of Swami Chetanand accused. Now on 17th March 1930 the remaining two accused applied for bail and two men i. e., Jiwan Singh of Sheikhpura and Bhag Mal of Kasur offered security on 20th March 1930. The bond of Jiwan Singh had been attested by the Naib Tahsildar of Sheikhpura, but the Magistrate directed that the Naib Tahsildar who was posted in another district should appear before him on 24th March 1930. On that date Jiwan Singh did not appear before the Magistrate and Bhag Mal expressed a desire to withdraw the security on behalf of the accused offered by him.

In view of the treatment meted out to the other sureties and the manner in which the Magistrate conducted himself throughout these proceedings, it is not surprising that both Jiwan Singh and Bhag Singh declined to have anything to do with his Court. The case pending in the Court of Lala Raushan Lal, Magistrate, First Class, Lahore, was also transferred by the District Magistrate to that of Sardar Narindar Singh without notice to the accused and apparently without any application.

I have merely given above the history of the proceedings before the Magistrate as far as possible in its chronological order. I have not thought it necessary to set out in detail the manner in which the proceedings were conducted in his Court and which were open to serious objections.

In my opinion, the above facts are quite sufficient to indicate the attitude taken up by the Magistrate against the accused persons in this case. I have not been able to discover any other motive which led the Magistrate to adopt this extraordinary attitude and procedure in the matter except the one suggested by the petitioner's counsel. It is that his clients are active members of the Congress party, Swami Chetanand being the Secretary of that local Congress Committee. It is also alleged that as 26th January 1930, was observed by the Congress Committee as, what they called it, the Independence Day, the local authorities were annoyed with the accused persons and started proceedings to punish them for their objectionable behaviour from their point of view. I accept this explanation, as I have not been able to discover any other reason for the unusual conduct of the Magistrate.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the Magistrate entirely ignored the principles underlying the fixing of the amount of security which an accused person can be called upon to furnish. It has more than once been laid down that the object is not to penalise the accused but to ensure his presence in Court and the amount of security must be fixed with due regard to the means of the accused and the nature of the offence. A complaint under S. 107, Criminal P. C., on the facts alleged was not of such a serious nature as to warrant such a heavy amount of security and the amount was far beyond the means of the accused persons. Swami Chetanand apparently has no business except perhaps political agitation, the other two accused are a hawker and a servant in a press respectively drawing a salary of Rs. 20 or 30 per month. The entire conduct of the Magistrate, therefore, was characterised by vindictiveness and a desire to harass the accused and the grounds for the transfer of the case from his Court are so irresistible that the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer, who appeared for the Crown, had nothing to say against the grant of the petition.

At the same time I do not see any reason to transfer this case from the Lahore District. The orders passed by the District Magistrate, though unexplained, are capable of being construed as having been passed on the material placed before him and I do not believe that the accused will not be impartially tried in Lahore. I, therefore, withdraw these cases from the Court of Sardar Narindar Singh, Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, and transfer them to the Court of Khan Sarbuland Khan, Magistrate First Class, Lahore. I have transferred the case to Lahore because in my opinion it is not desirable that the accused should be tried in these cases by any other Magistrate at Kasur.

Criminal Revn. No. 40 of 1930, Decided on 27th March 1930, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Pilibhit, D/- 6th November 1929.

United Provinces Prevention of Adulteration Act (6 of 1912), S. 4—Scope.

Possession of adulterated food or drug is not made a crime under the Act. [P 817 C 2]

G. S. Pathak—for Applicant.

M. Waikullah—for the Crown.

Judgment. — This application must succeed on both the grounds raised on behalf of the applicant. The applicant has been convicted of an offence under S. 4, United Provinces Prevention of Adulteration Act 6 of 1912 (Local). There is a mandatory injunction in S. 15 (2), of the Act that every summons issued in a prosecution under S. 4 and S. 10 shall specify particulars of the offence charged and the name of the prosecutor besides other information. In the summons no particulars were given; nor was the name of the prosecutor given. The particulars were essential in this case because even now I have not understood the exact reason or rather the exact charge on which the applicant has been convicted. If the particulars had been stated in the charge a Court of revision would have had an opportunity to test the particulars and discover whether they amounted to an offence under S. 4. What the learned Judge says I am afraid I am unable to understand. What happened in this case was that, according to the Magistrate, 21 canisters of ghee were found in a store-room of the applicant who sells ghee ordinarily as his business. The trial has been so perfunctory that I cannot discover whether every one of the 21 canisters contained adulterated ghee or only one canister. An observation of the Magistrate at the end of the judgment that ghee which was not found adulterated had been detained for a long time makes me believe that the entire quantity was not adulterated. It is very unfortunate that in summary trials no proper care is taken to record evidence and facts in a way to give an accurate idea of facts to the Court of revision. What the learned Judge says is this :

"It is clear from the evidence as found by the Magistrate that the adulterated ghee was meant for sale and anybody who sells such ghee does commit an offence under S. 4."

The section, however, makes no mention of storage of adulterated ghee. It will not be profitable to spend any time in solving the puzzle of the language of the Sessions Judge. The Magistrate makes no positive statement at all as to what was the crime that the applicant committed. He has entered into generalities as to the adulteration business going on in a very large number of cities and his belief is that the accused would not have tested the ghee before offering it for sale. He also does not trouble himself to decide whether the storing of adulterated ghee is an offence, and in what words he would have framed the charge if it had been necessary to frame a charge in this particular case. The task of a Court of revision becomes very difficult when Subordinate Courts refuse to disclose what in their opinion was the specific charge on which an applicant has been convicted. For this reason the omission to mention the charge in the summons was highly prejudicial to the applicant and the Sessions Judge could not have thought carefully of this matter when he made the observation that the applicant knew very well what the charge against him was and that the omission of particulars from the charge was merely an irregularity. When this Court after all its training fails to understand the charge the Sessions Judge's statement is incorrect that the applicant knew very well what the charge against him was. Possession of adulterated food or drugs is not made a crime under the Act. In the present case there was no sale, nor was the substance offered for sale or exposed for sale; nor is it said that the applicant manufactured the articles himself for sale. If there had been any evidence that the applicant purchased pure ghee and adulterated it himself his act would have been covered by the words

"manufactures for sale any article of food which is not of the nature, substance or quality which it purports to be."

The prosecution has been entirely misconceived. I set aside the conviction.

tion and sentence and order the fine, if any recovered from the applicant, to be refunded.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 215, 216 and 218 of 1929, Decided on 13th March 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Hoshangabad.

* * (a) Evidence Act, S. 30 — (Per Full Bench)—If there is any other relevant matter implicating co-accused, Judge can consider confession along with that matter (Subhedar, A. J. C.)—Such confession can only be used when other proved facts fail by narrow margin to justify conviction.

The self-inculpatory confession of an accused implicating his co-accused is fact upon which alone the conviction of his co-accused cannot be legally based. Nor can such a confession even if it be corroborated by other evidence which is insufficient by itself to sustain the conviction of the non-confessing co-accused form a legal basis for his conviction.

[P 827 C 1]

Per Full Bench.—But if there is any other relevant matter implicating the co-accused the Judge is permitted by S. 30 to consider confession along with the said matter and as a result of such consideration to convict the accused. (Per Subhedar, A. J. C.) Such confession can be legitimately used to corroborate other evidence and even to supplement the same in those exceptional cases in which without such aid the other evidence falls short by very narrow margin of that standard of proof which is requisite for a conviction.

[P 827 C 1]

Where the other evidence was to the effect that the accused were seen going on the night of the murder towards the place where the deceased lived and that there was general enmity between the accused and the deceased the evidence is insufficient to justify conviction of the non-confessing co-accused: 24 W. R. 42 Cr. and 9 C. P. L. R. 35 Cr., Appr: A. I. R. 1926 All. 377, Rel. on; other case law discussed.

[P 831 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 3—Evidence.

Per Macnair, A. J. C.—The word "evidence" in the Act signifies only the instruments by means of which relevant facts are brought before the Court, viz., witnesses and documents, and by means of which the Court is convinced of these facts.

[P 827 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 30—Scope.

Per Macnair, A. J. C.—When S. 30 lays down that the Judge may consider a fact in certain circumstances it plainly declares that fact to be relevant in those circumstances.

[P 829 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 30—(Per Full Bench) Court can exclude confession by accused altogether from consideration against co-accused (Per Macnair, A. J. C.) It cannot be said that word "may" gives Court right to exclude confession from consideration.

Per Full Bench.—Court has discretion to exclude a confession by an accused altogether from consideration against the co-accused if it is so disposed, Per Macnair, A. J. C.—The use of the word "may" does not show that every confession is of very small value against a co-accused. It cannot be said that the word "may" gives the Court right to exclude the confession from consideration if it is so disposed. The Judge is given a discretion but the discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner; if the confession would help in arriving at a decision that the accused is guilty he must do so. Judgment

Jackson, A. J. C.—Five persons have been convicted of murder and four of them have been sentenced to death. Gobarya, his wife Kashi, his son-in-law Sitaram, and one Budhia are those who have been sentenced to death, and Asaram, Gobarya's son, has been sentenced to transportation for life. The person held to have been murdered is Fadal, brother of Gobarya.

On 21st August 1929, Fadal's body was recovered from a well near the ghana in which he had been living, and the medical evidence is that he died from strangulation. Sitaram, one of the accused, who admits his guilt, has described how he and the other accused came to strangle Fadal and throw the body into the well. It appears that there was ill-will between Fadal on the one side and Gobarya and his wife on the other on account of a partition which had recently taken place. As a result of that partition Gobarya had to pay some money to Fadal, and on 20th August he asked Sitaram to tell Gobarya and Kashi that he wanted the money. Kashi, who appears to have resented the fact that Fadal, who was a childless widower, shared equally at the partition with her husband, suggested that Fadal should be killed and all dispute thus ended. Sitaram was cajoled into taking a part, and all the five accused at night went to the ghana of one Sojar in whose employ Fadal was and there, while Gobarya sat on Fadal's chest and Kashi, Asaram and Budhia helped to hold him, Sitaram passed a rope twice round Fadal's neck, and Gobarya and Sitaram pulling on the ends of the rope strangled him. His body was then carried to the well and thrown in after a blow had been struck on the head with a stone to make it appear that Fadal had been killed by accident in falling into the well. The bucket and rope of the well were thrown in after him, and two utensils were brought and left near the well to help the suggestion that Fadal had fallen in by accident while drawing water.

Sitaram made a confession to a First Class Magistrate on 2nd October 1929 to the above effect. He repeated his story to the committing Magistrate on 23rd September 1929, although on 16th September 1929 he is recorded as having declined to accept the conditions on which he could become an approver. He again repeated his story before the Sessions Judge, and in the Sessions Court he put in an application asking for a pardon, but this on the opposition of the other accused and of the prosecution was rejected. It is only in his grounds of appeal to this Court that he has put forward the plea that he was threatened by the police and tutored to tell the story implicating himself and the other accused, with a promise that, if he did so, he would be made an approver and acquitted. I am unable to accept the argument put forward on his behalf to show that his confessions were not voluntary and not true. Although his application was rejected by the Sessions Judge, he had been given an opportunity of becoming an approver in the Court of the committing Magistrate and he refused it for reasons which are not obvious. Nevertheless, the fact remains that until after his conviction he told the same story on three different occasions and when he was called upon to plead to the charge before the Sessions Judge his plea was one of guilty. It seems to me impossible to hold otherwise than that Sitaram was a party to the murder of Fadal.

As regards the other accused, it is argued that there is no evidence against them but Sitaram's confession, and that there can be no conviction on the confession of a co-accused alone. The confession of a co-accused is certainly not evidence within the meaning of the definition of that term in S. 3, Evidence Act; but it is a matter which can be taken into consideration under S. 30, and must be included in the matters before the Court that under S. 3 are to be taken into consideration before a fact is held to be proved or not proved. It has thus the practical effect of, and can be most conveniently referred to, as evidence. The question, however, arises whether it is substantive evidence or merely evidence that can lend assurance to other evidence incriminating the co-accused. It seems to me that such a confession being admissible under S. 30 must be regarded as substantive evidence if it clearly implicates the other accused in the crime, and that it cannot be treated merely as corroborative of facts otherwise proved, which would make S. 30 a mere nullity.

That is the view taken by Hallifax, A. J. C., in Sapku v. Emperor A. I. R. 1922 Nagpur 146. He sums up his review of the case law on the subject in the following paragraphs:

"10. Against the proposition that the confession of a co-accused can be used as a piece of substantive evidence and that we may start with it as a basis, proceeding to enquire how far it is corroborated, we have, therefore, the dictum of Stevens, J. C., in Empress v. Karim Buz (1) that of Ainslie, J., in Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerburthy (2) which on examination works out very nearly to laying down 'rule touching the credibility of evidence' of which Heaton, J., speaks in the passage quoted above, the judgment of the Madras High Court in Giddigadu v. Emperor (3) which rests entirely on authority to which I cannot refer, and the dictum of Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta (4), which apparently was not followed by Fletcher, J., in Emperor v. Babar Ali (5).

"11. On the other hand, we have reasoned and to my mind convincing judgments by Knox, J., and Richards, J., in Emperor v. Kehri (6), by a Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Malhari (7) by Heaton, J., Macleod, O. J., concurring, and, on this point, Shah, J., not dissenting, in Gangapa Kardapa v. Emperor (8). To these I might add the reasoning in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge (Mr. F. K. Body) which is published as an annexure to Gangapa Kardapa v. Emperor (8). There is also the judgment of Garth, C. J. in Empress v. Asfotosh Chuckerbutty (9), and indeed the unanimous decision of the Full Bench in that case that such a statement is substantive evidence. I have not mentioned the Allahabad case of Queen-Empress v. Nirmal Das (9) nor the Bombay case of Queen-Empress v. Khandia (10) as they may both be taken as overruled by the later decisions quoted. In any case, the reasons stated in the later rulings appear to me much more convincing. I concur entirely in the views expressed by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Kehri (6) and by Heaton J. in Gangaga Kardepa v. Emperor (8), and hold that in this case the confession made by Shrawan can be treated as substantive evidence against Sapku Patil, and if it is found to be credible, because it is sufficiently corroborated by other evidence or matters proper for consideration, Sapku Patil can be convicted on it."

It is true that two other Judges of this Court disagreed with the view stated in that case, but I do not find their reasoning convincing. There was, however, agreement upon one point and that is that even if the confession of a co-accused can be treated as substantive evidence, it cannot by itself be made a basis for conviction of the other accused. In the present case there is corroboration of Sitaram's story as regards the throwing of the body into the well and the steps taken to make it appear that the death was accidental. There is also the evidence of Sarjuram (P. W. 5) who met Sitaram early in the morning after the murder returning to his own village from Dahua where the murder was committed. But such corroboration helps to implicate nobody but Sitaram. As regards Gobarya and Kashi, the corroboration of Sitaram consists of the evidence to show the ill-will that existed between Fadal and his brother and sister-in-law and of the evidence of Salak (P. W. 7) who on the night of the murder saw five persons, of whom Gobarya, Kashi, Sitaram and Buddhia were four, going towards the ghana where Fadal lived. The question is whether this corroboration is sufficient. I am satisfied that Sitaram took part in the murder; he could not have committed it alone; the motive for the murder was not his but Gobarya's and Kashi's; and, when it is proved that Gobarya and Kashi were seen on the night of the murder going with Sitaram towards the residence of the deceased, it seems to me impossible not to hold that Gobarya and Kashi were among the persons who committed the murder. Similarly, in the case of Buddhia there is some evidence of enmity between him and Fadal which would make it probable that he would be willing to assist Gobarya and Kashi, and when he too was seen among the five persons going towards the ghana, it seems to me that his guilt also is manifest. My view is that the convictions and sentences of Sitaram, Gobarya, Kashi and Buddhia be upheld. As regard Asaram, there is no corroboration of Sitaram's confession and in my opinion he ought to be acquitted.

Mohiuddin, A. J. C.—I have read the opinion which my learned brother has recorded in this case, and I agree with him, for reasons recorded in para 3 of his opinion, that Sitaram was a party to the murder of Fadal. I would therefore confirm the conviction and sentence in Sitaram's case and dismiss his appeal. Regarding the other four co-accused Gobarya, Kashi, Buddhia and Asaram, there is no direct evidence of their complicity in the murder of Fadal except the confession of the co-accused Sitaram, and the question for consideration therefore is whether the confession is substantive evidence or merely a matter that can be taken into consideration, to lend assurance to other evidence incriminating the co-accused. S. 30, Evidence Act, is an exception to the rule of English law that a confession by an accused can be considered against others who may be tried along with him and was introduced into the Evidence Act in 1872, for the first time. Glover, J., in Queen v. Jaffir Ali (11), (at p. 64) made the following observation about this section:

"Section 30, Act 1 of 1872, introducing as it does an entirely new, and, I am inclined to think, rather dangerous element in the conduct of criminal trials, ought to be construed with great strictness."

and Phear, J., in Queen v. Sadhu Mundaul (12), characterized it as "dangerous material."

The confession of an accused is not evidence within the meaning of that word as defined in S. 3, Evidence Act, but is a matter which can be taken into consideration by the Court, that is, it is an element in the consideration of all the facts in the case. It cannot be put on the same footing as the evidence of an accomplice who has become an approver, because his statement cannot be tested, developed, and explained by cross-examination and is not given on oath. Accomplice evidence has been made admissible under S. 133, Evidence Act, and we find in Illus. (b), S. 114, Evidence Act, the rule of caution and prudence where it is declared by the legislature, that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. But as the confession of a co-accused is not evidence but is only a matter which has been made admissible for consideration, it cannot be treated as substantive evidence and no amount of corroboration of that matter can put it on the same basis as the evidence of an accomplice. I am therefore of opinion that the confession of a co-accused, not being evidence, is only a matter which can be taken into consideration if there is other evidence in the case to lend assurance to that evidence, and cannot form the basis of a conviction, even though there may be corroboration of the statement of the co-accused.

(9) [1900] 22 All. 445—(1900) A. W. N. 169.

I am fortified in this view by the only published decision of this Court, which is contained in Empress v. Karim Bax (1) and runs as follows:

"Section 27, Evidence Act, then, has no application to the case, but, as I have said, S. 30 does apply. At the same time the confession of a co-accused used under the provisions of the latter section stands on a perfectly different footing from the testimony of an accomplice. The latter is substantive evidence in the strict sense of the term, a conviction may legally proceed upon it without corroboration, though the general practice of the Court is to require corroboration, because a presumption naturally arises against such evidence from its tainted character. Whether corroborated or uncorroborated it may form the basis of a conviction. It is entirely otherwise with the confession of a co-accused. It is not in itself substantive evidence and we may not start with it as a basis, proceeding to enquire how far it is corroborated. It can be used only in a subsidiary manner in connexion with the substantive evidence adduced in the case."

This point was considered by a Bench of this Court, consisting of Batten and Stanyon, A. J. C's., in Emperor v. Malhari (7), and the relevant portion of their judgment runs as follows:

"The question then remains how far we should act on it. We think that since we believe it to be the truth both as to what was done and as to the identity of the persons doing it, we are bound to use it as establishing the guilt of all the accused. A good deal has been written and said about the scope of S. 30, Evidence Act, 1872, and some of the earlier published decisions on the point would make the confession of an accused something less than evidence against his accomplice jointly tried with him for the same offence, so that no conviction of the latter could be sustained thereon if the other evidence would be insufficient to prove his guilt. We are unable to take this view. We do not think it was the intention of the legislature that S. 30, should provide a mere superfluity, to be used only in cases already established by other evidence. The later view that a statement admitted under S. 30, is a piece of evidence as relevant as any other kind of evidence, commends itself to us as the more correct interpretation of the law. It follows that a conviction based on the uncorroborated statement of a co-accused would not be illegal, because there is not one word in the Evidence Act which requires any specified quantity or description of relevant evidence to sustain a judicial finding. We have considered the recent case of Emperor v. Kehri (6), where the evidential value of a retracted confession is very fully considered. In our opinion it is a correct interpretation of the law, and we concur with every dictum laid down in it."

They observed that a statement admitted under S. 30 is a piece of evidence as relevant as any other kind of evidence, but I respectfully beg to point out, that the statement of a co-accused not being evidence at all under the Evidence Act, the view taken by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioners is not correct.

The next case in which the point was considered by a Bench of this Court, is Sapku v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 146). In this case Hallifax, A. J. C., concurred entirely with the view expressed by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Kehri (6), and held that the confession of a co-accused could be treated as substantive evidence, and if it was found credible, because it was sufficiently corroborated by other evidence or matters proper for consideration, other accused could be convicted on it. Pridaux, A. J. C., expressed the opinion that the confession of a co-accused could not be treated as substantive evidence. On account of this difference of opinion, the case was laid before Kotval, A. J. C. who concurred in the opinion expressed by Pridaux A. J. C.

This view was followed by Findlay, Offg. J. C., and Pridaux, A. J. C., in Diwan Dhimar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1926

Nag. 229, as appears from the following passage:

"On behalf of the Crown reliance has been placed on the decision of Sanderson, C. J., and Beachcroft, J., in Ah Foong v. Emperor (18), as well as on the old decision of Garth, C. J., in Empress v. Ashootosh Chuckerbutty (2), and it has been suggested that the confessions in this case are practically equivalent to the evidence and can be accepted as affording proof within the meaning of S. 8, Evidence Act. Reliance has also been placed on the view taken by Hallifax, A. J. C., in Sapku v. Emperor (14), but the view of the majority of Judges in that case was that the confession therein concerned was not evidence under the Evidence Act as against a co-accused and the only fair inference was that the Court might take such a confession into consideration with, or supplementarily to, relevant facts which might form the basis of a judgment. We see no reason for differing from this view."

The published ruling of this Court contained in Empress v. Karim Bax (1), and the decisions of two Benches of this Court contained in Sapku v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 146 and Diwan Dhimar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 229, are thus in favour of the view that the confession of a co-accused, which is made admissible in evidence, is not substantive evidence and cannot form the basis of a conviction.

Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (4), at 588 clearly laid down that conviction on the confession of a co-accused alone would be bad in law, and that the Court can only treat a confession as lending assurance to other evidence against a co-accused. Brett and Chatterjee, JJ., were the other Judges who formed the Bench in that case and concurred in the view expressed by Jenkins, C. J. It seems that the decision reported in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (4), was not brought to the notice of the Divisional Bench, which decided Emperor v. Babar Ali (5), because Fletcher, J., made no reference to it in his judgment. I, therefore, venture to suggest, that the view of the Calcutta High Court, is the one which is contained in the Full Bench decision of that Court contained in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (4).

The Madras view is to be found in Giddigadu v. Emperor (3), in which Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ., laid down that the wording of the section shows, that such a confession is merely to be an element in the consideration of all the facts of the case, but do not do away with the necessity for other evidence. In Bombay High Court there was a difference of opinion on this point between Shah, J., on two occasions, and the cases were referred to a third Judge: see Emperor v. Gangappa Kardeppa (8) and Emperor v. Sabtikhan Bahadurkhan (15). The Allahabad view was followed in Bombay by a majority of the Judges in these two cases.

Taking it for granted, that the confession of a co-accused can be treated as substantive evidence, it seems to me that corroboration of such a confession must be better and stronger than what may be considered sufficient in the case of the evidence of an accomplice:

"The existence of general enmity and a desire, however strong or a motive however effective to procure the death of another person," as pointed out by Walsh and Dalal, JJ., in Emperor v. Kalwa (16):

"may be a piece of circumstantial evidence, but is not corroboration of a sworn statement of participation in a particular crime. Corroboration must point to the identification of the person charged with the particular act with which the direct evidence connects him."

Sitaram knew that there was ill-will between Fadal and Gobarya, and as he participated in the murder, he knew that the body of Fadal was thrown into the well and that steps were taken to make it appear that death was accidental. These facts cannot be considered as material particulars, which corroborate the confession of a co-accused. Sujuram (P. W. 5) met Sitaram early in the morning after the murder returning to his own village from Dahua, and Salak (P. W. 7) saw five persons, of whom Gobarya, Kashi, Sitaram and Budhia were four, going towards the ghana where Fadal lived. The corroboration raises a suspicion, but falls short of what is required to support a conviction. Similar facts were considered to be consistent with the innocence of the accused in Emperor v. Babar Ali (7), by Fletcher, J., as appear from the following passage in that judgment:

"The corroboration in the evidence in this case although it raises a case of suspicion, falls far short of what is required to support a conviction. It consists principally of statements of witnesses as to seeing the accused or some of them together on the night of the occurrence, and as against one of the accused, as to the identification of certain ornaments found with one of the accused which had some time or other been pledged with the deceased woman. These statements, though giving rise to suspicion, are consistent with the innocence of these four accused."

I am, therefore, of opinion that there is not such corroboration of the confession of Sitaram, as to make it safe to rely on his confession so far as his co-accused are concerned. This confession has also been retracted by Sitaram in this Court. For reasons given in paras. 2 and 12 of this order, I am of opinion, that Gobarya, Kashi, Budhia and Asaram should be acquitted.

(On difference of opinion case was laid before the Judicial Commissioner for referring it to another Judge under Ss. 378 and 429 Criminal P. C.).

Reference Order

Subhedar, A. J. C. — A point of law of considerable importance in the administration of criminal justice in these provinces is involved in these connected appeals which have been referred to me, under S. 429, Criminal P. C., for opinion on a difference of opinion arising between Jackson and Mohiuddin, A. J. C's., who formed the Bench and heard the said appeals. As I shall show later on, there has been a considerable divergence of opinion among the Judges of this Court in the matter of interpretation of the provisions of S. 30, Evidence Act. Both the learned Government Advocate and the counsel for the appellants have, therefore, moved me to refer the matter to the decision of a Full Bench in order that the conflict of views existing at the present date be set at rest and the law definitely laid down for the guidance of the Judges of this Court and Subordinate Courts in future. Accepting their suggestion I order that the case be laid before the Judicial Commissioner for favour of constituting a Full Bench to hear the matter.

The facts of the case are clearly given in the first three paragraphs of the opinion of Jackson, A. J. C., and need not therefore be repeated here at any length. Five persons were concerned in the alleged murder of one Fadal of whom one Sitaram alone made a confession implicating himself and the other co-accused. Excepting the con-fessional statement of Sitaram, there was no other evidence which by itself established the charge against the confessing accused but the Sessions Judge convicted them practically upon the confession of Sitaram.

The principal question involved in the decision of the appeals before the Bench was if the self-inculpatory statement of the appellant, Sitaram, implicating the other four appellants who were his co-accused, was a piece of substantive evidence against them, or was merely a matter that could be taken into consideration with any other piece of evidence incriminating them.

Jackson, A. J. C., following the views of Hallifax, A. J. C. in Sapku v. Emperor (17) and of Batten and Stanyon A. J. C's, in Emperor v. Malhari (7) held that the confession of the co-accused was substantive evidence against the other co-accused while Mohiuddin A. J. C., following the dicta of Stevens, J. C., in Empress v. Karim Bax (1), of Kotval and Prideaux, A. J. C's, in Sapku v. Emperor (17) and of Findlay, J. C., and Prideaux, A. J. C., in Diwan Dhimar v. Emperor (18) held that the confession of the co-accused not being evidence was only a matter which could be taken into consideration if there was other evidence in the case to lend assurance to that evidence and could not form the basis of conviction of the other co-accused even though there might be corroboration of the statement of the co-accused.

Reference may also be made here to three other decisions of this Court, viz., that of Kotval and Kinkhede, A. J. C's, in Shaikh Shero v. Emperor (19), of Wadegaonkar, A. J. C., in Raghunath v. Emperor (20) and of Kinkhede, A. J. C., in Necha v. Emperor (21) in which the learned Judges followed the law as propounded in Empress v. Karim Bax (1). The cases from the other High Courts in which one or the other view was taken are cited at length by Jackson, A. J. C., in para. 5 of his opinion and by Mohiuddin,

A. J. C., in paras. 10 to 12 of his opinion and are not, therefore, again cited here.

I refer the following points to the decision of a Full Bench :

(1) Whether the self-inculpatory confession of an accused implicating his co-accused is substantive evidence upon which alone the conviction of his co-accused could legally be based and if not,

(2) whether such a confession even if it be corroborated by other evidence which is insufficient by itself to sustain the conviction of the non-confessing co-accused could form a legal basis for his conviction.

Opinion

Subhedar, A. J. C.—On account of the importance of the subject and the conflict of views held thereon by many eminent Judges of this Court and other High Courts in India the following points have been referred to the decision of the Full Bench:

(1) Whether the self-inculpatory confession of an accused implicating his co-accused is substantive evidence upon which alone the conviction of his co-accused could legally be based and if not,

(2) whether such a confession even if it be corroborated by other evidence which is insufficient by itself to sustain the conviction of the non-confessing co-accused, could form a legal basis for his conviction.

The points under reference really invite the decision of the sole question whether, under the provisions of the Evidence Act, which is unquestionably a self-contained enactment, not only defining and amending but also consolidating the law of evidence in India by repealing all rules other than those saved by the last portion of its second section, a self-inculpatory confession of an accused is or is not judicial evidence against his co-accused. If the answer to this question is in the negative it logically follows that the answer to both the points referred to must also be in the negative.

The matter was indeed argued very ably and exhaustively on both sides. The learned Government Advocate tried to maintain that there was practically no difference between the confession of a co-accused and the evidence of an accomplice and that a conviction could not be illegal if based solely upon such a confession, while Mr. Kedar, for the appellant, contended that such a confession, not being judicial evidence, no conviction could legally be obtained on its basis.

Section 30, Evidence Act, is worded as follows:

"When more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession."

It is to be noted that under S. 5, Evidence Act

"evidence may be given in any suit or proceeding of the existence or non-existence of every fact in issue and of such other facts as are hereinafter declared to be relevant, and of no others."

What is oral and documentary evidence is defined by S. 3 of the Act and it is obvious that a self-inculpatory confession of a co-accused does not fall within the category of this class of evidence. It is equally clear that such a confession as aforesaid has not been declared "relevant" by any of the several sections of Chap. 2, Evidence Act, which defines and declares what facts are relevant nor is it declared to be so by any other sections of the Act. To take only two of the many instances, S. 28, Evidence Act, declares the confession of an accused relevant against himself provided it escapes the attraction of Ss. 24 to 26 ibid.; and S. 133 declares an accomplice to be a competent witness against an accused person. It follows therefore that since the self-inculpatory confession of a co-accused does neither fall within the definition of evidence nor is declared "relevant" by the Evidence Act, it is not admissible to prove the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue in a case. The matter may also be considered from another standpoint. Prov. 1, S. 165, Evidence Act, lays down in unequivocal terms

"that the judgment must be based upon facts declared by this Act to be relevant, and duly proved."

From this it is apparent that the confession of a co-accused, which is not declared either relevant or evidence by the Evidence Act, could not possibly form the basis of a legal judgment. Obviously therefore it must be rigorously excluded from consideration except to the extent permitted by S. 30 of the Act itself.

It further appears to me quite clear that the legislature has advisedly used the words "may take into consideration" in S. 30, Evidence Act, making it optional with the Court to use or not to use the self-inculpatory statement of an accused against his co-accused. Giving the natural meaning to the terms of the said section it is apparent that the Court has got the right to exclude such a confession altogether from consideration against an accused person if it is so disposed. No such option is, however, left to the Court in respect of facts declared relevant or evidence under the Evidence Act and duly proved, and the Court is bound to consider these though it may reject them on their merits; otherwise its judgment would be vitiated.

The words "may take into consideration" in S. 30, Evidence Act, also connote the idea that there must be other material besides the confession of a co-accused to form the basis of the conclusion to be arrived at in a case. To my mind these words are deliberately inserted by the legislature so as to exclude the possibility of such a confession being used by itself against a non-confessing accused in the determination of his guilt.

In Empress v. Govind (22), Stevens, J. C., in setting aside the conviction which was based solely upon the confession of a co-accused made the following weighty observations :

"I think the conviction of this appellant is bad in law. The Magistrate is not correct in regarding a confession of an accused person implicating a co-accused under S. 30, Evidence Act, as the same thing as 'the testimony of an accomplice' which is referred to in S. 133 of the Act. It is plain from the words of the latter section that it contemplates that the accomplice shall be examined as a witness. This being so, the provision that 'a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice' has not application to the case of an uncorroborated confession taken into consideration as against a co-accused jointly tried with the confessing accused under S. 30."

Again, in Empress v. Karim Bax (1) the same eminent Judicial Commissioner expressed himself on the effect of S. 30, Evidence Act, as follows:

"It (the confession of a co-accused) is not in itself substantive evidence and we may not start with it as a basis, proceeding to inquire how far it is corroborated. It can be used only in a subsidiary manner in connexion with the substantive evidence adduced in the case. We have thus to have recourse in the first instance to the evidence of the witnesses."

The principles laid down in the above cases were followed by Pridaux and Kotval, A. J. C's., in Saptu v. Emperor, (22) [1896] 9 C. P. L. R. 35 Cr.

A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 146; by Findlay, J. C., and Pridaux, A. J. C., in Diwan Dhimar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 229; by Kinkhede, A. J. C., in Necha v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 213, and by Mohiuddin, A. J. C., in the case out of which this Full Bench reference has arisen.

I shall now briefly refer to some of the most important cases of the other High Courts which were cited at the Bar and otherwise discovered by me and which bear upon the question under consideration. The earliest view of the Calcutta High Court was expressed by Phear, J., in Queen v. Sadhu (12) where the learned Judge characterized S. 30 of the Act as "dangerous material" and held that it was discretionary with the Judge to act upon it or not. Jackson, J., in construing the words "may take into consideration" appearing in the said section remarked as follows in Queen v. Chandra Bhattachari (23) :

"The section does not provide as has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court, that such confession is evidence; still less does it say that it may be the foundation of a case against the person implicated. The legislature very guardedly says that it may be taken into consideration, and I think, that the obvious intention of the legislature in so saying was that, when, as against any such person there is evidence tending to his conviction, the truth or completeness of this evidence being the matter in question, the circumstance of such person being implicated by the confession of one of those who are being jointly tried with him should be taken into consideration as bearing upon the truth or sufficiency of such evidence. In this case, the Judge has proceeded in the inverse way, and has taken the confession of a fellow prisoner as the basis of a case against the appellant."

This view was dissented from by that Court in the Full Bench case of Empress v. Ashootosh (2) wherein it was laid down that under S. 30, Evidence Act, the confession of a co-accused was evidence proper on which a conviction could legally be based. However, the earlier view of that Court, that such a confession was not evidence but was matter only to be taken into consideration to lend assurance to other evidence, was upheld in Emperor v. Lalit Mohun (4) where at p. 588 Jenkins, C. J., expressed himself in these words:

"The language of the section is guarded, and the history of this Act leaves me no doubt that this section was designedly framed in these terms. While 'admissions,' a word which (22) 24 W. R. 42 Cr.

embraces confessions, are by S. 21 relevant, and may be proved as against the person making them, all that S. 30 provides is, that the Court may take them into consideration, as against other persons. This distinction of language is significant, and it appears to me that its true effect is that the Court can only treat a confession as lending assurance to other evidence against a co-accused."

It is true that in Emperor v. Babar Ali (5), Fletcher, J., observed that the confession of an accused "can be taken into consideration" against other accused provided it is corroborated, but whether as a matter of precaution or as a rule of law is not made clear. Since no reference is made in this case to the decision in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (4) it cannot be said that the law as propounded therein was overruled in this case.

Coming to the decision of the Bombay High Court it appears that serious conflict of opinion arose amongst the several Judges of that Court in the following two notable cases:

Emperor v. Gahappa Kardeppa (8) and Emperor v. Sabitkhan Bahadurkhan (15). In the first case Macleod and Heaton, JJ., held that the confession of a co-accused was substantial evidence, while Shah, J., held the contrary view. In the second case Scott, C. J., to whom the case was referred on a difference between Heaton and Shah, JJ., held that if the confession of a co-accused was substantially corroborated by other evidence it could form the basis of a legal conviction.

The earlier view of the Allahabad High Court as expressed in Empress v. Nirmal Das (9) was that such confessions could only be taken into consideration along with other evidence in the case, but in Emperor v. Kehri (6) this view was dissented from and it was held that they were substantive evidence in a case and a conviction based solely thereon was not illegal. Again, in Emperor v. Kalwa (16) the learned Judges who formed the Bench declined to apply the law as laid down by that Court in Kehri's case but preferred to follow the view of Garth, C. J., in Empress v. Ashootosh (2).

The view of the Madras High Court on this question appears to have been consistent throughout. In 7 Mad. H. C. App. 15: Weir 740 (Anonymous) it was held that S. 30 was an exception, and its wording showed that the confession of an accused was merely to be an element in the consideration of the evidence and that unless there was something more, the conviction of a co-accused based upon it would still be a case of no evidence and bad in law. The latest pronouncement of that Court to the same effect is to be found in Giddigadu v. Emperor (3).

In Devendra Bhattacharya v. Emperor A. J. R. 1927 Pat. 257 a Divisional Bench of the Patna High Court approved and followed the view of the Calcutta High Court on this point as propounded in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (4).

It only remains to notice the two unreported cases of this Court in which the view propounded in Emperor v. Kehri (6) and some of the Bombay cases already noticed was followed by some of the Judges of this Court. They are the decisions of Hallifax, A. J. C., in Sapku v. Emperor (17), of Batten and Stanyon, A. J. C's., in Emperor v. Malhari (7), and of Jackson, A. J. C., in the case out of which the present reference has arisen. With due deference, I regretfully differ from the learned Judges who held the view contrary to that expressed in Empress v. Karim Bax (1) as I find their reasoning unconvincing.

For reasons given in paras. 4 to 8 above and relying on those decisions of the other High Courts which follow the views similar to those propounded in Empress v. Karim Bax (1), I am of opinion (a) that the confession of a co-accused is not substantive evidence, like the testimony of an accomplice, upon which alone the conviction of an accused could legally be based; (b) that no conviction could also be legally based upon such a confession even though it be corroborated by other evidence which by itself would not sustain the conviction; and (c) but such a confession may be taken into consideration along with other evidence in the case as bearing upon the truth or sufficiency of that evidence or as lending assurance to it.

Using the word "evidence" in the popular sense, the confession of a co-accused not having the sanctity of oath nor the test of cross examination behind it, is, from its very nature, evidence of the very weakest and subsidiary character and the Court should not, in the first instance, start with it proceeding to enquire how far it receives corroboration from other evidence on record. It may, however, be legitimately used to corroborate other evidence and even to supplement the same in those exceptional cases in which without such an aid the other evidence falls short by a very narrow margin of that standard of proof which is requisite for a conviction. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the extent to which the confession of a co-accused may be used to supplement the substantive evidence in a case and it must be left open to the Court, in each case, in the exercise of judicial discretion, to decide for itself under what circumstances and to what extent it should be so used. My answer to both the points referred to is, therefore, in the negative.

Macnair, A. J. C.—I have had the advantage of reading the opinion of my brother Subhedar. Although my answers to the questions do not differ widely from the answers given by him, I find it desirable to deliver a separate opinion. The first question as framed makes use of the word "evidence" in a sense in which it is not used in the Evidence Act. Evidence is defined in S. 3 of the Act. I entirely agree with the following commentary on this definition in Woodroffe and Amër Ali's Law of Evidence, 8th Edn. p. 108 :

"The word 'evidence' as generally employed is ambiguous : (a) It sometimes means the words uttered and things exhibited by witnesses before a Court of justice : (b) at other times it means the facts proved to exist by those words or things, and regarded as the groundwork of inferences as to other facts not so proved : (c) again it is sometimes used as meaning to assert that a particular fact is relevant to the matter under enquiry (Steph. Introd., 3, 4). The word in this Act is used in the sense of Cl. 1. As thus used it signifies only the instruments by means of which relevant facts are brought before the Court (viz., witnesses and documents), and by means of which the Court is convinced of these facts."

Section 30, Evidence Act, mentions the necessity for proof of a confession, and the word "evidence," as defined in the Evidence Act, means the oral or documentary evidence by means of which a confession is proved. It appears to me desirable to use words in accordance with the definitions in the Evidence Act when discussing the meaning of a section of that Act, and I am not certain in what exact sense the word "substantive" is used. I therefore consider that the first question should be stated :

"Whether the self-inculpatory confession of an accused implicating his co-accused is a fact upon which alone the conviction of his co-accused could legally be based ?"

The proposition that S. 30, Evidence Act, allows consideration of a confession against a co-accused only when there is other matter for consideration against that co-accused has been accepted by many eminent Judges. I may refer to Queen v. Chunder Bhutacharjee (23) at 43 ; Emperor v. Lalit Mohan Chuckerbitty (4), Giddigadu v. Emperor (3) and Emperor v. Gangappa Kardeppa (8) at 66 by Shah, J. I think the main reasoning of these Judges may be stated as follows : The confession of a co-accused is a statement made by an accomplice : that accomplice has confessed that he is guilty, but a very common reason for confession is that the evidence is so strong that denial is futile and that, if no trouble is given to the prosecution and the Court, there is a possibility of a lenient sentence ; the statement, then, should be treated with caution for reasons similar to those which apply to the evidence of an accomplice ; the statement in the confession has not been tested by cross-examination ; it is natural, then, that the Evidence Act should place restrictions upon the use of this confession : S. 30 which allows the confession to be used is framed in very guarded language : it is hardly possible that this language was intended to allow a Court to make as full a use of the confession as of any evidence given by witnesses : the section read as a whole means that the confession can be considered along with other matter.

It appears to me that this reasoning has considerable force, but, in my opinion, when the language of S. 30 is closely considered, it is clear that it allows consideration only in this manner. It allows a Judge to take the confession into consideration against a co-accused, and there is no reason to imagine that the words "take into consideration" were loosely used for the word "consider." In my opinion, a Judge cannot take a fact into consideration unless he is at the time considering other facts ; it would be incorrect to say :

"I take into consideration all the proved facts"

instead of "I consider all the proved facts." The words of S. 30, then, do not allow a Judge to consider the confession of a co-accused against that co-accused unless there are other relevant facts under consideration. I therefore answer the first question in the negative: S. 30 does not allow the confession to be used in the manner suggested.

The opinions of the learned Judges who have taken the opposite view are entitled to respectful consideration. With due respect I venture to give my opinion that they have not given due weight to the argument that the framers of the Act would have simply stated that the confession was "a relevant" fact or "could be proved" against the co-accused if that was what they intended to convey; and that these Judges have not appreciated the meaning of the words "take into consideration." Heston, J., in Emperor v. Gangappa Kardeppa (8) at 163 states:

"These words, in my judgment, are exactly appropriate to making the confession, which is already evidence in the case, evidence against the person implicated as well as the other accused."

Macleod, J., (at p. 175) disagrees with the argument that S. 30 must be read as if it said that the confessions might only be taken into consideration along with other evidence against the accused "evidence" is used in a wide sense as meaning any matter which the Court may consider. I add that the use of the ambiguous word "evidence" has facilitated the conclusion that the confession can be used in the same way as statements made by witnesses. Had the word "fact" which has no technical meaning been used it would have been more easy to see that S. 30 allowed this fact to be used only in a particular manner.

The second question referred to the Bench must also, in my opinion, be answered in the negative. S. 30 permits the confession to be taken into consideration along with other relevant facts; it does not permit consideration of the confession in the way indicated by this question.

But I think an answer in the negative is not a full answer to the point which it was intended to refer to the Full Bench. There should be an answer to the question:

"If there is other relevant matter implicating the co-accused, but insufficient to justify a conviction can the confession be used to supplement this matter and render a conviction proper?"

In my opinion, S. 30 which lays down that the confession can be taken into consideration against a co-accused, furnishes a clear answer in the affirmative. S. 30 is clearly intended to provide for the case where a Judge, if he were to leave the confession out of consideration and consider the other proved facts, might not convict the co-accused. I approve of the remarks of Jackson, J. in Queen v. Chunder Bhuttacharjee (23) and Stevens, J. C., in Empress v. Karim Bax (1) quoted by my learned colleague Subhedar.

My brother Subhedar holds that the confession can only be used when the other proved facts fail by a very narrow margin to justify a conviction. He has quoted with approval the opinion of Jenkins, C. J., in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan (4) to the effect that the confession can only be treated as lending assurance to other evidence against a co-accused. Jenkins, C. J., has laid stress on the fact that S. 30 states that a Court may take the confession into consideration. Now, the word "shall" could not have been used since there might be no consideration into which the confession could be taken. Again, it is frequently the case that the Court has already dealt with the confession as affecting the accused who confessed before dealing with the case against the co-accused. The Judge may have formed the opinion that the confession was of no value for any purpose or was entirely unreliable in so far as it implicated the co-accused. Again, the Judge might hold that the other matter for consideration was so conclusive against the co-accused that the confession need not be considered. It appears to me, then, that the use of the word "may" does not show that every confession is of very small value against a co-accused. I do not think it can be said that the word "may" gives the Court the right to exclude the confession from consideration if it is so disposed. The Judge is given a discretion but the discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner; if the confession would help in arriving at a decision that the co-accused is guilty (and the Judge is allowed to consider the confession) he must do so. My brother Subhedar's opinion appears to be based partly on the view that the confession does not fall within the definition of "evidence" and is not declared relevant by the Evidence Act. I have pointed out that the relevant facts on which a judgment can be based are not evidence as defined in the Act. In my opinion when S. 30 lays down that a Judge may consider a fact in certain circumstances it plainly declares that fact to be relevant in those circumstances. In S. 27 of the Act the declaration that certain matter is relevant is made by stating that the matter may be proved. It can equally be made by stating that matter may be considered; for the idea that a fact not proved against an accused should in any way be considered against him cannot be entertained for a moment. S. 30 appears to me to lay down that, before deciding to what extent the evidence adduced is reliable and whether the facts proved by that evidence are sufficient for a conviction the Judge may take the confession into consideration. I can find no support in the words of the section for the view that this can only be done if the other evidence is very nearly sufficient for a conviction. My answer to the question is that, if there is any other relevant matter implicating the co-accused, the Judge is permitted by S. 30, Evidence Act, to consider the confession along with the matter, and as a result of such consideration to convict the co-accused.

Findlay, J. C.—I have had the advantage of perusing the opinions of my learned brothers Macnair and Subhedar, A. J. C's. I would also answer the first question referred to us in the negative, and I concur with Macnair, A. J. C., that if, in that question, the word "fact" had been used instead of "evidence," the position would have been clearer.

As regards the second question referred to the Bench, I am disposed to agree with Macnair, A. J. C., that it has been unfortunately phrased and as it stands it has to be answered in the negative. If, however, it were framed in the terms proposed by Macnair, A. J. C., viz:

"If there is other relevant matter implicating the co-accused, but insufficient to justify a conviction, can the confession be used to supplement this matter and render a conviction proper?"

I should undoubtedly answer it in the affirmative. In my opinion the use of the words "take into consideration" is most suggestive. The phraseology in question, to my mind, connotes that the framers of the Evidence Act had, in their mind, the case where the other matter, on which a conviction could be based, was, to some extent, dubious or insufficient, under which circumstances the Court is entitled to take the confession into consideration. In a particular case the confession may complete the picture and render the conviction of the accused possible and proper, or again the confession may introduce inconsistency and throw doubt on the other matter on which the conviction was attempted to be based. I find it impossible, however, to lay down any definite or precise rule as to the quantum of evidence or other matter which must in the particular case be on record against the accused before the confession can be taken into consideration for the purpose of convicting the co-accused.

With all deference, however, I am unable to agree with Macnair, A. J. C., that S. 30 is a mandatory one and that the Court is bound to take such a confession into consideration. It seems to me that the phraseology used clearly implies that the Court has a discretion in the matter and can either take the confession into consideration as against the other co-accused. If the matter be looked at from the historical point of view, it is pertinent to point out that prior to the passing of the Evidence Act material like this, what one learned Judge called "dangerous material," could not be used at all against an accused person. The Act introduces a novel provision in this connexion, but I do not think that the framers of the Act intended anything more than to bestow a discretion upon the Court to take such confession into consideration if it so sees fit. Apart from this, however, I am in agreement with Macnair, A. J. C., that:

"If there is other relevant matter implicating the co-accused, the Judge is permitted by S. 30, Evidence Act, to consider the confession along with the said matter and, as a result of such consideration, to convict the co-accused."

To the questions, however, in the forms in which they have been referred to this Bench, my answers are, as already stated, in the negative.

Order

Subhedar, A. J. C.—The following five accused were convicted by the Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, of murdering one Fadal and the first four were sentenced to death while the fifth received the sentence of transportation for life:

(1) Gobarya, the separated brother of the deceased Fadal.

(2) Mt. Kashi, wife of accused, 1.

(3) Sitaram, son-in-law of the first two accused,

(4) Budhia, not related to any of the accused.

(5) Asaram, the son of the first two accused.

Besides the confession of Sitaram fully implicating himself and the other accused, there is the following evidence on the record:

(1) The evidence of Salok (P. W. 7) that on the night following the bhujaria (Wednesday) about two months prior to his examination at the Sessions trial he had seen the first four accused on the Chindwara road near a banian tree going in the direction of the river. The time was when people generally go to bed.

(2) The evidence of Bhabutram (P. W. 2) and Sojar (P. W. 10) that there was ill-feeling existing between the first two accused and the deceased since the partition between them was effected last year and the evidence of Sojar (P. W. 10) and Madho (P. W. 4) that Budhia had some quarrel with Sojar since about 20 years.

All the five accused persons preferred appeals to this Court which were heard by Jackson and Mohiuddin, A. J. C's., with the result that the conviction of Sitaram was maintained and that of Asaram set aside. The learned Judges having, however, differed in their conclusions on the appeals of the remaining three appellants their cases have been referred to me, under S. 429, Criminal P. C., for opinion. Jackson, A. J. C., starting with the confession of Sitaram and holding that it was sufficiently corroborated by the aforesaid evidence was of opinion that the conviction of the first three appellants should be upheld. Mohiuddin, A. J. C., on the other hand, holding that the confession of a co-accused was not substantive evidence though corroborated in some particulars was of opinion that the convictions of these appellants should not be upheld. In the alternative he also held that the two facts mentioned above did not amount to any corroboration of the confession of Sitaram.

As there was serious conflict of views with regard to the true scope of the provisions embodied in S. 30, Evidence Act, I had referred the following two questions for the decision of the Full Bench:

1. "Whether the self-inculpatory confession of an accused implicating his co-accused is substantive evidence upon which alone the conviction of his co-accused could legally be based, and if not.

2. Whether such a confession even if it be corroborated by other evidence which is insufficient by itself to sustain the conviction of the non-confessing co-accused, could form a legal basis for his conviction."

Both these questions have been answered in the negative by the Full Bench which consisted of the Judicial Commissioner, Macnair, A. J. C., and myself. I, therefore, proceed to examine how far the evidence referred to in para 2 above, connects the appellants whose appeals are before me with the crime of which they stand convicted. The evidence of Salok (P. W. 7) is on the face of it very vague and stands alone. The place where the witness met the first four accused is described in the map (Ex. P-5) as No. 3 and is roughly, half a mile from No. 1, the ghana where Fadal is alleged to have been murdered. This evidence is in serious conflict with the confessional statement of Sitaram on the very important points of time and the number of persons. Whereas Sitaram stated that the whole party of murderers started from the house of accused 1 for going to Sojas's ghana where Fadal lived at about 12 midnight" Salok (P. W. 7) stated that he had met them at a time when all people generally go to bed" which expression does ordinarily mean 10 p. m., at the latest. Further, whereas Sitaram stated that all the five accused had gone together, Salok makes mention only of the first four accused. It is also worthy of note that Sitaram makes no mention of the fact that the party of five murderers had met Salok at any place en route to the ghana of Sojar.

Even if the evidence of Salok (P. W. 7) be believed in its entirety it fails, in my opinion, to establish any connexion of the present appellants with the murder of Fadal.

As to the next piece of evidence of a general enmity between the deceased, Fadal, and the first two accused, it is enough to say that by itself or even in conjunction with the first piece of evidence it is wholly insufficient to uphold the conviction. In Emperor v. Kalwa (16) it is observed that the existence of general enmity and a desire however strong or a motive however effective to procure the death of another person may be a piece of circumstantial evidence, but is not corroboration of a sworn statement of participation in a particular crime.

In view of the principles now laid down by the Full Bench I must hold that for want of evidence in the present case the conviction of the three appellants, Gobarya, Mt. Kashi and Budhia, should not be upheld. I therefore agree with the opinion of Mohiuddin, A. J. C., that they should be acquitted. The records will now be returned to the Bench before whom the appeals are pending.

Order.—In accordance with the opinion of Subhedar, A. J. C. to whom the case was referred under S. 429, Criminal P. C., we direct that Gobarya, Kashi and Budhia be acquitted and set at liberty. The conviction of Sitaram is upheld and the sentence of death confirmed. Asaram's case has been disposed of separately.

P.N./B.K.

Order accordingly.

SUBHEDAR, A. J. C.

Girdhari—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 12-B of 1930, Decided on 14th March 1930, against decision of Sub-Div. Magistrate, Basim, D/- 9th January 1930, in Criminal Appeal No. 108 of 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 256—Mere recording of reasons, if no good reasons are forthcoming, would not save trial from incurable irregularity if it results in prejudice to accused—Fact that Magistrate or prosecution witnesses had to leave place of trial immediately are not good reasons to take up case on Sunday—Criminal P. C., S. 537.

It is not so much the recording of the reasons as the adequacy thereof which should count in the determination of the question if the provisions of S. 256 have been complied with. If no good reasons are forthcoming, merely recording them in writing by the Magistrate would not save the trial from the taint of an incurable irregularity if it results in prejudice to the accused. The reasons that the Magistrate had to go out for urgent work or that the prosecution witnesses had to leave the place of trial immediately are not good reasons for taking up a case on Sunday and rushing through the trial without giving the accused proper opportunity to defend himself.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1923), S. 256—Omission to follow new procedure inserted in S. 256 by amending Act of 1923 of requiring accused to state "at the commencement of next hearing" whether he wishes to cross-examine prosecution witnesses is irregularity vitiating trial—Criminal P. C., S. 537.

The provision that the accused should be asked whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which he is called upon to plead to the charge, inserted in S. 256 by the amending Act of 1923 by words "at the commencement of the next hearing," is obviously intended to give the accused an interval of time to think out the lines of his defence before he is called upon to inform the Court how he intends to proceed and an omission of this new procedure is an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial: 7 L.L.J. 114, Foll. [P 833 C 2, P 834 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 537—Magistrate taking up case on Sunday—Accused not given opportunity to appoint pleader and to defend himself properly—Trial is void.

There is very serious prejudice caused to the accused amounting to a failure of justice by the trying Magistrate rushing through and completing the trial of the accused on a Sunday without his consent and without affording him an opportunity of properly defending himself by appointing a pleader and so the whole trial is void: (1864) W. R. Cr. 2 and 17 Bom. L. R. 918, Foll. [P 834 C 2]

(d) Criminal Trial—Complainant's story so grotesque as to be on the face of it improbable—Accused convicted—Trial vitiated by irregularity prejudicing accused's case—Accused having served out more than half sentence retrial should not be ordered.

Where a conviction is set aside on the ground of material irregularity of procedure, a retrial should ordinarily be ordered. But where the complainant's story is so grotesque that it is on the face of it improbable, and the accused has already served out more than half the sentence, retrial should not be ordered if the trial is vitiated by material irregularity prejudicing his case: 3 Pat. L. W. 224, Rel. on. [P 835 C 1]

Abdul Razak—for Applicant.

Order.—The applicant, Girdhari Sonaji, aged 32, metal moulder by profession and resident of Khamgaon, District, Buldana, has filed this application for revision of an order passed by Mr. Utgikar, Tahsildar and Magistrate Second Class, Basim, convicting him of an offence under S. 354, I. P. C., and sentencing him to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25. This conviction was upheld in appeal by Mr. Sanyal, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim. As the case involves a decision of substantial questions of procedure, it is necessary to state the facts at some length. There was a fair at Mouza Loni in the Basim taluq of the Akola district, where Mr. Utgikar and the Sub-Inspector, Police Station House, Risod, were on duty. On Sunday 1st December last at 12-30 p. m. Tulsi made a complaint to the police which was taken down by the Sub-Inspector (Ex P-1), the official translation of which is as under :

"I had gone to the fair with my brother Kisan. I and the men and women, who accompanied us, were going in a line. And the man brought before me was going by the cross-road, who caught hold of my left breast amidst the crowd. I then began to cry, and when asked by Anjoni, I pointed out the man, who caught hold of my breast. Bhunga, Gangu have seen him in the act of catching my breast. I wish to file complaint."

Soon after this a challan was presented before Mr. Utgikar, who rushed through the trial and after examining only the complainant, her brother and one Mt. Gangu passed the judgment convicting the applicant as stated above. The order-sheet of the Magistrate runs as under :

"1st December 1929—Loni—Challan under S. 354, I. P. C.
Register.

Present—Accused in custody and all P. W's.
Evidence for prosecution recorded.

Accused examined. Charge framed. For reasons noted inside he is asked forthwith.

He pleaded not guilty but has no defence to make.

Judgment given. P. W's. allowed to go."

Being undefended by a pleader the applicant did not at all cross-examine the other two prosecution witnesses and put only a single question to the complainant which elicited the reply : "I pointed out the accused correctly to my brother and made no mistake." In the form which is prescribed for recording the plea of defence of the accused the trying Magistrate noted as under :

"(Complainant and witnesses are from Hyderabad State and are leaving the fair to-night. I am leaving this tomorrow. So accused is asked forthwith.)

He does not wish to ask anything to any of the P. W's. any more."

The plea of the accused was recorded in the following words :

"I am innocent. I have no defence to make."

On 6th December 1929, Mr. Asgherali, pleader, presented an appeal on behalf of the applicant in the Court of the District and Sessions Judge, Akola, but the memorandum was returned to him on the same day for presentation to the proper Court. It was accordingly presented in the Court of Mr. Sanyal, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim, on 9th December, 1929, who immediately passed an order under S. 426, Criminal P. C., releasing the appellant on bail, till the decision of the appeal. The applicant, who had in the meantime reached the Akola jail, did not probably know that his relations had engaged a pleader and got the appeal presented and therefore on 10th December 1929 he filled up the prescribed form of appeal which was forwarded by the Superintendent of the jail to the Deputy Commissioner, Akola, who in his turn sent it on to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim, on 13th December 1929. On a slip attached to this memorandum of appeal there is an endorsement of Mr. Sanyal bearing date 20th December 1929 to the effect that "this has already been registered" implying obviously that he had taken cognisance of the appeal presented by Mr. Asgherali already.

Among other grounds two important questions relating to the procedure adopted by the trying Magistrate were raised in appeal before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and it was contended that the trial was prejudicial to the accused and otherwise invalid. The first was that the case was taken up by the Magistrate on a Sunday evidently without the consent of the applicant, and the second was that no opportunity was allowed to the accused to engage a pleader to properly conduct the defence and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses.

Both these contentions were overruled by Mr. Sanyal and they are again pressed before me by the learned pleader for the applicant. While admitting that "the Magistrate ought not to have taken up the case on a Sunday."

Mr. Sanyal held that it did not cause any prejudice to the accused because, even if the case were taken up on the following day, the accused could not possibly have engaged a pleader. He further observed that "the appellant had sent his appeal from the jail; therein he notes that he does not desire to be represented" by a pleader on the 10th December 1929."

Mr. Sanyal has evidently a short memory and is certainly wrong in stating that in the memorandum of appeal sent from jail there is a note by the appellant to the effect that he did not wish to be represented at the hearing of the appeal. Having perused this memorandum of appeal I do not find any such note in it. As a matter of fact a proper appeal was already filed by Mr. Asgheralli, pleader, before Mr. Sanyal on 9th December 1929 on which date he himself passed an order for bail, and it appears from his order-sheet of 7th January 1930 that the appeal was argued on merits by the pleader on that date. Therefore the suggestion made by Mr. Sanyal, with reference to the memorandum of appeal from jail, that applicant was not in a position to engage a pleader, even if the case was not taken up on Sunday, is obviously incorrect and very misleading.

In para. 4 of the Judicial Commissioner's Criminal Circular IV-4 it is laid down that "the Courts are entirely closed on every Sunday." As far back as 1864 a Bench of the Calcutta High Court, in setting aside an order passed on a Sunday, made the following pertinent observations in Grijamonee v. Ishur Chander (1):

"But, as a rule, the Magistrate should not sit as a Judicial Officer, and dispose of cases in the ordinary course of business on a Sunday, because, to put it upon no higher ground, Sunday is a recognized holiday throughout the country; and on that day judicial business is suspended in all the Courts, and parties might be put to great inconvenience if their cases were liable to be called up for hearing on that day at the caprice of a Magistrate, and much injustice might be done."

Again, this very point arose in Baban Daud v. Emperor (2) where the trial of an accused was commenced and practically finished on a Sunday, the accused being unable to engage a pleader, and the judgment convicting him was pronounced on the following day. The conviction of the accused was set aside by a Bench of the Bombay High Court on the ground (1) that there was an irregularity in procedure which had prejudiced the accused who could not be said to have had a fair opportunity to defend himself; and (2) that the fact that the accused did not ask the Court to adjourn the case did not make any difference. These conclusions have my entire concurrence.

On the second question Mr. Sanyal held that the reasons assigned by the trying Magistrate for rushing through the trial were cogent and did not prejudice the accused and that, since they were recorded in writing there was sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C. I shall show later on that the reasons assigned by the Magistrate were absolutely inadequate and the trial most certainly prejudiced the applicant. It is enough for the present to say that it is not so much the recording of the reasons as the adequacy thereof which should count in the determination of the question if the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C., have been complied with. If no good reasons are forthcoming, merely recording them in writing by the Magistrate would not, in my opinion, save the trial from the taint of an incurable irregularity if it results in prejudice to the accused.

Section 256, Criminal P. C., enacts that the accused shall be required to state at the commencement of the next hearing of the case whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. The words underlined (here italicized) were inserted in the section by the Amending Act of 1923 and they clearly indicate the intention of the legislature that sufficient time should be given to the accused to consider whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge, and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he so wishes Ramchandra v. Emperor (3). The provision that the accused should be asked whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which he is called upon to plead to the charge, is obviously intended to give the accused an interval of time to think out the lines of his defence before he is called upon to inform the Court how he intends to proceed and an omission of this new procedure is an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial: Phuman v. Emperor (4).

The complainant's story was indeed so grotesque that it was on the face of it improbable and it was therefore the more necessary that every opportunity should have been afforded to the accused to engage a pleader to conduct the defence properly. The indecent assault at midday in a public fair upon a girl who was in the company of her brother and another woman, by a man, who evidently had a shop of his own in the fair as appears from the second sentence of the memorandum of appeal from the jail where he states that "he was at his shop" seems very improbable. Having regard to the fact that at public fairs crowds of people rush about from one place to another, it is not inconceivable that the hand of the accused may in passing have come in such close contact with the left breast of the complainant that she and her companions may have fancied an indecent assault, or it may be a case of mistaken identity. No map of the scene of occurrence is on record nor any attempt has been made by the trying Magistrate to clear up several other points which, under the circumstances of the case, required elucidation and which could only be done by close cross-examination of the three prosecution witnesses and visiting the scene of the alleged occurrence before it could be said that the charge against the accused was fully established. It is indeed a matter of very great regret that a senior officer of Mr. Utgikar's standing had not even the ordinary fairness to question the accused, situated as he was in a foreign place and suddenly confronted with the serious charge, if he wished to engage a pleader to defend him, in spite of the fact that the unfortunate man protested that he was wholly innocent of the charge.

In answer to the rule issued by this Court the District Magistrate has forwarded without any comment the trying Magistrate's explanation the material portion of which runs as under:

"1. Discretion allowed by S. 356 (1), Criminal P. C. was exercised for reasons recorded in the plea and defence sheet. I must have returned to Basim by next evening (36 miles), viz. 2nd December 1929, to meet the Commissioner, Berar, on 3rd December 1929. The witnesses also were to leave the fair the same night.

8. As stated above (para 1) the case had to be taken up even on a Sunday and as I was there to do fair duty in all its aspects, immediate disposal of criminal cases was very necessary."

The above explanation cannot bear any serious examination. In taking up the case on a Sunday and hurrying through the trial Mr. Utgikar appears to have been moved more by a sense of looking to the convenience of the prosecution witnesses and himself than to the convenience of the unfortunate man who had the misfortune of being an accused before him to stand a trial for a serious offence. I fail to see how under the circumstances stated by the learned Magistrate "immediate disposal of criminal cases was very necessary." The reasons assigned appear to me to be wholly inadequate and were all avoidable. The prosecution witnesses were already in attendance and the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code gave ample powers to the Magistrate to bind the witnesses down for future attendance and even if they failed to attend they could have been easily summoned or brought under arrest from the Nizam's Dominions as provided by the Judicial Commissioner's Criminal Circular IV-8 (1). The offence under S. 354, I. P. C., was a bailable one and even if the challan was presented by the Sub-Inspector on Sunday, Mr. Utgikar could have easily bailed out the accused and bound down the prosecution witnesses. At all events after the charge was framed he could have easily adjourned the case to a date suitable to himself and the prosecution witnesses if he had to leave the fair the next day in order to keep his appointment with the Commissioner on 3rd December 1929.

For reasons given above I hold that there was very serious prejudice caused to the accused amounting to a failure of justice by the trying Magistrate rushing through and completing the trial of the applicant on a Sunday without his consent and without affording him an opportunity of properly defending himself. I therefore hold that the whole trial was void. I accordingly set aside the conviction of the applicant and order him to be set at liberty without further delay. The fine if paid will be refunded.

As a necessary consequence of my setting aside the conviction on the ground that it was void there should be a retrial, but in the special circumstances of the present case, when the applicant has served out more than half the sentence, I should be doing him more injustice by ordering his retrial than if I were to uphold the conviction and reduce the sentence to that already undergone which I consider would have been the proper measure of sentence to pass even on a valid conviction. I, therefore, accept the prayer of the applicant's pleader that there should be no retrial of the applicant: cf. Bhase Singh v. Emperor (5).

The present case furnishes a striking illustration of the way in which administration of justice suffers at the hands of overworked executive officers. It is, therefore, desirable that the superior executive officers should distribute the work of the two branches of administration among their subordinate officers in a manner that the latter may have no excuse whatsoever for rushing through their judicial work on account of the pressure of other work.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 6-B of 1930, Decided on 18th March 1930, against decision of Addl. Sess. Judge, Amraoti, D/-11th January 1930.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Approver in murder case making several statements implicating himself—At Sessions trial retracting confessions stating that he made them being tutored by police—His pardon withdrawn and he put on trial—No evidence to corroborate his retracted confessions—Confessional statements themselves wanting in natural details and contradicting each other on important points—There was no sufficient evidence to justify his conviction.

The weight to be given to a retracted confession must depend upon the circumstances under which the confession was originally made and the circumstances under which it was retracted, including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction. Unless the confession is corroborated in material particulars by credible independent evidence, or unless the character of the confession and the circumstances under which it was taken indicate its truth it would be unsafe to rely on it.

The accused was appointed approver in a case of murder. He made several confessional statements implicating himself and the other accused in the murder. But at the Sessions trial he unreservedly retracted his previous statements as approver and that he knew nothing of the murder and that he was tutored by the police into making those statements which were false. The conditional pardon granted to him was withdrawn and he was put on his trial on the previous charge of murder. There was no evidence to corroborate his confession and further the various confessional statements made by him were wanting in those natural details which one would ordinarily expect in a free and voluntary confession. The statements also contradicted one another on several important points.

Held: that there was not sufficient evidence to justify his conviction: 31 Mad. 83; 13 C. P. L. R. 107; 20 All. 193: 15 Bom. 452; 22 Cal. 50; A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587 and 53 I. C. 929, Rel. on.

Where a person sentenced to death for murder makes a statement to a Magistrate about the time of his being hanged that the approver appointed to give evidence in the case, who had previously retracted his confessions, was not involved in the crime the statement may be admissible under S. 32 (3): *A. N. G. Bose—for Appellant.

Vivian Bose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Sheikh Shafi, a young mill labourer aged 20, who has been convicted by Mr. K. B. Sheorey, Additional Sessions Judge, Amraoti, of murdering one Hanmanta and sentenced to death. The appeal was received from jail but the appellant was represented at the hearing by Rai Bahadur N. G. Bose. Hanmanta was in the employ of the Badnera Mill and had disappeared from his quarters in September 1928. On 23rd March, at the instance of the Mill authorities, Mahomad Akbar (P. W. 4), who was then Sub-Inspector in charge of the Badnera Police Station House, broke open the quarters which had been kept locked by the missing man and recovered from his room a lot of property valued at about Rs. 400 as described in Ex. P-1.

On the same day Mahomad Akbar proceeded on leave and was succeeded by Kevel Krishna (P. W. 2) and the latter suspecting that Hanmanta had been murdered began an investigation which resulted in the arrest and prosecution of the appellant and two other mill employees Pirusha and Sheikh Maheeb as being concerned in the murder of the missing Hanmanta. On 14th April 1929 the appellant made a formal confession before a Magistrate (Ex. P-9) implicating himself and the other accused. On 3rd May 1929 he received a conditional pardon and was made an approver (Ex. P-15). On the following day he was examined in the committing Magistrate's Court as the second witness for the prosecution and adhered to his confession. On 23rd July 1929, however, when he was examined as the ninth witnesses for the prosecution in the Sessions Trial No. 18 of 1929, he unreservedly retracted his confession and previous statement as an approver and stated that he knew nothing of the murder and that he was tutored by the police into making his previous statements which were false (Ex. P-18). The trial of the other two accused ended in their convictions which were maintained by this Court in appeal and both of them were hanged on 18th December 1929.

On the termination of the aforesaid Sessions trial on 30th July 1929, the Public Prosecutor having issued a certificate under S. 339, Criminal P. C. (Ex. P-17) that the appellant had forfeited his pardon, he was proceeded against and was committed to take his trial before the Court of Sessions on the original charge of murdering Hanmanta. This trial, as already stated above, has ended in the conviction of the appellant which is, however, solely based upon his own retracted confession.

Rai Bahadur Bose for the appellant did not controvert the finding of the Additional Sessions Judge that Hanmanta was murdered but he strongly contended that, in the absence of any other evidence, the conviction of the appellant, based as it admittedly was on his own retracted confession, was unsound, the more so as the circumstances on record throw a cloud of suspicion on the question of the said confession being true and a voluntary one. Although the Additional Sessions Judge has not, in his judgment, even referred to any evidence in corroboration of the confession of the appellant, the learned Government Advocate endeavoured to urge before us that there were certain facts which afforded corroboration in some measure though very slight and he therefore, submitted that the conviction should not be disturbed. It was also argued for the Crown that the confession having been duly recorded and adhered to by the appellant in the committal proceedings in the previous case, there could be no doubt that it was a true and voluntary confession.

Before dealing with the question of corroboration it is necessary, in the first instance, to determine how far the contention of the pleader for the appellant that the confession was not true and voluntary is sustainable. It is now well settled that the weight to be given to a retracted confession must depend upon the circumstances under which the confession was originally made and the circumstances under which it was retracted, including the reasons given by the prisoner for its retraction: Queen-Empress v. Raman (1) at p. 88.

While it is equally true that the use to be made of such a confession is a matter of prudence rather than of law, it has been held in a series of cases that it is unsafe for a Court to rely and act on a confession which has been retracted, unless after consideration of the whole evidence in the case, the Court is in a position to come to the unhesitating conclusion that the confession is true. This implied that, usually, unless the confession is corroborated in material particulars by credible independent evidence, or unless the character of the confession and the circumstances under which it was taken indicate its truth: Empress v. Chutia (2); Queen-Empress v. Maikulal (3); Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana (4) at p. 461 and Queen-Empress v. Jagat Chandra Mali (5) at p. 77; it would be unsafe to rely on it.

It is a matter of regret that the learned Additional Sessions Judge did not properly appreciate the principles enunciated in the several rulings cited by him in para. 7 of his judgment and, therefore, failed to apply them to the facts of the present case. It is not correct to say that Empress v. Chutia (2) stood overruled by the later decision in Bhaddu v. Emperor (6). In both the cases there was in fact other evidence which was considered to be sufficiently corroborative of the retracted confession. The fact that Ex. P-9, the confession in the present case, was recorded by Mr. Aminulla (P. W. 3) after taking the usual precautions did not, in our opinion, relieve the learned Judge of the necessity of probing into the circumstances both antecedent and subsequent to it in order to find out if it was really a free, voluntary and true confession and could be relied on in spite of its retraction and of the fact that there was little or no other evidence to corroborate it: Jagran v. Emperor (7). On a careful scrutiny of the materials on record it is abundantly clear to us that the confession of the appellant (Ex. P-9) as well as his statement made before the committing Magistrate (Ex. P-16) were inspired and made by him evidently under the influence of the police as stated by him in his evidence at the Sessions trial No. 18 of 1929 (Ex. P-18).

It is surprising that the attention of the learned Additional Sessions Judge was not drawn to Ex. P-6 which is on record and which goes to the very root of the whole matter. It is admitted by Kevel Krishna (P. W. 2) that, long before he inscribed his first information report (Ex. P-7) on 11th April 1929, he had, at the instance of Sheikh Mahebub, already arrested the appellant on 8th April 1929 at 5-30 p. m., and had questioned him and that two hours later while the appellant was still in his custody, he got the appellant's statement (Ex. P-6) recorded by Mr. Aminulla (P. W. 3) on oath in the Police Station House at Badnera. Neither the Sub-Inspector nor Mr. Aminulla have in their depositions given any reasons why it was thought necessary to take down the confessional statement of the appellant and that too on oath (Ex. P-6) in such a hurry and without, as admitted by the Magistrate himself, going through the prescribed formalities which he undoubtedly observed before he recorded Ex. P-9. Mr. Aminulla stated that he did not know if the appellant and Sheikh Mahebub were "formally then arrested or not." But surely it was as much his duty as a responsible Magistrate to have enquired about this, as it was the plain duty of a responsible police officer in the position of Kevel Krishna (P. W. 2) to have informed the Magistrate that the appellant was already under arrest before he apparently prevailed upon the Magistrate to record the confessional statement of the appellant on oath.

It is conceded by the learned Government Advocate that Ex. P-6 could not, in the circumstances, be admissible in evidence but it can obviously be taken by us into consideration to find out if the subsequent formal confessional statement of the appellant (Ex. P-9) was or was not a free and voluntary statement as it purports to be. It is clear to us that after Ex. P-6 was taken it was not at all difficult to get Ex. P-9 recorded. In spite of his being sent to jail custody on 13th April 1929, the appellant could not have for gotten during the space of one day when he was not in police custody, that he had already made a statement on oath a week before and that it was not therefore possible or desirable for him to resile from it on the 15th idem when his confessional statement (Ex. P-9) was recorded.

The Sub-Inspector (P. W. 2) in his evidence states that on 30th April 1929, he made a recommendation to his District Superintendent of Police that the appellant should be made an approver by the grant of a conditional pardon. It is not stated by him why out of the two confessing accused, viz., the appellant and Sheikh Mahebub, the former alone should have been selected for being made an approver in the case. This course appears very likely to have been adopted with two objects. The challan was presented on 23rd April 1929, and the investigation had only disclosed that there was bare circumstantial evidence against Prusha and Sheikh Mahebub, while there was none whatsoever against the appellant. In order therefore to make the case against the other two accused complete by the introduction of direct evidence and at the same time to fulfil a possible promise made to the appellant to save him, the appellant was presumably selected for being made an approver. On account of his being only a raw youth of 20 he was possibly amenable to manipulation as would seem to have been the case, a matter which will be clear when we examine his several statements.

The several confessional statements of the appellant, Exs. P-6, P-9 and P-16, are wanting in those natural details which one would ordinarily expect in a free and voluntary confession. To begin with, there is nothing to show if the appellant and Sheikh Mahehub and Pirusha were on terms of such intimacy either by reason of age, 'friendship or relationship, that the latter would take him into their confidence to commit such a diabolical crime. The murder was committed evidently for loot and some of the property of the deceased was traced to the two persons who have already paid the extreme penalty for the crime. In his confession, however, the appellant does not say that he was even told of this object by the principal actors or that they induced him to join them for mercenary motives. He merely states that some five or six days after the murder he was only paid Rs. 10 by Pirusha. In the next place a careful comparison of the aforesaid three statements reveals that each subsequent one is a distinct improvement over its predecessor in very material particulars, regardless of its being contradictory to the previous one. This clearly indicates that there was another brain working behind that of the appellant; each statement subsequent to Ex. P-6 seems to fit in with the case for the prosecution as it developed from time to time during the investigation by the police.

In Ex. P-6 the appellant had stated that, about the middle of the previous rainy season, one day, when the factory was closed, he, Sheikh Mahehub, Piry and with "one black man in a dhoti" and one Hanmanta Mahar had gone to the house of Piry. From there at 1.30 a.m. they started to go to Masan; that Piry had a hatchet, a spade and Hanmanta Mahar had taken a lathi in his hand; that Piry dealt the deceased a blow with the hatchet from behind; that Mahehub gave two blows with the head of the pick-axe on the back of the deceased; that he himself gave one blow with the head of the spade; that Hanmanta Mahar dealt two blows with his lathi; that Piry and the black man had taken off their clothes; that after Hanmanta was dead, Mahehub took off silver Kada from his hand and he the muckis; that Piry took away all the ornaments; that the deceased was wearing a patka, a shirt and had chappals on his feet and a dhoti on; that Piry paid him Rs. 10 five or six days after the incident, and that Piry had told him not to reveal the secret by brandishing his big knife.

On 15th April, 1929 the appellant made the following confession :

"Peeru, Mahehub and I conspired four days before Pola at Peeru's house. Peeru said, 'We will kill Hanmanta'. On Tuesday Mahehub, Peeru and I went to bring Hanmanta. We brought him and went so far as the nala. We went to Peeru's house. From there we went along the nala. Peeru killed Hanmanta with an axe. He fell down. Then Mahehub and I struck him with sticks. He died within 25 minutes. The deceased had 2 mohurs, 2 Muckis and 2 kadas which Peeru kept with himself promising to pay me Rs. 10 and Rs. 4 to Mahehub. We put the corpse in a pit and covered it under earth. The pit was ankle deep, containing water. We three put the corpse into the pit and then covered it with earth. Having put the corpse along with its clothes into the pit, we started from there and returned (to our houses). Peeru gave me Rs. 10 on Sunday. He paid Mahehub also Rs. 4 on Sunday. I have nothing more to say. I showed the place where the corpse was buried to the police and recovered clothes from there, but I do not know what became of the corpse."

It is to be noted that in this confession the appellant is very definite in his date, introduces conspiracy without giving any details, drops the story of the black man and Hanmanta Mahar, is silent on the description of the clothes which Hanmanta was wearing and the threat given to him by Pirusha to keep the secret, introduces two gold mohurs and the payment of Rs. 4 to Mahehub and contradicts the previous story of the assault made by himself and Mahehub by substituting sticks for pickaxe and spade. Lastly he asserts that he showed the place to the police where the corpse was buried and the clothes were recovered. This assertion is proved to be false by the evidence of Kevel Krishna (P. W. 2), who clearly deposed that the appellant was unable to point out the place and that it was Mahehub who did so and that Mahehub pointed out the clothes.

In the last statement of the appellant as an approver (Ex. P-16) final touches are clearly noticeable obviously intended to make it conform fully with all the details of the prosecution story which, as a result of complete investigation, was ultimately presented to the Court.

This will be clear from the following extracts from Ex. P-16 :

"The deceased Hanmanta Lothi used to live in the chawl of the mill about two or three rooms apart from the room of Sheikh Mahebur. He was neuter . . . Hanmanta used to put on two silver kadas one on each hand, 2 gold mohurs on the neck, 4 gold mudkis, 2 on each ear. . . . On Tuesday about seven months back, at about 7 or 8 p. m. Pirush took me and Mahebur to the house of the deceased. . . . At about 8.30 p. m. myself, Piru, Hanmanta and Mahebur went to the house of Piru. . . . Hanmanta asked Piru to give some medicine which would cure him of impotency and promised to give him Rs. 20 if he gave proper medicine. Piru promised to give him that medicine. At about 11 p. m., we left for the burial ground as Piru had promised to cure Hanmanta there. . . . Onry gave me the stick, article 3, and he himself carried the axe and kudali articles C and D. Mahebur carried the stick, article F. . . . We all went to the masan. It was pitch dark then. . . . Hanmanta carried a hurricane lantern with him. . . . On the way the light got extinguished. When we reached the masan, Piru dealt a blow with the axe, article D on the neck of Hanmanta and he fell down. Piru then said "What are you seeing. Beat this fellow." I gave Hanmanta two lathi blows on the head. . . . Piru had a knife, article G tied to his loin cloth. He cut out the two gold mohurs from the neck of the deceased. He also took out the two mudkis from the ear. He asked us to take out the silver kada and I and Mahebur took out one kada each. I took out the kada of the left hand. Piru took the kadas from us saying that we had no pockets. He kept two silver kadas, 2 gold mohurs, and 4 gold mudkis in his pocket. . . . The deceased was putting on a red bordered dhoti, a white bandi, a black coat, a Marwadi shoe, and a red cap. Article H is the same dhoti, I the bandi, J the black coat, K the shoe and L the cap. . . . We returned to the house of Piru. It was about 1 or 1.30 a. m. then. Piru gave 1 gold mohur, a pair of mudkis and 1 kada to Mahebur. He himself retained 1 mohur, 1 kada and 1 pair of earrings. Piru promised to give me 10 rupees on Sunday when he came to Amraoti. He accordingly gave me Rs 10 on Sunday. . . . I can identify the ornaments. The mohur is article M, two earrings are article N and the silver kadas article O. Hanmanta had been putting these on when he was murdered. These articles had been given to Mahebur by Piru. Piru threw away the stick article F, after taking the same from the hand of Mahebur. It was thrown on a cactus hedge. Its end was splintered on account of beating and it had two splinters attached to it. My stick was taken away to his house by Piru."

It is very significant to note that while it was pitch dark and the lantern, which the party had taken with them, had been extinguished, and when the appellant himself had apparently no opportunity to handle the most ordinary and common articles which were on the person of the deceased or the axe and knife which Piru had with him, yet as an approver he was able to identify all these in the committing Magistrate's Court with absolute certainty. Kevel Krishna (P. W. 2) has not stated that the appellant was also able to pick out all these several articles from others of similar kinds as he is supposed to have done in the case of the bamboo stick article F. The end of this stick

"was splintered on account of beating and it had two splinters attached to it."

It must have been noticed that in his previous two statements the appellant did not make any mention of this stick which is supposed to have played such an important part in the murder.

It indeed requires a great deal of courage to put such an intrinsically improbable story as is contained in Ex. P-16 before a Court of justice, but it demands a greater degree of credulity on the part of a Judge to accept it as true. The statement in Ex. P-16 is undoubtedly fuller than the previous statement, but in very essential details it obviously contradicts the earlier ones. If it was a true statement, it cannot be explained why a different one on most of the essential points was made by the appellant on 8th April when his confessional statement was recorded by Mr. Aminulla (P. W. 3) in the Police Station House at Badnera. The only legitimate conclusion then to be drawn from all the circumstances is that the appellant gave out the truth when two-and-half months later, in his deposition at the Sessions trial he stated that his previous statements were false: see Ex. P-18.

As observed in Emperor v. Panchkari Dutt (8) S. 24, Evidence Act, does not require positive proof of improper inducement to justify the rejection of a confession, the word "appears" indicating a lesser degree of probability than would be necessary if "proof" had been required, that anything ranging between the barest suspicion on the one hand and absolute certainty on the other may be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the section for the rejection of a confession, and that if a prima facie confession is false, inconsistent, or absurd that might suggest that it is not voluntary. In another Calcutta case where a retracted confession was rejected because the surrounding circumstances disclosed that it was obtained under police pressure, it was observed that it is always difficult for an accused person to prove ill-treatment or inducement by the police even when it is true: Mobarak Ali v. Emperor (9).

Having given our best consideration to all the facts and circumstances of the present case, we are far from convinced that the confession (Ex. P-9) of the appellant is true and was voluntarily made and, as the same is retracted, we deem it very unsafe to uphold the appellant's conviction only on its basis. It is rightly conceded by the learned Government Advocate that the first confessional statement (Ex. P-6) is totally inadmissible in evidence against the appellant. There then remains the appellant's statement as an approver. Since that deposition is also unworthy of credence for reasons already given and is also retracted, it cannot afford any corroboration of the retracted confession: Empress v. Chutia (2).

The learned Government Advocate had argued that the confession of the appellant was corroborated by the following facts:

(1) That the appellant pointed out the places where Hanmanta was buried and the articles H, B, F and J;

(2) that the lathi (article G) was picked up by the appellant from among the other lathis and the appellant testified that it was the lathi which Pirusha had given to Mahebut;

(3) that two women had seen a body being eaten by vultures in the neighbourhood where some bones and hairs were recovered.

As to the first fact both the Sub-Inspector Kevel Krishna (P. W. 2) and Govindrao, patwari (P. W. 5), have clearly stated that Mahebut and Shafi had gone together in the company of the police to show the place of the burial of the dead body of the deceased Hanmanta, but that the appellant was unable to locate the place saying that he had forgotten it "as it was dark." Both of them stated that it was Mahebut who pointed out the place as also the articles H, B, F and J. As to the second fact there is nothing on the record of this case to show when or wherefrom or by whom article G was picked up. Nor is there any evidence to corroborate the statement of the appellant in Ex. P-16 that this lathi was given by Pirusha to Mahebut and subsequently thrown away. As to the third fact it is sufficient to state that, since the appellant was unable to locate the spot where the body of the deceased Hanmanta was thrown away, the evidence of these women affords no corroboration whatsoever to the confession of the appellant.

The above discussion is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but we cannot refrain from remarking on one very significant fact which was that Mahebut, just before he was about to be hanged stated to Mr. Vaidya (D. W. 1), Magistrate, First Class, who had gone to witness the execution, that the appellant was not concerned in the murder and that he and Pirusha alone had committed the crime. Mr. Vaidya took care at once to write to Mr. Digby, the Sessions Judge, informing him of this incident: Ex. D-1. The learned Additional Sessions Judge refused to receive this statement on the ground that it did not come within the purview of S. 32 (1), Evidence Act. We are, however, of opinion, though not without some degree of doubt, that the statement in question could be admissible under S. 32 (3), Evidence Act. In Umra v. Emperor (10), where an accomplice incriminating himself and the appellant by a statement to the police about the crime, had subsequently died, his statement was admitted in evidence by the High Court under S. 32 (3), Evidence Act, and special leave for appeal to the Privy Council was rejected as the question was one of interpretation of certain sections of a statute. For the foregoing reasons we accept this appeal, set aside the conviction and order that the appellant, Sheikh Shafi, be set at liberty.

BAZA AND NANAVUTTY, JJ.

Hazari and others—Prisoners—Appellants.

v.

Emperor.

• Criminal Appeal No. 116 of 1930, Decided on 22nd March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Sitapur, D/- 15th February 1930.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 237—Charge under Penal Code S. 397—Conviction under S. 412 is not improper.

If a person is charged under S. 397 on the fact that he was found in possession of the stolen property, which possession he has failed to account for, it is not improper to convict the person under S. 412, if the charge under S. 397 fails for want of identification or any reliable evidence for the presence of the person at the dacoity: A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 130, Ref.

[P 844 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 24—Confession after being warned—Accused is bound down by language of confession.

When a man of sound mind and full age makes a confessional statement in ordinary simple language after he has been warned, he must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning: A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 17, Foll.

[P 843 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 114—Person found in possession of stolen articles soon after theft—Presumption.

When a person is found in possession of stolen articles soon after the theft, the law presumes that such person must either be the thief or the receiver of the stolen goods. The identity of the stolen articles being established, the identity of the thief or the receiver of the stolen goods is presumed to be established.

(d) Evidence Act, S. 114 (b) and S. 133—Conviction on uncorroborated evidence is rarely justifiable and evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony.

Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justifiable. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime, but the corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime.

[P 844 C 2]

(e) Evidence Act, S. 30—Retracted confession of accused when material for conviction of co-accused.

The retracted confession alone of an accused is not sufficient to justify the conviction of a co-accused, but where such confession stands un rebutted, and there is nothing to show that the accused had any reason for naming other men falsely, and his story fits in exactly with the facts known or proved and is corroborated sufficiently by material evidence against the co-accused, the confession is admissible, and may be a strong plea of evidence against the co-accused. [P 844 C 2]

Judgment.—These appeals (Nos. 116 and 131 to 137) arise out of a dacoity case tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Sitapur.

The evidence on record shows that a serious dacoity was committed in the house of Beni Madho, at Basantapur Thana Tambaur, district Sitapur, on 7th June 1929 at about 9 p. m. It appears that Beni Madho was the head of a well-to-do Brahman family residing in Basantapur. Some thirty dacoits raided the house, belaboured the inmates, robbed the females of their ornaments, broke open boxes etc., and carried away property worth Rs. 5,000 nearly. The following were the inmates of the house at the time of the occurrence;

1. Beni Madho.
2. Beni Madho's wife
3. Sheo Nandan (P. W. 1) son of Beni Madho.
4. Shiam Kali (P. W. 10), wife of Sheo Nandan.
5. Mt. Sunder (P. W. 7), widowed daughter-in-law of Sheo Nandan.
6. Ajodhya (P. W. 11), brother of Sheo Nandan.
7. Mt. Bitan or Bittan (P. W. 8), wife of Ajodhya.
8. Mt. Churai (P. W. 9), widowed daughter-in-law of Beni Madho.
9. Deota Din (P. W. 4), brother of Beni Madho. Their servants, Nageshar P. W. 6 and Jehangir, P. W. 3 were also present there at that time. All these persons, except Beni Madho (deceased), and his wife, have been examined as witnesses in this case. Shiam Lal, P. W. 2 and Chandrabhal, P. W. 5, the neighbours of Beni Madho, also give evidence about the dacoity. It is in evidence that one of the dacoits was armed with a gun. He took his post under the roof from where he fired several shots. Sheo Nandan, who was in the courtyard shouting to the women to escape, was fired at by the man on the roof. He was struck in the head by several pellets. He received injuries and one of the pellets caused a small depressed fracture of the skull. Grievous hurt was caused to Beni Madho.

also, but we do not know who caused the injury. He was found lying unconscious in the Barotha after the dacoits left the house. He eventually died some 13 or 14 days after the occurrence, but no post-mortem examination was or could be held, as the body was cremated before any action could be taken by the police. Sheo Nandan made a report at the Police Station, Tambaur on 8th June at about 9 a. m. Tambaur is some 12 miles away from Basantapur. The police investigation started without any unnecessary delay and the result was that 19 men, including Sone, were sent up for trial. Sone was granted pardon and was then examined as a witness in the case. Thus 18 men were committed to the Sessions for trial. Of these seven persons, namely Din Band Badlu, Tore, Khunnu, Bhauwa, Jothe and Zamin Ali were acquitted. The remaining 11 were convicted and punished. Salaru was sentenced to transportation for life under S. 397, I. P. C. Mahadeo was sentenced to eight years rigorous imprisonment and Nabi Baksh to six years rigorous imprisonment under S. 412, I. P. C. The remaining eight persons, namely (1) Hazari, (2) Sunder Lal, (3) Mansa Din, (4) Amjad, (5) Ram Autar, (6) Ram Dayal, (7) Bans Gopal and (8) Hira Lal were sentenced to ten years rigorous imprisonment each.

All these persons have appealed. Hazari, Sunder Lal, Mansa Din, Mahadeo and Ram Dayal submitted their appeals from jail and filed their appeals through counsel also. The remaining six persons, namely Nabi, Amjad, Ram Autar, Salaru, Bans Gopal and Hira Lal submitted their appeals from jail only. Nabi Baksh, however, was represented by a counsel at the hearing of these appeals.

It is amply proved that a serious and daring dacoity was committed in Beni Madho's house. The factum of dacoity is not disputed in these appeals before us. It may be taken as satisfactorily established that a dacoity did take place at the house of Beni Madho and what we have to consider is whether the evidence on record is sufficient to justify the conclusion that the appellants were concerned in the crime. We should like to note that Sone, Sunder Lal, Amjad and Ram Autar had made confessions. Sone was granted pardon and was then examined as a witness for the prosecution. Sunder Lal, Amjad and Ram Autar retracted their confessions in the Court of the committing Magistrate. Now we take up the appeals of the appellants named above individually.

1. Hazari.—This man is a cousin of Sone, approver. The direct evidence against him consists of the statements of Sone and also of the three confessing accused. It should be noted that Sone, Amjad and Sunder Lal had named this man in their confessions long before he was arrested. This man was identified in jail by only one person, namely Mt. Churai, but her evidence of identification is quite worthless and must be rejected. It is in evidence that Nageshar had struck one of the dacoits with a spear at the beginning of the dacoity. The approver Sone and the three confessing accused all stated in their confessions that it was Hazari who was struck with a spear at the time of the occurrence. When Hazari was arrested on 15th August 1929 it was found that he had a large triangular scar on his forearm. The injury was examined by the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors, and they found that it was the mark of a serious wound. The Civil Surgeon also had examined the injury on 26th August 1929. He could not give the cause of the injury definitely, but he stated that it was consistent with a wound from a spear. Hazari tried to explain away this injury by stating that he had a fall from a bullock cart and the injury was caused by an arhar stem. The defence, while it has the merit of ingenuity, is quite unsatisfactory and unconvincing. It is noticeable that the Civil Surgeon was not asked in cross-examination whether the injury in question could have been caused by an arhar stem, but was asked whether it could have been caused by the horn of a bull. We think the defence which was put up by Hazari to explain away the injury was false and an after-thought. We are of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors were perfectly right in coming to the conclusion that Hazari had really received the injury at the time of the occurrence and that his defence was quite untrue. Nageshar, P. W. 6, states clearly that he had struck a dacoit with his spear and the dacoit had then retired outside the door. It is true that this witness did not show his spear to the Sub-Inspector, but he told the Sub-Inspector that he had injured a dacoit with his spear. The mere fact that he did not show his spear to the Sub-Inspector does not show that the story is untrue. In our opinion there is an important piece of circumstantial evidence in support of the direct evidence of the approver and the statement of the confessing co-accused against this man. The evidence which was produced against this man was believed by the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors. We see no sufficient reason to reject the evidence which shows that this man was concerned in the crime. He was rightly convicted and punished. His appeal fails and must be dismissed.

2. Sunder Lal—The evidence against this man consists of (1) his own confession, (2) the evidence of Sone, (3) the statement of one of the confessing accused, (4) the recovery from his house of two dopattas, two dhotis and a silver hamel and a gold "nathni" which have been proved to be stolen property and (5) the identification made by some seven witnesses. The evidence of identification may not be safely relied upon, but the remaining evidence is quite sufficient to justify the conclusion that this man was concerned in the crime. His own confession is a very strong piece of evidence against him under the circumstances of the case. He had made the confession after he was duly warned by the Magistrate. His confession (Ex. 30) is very circumstantial and full of detail. When a man of sound mind and full age makes a confessional statement in ordinary simple language after he has been warned, he must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning: see Raja Bahadur Singh v. Emperor (1). It is true that the confession has been retracted, but that is of no importance. Admissions of guilt made by an accused in full possession of his faculties in his confession to a Magistrate do not, where the accused is utterly unable to show how he made the admissions if they were not true, become ineffective, because they are subsequently retracted: see Emperor v. Raj Kali (2).

The property which has been recovered from his house has been satisfactorily identified. It is amply proved that articles forming part of the proceeds of the dacoity were found in his possession. He was also identified in jail by seven witnesses. Their evidence of identification may not be relied upon but the remaining evidence shows clearly that he was concerned in the crime. We are of opinion that he has been rightly convicted and punished. His appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed. (His Lordship then considered evidence against Mansadin, accused 3, whose appeal was allowed, and proceeded.)

(4) Mahadeo—This man is the uncle of Sunder Lal, accused. The only evidence against him, besides the statement of Sone, approver, is that the Sub-Inspector recovered from his possession four silver ornaments and a skirt which have been identified as having been stolen in the dacoity. It should be noted that Sone simply identifies Mahadeo, but does not name him and he is not named by any of the three confessing accused also. There is no reliable evidence to show that this man was present at the dacoity. However, it is satisfactorily proved that the articles forming part of the proceeds of the dacoity were found in his possession. He has therefore been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge under S. 412; I. P. C. The learned counsel who appeared for this man has put up as good arguments on his behalf as could be put up, but we are not at all impressed with his criticism of the prosecution evidence. Our attention has been drawn to the list of the stolen property, given by Sheo Nandan to the police on 9th June 1929. The list is in Urdu and bears the signature of Sheo Nandan in Hindi. The learned counsel has attempted to show that the articles in question do not tally with the list. It is true there is some difference in some particulars (weights, etc.), but the fact remains that the articles are there, and it is too much to expect that the list should have contained an exact description of all the articles which had been carried away by the dacoits. It was almost impossible for Sheo Nandan to give the exact weight and the exact price of the articles which had been stolen away. Most of the articles are of a distinctive nature and have been satisfactorily identified. We are not prepared to disagree with the finding of the learned Sessions Judge on this point. When a person is found in possession of stolen articles soon after the theft, the law presumes that such person must either be the thief or the receiver of the stolen goods. The identity of the stolen articles being established, the identity of the thief or the receiver of the stolen goods is presumed to be established. Mahadeo has attempted to prove that the articles in question belonged to his family. The evidence given by the defence witnesses on this point appears to have been manufactured and has been properly rejected by the learned Sessions Judge. Mahadeo has failed to account for his possession of the articles in question and he has been rightly convicted by the learned Sessions Judge under S. 412, I. P. C. He was not of course charged under S. 412, I. P. C. but he could rightly be convicted under that section on the facts found by the learned Judge: see S. 237, Criminal P. C., illustration, and also the principle of decision in Begu v. Emperor (3). His appeal fails and must be dismissed. (His Lordship here discussed evidence against accused 5 to 10).

11. Hira Lal—This man was successfully picked out by almost all the eyewitnesses to the dacoity. The learned Judge did not think it safe to base his finding on the evidence of identification as this man suffers from a species of leucoderma in his hands and feet. However, the remaining evidence on record is sufficient to justify the conclusion that this man was also concerned in the crime. He has been named by Sone and all the three confessing accused as having taken part in the dacoity. It appears that this man had absconded after the occurrence. He was arrested in Bombay and he has not explained satisfactorily why he was there. It is also in evidence that soon after the dacoity he paid Rs. 25, as rent in pice and small change. As observed by the learned Judge a man normally does not carry this amount of small change. The explanation for that is that among the loot shared by the dacoits there was a certain sum of money in small change which had been collected from the ghat. The family of Beni Madho and Sheo Nandan held a theka of ghat and had got Rs. 1,500 in small change as the toll. This amount also was carried away by the dacoits. This circumstance is quite sufficient to corroborate the statement of the four accomplices that Hira Lal also had taken part in the dacoity. As pointed out in the case of Ram Prasad v. Emperor (4), although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justifiable. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime; but the corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime. The retracted confession alone of an accused is not sufficient to justify the conviction of a co-accused, but where such confession stands unrebutted, and there is nothing to show that the accused had any reason for naming other men falsely, and his story fits in exactly with the facts shown or proved and is corroborated sufficiently by material evidence against the co-accused, the confession is admissible, and may be a strong piece of evidence against the co-accused: see Sheo Ratan v. Emperor (5). We think the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors were justified in coming to the conclusion that this man was also concerned in the crime. His appeal also fails and must be dismissed.

The result is that we dismiss all the appeals except that of Mansa Din. We allow the appeal of Mansa Din, set aside his conviction and sentence and direct that he be acquitted and released, unless his presence is required in any other case.

WAZIR HASAN, C. J., AND PULLAN, J.

Jai Singh and others—Accused—Applicants.

Emperor — Complainant — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 21 of 1930, Decided on 24th March 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Hardoi, D/- 18th November 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 110—In proceedings under S. 110 instances of specific crimes are admissible, although they are not supported by evidence of such amount or value as would secure a conviction for substantive offence.

In a case under S. 110 the Court is not considering whether the accused person has or has not committed a specific offence but whether his general reputation is such that security should be taken for his good behaviour. When evidence is taken as to reputation of bad behaviour the Court cannot and should not exclude the reasons which induced the members of the community to form a bad opinion of the accused person, and if their opinion is based wholly or partly on the belief that the accused person committed a crime which has not been brought home to him the Court cannot rule out as inadmissible all evidence on which the belief of the witnesses is based. Hence instances of specific crimes are admissible in evidence in these proceedings although they are not supported by evidence of such amount and value as would secure a conviction for the substantive offence: A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 26, Appr. A. I. R. 1925 All. 691. Rel. on. [P 846 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 110—Scope.

An isolated instance of violence of a young zamindar on which no report was made would not be a sufficient cause for taking action against him under S. 110. [P 847 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 110—Belief of prosecution witnesses of accused being man of desperate and dangerous character based upon suspicion that accused committed crime and certain acts of oppression—But Court holding suspicion not proved and acts of violence only youthful frolics—Many other persons including accused's tenants deposing to his being peaceful citizen and good landlord—Court should not demand security.

General reputation means the opinion of those members of the public who are in a position to know the man's character. Where a large number of persons come forward and swear that they believe a man to be of a desperate and dangerous character and there is little or no counter evidence of good character such evidence will possibly justify a Court in taking action even if the grounds of belief are indefinite. But when an equal or greater number of persons in the same class or classes depose that the same man is of good character the Court must sift closely the grounds on which the prosecution witnesses have based their belief. If it is found that their belief is based on their suspicion that the accused has committed a crime and certain acts of oppression and the Court holds that the suspicion is unjustified and the so called acts of oppression are merely "youthful frolics" the Court will be reluctant to demand security, and the position of the accused if he is a landlord is much strengthened when a large body of public opinion, including many of his tenants finds him to be a good landlord and a peaceful citizen. [P 848 C 1]

J. Jackson, Ali Mohammad and Avadh Behari Varma—for Applicants.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision of an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi requiring the applicants to give security for their good behaviour or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of three years under S. 123 read with S. 110, Criminal P. C. The applicants are Jai Singh, a zamindar, and his three servants Mata Din, Anandi Din and Murli. The charge against them is that they are dangerous characters and that their being at large without security is hazardous to the community. It is not alleged that Jai Singh gave any signs that he was a dangerous character before the year 1926 and it is admitted by the Sub-Inspector who took proceedings against him that the proceedings were only taken because the Sub-Inspector could not find enough evidence to bring a charge of murder against Jai Singh and his servants. The murder in question was committed on 21st May 1928. The victims were Mt. Deo Kuari, her daughter, two maid servants and their two children. These three women and three children were cut to pieces with a sword and their dead bodies partially burnt in their house in the middle of a large village of Raigaon in the middle of the night. At that time of the year the whole village community must have been asleep outside their houses in or in the neighbourhood of the village and we cannot believe that the murder and the fire which consumed two whole kothris were unnoticed by the villagers. Yet not a shred of evidence was obtained by the police to lead directly to the perpetrator or perpetrators of the crime. The fact that such an atrocity could be committed under such circumstances and that no evidence should be forthcoming which could lead to the conviction of any of the persons who took part therein is a black spot on the administration of criminal justice in Hardoi District. We have, however, only to consider whether the proceedings instituted against Jai Singh and his servants under S. 110, Criminal P. C., are justified or whether the order passed by the Sessions Judge is a proper order. The learned Judge has stated the law dealing with the admissibility of evidence as to particular crimes in cases of bad livelihood. In our opinion the law was correctly stated by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in Bhagwat Prasad v. Emperor (1) in the following passage :

" This Court, and indeed every High Court, always looks with grave suspicion on cases in which proceedings are started against an accused because the police have failed to procure evidence against him on a charge of substantive offence. The badmashi sections were not intended for furnishing the police with the means of detaining persons against whom a definite charge has been made but has broken down."

But we also accept what is stated by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Budhan (2) :

" that it is impossible to accept the proposition that the evidence going to show that a substantive offence had been committed or which might form the basis of a charge of a substantive offence is necessarily to be excluded in proceedings under S. 110 and cannot form the basis of an order under S. 112, Criminal P. C."

Under certain circumstances even an order of acquittal must not be held to be conclusive and the reason for this view is that in a case under S. 110 the Court is not considering whether the accused person has or has not committed a specific offence but whether his general reputation is such that security should be taken for his good behaviour. When evidence is taken as to reputation of bad behaviour, the Court cannot and should not exclude the reasons which induced the members of the community to form a bad opinion of the accused person, and if their opinion is based wholly or partly on the belief that the accused person committed a crime which has not been brought home to him the Court cannot rule out as inadmissible all evidence on which the belief of the witnesses is based. We are not therefore prepared to dissent from the view which he expresses :

" that instances of specific crimes are admissible in evidence in these proceedings although they are not supported by evidence of such amount and value as would secure a conviction for the substantive offence."

This is not a case in which Jai Singh and his supporters had been put on their trial and either acquitted or discharged. There was not sufficient evidence to put them on their trial, but evidence has now been given to the effect that Jai Singh was in the village on the night of the crime, that the lady Mt. Deo Kuari was his widowed sister-in-law, that she was in receipt of an allowance paid by him, and that he was under an obligation to carry out the marriage of her daughter. On these facts the theory is built up that he had a motive for the murder and therefore may have been concerned in it, and the Judge not altogether properly in our opinion, drew deductions from the conduct of Jai Singh in the morning after the murder pointing out that he left undone certain things which he might have been expected to do had he been innocent. In our opinion it is unwise to draw conclusions from the conduct of a person in face of a terrible calamity such as this. Whether innocent or guilty he might very well fail to act with that prudence which might commend itself to an educated person considering the circumstances afterwards at leisure. It is true that the suggested motive is a possible motive and had there been evidence sufficient to put Jai Singh on his trial for murder it might have been fairly alleged that he was actuated by that motive, but where there is no evidence that he committed the murder there is no evidence that he acted on the motive, and as a matter of fact there is nothing to show that he wished to discontinue the allowance to his sister-in-law or to repudiate his liability to pay for her daughter's marriage. The evidence therefore that Jai Singh and his servants were guilty of this murder is not more than a vague suspicion and as such it must take its place along with the other evidence as to the general repute of the applicants before us. The suggestion is that Jai Singh's character took a change for the worse in the year 1926 and that he became oppressive to his tenants and so desperate and dangerous that he should not be allowed at liberty without security. Specific instances have been adduced to show his oppressive nature and an attempt has also been made to produce witnesses of general reputation. The year 1926 was chosen as the starting point because from the year 1915 to 1926 Jai Singh had the strongest support of two officers of police, Mr. Young and Rai Bahadur Man Singh, both officers of the greatest experience who held a high opinion of Jai Singh during their tenure of the office of Superintendent of Police in the Hardoi district. We have considered very carefully the specific instances of so-called "desperate and dangerous" behaviour. The Magistrate remarked of these incidents that and the Judge has accepted this view. It appears that like many other zamindars Jai Singh had some disputes with his tenants and that on occasions he acted with some severity. But many of the examples have been excluded by the learned Judge and of those that he retained the only one which appears to us of any importance is the incident of one Inayet Khan who states that he had purchased a jungle and a grove and offered the wood for sale. Because he demanded Rs. 24 per chatta and Jai Singh only offered Rs. 14 Inayet says that he was taken to Jai Singh by Murli and Mata Din and kicked and assaulted and his cart-load of wood emptied at the accused's bhatta. This incident is corroborated by a witness described as unreliable, but we must accept it as proved and it is certainly an instance of violence. On the other hand no report was made of it and we cannot resist the conclusion that the incident was perhaps exaggerated and if it be taken as an isolated act of a young zamindar it would certainly not be a sufficient cause for taking action against him under S. 110, Criminal P. C. There are also some instances in which tenants have complained against Jai Singh. One of them, Mewa Ram, complained that his field had been trampled by his elephant, but Mewa Ram was a man who attempted to cultivate the fields as a sub-tenant against the wish of the zamindar and he was subsequently compensated by another field. Another tenant named Ohheda made a report of forcible dispossession of his field, but this man appears to have attempted to assert a claim of tenancy two and a half months after Jai Singh had reported the land to be abandoned under S. 21, Oudh Rent Act. In our opinion such incidents are of common occurrence and there are few zamindars who have not at one time or another had similar disputes with their tenants and there is no special feature of guilt or oppression in these instances as they have been described which would lead us to connect the conduct of Jai Singh in his dealings with the tenants with the conduct of the person or persons who committed the horrible murder of three women and three children on 21st May 1928. Indeed we have on the one hand suspicion of an atrocious crime and on the other hand evidence pointing to a young zamindar who is inclined to use drastic measures in dealing with tenants. The two pictures do not coincide and we cannot disregard the fact that Jai Singh was able to produce in his defence no less than 74 tenants of whom 29 come from the village of Raigaon, and his witnesses in all represent 54 villages in a radius of twelve miles. All these persons describe him as a good landlord and deny that he is a man of violent or desperate character. In fact the only tenants who give evidence against him are those who speak to the specific incidents to which we have already referred.

"they might be connived at or ignored as petty frolics and privileges of a zamindar of his position and influence"

The learned Judge deals very briefly with the evidence of general bad character and we have been referred to the evidence of one Qazim Husain who is clearly influenced by malice and who stated, in our opinion quite falsely, that Jai Singh had at the time when he agreed to pay the allowance to his sister-in-law threatened to lock her up in a kothri and murder her. This is not the only instance of evidence of an apparently vindictive nature brought forward in this case. The prosecution also relied upon the fact that Jai Singh's servants had been suspected of another murder, but in that case not only were they acquitted but the Court held that it was a false case got up by one of the witnesses for the prosecution in the present case.

We would also point out that the general evidence as to character in this case hardly goes beyond the statement of the specific instances to which we have already referred. General reputation means the opinion of those members of the public who are in a position to know the man's character. Where a large number of persons come forward and swear that they believe a man to be of a desperate and dangerous character, and there is little or no counter-evidence of good character, such evidence will possibly justify a Court in taking action even if the grounds of belief are indefinite. But when an equal or greater number of persons in the same class or classes depose that the same man is of good character the Court must sift closely the grounds on which the prosecution witnesses have based their belief. If it is found that their belief is based on their suspicion that the accused has committed a crime and certain acts of oppression and the Court holds that the suspicion in the former case is unjustified and the so-called acts of oppression are merely "youthful frolics" the Court will be reluctant to demand security; and the position of the accused is much strengthened when, as in the present case a large body of public opinion finds him to be a good landlord and a peaceful citizen. In our opinion the evidence in the present case comes to this. A number of persons believe that Jai Singh and his servants are responsible for the murder of Mt. Deo Kuari, her daughter and her servants and they also consider that Jai Singh is an oppressive zamindar. On the other hand a great number of persons do not believe that Jai Singh and his servants were concerned in the murder and they consider that he is not an oppressive zamindar. Among these witnesses is included a vast majority of his own tenants. In our opinion Jai Singh is not shown to be unusually oppressive as a zamindar and there is insufficient reason for suspecting him of complicity in the murder. Thus there is no foundation for finding that he is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community. Admittedly the case of the servants depends on that of the master. It is not suggested that independently of Jai Singh they are in any way dangerous to the community. We therefore allow this application and set aside the order requiring security.

W. B. Pradhan—for the Crown.

Mirza J.—This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge, Surat, expressing an opinion that the conviction of the accused for an offence under S. 12, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, by the First Class Magistrate, Surat City, is bad in law. The case is reported to this Court for its consideration. The accused were arrested while they were gambling in a hotel. The First Class Magistrate, Surat City, who tried the case, was of opinion that the arrest was not illegal as a hotel could be regarded as a public place within the meaning of S. 12, Gambling Act. S. 12, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, is as follows:

"A police officer may apprehend without warrant

(a) any person found gaming in any public street, or thoroughfare, or in any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access or in any race-course . . ."

The Sessions Judge is of opinion that the case is covered by the authority of Emperor v. Hussein (1), where the word "place" occurring in S. 12 as it then stood was held to mean "a place of the same general character as a road or thoroughfare." S. 12 (a), at the date of that decision read :

"A police-officer may apprehend without warrant :

(a) Any person found playing for money or other valuable thing with cards, dice . . . in any public street, place or thoroughfare."

The word "place" appearing in the section came between "public street and thoroughfare." Russell, J., in the course of his judgment observed (p. 30) :

"Several cases were referred to in course of the argument. The first was Bangrish v. Archer (2) where it was held that the railway carriage while travelling on its journey was an "an open and public place" or "an open and public place to which the public have or are permitted to have access."

Now if the words in the statute before us were the same as in that, of course the accused would have been rightly convicted, but in the statute there referred to (38 to 37 Vic. c. 38), the words used are "open place to which the public have or are permitted to have access."

It is clear from this passage in the judgment that the decision in Emperor v. Hussein (1) would have been different if the words "to which the public have or are permitted to have access" had governed the word "place" in the section as it then was. The legislature amended the Gambling Act in 1910 and the words "or in any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access" have been inserted in the section.

The Sessions Judge is of opinion that this Court followed the decision in Emperor v. Hussein (1) in the later case of Emperor v. Chennappa (3) and that was a case to which the provisions of S. 12 (a) since its amendment in 1910 applied. In that case the accused had been found playing for money with cards in a Math which was managed by Swami. It was found that the Swami could, if he chose, keep the people out. On those facts the Court set aside the conviction and sentence of the accused holding that the Math could not be regarded as a public place within the meaning of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act 1887. In the report of the reference made by the District Magistrate to this Court the case of Emperor v. Hussein (1) was quoted and relied on for the view that it applied and that the conviction should be set aside. In the order of the Court no reference was made to Emperor v. Hussein (1). The order simply stated (p. 102) :

"We agree with the learned District Magistrate that the Math in which the card playing in this case was carried on cannot be regarded as a public place within the meaning of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act 4, 1887. We must, therefore, set aside the convictions of the accused, and direct their acquittal and discharge. The fines, if paid by them, should be refunded to them."

Section 12 (a), Gambling Act, quoted in a foot-note of the report of the case is the section as it stood prior to the amendment of 1910. It is not clear from the report whether the section which the Court was considering was the old section or the one since its amendment in 1910. The learned Sessions Judge remarks :

"The High Court, in a short judgment, merely expressed agreement with him (the District Magistrate) that the Math could not be regarded as a public place within the meaning of the Act but did not specify as to which of the reasons adduced by him was the basis of their decision. It would appear, however, that they must have followed the case Emperor v. Hussein (1) because at that date (1912), the Act had already been amended and the mere fact that the Swami had authority to exclude the public cannot have been a deciding factor."

We are unable to agree with the last statement in this passage. The fact that the Swami had authority to exclude the public could, in our opinion, have been made the basis of the judgment in Emperor v. Hussein (1) if that case was dealt with under the amended section.

The words in the amended S. 12, Gambling Act, "in any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access" would in our opinion, include a hotel. The public have a right to go to a hotel provided there is accommodation available in it, and can be said to have or be permitted to have access to it. It is no longer necessary to interpret the word "place" appearing in this section ejusdem generis with the words "public street" and "thoroughfare." pretation of Statutes (Edn. 7) at p. 218 states :

"Of course, the restricted meaning which primarily attaches to the general word in such circumstances is rejected when there are adequate grounds to show that it has not been used in the limited order of ideas to which its predecessors belong. If it can be seen from a wider inspection of the scope of the legislation that the general words, notwithstanding that they follow particular words are nevertheless to be construed generally effect must be given to the intention of the legislature as gathered from the larger survey.

It is clear that the object of the amended S. 12 (a) in 1910 was to free the word "place" which had been originally used in that section from the restricted meaning which it was held to bear appearing as it did between the expression "public street" and the word "thoroughfare." We agree with the interpretation put on the section by the First Class Magistrate and see no reason to interfere with the convictions.

Judgment.—The three petitioners in Criminal Cases Nos. 137, 138 and 139 of 1930 have been convicted under S. 9 (c), Opium Act 1878, and have been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. It has been found that each of them was in possession of a large quantity of opium in contravention of the Act and this fact is not now disputed before me. Only two questions were raised by the learned counsel: one was as to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the case; and the second was the question of sentence.

So far as the first question is concerned, it appears that the Magistrate, Sardhar Balwant Singh, was previously posted to another district where he exercised the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class. He took leave and on the expiry of his leave he was posted to the Ferozepore District where the accused were tried by him. When the case was put up before him for trial he recorded the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and also the statements of the accused, in fact he completed the whole trial and noted at the end that his powers had not yet been gazetted and therefore he postponed the decision of the case till such time as his powers be gazetted and it seems that after the gazette notification had been issued by the Local Government he concluded that case by convicting the accused persons. The learned counsel says that owing to the fact that the Magistrate had gone on leave he had ceased to exercise his powers of a Magistrate of the First Class and therefore before he could take any proceedings in the present cases it was necessary for the Local Government to invest him with magisterial powers.

The learned Sessions Judge has relied upon S. 40, Criminal P. C., and this section is also cited by the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer. It provides that whenever any person holding an office in the service of the Government, who has been invested with any powers of the Criminal Procedure Code throughout any local area, is appointed to an equal or higher office of the same nature within a like local area under the same Local Government he shall, unless the Local Government otherwise directs or has otherwise directed, exercise the same powers in the local area in which he is so appointed. To this the learned counsel for the petitioners replies that in this province the Magistrates hold office as such and therefore on grant of leave to them they cease to hold that office and consequently it was contended that S. 40 had no application. The real question is this : whether the grant of leave to the Magistrate who belonged to the Provincial Civil Service as an Extra Assistant Commissioner caused the cessation of his criminal powers so as to take his case out of the category of the cases contemplated by S. 40. I do not understand the learned counsel to contend that if the Magistrate had been transferred from his former district to the Ferozepore District it would have been necessary for the Local Government to notify his powers afresh before he could exercise any magisterial powers. I asked him what would have happened if the Magistrate had been granted casual leave. His reply was that in such a case no successor having been appointed to the Magistrate no question of conferring fresh powers on him would arise. Does it make any difference if a Magistrate is granted privilege leave and no successor is appointed or even if a successor is appointed and he is posted back to the same district ? In my opinion in a case like this the appointment of a successor does not affect the powers of the Magistrate.

2 B. L. R., p. 536, is a direct authority on the question. The petitioners' counsel, however, cited A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 598. But that case related to an officer who had retired from Government service and was later re-appointed and it was held that in the case of such a person it is necessary to confer powers upon him afresh. It is obvious that the case of such a person cannot fall under S. 40, Criminal P. C.

In my opinion, therefore, the Magistrate had the power to try the accused persons as a Magistrate, First Class, on taking charge of his duties in the Ferozepore District after the expiry of his leave. In this connexion a change that has been effected in S. 40, Criminal P. C., by amendment in 1923 is noticeable. The word "transferred" has now been substituted by the word "appointed" and this in my opinion materially strengthens the position of an officer who is appointed to another district on the expiry of his leave.

With regard to the second question it is true that a large quantity of opium was found in the possession of the accused persons. At the same time the case for the prosecution is that they were agents of another person named Ganga Ram and therefore the maximum punishment provided by the law was not called for in the case. In my opinion a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment in the case of each of the petitioners would have met the ends of justice having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

While affirming the convictions of the petitioners therefore I reduce their sentences to one year's rigorous imprisonment in the case of each and to this extent I accept the petition.

1930 Cr. Cases 851

(Sind)

PERCIVAL, J. C. AND RUPCHAND,
A. J. C.

Baksho and others—Accused:—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 179 of 1929, Decided on 28th February 1930, from judgment of Special First Class Magistrate, Dadu.

(a) Penal Code, S. 401—Reports made to police or brought to their notice showing names of particular suspects are inadmissible as hearsay—Criminal Trial.

Although there is no objection to police officers being called to prove the existence of a gang of cattle lifters and the frequency of thefts in the area where that gang operated, the reports made to them from time to time or brought to their notice showing the names of particular suspects are inadmissible as being hearsay and should be excluded. [P 855 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—General criminality of tribe cannot be imputed to the individual members.

The general criminality of the tribe to which several of the accused belong cannot be imputed to individual members of that tribe : 13 Cr. L. J. 39, Rel. on. [P 855 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 401—Previous conviction and proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., are admissible in cases under S. 401—Evidence Act S. 54.

Previous convictions and proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., are admissible in a case under S. 401 for the purpose of proving habit though not of general bad character and are not excluded by S. 54, Evidence Act : 13 Cr. L. J. 539 ; 88 Cal. 488 and A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 195, Rel. on. ; 82 Mad. 179 and A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 71, Discussed and Dist. [P 856 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 401 — Assessing sentence under S. 401—Magistrate can consider previous convictions and orders under S. 110, Criminal P. C., even when S. 75, Penal Code, does not apply.

In determining to what extent in any particular case the punishment should approach to or recede from the maximum limit prescribed by the section, the trying Magistrate has to take into account several factors, inter alia the antecedents of the prisoner whether such antecedents speak well or ill of him, such as his character and state of life whether good or bad including the previous convictions, if any. So while assessing sentence under S. 401 the Magistrate can take into consideration previous convictions and orders under S. 110, Penal Code, even when S. 75, Penal Code, does not apply: 89 Bom. 826, Rel. on. [P 854 C 2; P 856 C 2]

Partabrai D. Punwani — for Appellants.

G. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J. C.—The appellants in this case are 11 men, who have been convicted by the learned Special Magistrate, First Class, Dadu, under S. 401, I. P. C., of the offence of belonging to a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery, and have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. 12 persons were sent up originally, but one has been acquitted and the rest convicted.

The history of this gang is set out in para. 2 of the judgment of the learned Magistrate. He says:

"The case illustrates "pathari system" which is so rampant in this province, owing to its economical, geographical and social conditions. It deals with an alleged gang of cattle thieves, known as "patharidars" in Sind. Such patharidars having widespread organizations in the province, energetic police officers in some parts are now a days trying to bring them to book in order to paralyse their activities so as to be able to maintain peace and order in their charges. The combating of such organizations called "Patharis" had become necessary, as cattle-thieving in the province has assumed unmanageable proportions and clearing houses of stolen property have to be broken up. Directly a shrewd deathblow is given to the pathari system prevailing in any place, real organizers of cattle thefts must disappear, and organized cattle thefts should cease automatically."

He further points out that the present appellants, together with other "Shabanis" who have gone across the Indus to the Nawabshah District, have been engaged for considerable time in stealing cattle including camels, and taking them across the river in some cases from the west to the east and in other cases from the east to the west. The Deputy Superintendent of Police, Mr. Chimandas, having heard of the depredations of this gang, made personal inquiries into the matter, and finally this case was sent up. A very large number of witnesses have been examined in the case, the exhibits running to 388. The prosecution have given the evidence of police officers, of zamindars, of persons whose cattle or other animals had been stolen, of persons who have paid bhung, of persons who have identified their cattle amongst those attached from the bhans of the accused, and of those who have seen the accused going about together and committing thefts together. The evidence goes to show that the gang began as long ago as 1922 or even earlier. The learned Magistrate in para. 12 of his judgment observes as follows:

"But how powerful this gang is and how its activities for cattle-lifting extend far and wide, is proved beyond doubt by the direct testimony of prosecution witnesses of different castes and creeds who have come forward to depose against its members. In fact it is an old established gang as the period of its activities is put down by some of the witnesses to over a decade and Ex. 268 on the record shows that some of its members were suspected in the year 1922, i.e. about seven years ago. It seems the residence of the accused in Kacha on the river side, has afforded to them a particularly favourable pasture ground for their crimes which go undetected, as the cattle of the left bank part of the river Indus can easily be transported across to the right bank country and vice versa, and such transfers of cattle to unknown parts cause despair to the police and terror to the people of the surrounding countries. Amid such a favourable situation this gang has gained confidence born of success, and its members have merrily carried on, almost with impunity, their nefarious career of cattle lifting which has assumed scandalous proportions in this country."

The Magistrate himself, in company with the parties or their representatives and the Tapedars concerned, visited the scenes of offence: Exs. 289-292 show that the accused resided near each other, being within the radius of about three or four miles from the central point. The main legal argument put forward by the learned pleader for the appellants was that the evidence of the police officers regarding the existence of the gang and regarding the particular members of the gang should be excluded as being based on hearsay. The learned Public Prosecutor agrees that such evidence should have been excluded as against the individual members of the gang. On the general question of the gang I am of opinion that such evidence is admissible; but that, even without such evidence, the evidence that there was a gang associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft is overwhelming. As indicated above, there is a very large volume of evidence to show the depredations committed by different members of the gang for a number of years, and the close connexion between the different members and their association in the matter of committing thefts. I am of opinion that it is unnecessary to elaborate this part of the evidence, because the fact that some of the accused at least were members of the gang associated for the purpose of committing thefts is too clear to admit of any doubt. It may be mentioned, with respect to the identification of cattle found with the accused, that the bhans of several of the accused were raided, and 346 cattle and other animals in all were seized. Some of these animals have been identified by the Bhagias, while others have not been identified.

Objection has also been taken by the learned pleader for the appellant to the evidence of certain witnesses regarding previous convictions of some of the accused, and regarding orders passed against some of them under S. 118, Criminal P. C. The question of admissibility of such previous convictions and security orders has been the subject of somewhat conflicting rulings. But it is clearly laid down in Emperor v. Haji Sher Mahomed (1) at p. 959 (of 46 Bom.) as follows:

"There is no doubt that a previous conviction of theft or an order to give security on the ground of being a habitual thief is admissible against the person who is charged under S. 401, I. P. C., i. e. belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery, held in Bhoni v. Emperor (2) and Emperor v. Tukaram Malhari (3) at p. 375 (of 14 Bom. L. R.):"

and I see no reason to disagree with this ruling. The ruling in Emperor v. Tukaram Malhari (3) mentioned above runs as follows:

"Under S. 401, I. P. C., for the purpose of determining whether a party of accused persons constituted a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitual theft, the evidence that each individual of that party is a convicted thief is relevant. That evidence can be tendered before or after the prosecution have established the association."

The same principle, in my opinion,

(1) A. I. R. 1923 B.M. 71=75 I. C. 67=24 Cr. L. J. 867=46 Bom. 958.

(2) [1911] 33 Cal. 408=12 Cr. L. J. 67=9 I. C. 555.

(3) [1912] 13 Cr. L. J. 539=15 I. C. 811.

applies to an order having reference to S. 110 (a), if not to all the clauses in that section. Coming now to the cases of the individual accused, they have been dealt with by the learned Magistrate at the conclusion of his judgment, and he has shown that against a number of accused the evidence of their connexion with the gang is extremely clear and does not call for any serious consideration. These remarks apply to the cases of accused 2, accused 4, accused 5, and accused 6, and accused 8 and 10.

There remains the cases of Nos. 1, 3, 7, 11 and 12. But even out of these five although regarding them we heard the learned pleader for the appellants in some detail I am of opinion that the cases against Nos. 3 and 11 are very clear and that they do not call for any special remarks.

After hearing the learned pleader for the appellants, the Court came to the conclusion that the cases of Nos. 1, 7 and 12 were the only cases in which it was necessary to call on the learned Public Prosecutor to give reasons showing that they were members of the gang. The learned Public Prosecutor accordingly dealt in detail with the cases only of these three accused, and he has shown that in the cases of accused 1 and 7 and also their association with other accused in the commission of theft has been clearly established. It is proved, in both the Nos. 1 and 7, that, one of the animals found with them has been identified as a stolen animal. There are also a number of cases in which they have associated themselves with other members of the gang, and their presence is proved at the bhans of the various other accused in connexion with the disposal of animals. For instance, Ex. 194 states that accused 1 and 7 agreed that they would restore the camel in question. The evidence of Ex. 89 also is important evidence against accused 1 and 7. There is moreover evidence to show that accused 7 was concerned in the case of return of another animal in exchange for an animal stolen, which is typically the conduct of a patharidar. After hearing the learned Public Prosecutor on these points, and hearing the learned pleader for the appellants in reply, I feel no doubt that the offence has been fully brought home also to accused 1 and 7, namely Baksho and Sadaru. There remains only the case of No. 12 Belo, which I will discuss in some detail, because the evidence against him is rather weaker than the evidence against the other accused, and at the same time is typical of the evidence produced against the various accused. (Here the judgment considered evidence against accused 12 and concluded.) I am of opinion that there is ample evidence for the conviction of accused 12 also.

The learned Magistrate in concluding the case observed as follows:

"That Mr. Chimandas was very keen about the unearthing of this gang, is evident from his monthly reviews (some of which have been exhibited in the case) and from the cautious, careful and copious measures he undertook to find out the misdoings of the members of this notorious gang. The case is indeed not of an ordinary kind. Its voluminous proportions can be imagined from the fact that as many as 265 witnesses have been examined and besides 123 exhibits have been put in and proved in support of the evidence. It is thus abundantly clear that this able and energetic officer has neither spared himself time nor trouble in bringing this matter to successful close, and his brilliant work in connexion therewith needs special recognition from Government. I may also mention that, in his turn, Mr. Chimandas has been faithfully assisted by Mr. Ferozdin Sub-Inspector who was put on special duty concerning this case and also by the local Sub-Inspector Mr. Mahomed Shah. The learned Public Prosecutor Mr. Parmanand Tejmal, B. A. LL. B., has materially assisted me in the trial of this case."

I agree with these remarks, and I am of opinion that no better work can be done by Police Officers in Sind than in rounding up the gangs of patharidars. If this is done steadily and continuously throughout Sind, I am of opinion that, as observed by the learned Special Magistrate in this case, in due time organized cattle-stealing in Sind will entirely cease; an unorganized cattle stealing is a matter of minor importance. Similar remarks were made by Mr. Aston, Additional Judicial Commissioner in Hyder Khush v. The Crown (4), in which case he observed that deterrent sentences should be passed in the case of such offenders who are a curse in Sind. I myself made similar remarks in the same case, with reference, particularly to patharidars. I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate himself has dealt with the case with great care and that he deserves commendation for the industry with which he has elaborated the case against each of the accused respectively.

In regard to the sentences I am of opinion that they err on the side of leniency. The Magistrate has sentenced three of the accused to a period of two years only. I think that, in the case of persons who have been proved to be members of the gang associated habitually for the purpose of disposing of cattle a sentence of three years might well have been passed, as was done in a somewhat similar case of a gang disposed of by Mr. Moos, when he was Additional Sessions Judge at Hyderabad namely the case against Yaru and 21 others, in which case sentences of three years and upwards were passed. Also leaders of the present gang might well have been sentenced to the maximum period allowed by the law, namely seven years rigorous imprisonment. As however alterations in the sentences would involve an addition of only one or two years, in each case, I do not think it necessary to propose an enhancement of the sentences, although I may observe that having regard to the immense harm that is done by these gangs of patharidars in Sind deterrent sentences are essential when a gang has been brought to book.

In regard to the sentences, it has been argued by the learned pleader for the appellants that in assessing the sentences the Magistrate should not have taken the previous convictions of some of the accused into consideration except where S. 75, I. P. C. applies. This contention however cannot be accepted; previous convictions, orders under S. 118, Criminal P. C., as well as bad conduct generally, can be taken into consideration, in assessing the sentence even when S. 75, I. P. C. does not apply. In fact in this instance nothing would have been gained by adding a charge under S. 75 even where this could have been done, as in the case of accused 2, because the sentence which can be passed under S. 401, I. P. C. is seven years, which is the same as the maximum sentence which a Magistrate empowered under S. 30, Criminal P. C. is authorized to pass.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—The offence of which the present appellants are convicted is of a very special character and is entirely the creature of statute. In order to establish it, it was necessary for the Crown to make out that there existed at the times specified a gang of persons associated together for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery and that each of the accused persons was one of that gang.

• In order to establish both these ingredients, the Crown has led evidence to prove: (a) that the accused most of whom belonged to the Shahani tribe lived in the vicinity of one another near the banks of the river Indus, in places which afforded a convenient rendezvous for concealing and disposing of stolen cattle; (b) that Shahanis who had migrated to the other side of the river had been treated as criminal tribes; (c) that several accused were related to one another; (d) that they were found loitering about in the localities of the theft shortly about the time the thefts took place; (e) that cattle lifting was rife in the vicinity of the places where Shahanis lived; (f) that footprints of stolen cattle were often traced to near places of their residence; (g) that although the number of cases of lifting cattle reported to the police was comparatively small, the owners of the stolen cattle preferred to pay bhung or illegal gratification to the members of the gang in order to get restoration of their cattle; (h) that bhung was accepted by one or more members of the gang in the presence of several others of them; (i) that in several cases where bhung was paid stolen cattle was restored to the owners; (j) that some of them had been previously convicted of cattle lifting; (k) that proceedings under S. 110, Cl. (a) had been successfully taken against some of them and they had been bound down; (l) that at the raids made immediately before the present prosecution, certain heads of cattle were secured by the police from their bhandis or cattle pens and no less than 45 heads of cattle were definitely identified by their owners as being stolen property, (m) and that they had offered no reasonable explanation of the stolen cattle found from their possession.

Nearly two hundred witnesses were examined in the case and the record consists of no less than 700 typed pages. The learned pleader for the appellants has said that although a good deal of the evidence against the accused is either irrelevant or inadmissible, there is a mass of evidence to bring home the offence to accused Nos. 2 to 6 and 10 and 11 and that he did not propose to argue their case. With regard to the others he has contended that the relevant evidence against them is not sufficient to warrant a conviction.

In the first place he has attacked the admissibility of police reports which contain of the names of some of the appellants as suspects. Now although there was no objection to police officers being called to prove the existence of a gang of cattle-lifters and the frequency of thefts in the area where that gang operated, the reports made to them from time to time or brought to their notice showing the names of particular suspects were inadmissible as being hearsay and should in my opinion have been excluded.

It is next contended that evidence of the general criminality of the Shahani tribe to which several of the accused belong or the fact that members of that tribe who had migrated to the other side of the river had been treated as a criminal tribe could not be imputed to individual members of that tribe under this section, and that the section must be strictly construed in the interests of the liberty of the subjects. Reliance had been placed on Kedar Sundar v. Emperor (5) and Rattanlal's Unreported Criminal Cases, p. 418.

This objection is also well founded. But excluding both these pieces of evidence from our consideration, I am of opinion that there is sufficient unimpeachable evidence against the remaining accused, also that they formed members of the gang, and were associated together for the purpose of habitually committing cattle thefts.

There is a mass of evidence against them of their being found in company with the other accused on different occasions about the time of thefts by persons who were searching for the stolen cattle, of their presence when bhung was demanded and paid to the leaders of the gang and of one or more heads of stolen cattle being found from the possession of each of them. There is also evidence against them except accused 10-12 of being previously convicted of stealing cattle or of being bound down under S. 110, Criminal P. C.

It was argued that the evidence with regard to the first and second facts had been given under police pressure and therefore not true, but we are not prepared to accept this view. I also think that the evidence of previous convictions and proceedings under S. 110 has been rightly admitted. Such evidence is admissible for the purpose of proving habit though not of general bad character under S. 14, Evidence Act, and is not excluded by the provisions of S. 54 of that Act: Emperor v. Tukaram Malhari (3), Bhona v. Emperor (2), Emperor v. Motiram Hari (6). Our attention was invited by the learned pleader for the accused to the Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu (7) and King-Emperor v. Haji Sher Mahomed (1). Neither of these rulings help the accused. In Public Prosecutor v. Bonigiri Pottigadu (7) the accused were being prosecuted under S. 400, I. P. C., and evidence was tendered to prove that the accused had committed crimes other than dacoities. It was rightly held that such evidence could not be given to prove habit of committing dacoities; or of bad character and was clearly inadmissible. In King-Emperor v. Haji Sher Mahomed (1) likewise the charge was under S. 400, I. P. C., and it was said that although a previous conviction of theft or an order to give security on the ground of being an habitual thief was admissible against an accused person in a case where he was charged under S. 401, I. P. C., it was of no use as evidence under S. 400, I. P. C. It is true that with regard to accused 1 and 12 there is no previous conviction against them nor have they been bound down under S. 110, Criminal P. C., but such evidence is not essential for a conviction.

In the end it was argued that the learned Magistrate was in error in taking into account the previous convictions of the accused in assessing their sentences. This argument is altogether ill founded. S. 75, I. P. C., on which reliance was placed is an enabling section: it provides for a sentence being awarded to an accused person in excess of the maximum sentence provided by the section under which he is convicted, subject, however, to certain conditions. In the present case, the Magistrate has not exceeded and could not exceed the maximum sentence provided by S. 401, I. P. C., and therefore there was no occasion for calling into aid S. 75 of the Code. In determining to what extent in any particular case the punishment should approach to or recede from the maximum limit prescribed by the section, the trying Magistrate has to take into account several factors, inter alia the antecedents of the prisoner. whether such antecedents speak well or ill of him, such as his character and state of life whether good or bad including the previous convictions if any: Halsbury's Law of England, Vol. 9, para. 822. And the proof of such convictions is in no way excluded by S. 54, Evidence Act. In Emperor v. Ismail Ali Bhai (8), at 328, while dealing with this point, Heaton, J., said:

"The impressing of sentence is, within the wide limits allowed by the law, a matter of discretion; it is not a matter of proof. That is, it is a matter within the sphere not of evidence but of penology. S. 54, Evidence Act, is a part of the law of evidence, not a part of the penal law. It regulates what is relevant for the purpose of proof at the enquiry or trial, not what is relevant for the purpose of deciding whether a long or a short sentence should be imposed. Its purpose is quite plain; ordinarily evidence of bad character, including a previous conviction, is irrelevant to help to establish an accused person's guilt. But the law of evidence does not define or profess to define those matters which a Court should consider in using its discretion in passing sentence. What these matters are to be, is largely left to practice and to the common sense and knowledge of the world of the Court."

In this case, as pointed out by the learned Judicial Commissioner, the sentences err on the side of leniency, but they are not so grossly inadequate as to call for interference in revision. For these reasons I concur that the convictions and sentences should be confirmed and the appeals dismissed. I also agree with the observations made by the learned Judicial Commissioner with regard to the care with which the learned Magistrate has dealt with the case, and the energy shown by Mr. Chimandas, Deputy Superintendent of Police, in rounding up this gang.

1930 Cr. Cases 857

(Calcutta)

JACK AND MITTER, JJ.

In re—A Pleader.

Civil Rule No. 223 of 1929, Decided on 28th March 1929.

Legal Practitioners' Act, S. 12—Where pleader is convicted of criminal offence, High Court is not bound to strike him off the roll—Junior pleader convicted of criminal breach of trust—To certain extent he being victim of his senior pleader—He paying back sums embezzled though after discovery of fraud—Subsequently he conducting himself well—One year's suspension from practice was sufficient.

Although where a pleader is convicted of criminal offences that prima facie renders him unfit to be a member of the lawyer's profession, still the Court is not bound to strike him off the roll. The word 'may' after the words 'the High Court' in S. 12 shows that the discretion of the Court in each particular case is absolute. [P 858 C 2]

A junior pleader of six years standing was convicted of criminal breach of trust and abetment of the same. But to some extent he was the victim of his senior pleader. He had also paid the sums embezzled by him though after the discovery of the fraud. He conducted himself well and had done nothing wrong since his last offence and had expressed his repentance.

Held: that instead of striking him off the roll he should be suspended from practising for one year: 22 All. 49 (P.C.), Cons. In re, Weare, (1898) 2 Q. B. 439, Appl. [P 859 C 1]

H. D. Bose, Saratkumar Mitter and Anilchandra Ray Chaudhuri—for Petitioner.

Jack, J.—By this rule under S. 12, Legal Practitioners Act, S pleader, has been directed to show cause why he should not be suspended or dismissed, on the ground that he has been convicted of two offences of breach of trust and abetment of the same, implying a defect of character unfitting him to be a pleader. He does not dispute the accuracy of the recitals of the two judgments of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in the cases in which he was convicted.

From these, we find that C his co-accused in one of these cases, was previously prosecuted for embezzlement and had been declared an insolvent and prohibited by the Court from withdrawing money on behalf of clients from the Court. Knowing all this, S withdrew, in each of these cases, a large sum on account of a client of C by virtue of a power-of-attorney, in which his name was entered, unknown to the client. These sums were not paid to the clients and hence his conviction in these two cases. Further, it appears, that when asked for the money, he told various untruths to explain the delay in payment.

In his application to be allowed to resume practice in the Small Cause Court, he urged: (i) that he always acted bona fide under the direction of his senior (i.e., his co-accused in one case, little knowing that he would be put to such trouble, and now repents his extreme indiscretion; (ii) that he has paid up the amount of the defalcations; (iii) that he has already suffered considerably through his prosecution and conviction.

These pleas indicate that he scarcely seems to appreciate the extent of moral delinquency indicated by his conduct. Such conduct is not compatible, as he seems to imagine, with bona fides and is not merely a matter of indiscretion. That he should have thought such pleas justified in the circumstances seems in itself an indication that his present character unfits him to be a member of an honourable profession and that he is not a man to whom the affairs of clients could be safely entrusted. His learned advocate very wisely does not now seek to justify his conduct, though he still seems anxious to put most of the blame on his co-accused.

He has, it is true, since he was convicted, paid up the amount of the defalcations and, putting the most favourable interpretation on this, some credit must be given to him for restoration of the amounts embezzled. But the fact that he did not act in a straight forward manner, after the defalcations occurred, is very much against him. An order of dismissal seems almost to be demanded in the interests of the profession and of the litigant public. So much so, that it is with some hesitation that we refrain from ordering that his name be struck off the roll of pleaders and adopt the alternative course suggested in the rule. Both the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court and the Chief Presidency Magistrate regard, as a mitigating circumstance, the fact that he was apparently led astray by C and in this view of the case we are disposed to treat him leniently, in the hope that, when he resumes practice, he will have been so impressed with the heinousness of such conduct that nothing of the kind will recur. We accordingly order that S be suspended from practice as a pleader for one year from this date.

Mitter, J.—This rule was issued by the Full Court, by virtue of the powers vested on the High Court by S. 12, Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879), by which S, a pleader practising in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, was called upon to show cause why he should not be suspended or dismissed on the ground that the offences of which he was convicted imply a defect of character which unfits him to be a pleader.
